NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

No notice will be taken of anonymous correspondence. What is intended for insertion in the "JAPAN WEEKLY MAIL," must be authenticated by the name and address of the writer, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

It is particularly requested that all letters on business be addressed to the MANAGER, and Cheques be made payable to same; and that literary contributions be addressed to the EDITOR.

YOKOHAMA: SATURDAY, JULY 1ST, 1905.

BIRTH.

At Montreal, on May 17th, the wife of H. R. BARNARD, of a Son.

DEATHS.

At his residence in Kojimachi, Tokyo, on the 24th inst, WILLIAM DOUGLAS COX, aged 61, for many years Dayen of the foreign staff at the Dai-ichi Koto gakko, Hongo.

At 3 p.m. on Sunday, 25th inst., at the General Hospital, JULIUS, the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. F. Feicke, aged 11½ years.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

On the night of June 25th, snow fell on Fuji.

FOUR Russian prisoners at Himeji escaped on the night of June 24th.

A CASE of cholera is reported at Hiroshima. The patient is a woman 56 years old.

THE first copy of a Japanese daily newspaper will be issued on July 1st at Yingkow.

THE Miye, Owari and Nagoya Cotton Spinning Companies have decided to amalgamate.

THREE rats infected with plague were found on June 24th in Kamesumi-cho, Fukagawa, Tokyo.

MR. SAIGO, Master of the Board of Ceremonies, who had been suffering from lung disease, died on June 25th.

THE interim dividend of the Ibaraki Coal Company—for the first half year in 1905—is at the rate of 6 per cent.

It is reported by telegram from Matsumoto, that owing to the recent flood, five persons were drowned in the district of East Chikuma, Nagano prefecture.

THE captured steamer Sungari has been called the Shoko Maru. She is assigned to the Yokosuka Naval Station.

OWING to the storm, the steamer 8th Totsu Maru sunk at 4 p.m. on June 22nd in Hakodate. The crew were saved.

THE Emperor has decorated Mr. Sufu, Governor of Kanagawa prefecture, with the Second Class of the Sacred Treasure.

THE steamers Shinano Maru and Bingo Maru which had been converted into cruisers, were released on June 26th at Kure.

A CHERULPO telegram says that twenty-five British soldiers, guards of the Legation at Seoul, left on June 22nd for Chemulpo.

A CASE of cholera appeared on June 27th in the district of East Tagawa, Yamagata prefecture. The patient died the same evening.

MR. MIYAOKA, Minister Resident, who was present at the Hague Court on the house-tax affair, will return to Yokohama on July 4th.

THE Nagoya City Assembly has decided to cut a canal between that city and Atsuta at a cost of yen 453,281. The work should take two years.

T. SOGA, a clerk of the Senju Post Office, has been arrested on a charge of having destroyed registered letters and stolen money orders.

EIGHTY-FIVE invalids arrived on June 29th at Shimabashi from the front via Hiroshima. Today, the 30th, 176 will arrive at the same place.

TWO Russian surgeons among the prisoners from the Dmitri Donskoi, sunk in the late battle, were released on June 23rd at Saseho. They embarked at Nagasaki for Shanghai.

A TELEGRAM has been received at the French Legation, Tokyo, from Paris, stating that Vice-Admiral Richard has been appointed Commander of the French squadron in the Orient.

A GERMAN transport with 1,152 troops arrived on June 28th at Nagasaki from Kiaotchow; having shipped 2,400 tons of coal she left on the following day for Singapore on her way home.

MR. GRI COM, American Minister at Tokyo, on the evening of June 28th, entertained at the Legation Prince and Princess Kan-in, Counts Matsukata, and Inouye, Baron Iwasaki and other notables.

MR. M. MATSUMURA (35), an official of the Yokohama Customs, committed suicide on June 28th by hanging himself in his dwelling, No. 984, West Toke-machi, Yokohama. The man seems have suffered from insanity.

THE election of the Income Tax Investigation Committee took place on June 28th in the Yokohama Tax Bureau. The following gentlemen were elected:—Messrs. C. K. Marshall, Martin, S. Minowa, Y. Kato and S. Fukushima.

It is reported by telegram from Chiba that a farmer named K. Kono (62) living in the village of Torami, Chosei-gori, murdered his son on June 25th with a large knife. He was arrested at once. The cause was a dispute as to property.

EARLY on the morning of June 25th, a man armed with an iron stick and a sword broke into the dwelling of a merchant named Yokoyama Aokimachi, Kanagawa, menacing the occupants. The intruder obtained a small amount of money.

On June 28th, the Yokosuka Prize Court gave a decision as to the Norwegian steamer Henry Balkov (1,006 tons), confiscating the hull and the cargo. She was captured on April 7th in the neighbourhood of Hokkaido on her way to Vladivostok. There is no official report about her cargo, but it is generally believed to be coal.

SEVENTEEN Russians who recently drifted ashore in Iwami province from Saghalien arrived at Otaru on June 24th. They were examined at the Otaru Police Office. There they stated that they are Tartars and that they were detained in the island as convicts.

THE Hochi reports that Commander Akiyama, one of the staff officers of the combined squadron, will leave for Washington in company with Baron Komura, peace plenipotentiary. This officer has been in America as an attaché to the Japanese Legation.

THE Toyo Kisen Kaisha's steamers Rohilla and Rosetta, which are being employed by the military authorities as hospital ships, have been sold to the Bijo Steamship Company, Owari province. The Nichi Nichi says that the vessels are still in Government service.

It is announced by the Official Gazette that the Emperor of China has decorated Mr. T. Taniguchi, secretary of the Kanagawa Kencho, and Mr. S. Ikariyama, Superintendent of the Kaga-cho Police, with the Third Class of the Double-Dragon and Treasure Star.

In the Kobe Chihō Saibansho on Thursday judgment was given for the Defendants in the action instituted by Mr. A. Kirby against Mrs. Annie Bretton and two others for recognition of the continuance of Plaintiffs' Trusteeship of the estate of the late Mr. E. C. Kirby.

ABOUT fifty-three hundred officers and men who have been killed since the battle of Liaoyang up to the battle of Mukden will receive the Golden Kite. This posthumous honour is already sanctioned by the Emperor and will shortly be published by the Official Gazette.

COLONEL M. MURAKAMI, Commander of a regiment, who was officially reported missing after the battle of Mukden, is now found to be in a hospital of the Russian Army. It is said that he was severely wounded and captured while on his way on a stretcher to a Japanese field hospital.

JUNE 25th being the 22nd birth-day of the Crown Princess and the 4th anniversary of the birth of her second son—Prince Atsu,—celebration ceremonies took place at Aoyama Palace, many high officials, and foreign diplomats being present to offer congratulations. At noon, officials of the Imperial Household, etc., were entertained in the palace.

A SERIOUS railway accident occurred on the Sanyo Railway at 1.20 p.m. on June 26th. A freight train which had left Ikuno station for Arai station was derailed and fell over an embankment near the village of Yamaguchi. The result was that the locomotive and four cars were destroyed, two guards were killed, and one engineer and three firemen were severely injured.

THE steamer Bin Thuan, of the Compagnie Francaise de Cabotage des Mer de Chine, was floated off the rocks of Yanigishiri Shima, Hokkaido, on June 24 and arrived in Otaru on June 27. The Bin Thuan was under charter to Japanese at the time of her accident, being engaged in the fish-manure trade, and she ran ashore during a fog at a place some 75 miles north of Otaru, and within three miles of the place where the N. Y. K. steamer Iki Maru is ashore. It was necessary to blast away the rocks with dynamite to get the Bin Thuan floated.

MANCHURIA.

Friday, June 23.

The Russian organs in Shanghai publish an undated telegram from Harbin saying that the Japanese in the south-west of the field have retired along their whole line, and that on the 19th instant the Russian mounted scouts recovered Liaoyangwopeng—which place, it will be remembered, the Japanese occupied on the 16th. But the same telegram alleges that a powerful Japanese force advancing from the West along the Mongolian frontier, has occupied Shinlinchwan, a place with which we are not acquainted. It is obviously impossible to suppose that if a Japanese advance in force were taking place along the frontier of Mongolia, a position so important as Liaoyangwopeng would have been left at the mercy of the enemy's mounted vedettes. Another telegram from London speaks of the Japanese having occupied Sulung-hengu, but this name also is absent from any map in our possession. The fact is, however, that London's telegrams about the course of the campaign in Manchuria possess little value.

Russian prisoners who have just reached Mukden allege that the news of the destruction of the Baltic Fleet produced something like consternation among the Russian forces. They had reposed great hopes in the doings of the fleet, and their disappointment was correspondingly acute. On the 6th instant Linevitch published a general order with the design of restoring the spirits of the troops. He frankly admitted that the Baltic Squadrons had been practically annihilated, but he affirmed that the catastrophe did not affect the army further than to impose on it the duty of avenging its comrades, with which object he promised to make a great movement speedily.

The same prisoners say that since Linevitch assumed command all drinking by non-commissioned officers and men has been forbidden, but the officers keep up their drinking and carousing as freely as ever. This has helped to widen the breach between officers and men. In the cavalry alone no such breach exists. There officers and men are on almost as good terms as they are in the Japanese Army. But in other branches of the service their estrangement is very marked.

St. Petersburg, according to a telegram in the Hochi Shimbun, is saying that if Linevitch be defeated, Russia will go on fighting and fight to the death. Who are the folks in St. Petersburg that ventilate these statements, we wonder. Probably they are to be interpreted merely as answers to the protests of the Japanese press against the idea of an armistice.

Paris says that cholera is rife in the Russian army, and that the force under the immediate command of Linevitch has lost several thousands from this cause.

We read in the Asahi that only now have the iron railway-bridges between Mukden and Kaiyuan been completely restored. The Russian engineers had devoted special care to the destruction of these bridges, and their restoration has been correspondingly difficult. Yet, after all, it is only 3 months since the Japanese came into possession of the line, and considering that much of the bridge material has had to be manufactured in Japan and transported to Tiehling and Mukden, it can scarcely be said that the repairs have occupied much time.

Saturday, June 24.

The Asahi Shimbun and the Kokumin Shimbun both publish a statement attributed to a person who has just returned from the front to Moji. He says that a general advance was to be commenced by the Japanese armies on the 22nd instant. We can not tell what degree of credit attaches to this allegation. It is observable that in publishing the latest official intelligence from the Manchurian quarter, local English newspapers use headings indicating a continuance of the Japanese advance. They have apparently paid only very perfunctory attention to the intelligence issued by the Head Quarter Staff, or have allowed themselves to be deceived by rumours such as those that recently prompted the Tokyo correspondent of the Daily Telegraph to wire a sensational romance about a victorious advance and the complete outflanking of the Russians. There may have been an advance in some quarter of the field. Very likely there has been. But there had not been any general advance up to the 21st, nor had there been any victorious advance. Preparations for some movement must have been long afoot, and we may fairly presume that it will soon commence and that it will be a highly important movement when it does commence, but all is conjecture so far. Here again the Japanese have admirably succeeded in keeping their military secrets. And how great has been their gain by this reticence! It played a very large part in securing the radical victory in the Sea of Japan, for most assuredly had Rojestvensky learned how unflinchingly and patiently Togo was awaiting his arrival in the Tsushima Straits, a different story would have to be told to-day.

June 24, afternoon.

The Fiji Shimpō on the afternoon of the 24th issued the following extra, being a telegram sent by its correspondent from Yungling on the 23rd (Yungling is near Hsingking):—

"Yesterday a certain force of our troops drove back some 3,000 of the enemy, infantry and cavalry with 3 guns, and occupied South Shanchingsz (due south of Hailungching Ed. J.M.). We had 2 killed and 17 wounded. The enemy left 40 bodies on the field and carried away a number of killed and wounded. His losses must have been over 300. At the time of his retreat the enemy assassinated 7 of the Chinese in South Shanchingsz.

Sunday, June 25.

Up to this morning there is no official confirmation of the Fiji Shimpō's telegram as to the occupation of Shanchingsz on the 22nd instant. That does not prove, of course, that the operation did not take place.

Shanchingsz is in the eastern section of the field and its occupation may probably be regarded as preliminary to an advance upon Hailungching, from which it is 23 miles distant. A glance at the map will show that this movement is taking place in the valley of the Tumen River, a tolerably wide expanse of level country stretching north-east between highly massed hills. The Tumen is a tributary of the Sungari which flows nearly due south from Kirin, and the avenue to the latter town from the Japanese positions at Hsingking and in its neighbourhood lies naturally along the valleys of these two rivers. In the western section it appears to be now uncertain whether Linevitch has not abandoned his advanced lines from Yehhoching to Pamienching, and fallen back upon the Itungchan-Huaite line. But the general opinion is that his main position extends from Kirin to Changchun, and that the next great battle will take place there, though probably it is not very imminent, first because the Japanese have still to march some 80 miles before reaching Changchun; and secondly because the season is unfavourable.

As to the forces under the command of Linevitch, the Kokumin makes this calculation. Kuropatkin had 322,700 at Mukden. Of these he lost 156,500, but 50,000 may be supposed to have rejoined the ranks. Then, if we assume that the railway has been pouring in 1,500 daily for three months, we get an addition of 130,000 men, and the full strength of Linevitch would stand at about 350,000. Probably that is a liberal calculation.

It will be remembered that the official reports spoke of a Japanese force having returned from Yangulintsz on the 19th instant, the object of its march thither having been accomplished. From the Asahi we learn that the object in question was to destroy the Russian entrenchments at Yangulintsz. Having done this, the force retired to Lienhwachieh. Two days later, namely, on the 21st, the Russians moved out to recover their entrenchments, and finding them unoccupied by the Japanese, pushed on to Lienhwachieh where the Japanese outpost was. The latter had it in orders to retire slowly on Nanchingsz in such an event, drawing the Russians on. This ruse succeeded, and the Russians, pressing forward, came within easy range of a large Japanese force at Nanchingsz, so that they suffered severely before they could make good their retreat.

It appears that the Russians and Japanese, in their Manchurian positions, have recommenced the interchange of letters which frequently took place when the two armies lay confronting each other in the Shaho lines. The Hochi Shimbun describes an interesting example. A party of Russian cavalry fastened two letters to a tree within sight of a Japanese outpost. The Japanese took the letters and found that they contained announcements of a great naval victory won by Rojestvensky, who was said to have annihilated the Japanese fleet and seized a Japanese island for naval base. The writers predicted therefore, that the days of the Japanese armies' successes in Manchuria were numbered; that defeat and starvation now stared them in the face, and that if they escaped across the sea they might count themselves fortunate. It need scarcely be said that the Japanese reply to these missives contained a very explicit contradiction, and that it set forth how exactly opposite had been the issue of the battle. The Russians, on reading this answer, fired a random volley in the direction of the Japanese and rode away—a random volley which cost the life of one Japanese trooper.

Monday, June 26.

An officer who has just returned from the eastern section of the field says that the Russians have an outpost about 43 miles from Wutaukau, which is on the road from Tunghua to Kirin. He further states that collisions of scouts are frequent and that the enemy's strength is 2 divisions with artillery. The Russians frequently make counter-attacks with 2 or 3 companies, but these are invariably repulsed. This statement conveys little information, but the Fiji Shimpō's correspondence suggests that an advance is in progress towards Hailungching from two directions, namely, Hsingking and Tunhua.

Yingkow telegraphs that an announcement has just been issued in the sense that from the 1st of July the following places will be opened to the trade and residence of Japanese subjects, namely, Tashikiao, Niu-chwang, Haiching, Anshantien, Liaoyang, Kaiping, Fenhwangching and Samaji. Persons desiring to avail themselves of this privilege must apply to the chief of commissariat at Liaoyang. Kwantungchou, Yingkow and Antung, however, are not included in the list of opened places.

This step indicates what line Japanese policy in Manchuria is to take. The country will be thrown open to trade, residence and travel.

There has been a change nominally in the administrative system south of Liaoyang, but it appears to be in name only, so that the details have not much interest. At Kwantungchou, however, civil administration has been substituted for military. The change was the occasion of a ceremonial celebration on the 25th instant.

Tuesday, June 27.

The Asahi's correspondent at the front wires some interesting intelligence about the position in the east of the field. Nanshan-chingtsz signifies "South Sanchintsz." It is so called as being some 13 miles south of Sanchintsz proper. The latter is a place of importance, being the point where several roads converge from Fushun and the northern districts. It is also rich in local supplies and the formation of the ground offers excellent opportunities for defensive purposes. The Russians—3,000 strong with artillery—who were driven from Nanshan-chingtsz on the 21st instant and who were described in the official report as suffering heavy losses and retreating in disorder—made their way to Sanchintsz, where there are massed some twenty thousand men under the command of Matoriloff, and where they evidently intend to dispute the advance to Hailung-ching, some 23 miles distant.

Thursday, June 29.

The account that Harbin gives of the engagement on the 21st instant is different from that given by the Japanese. Mukden says that on the 19th the Japanese left made an advance before which the Russians retired. On the next day, however, the Russians took the offensive and occupied their former positions, whence, on the 21st, they renewed their advance. Finding the enemy very strongly posted, however, they retired after a brief combat, having had 754 casualties, including 4 officers. The Japanese official report was that on the 19th a force which had been sent to Yangmulintsz on special duty returned, having performed that duty. This would accord with the Russian account of the opening operation, namely, a Japanese advance and a Russian retreat. But the Japanese say nothing of the Russians recovering the abandoned positions on the 20th. Indeed the official report is altogether silent about the 20th, and it is from private sources that we learn about the nature of the duty performed on the 19th, namely, the destruction of the Russian entrenchments at Yangmulintsz. It is nevertheless very conceivable that the Russians returned, on the 20th, to the temporarily abandoned positions, and that not finding the enemy in possession, they inferred that he had withdrawn at the menace of their attack. As to the 21st, the Japanese official report described an advance of 3 battalions of Russian infantry and 7 companies of cavalry with 10 guns down the Kirin road, and stated that a fight began at 1.15 p.m., lasting several hours, whereafter, 7.45 p.m. the Japanese assumed the offensive, drove back the Russians and pursued them. Not a word was said about the casualties. It is not to be supposed, however, that the Russians themselves have overstated their casualties. They put the total at 754, which shows that the affair was much more than a mere skirmish and that it attained to something like the dimensions of a battle. What perplexes us is that a force of only 3 battalions of infantry and 7 sotnias of cavalry can have had between seven and eight hundred casualties. There must have been very sanguinary fighting or else the Russian force was greatly underestimated by the Japanese.

An officer who has returned from the front says that Linevitch has changed the tactics pursued by Kuropatkin. The latter's method of marshalling his armies was to dispose them with a very extended front to guard against flank-turning movements, but Linevitch prefers deep formations with small extension. This is somewhat vague, and can scarcely be reconciled with the hypothesis hitherto entertained that Linevitch is holding the whole line from Kirin to Changchun, a distance of 65 miles. Kuropatkin's front at Mukden did not attain larger dimensions.

The same officer denies that Linevitch has received any considerable re-inforcements from Russia since the battle of Mukden. If he has been enabled to replace his casualties, that is the most.

A report published by the Hochi and the Nippon says that the Russians are employing a great number of Chinese spies. As many as 30 or 40 are captured daily by the Japanese, and it is supposed that the total must be fully three thousand.

The heat is becoming considerable in Manchuria. The thermometer registers as much as 90° at mid-day, and falls to 60° at night. There is very unsettled weather and sharp changes of temperature occur, but the health of the troops is said to be excellent.

AN ADMIRAL'S VIEW.

Rear-Admiral Taketomi, who flies his flag in the Iwate and commands a Squadron, has been interviewed by a representative of the Asahi Shimbun. He says that in his opinion as a naval man the main cause of Rojestvensky's disaster was his choice of route. He ought not to have attempted to force the Tsushima passage. Admiral Taketomi appears to think, however, that the Russian commander had no alternative, but he does not explain why that was the case, though it may be predicted that no phase of the battle will occasion more controversy. Turning to the quality of the fighting Admiral Taketomi considers that the Russians, bravely as they fought, showed great want of skill in one respect: they made no use whatever of their destroyers. They certainly possessed 9 of these craft, but they did not attempt to employ them. In fact, the destroyers seem to have acted mainly as tenders to the battleships and cruisers. The same incapacity to utilize this kind of craft has been apparent on the Russian side since the war began. And indeed when one considers what destroyers can accomplish if 4 or 5 of them are launched resolutely against a battle-ship, it becomes plain that the Russians are not adepts in this kind of warfare. Pressed by the Asahi's representative to express an opinion about the Russian tactics, Admiral Taketomi said that excellent as the single-column-line-ahead formation is for some purposes, it is evidently defective in the case of a large fleet, for unless the enemy adopts a similar formation and steams on parallel lines, the ships at the extremities of the line must generally find themselves out of range. Rojestvensky was doubtless right to form double column, and sometimes even treble column, for he could thus utilize his ships better. But there is one great objection to these complicated formations, namely, that the ships require to be handled with consummate ability. Unless distances be accurately preserved the vessels inevitably mask each other's fire. Admiral Taketomi thinks that the Russians did not possess the skill demanded by such formations, and that they erred in resorting to them. We (Japan Mail) may mention that Admiral Togo's tactics seem to have been manœuvring with his main squadron and his armoured cruiser squadron together during the early stages of this engagement. Apparently these 12 ships were divided into two Squadrons of six each—the Nisshin and the Kasuga working with the battle-ships—and they preserved uniformly the formation of single-column line abreast. But Togo had the advantage of speed, and thus approached the Russians at an acute angle; he poured into them the concentrated fire of his vessels as the range suited, sheering off and bearing down alternately. His other vessels worked independently and we have no definite information as to their tactics, but it may be assumed that they adopted the same formation in their part of the field; that is to say in their fight against the rear of Rojestvensky's lines.

THE CASE OF THE "SAMSON."

The case of the Samson will doubtless be recorded in the incidental annals of this war as one of its most curious developments. The matter has come to light in connection with some cases instituted by Mr. A. Pavlov, former Russian Minister in Korea, who sues a Mr. M. L. Kristensen for Tael 100,000 as the value, as compensation, and as loss incurred in reference to the sale of the steamship Samson; and also sues Baron Ward for the recovery of the Samson. It appears that in the month of March last some "deal" took place which resulted in the Samson being registered at the British Consulate-General as the property of Baron T. C. R. Ward. It is now evident, according to the allegations of the parties, that at the time she was so registered she was really the property of Mr. A. Pavlov. How to reconcile these different conditions is, or appears to be, the object of the present suit. The purchase of another ship called the Edendale and intentions to despatch one or both to Port Arthur under the Red Cross flag for the purpose of conveying stores to the invested city, are also features in the case. Altogether it promises to be very interesting.

A telegram to the Yiji from Shanghai says that on the afternoon of June 24th, the British Court delivered its finding. The essential points of the decision are that (1) The Samson was purchased to serve as a tender to the hospital ship Edendale; and that the Samson never had any relation to the military or journalistic arrangements of Mr. Bennet Burleigh and Baron Ward; (2) that M. Pavlov purchased the Samson in behalf of the Russian Government; (3) that M. Pavlov did not make any promise to Baron Ward as to compensation, on purchasing the steamer; and (4) that Baron Ward had no right to sell the ship at his own discretion, but was authorized to purchase the Edendale and convert her into a hospital ship and to supply her with surgical necessities. The Yiji's correspondent adds that an appeal against this verdict was expected to be lodged on June 26th.

KOREA.

Friday, June 23.

It is stated that the Russian forces in north-eastern Korea amounted to a division with 40 guns, and that they have retired across the Tumen, on the north bank of which river they are now concentrating. There are three bridges over the river, but we may assume that these would be destroyed in the face of any menaced advance by the Japanese, as the Russians have erected fortifications such as suggest a determination to oppose all attempts to cross the Tumen. Naturally there would be a strong desire to hold the river since it constitutes the Russian boundary, and its crossing by the Japanese would mean the first invasion of Russian territory. The Tumen takes the shape of an arch on the north-east of Korea, and unless the Russians have a powerful force to guard it they could scarcely hope to prevent a crossing. The Asahi Shimbun thinks that a battle of the character of the Yalu fight may be witnessed at the Tumen, though possibly the dimensions of the latter combat will be the smaller. The Russians can not spare any considerable force to hold the river, unless they bring thither a part of the garrison of Vladivostok, and if they contemplated that resource they should have employed it ere now. Our contemporary rejoices to think that Russian territory is about to be invaded, for the fact has indisputable importance in connexion with the peace negotiations.

The British Legation Guards were withdrawn from Seoul on the 21st and 22nd, so that the only Legation now retaining this protection is the American.

Mr. Shidehara, adviser to the Korean Education Department, has obtained permission to have the primary school readers compiled on the lines of corresponding books in Japan.

Saturday, June 24.

The Kokumin publishes Seoul telegrams to the effect that the Japanese troops continue their advance in north-eastern Korea. The Russians, formerly in occupation of Kyongsong, to the number of about 2,000, have retreated to the right bank of the Tumen, that is to say to the Korean bank, and they have some 4,000 men on the left bank. They are said to be working hard to complete entrenchments and fortifications with the object of making the Tumen the first line of defence for Vladivostok.

An officer who left Korea on the 17th says—through the columns of the Asahi—that the Russians had some 3,000 troops in north-eastern Korea, and that they were pushing their reconnaissances down as far as Kilju. The Japanese moved out (of Yuensan?) on the 9th, and the enemy at once began to retire, so that Kyongsong was occupied without any fighting. This officer confirms the statement that the Russians intend to make a stand at the Tumen. He speaks of 200 Cossacks having appeared near Immyong on the 16th, and says that they were at once driven off. How they got there is a mystery, for the whole of that district must have been in the possession of the Japanese, these having begun their advance on the 9th.

It will be observed that the force of the Russians at Kyongsong is here spoken of as not exceeding 3,000, but the official report used the expression "several thousands," which in Japanese would not be employed of a body numbering less than four or five thousand. Probably, therefore, greater credit attaches to the statements of another officer who left Immyong on the 16th instant. He says that the Russians at Kyongsong numbered about 12,000, with 16 guns, but this force consisted mainly of cavalry, there being only one battalion of infantry. They had an outpost at a point some 5 miles south of Kyongsong, but they did not push their reconnaissances far, preferring to employ Koreans as purveyors of intelligence. Many of the inhabitants of that part of the peninsula speak Russian, and were ready enough to act as spies of the Japanese movements. Indeed, the Russians had occupied the region for such a long time unmolested that the people had naturally come to regard them as a permanent institution, though it appears that the Cossacks did not make any attempt to earn local good will, but rather indulged freely in the licence which renders them objects of terror and abhorrence wherever they go. This officer says that there are no fortified positions on the south of the Tumen, but he does not say anything of the northern bank. What would be particularly interesting to know is the feasibility of using naval craft to force the passage of the river, but upon that point silence is preserved.

Monday, June 26.

A telegram from Nagasaki indicates that the Russians in north-eastern Korea have withdrawn altogether beyond the Tumen. They had a station at Kyongheung, but they have abandoned it and removed to Possiet Bay. They are said to have created some fortifications along the coast but the capture of Possiet Bay is not thought likely to be a difficult matter, nor yet is the crossing of the Tumen, which is imperfectly protected. It would be unwise, perhaps, to attach conclusive importance to these appreciations. Very slight fortifications suffice to render the passage of a river difficult.

News from Seoul says that a revised list of official salaries is about to be published. We learn incidentally that cabinet ministers have hitherto been receiving a nominal stipend of 250 yen monthly, but in reality their pay has amounted to only 100 yen in Japanese currency. The regulations now about to be promulgated will secure to them an actual sum of 250 yen, so that their salaries will be more than doubled. Corresponding increments will be given to junior officials, but, at the same time, very strict injunctions will be issued against the taking of bribes. The Korean system has hitherto been modelled on that of China. Officials have been left to support themselves out of the perquisites of their office, which perquisites naturally ceased to be regarded as what we call bribes. If a man's pay is admittedly quite insufficient to maintain him and if it be a recognised consequence that he should use the authority of his office and the opportunities connected with it to procure the emoluments which the State does not choose to provide for him by direct process, then the word "bribe" ceases to have in his eyes or in the eyes of his countrymen the opprobrious significance that it bears in the Occident. The Chinese system might work well enough if officials confined themselves to collecting what are classifiable as fees, but to draw the line between legitimate fees and illegitimate douceurs is a feat beyond the strength of human nature, and thus the only sound method is that pursued in the Occident. It is not a method that prevents all abuses, but it is at all events the soundest and most efficacious method available. Meanwhile if Korean Cabinet Ministers rest content with a salary of three hundred pounds a year, they will deserve much credit.

We may mention in this context that, according to advices from Seoul, the Korean Government, acting on the suggestion of Mr. Megata, financial adviser, is about to issue a domestic loan of 2 million yen. The issue price will be 95, the interest 7 per cent, and the loan, after lying unredeemed for 3 years, will be paid off in 2 years. The purpose of the transaction is to discharge the expensive liabilities of the Treasury, notably a sum of about a million and a half of yen which the Government owes to the First Bank and for which it is paying interest at the rate of over 10 per cent. The new loan is to be secured by the Treasury's receipts. It is expressly stated that a sum of two hundred and fifty thousand yen, which remains unpaid out of the loan of 3 million yen made to Korea by Japan after the war of 1894-5, is not included among the debts to be now discharged. So far as we can remember this loan did not carry any interest, but if it did the rate certainly did not exceed 5 per cent., so that to pay it off with money borrowed at over 7 per cent., would be bad financing.

Wednesday, June 28.

The currency reform is in progress in Korea. The first important problem relates to nickel coins. These, according to regulations just issued, will be finally dealt with from July 1st. All holders of such coins will have to present them at the Mint. Those of good quality will then be exchanged at the rate of $3\frac{1}{2}$ sen per nickel. For those of bad quality one sen will be given, should the holder desire; but in the event of his objecting to that arrangement, the nickel will be clipped and returned to him. This problem of the nickel coinage has been a great stumbling block to financial reform in Korea, and every one interested in the country must be glad that drastic measures are to be taken at length.

The recently spoken-of issue of consolidated Korean bonds to the value of 2 million yen has been announced. The bonds are to be issued in Tokyo. They will be of two denominations, 50 yen and 100 yen, and they will carry interest at the rate of 7 per cent., payable twice annually.

The Kokumin Shimbun says that the depth of water at the mouth of the Tumen is 9 feet, but that elsewhere the average depth is only 4 feet, as far as Onsyong, which is 60 miles up the stream. The width of the river is some five or six hundred metres, and the bottom being sandy there is no special difficulty in wading across. From Novgorod at the head of Possiet Bay a road runs north-west to Ninguta, which is within a very few miles of the railway. Crossing the river at Onsyong this road would be struck at Hunchun, whence the distance to Ninguta is 115 miles. The Russians appear determined to dispute the passage of the stream. We hear again of their erecting fortifications along the northern bank. The Kokumin states that the Japanese have advanced steadily from Kyongsong, whence the retreat of the enemy on the 20th instant was recently announced, but inasmuch as Suson, 11 miles north of Kyongsong, was not occupied until the 26th, the advance can scarcely be described as "steady."

The Yokohama Railway Co. held a general meeting on June 28th at the office at Kanagawa. Mr. M. Asada presided and a project was submitted to the shareholders proposing to increase by yen 700,000 the present capital and to spend this amount in reclaiming the foreshore along Kanagawa and in establishing a railway station. The proposal was unanimously adopted.

THE PEACE NEGOTIATIONS.

Friday, June 23.

The Tokyo newspapers agree that Marquis Ito has declined to accept the office of plenipotentiary, and that Japan will be represented by Baron Komura and Mr. Takahira. In the Fiji Shimpō it is stated that Baron Komura will leave Japan either by the Iyo Maru for Seattle on the 4th of July or by the Coptic. In any case he would reach Washington by about the 24th or 25th of July, and the conference might be expected to open at the beginning of August. Meanwhile Russia still hesitates, or finds difficulty, as to the nomination of her plenipotentiaries. The rumour pointing to General Kuropatkin is not credited. Indeed we can well conceive that the St. Petersburg Government does not discover universal alacrity to undertake such a mission.

Monday, June 26.

A telegram to the Nichi Nichi Shinbun from London says that the Russian Government has asked the President of the United States to urge upon Japan the advisability of an armistice. But at the same time, orders have been issued for the mobilization of two more army corps. It is difficult to believe this. Certainly Russia has been protesting very vigorously that she does not want an armistice, and the inference suggested by these protests when interpreted in accordance with her historical methods, is that she does want it very badly. But she can not possibly expect that Japan will accede to any such one-sided arrangement, and therefore one can scarcely expect her to expose herself to a certain rebuff. Besides, to undertake this function would be entirely beyond the scope of the action which the President originally declared to be his programme.

Tuesday, June 27.

Japanese newspapers state that Baron Komura will start by the Coptic on the 4th proximo. They suggest that some cause for delay existed, but our impression is that the 4th of July was the earliest date originally fixed for the departure of the Japanese delegates. Meanwhile it is not yet announced that any official intimation has been received as to the nomination of M. Nelidoff, and it is not known whether he is to be alone or even whether he is to act at all. London attributes Russia's apparent slowness to the illness of Count Lamsdorf, which is understood to be grave, but in Japan the internal disorders of the country are regarded as a cause. The London explanation seems the more credible.

The Chinese Government seems to be still urging its claim to representation at the Conference. Nothing is said as to either Japan or Russia having been approached on this subject, and without their consent China can hardly hope to succeed. Neither does it seem at all likely that President Roosevelt will undertake the function of asking the belligerents to admit China. Korea might then put in a similar claim, and there is no foreseeing the extent of the dimensions which the conference might attain.

Wednesday, June 28.

On the 28th at 10 a.m. the Seiyu Kai members of the Diet met. Marquis Saionji addressed them, pointing out that the time demanded circumspection and forbade any definite declaration of peace terms. The following resolution was then unanimously passed: "Having regard to the object of the war and to the state of affairs at home and abroad, it is not considered necessary to specify the terms of peace. Nevertheless, in accordance with the Imperial declaration of war, such cession of territory and such payment of indemnity must be obtained as will preserve the power and interests of the country in future, and guarantee lasting peace for the Far East. Further the Manchurian and Korean problem must be definitely settled."

The Progressive members held a meeting at the same time by pre-arrangement with the Seiyu Kai. Count Okuma addressed them in terms similar to those used by Marquis Saionji. They then passed a resolution similar to that adopted by the Seiyu Kai, but supplemented it by saying that Korea is already under Japan's protection and that the actuality of Japan's power in Manchuria is recognised by the nations. It is right therefore that Russia will be required to abandon her present privileges in Manchuria and Korea; and further that since China's want of self-defence is exposing her interests to danger, Russia must be required to abstain from warlike preparations constituting a menace to China's frontiers and also from warlike preparations constituting a menace to the peace of Japan.

NAVAL NOTES.

The Port Admiral at Port Arthur telegraphs under date of the 24th that the Bayan was raised on the 23rd without mishap. This ship is an armoured cruiser of 7,726 tons and 21 knots speed, launched in 1900. In a report sent by Admiral Togo on the 18th of December last, it was stated that she was at a place 400 metres S.S.W. $\frac{1}{4}$ W. from the entrance to the dock, that her head was pointing E.N.E. $\frac{1}{2}$ E., and that she was apparently lying on the bottom with a list of 15°. After the capture of the fortress the Bayan was mentioned as one of the vessels most unlikely to be saved, but apparently that forecast was incorrect. If she can be successfully repaired, as we presume she can, she will make a very valuable addition to the Japanese navy, much more valuable than the Varyag which, though almost as new and possessing a higher speed (23 knots), is only a protected cruiser (6,500 tons). Apparently these two will be the first of the sunken craft to take their place in the Japanese lines. Still more interesting is the ultimate fate of the battle-ships Peresviet, Pobieda, Retvisan and Poltava.

The steamer Industrie has been judged by the Saseho Prize Court to have been indisputably engaged reconnoitering the movements of the Japanese fleet in Russian interests. It is not stated that the steamer has been declared prize of war, but that result may be taken for granted. With regard to the German subject found on board, the Court decided—we quote from the Asahi—that ample evidence existed to try him as a spy, but in consideration of the facts that the Baltic Squadrons had been destroyed, that therefore he could no longer do any mischief and that he was the subject of a neutral Power, the Court ordered his release on condition that he signed an engagement not to repeat any such manoeuvres and not to re-visit Japanese territory during the course of the war.

In the Hochi Shinbun we find an interesting statement about the sunken ship at Port Arthur. It appears that the Bayan was sunk by towing her over 3 torpedoes laid on her port-side. She suffered very heavy injury, but as one side only was hurt, the difficulty of raising her was not very great. Of the other vessels the Poltava seems to be the most injured. On the other hand, she, the Peresviet and the Pallada are lying on an even keel, and the labour of raising them will be small compared with that required in the case of the Varyag which lay on her side on the bottom. The Retvisan and the Pobieda have a list, but it is not serious. All these 5 ships—4 battle-ships and one cruiser (Pallada)—were sunk by the Russians. The injury they suffered from Japanese gun-fire would not have sent them to the bottom, though it put them out of fighting trim. Their upper parts are above the sea, and there is every expectation of saving them. But time and money will be needed, and the Diet will have to be asked for the latter, since no margin for such a purpose is provided in the estimates of war expenses. In addition to the Bayan some 30 small craft have already been raised, together with two hospital ships, the Angara and Kazan, which two will soon be sent to Japan. There are still some 21 gun-boats, destroyers, torpedo-boats and converted cruisers to be raised. When the Port Arthur cemetery has given up all its dead and when they are supplemented by the 5 vessels taken in the Battle of the Japan Sea and by the Varyag, they will make quite a formidable fleet.

Admiral Viscount Ito, Chief of the Naval General Staff sent, on the 22nd instant, Captain Yamashita as his representative to Saseho for the purpose of conveying condolences to the Japanese wounded, and also to Admiral Rojestvensky. Captain Yamashita, in Admiral Viscount Ito's name, expressed admiration of the valour shown by Admiral Rojestvensky on behalf of his country, in whose cause he had been honourably wounded, and wished for his speedy recovery. In reply the Russian Admiral said that he could not be too grateful for the numerous inquiries and messages of condolence he had received from Japanese quarters. He said that nothing could exceed the perfection of the arrangements in the hospital and the care taken of him there; that he could never forget the kind attention lavished on him, and that he begged Captain Yamashita to convey his warmest thanks to Admiral Viscount Ito.

Since the beginning of the War Prince Arisugawa has made repeated presents of money to buy refreshments for the wounded. His Imperial Highness has now contributed 1,400 yen on account of the wounded in the last naval battle.

Apparently the Peresviet will be the immediate successor of the Bayan in order of resurrection at Port Arthur. Salvage operations are said to be proceeding most successfully in her case, and she will soon emerge. The Peresviet is a sister-ship of the Ossliabya, an iron-clad of 12,674 tons and 19 knots, launched in 1898. In her vicinity the Pobieda, also a sister-ship, is lying.

The Sungari, which was sunk by the Russians at Chemulpo simultaneously with the Varyag and Koriets, was supposed to have been injured beyond all hope of salvation. She was successfully raised, however, and taken to Nagasaki, and her repairs having now been completed, she has been added to the Japanese transport service under the name of Matsuyama Maru.

RUSSIA'S NAVAL EXPLOITS IN THE FAR EAST.

The achievements of the Russian Navy during the present war make an interesting record. It is true that by means of mines they have sunk some important Japanese war-vessels, but what they have accomplished by gun-fire may be gathered from the following list of vessels sent to the bottom of the sea by their cruisers:—

Name.	Displacement.	Date of Sinking.
Naga-no-ura-Maru , steamer	1,084	11/2/04
Hanyo Maru , steamer	75	26/3/04
Goyo Maru , steamer	600	25/4/04
Flagmo-ura-Maru , steamer	219	do
Yawala Maru , sailing ship	198	16/6/04
Ansei Maru do	105	do
Sriyai Maru do	?	do
Seisha Maru do	122	30/6/04
Koun Maru , steamer	57	do
Kio Maru , sailing ship	140	19/7/04
Takashima Maru , steamer	318	20/7/04
Hokusei Maru , sailing ship	91	do
Fukujū Maru do	121	24/7/04
Jizai Maru do	199	do
Hakutsu Maru do	91	do (?)
Thea , German steamer	1,613	do
Knight Commander , British steamer	4,306	do
Yawala Maru III. , sailing ship	198	5/5/05
Tektaris , German steamer	?	28/5/05
St. Kilda , British steamer	?	5/6/05
Ithoma , British steamer	?	5/6/05

To this list we have to add a number of fishing boats destroyed by the Russians in the northern seas. These little boats were not attacked by war-ships. They suffered an even more inhumane fate, for having been driven by stress of weather to Russian coasts, or having proceeded thither in the exercise of their peaceful avocation, they were seized and destroyed. The boats of Captain Gunji's Hokōgikai are an illustration, though we have no information as to the exact number of them which fell into Russian hands. The following list shows the fishing boats believed to have been destroyed:—

Boat.	Fate.	Place of Register.
Chutaku Maru	Unknown	Hakodate
Ryosen Maru	do	do
Kaichi Maru	Burned	Noto
Kifuku Maru	do	Kaga
San'yoshi Maru	do	Hakodate
Chosho Maru	do	Tokyo
Yeiho Maru	do	do
Yeiho Maru	do	do
Yeiho Maru	do	do
Taikei Maru	do	Totomi
Kwanisu Maru	do	do
Kayetsu Maru	Captured	Hakodate

This is a shocking record. Of the Japanese side a large number of steamers have been captured, but almost without exception they were either engaged in the service of the enemy or were carrying contraband to his fortresses. It can not be doubted that after this war a conference of the Powers will be held for the purpose of determining whether more civilized principles can not be introduced into the practice of hostilities, and if such a conference meets it will certainly take for a prominent subject of discussion the immunity of private property. The tendency of nations during the past century has been to exclude private property as far as possible from the destructive operations of war, but Russia has now furnished such a flagrant example of disregard for that humane principle that possibly her excesses may help to work a cure.

CHINA.

Friday, June 23.

It is now stated that the Peking Government has decided to postpone its project of opening Mongolia until peace is concluded between Japan and Russia. The project has not been abandoned, but probably the Chinese think that until the war is over practical effect could not be given to the programme, and therefore its nominal inauguration may as well be postponed. On the whole that is probably the wisest plan.

News from Shanghai indicates that the Chinese continue to organize protests against the exclusion of their people from the United States, and that their nationals in Singapore are zealously joining the movement. In Shanghai Chinese employees are withdrawing from American schools, Chinese employees are leaving American firms, and vernacular newspapers are discussing the propriety of declining to insert American advertisements. The demonstration will culminate on the 7th of the 6th month (old calendar) when, unless the American Authorities show some unequivocal sign of yielding, the Chinese will put all their threats into execution.

Saturday, June 24.

A telegram to the Hochi from Peking says that the long-deferred treaty between Great Britain and Tibet has been ratified. The treaty has undergone some modification. England is not to put any garrisons in Tibet, and the amount of the indemnity is reduced to 700,000 taels. But privileges as to mines, railways, land-ownership, etc., are reserved. It would appear, however, that practical enjoyment of these privileges is to depend upon China's acquiescence, a clause which very unequivocally recognises the Middle Kingdom's sovereignty.

Monday, June 26.

Viceroy Yuan has issued a proclamation calling upon all classes of the people to attend quietly to their own affairs and to leave to the Government the settlement of the Chinese-exclusion problem. At the same time the Viceroy has memorialized the Peking Government in the sense that immediate steps should be taken to effect some settlement with the United States Government. Yuan considers that it would be a great loss to China if at this juncture she did anything to estrange American sympathy, for the United States will have a powerful voice in the final settlement of the Manchurian question.

Wednesday, June 28.

The Asahi Shinbun's information from Peking is to the effect that the Chinese Government has not made the reported attempt to be admitted to the Washington conference, but the Nichi Nichi's correspondence represents Prince Ching as having called on Mr. Rockhill and formally conveyed the request. Mr. Rockhill is said to have pointed out that the conference was a two-Power affair and that the admission of a third State was out of the question. Another telegram to the same journal alleges that the Government had decided to invite from the Viceroy and Governors an expression of opinion as to what course China should pursue at this juncture with regard to Manchuria. That is much more likely, it seems to us.

The Canadian mail brought news on Monday that Miss Louise Ropes Loomis, A.M., of Barnard College, Columbia University, and daughter of the Rev. H. Loomis, of Yokohama, has been elected Warden of Sage College,—the women's department of Cornell University, Ithaca, N.Y. Miss Loomis was born in Yokohama and received her early education here. She then went to the United States, entering Wellesley College, where she graduated in 1897. After spending a year at home in Japan, she took up a position in Whitman College, near Seattle, being teacher of classics for three years, and for the last year secretary of the College. In 1901, Miss Loomis entered the graduate department of Columbia University, and after taking her A.M. in June, 1902, successfully passed in 1903 her examinations for the degree of Ph.D., her major subject being European history and Greek. The summer of 1904 she spent at the British Museum, engaged in work on her thesis, and during the past winter she has conducted the required sophomore course at Barnard College as lecturer in history, besides giving an elective in English history.

The Ithaca Daily Journal, writing of the appointment, says:—

Having thus had experience in colleges of three distinctly different types, Miss Loomis has had an exceptional training for such a position as that to which she has been called, and a rare combination of character and high attainments make her, in the opinion of those who know her best, an almost ideal incumbent of the wardenship. She was first brought to President Schuman's attention by President Charles Cuthbert Hall, of Union Theological Seminary, who recommends her in the highest terms not only from the standpoint of character and scholarly attainments but also with special reference to her personality and social accomplishments.

DEATH OF MR. W. D. COX.

We regret to announce the death of Mr. W. D. Cox, which took place at his residence in Hirakawacho, Tokyo, on the 24th instant at the age of 61, after a long and painful illness. Mr. Cox had been employed by the Japanese Government as teacher of English since 1876. He commenced his career in the Agricultural School at Komaba, was thence transferred to the Yōbi-mon of the Tokyo University and finally to the First High School. He came to Japan after securing in England testimonials of exceptional efficiency, and he enjoyed in this country an excellent reputation both as a scholar and as a man. Few foreigners, very few indeed, have served for such a long term of years in Japan. The funeral took place on the 25th instant and was very largely attended. A sum of 1,000 yen was sent by the faculty of the First High School to the family of the deceased.

The Fourth Class Order of the Rising Sun has been conferred on the late Mr. Cox.

PRISONERS.

It would appear that the prisoners taken in the Battle of Mukden did not exceed some twenty thousand. Our readers probably remember a statement to which no great attention was paid at the time, namely, that in counting the prisoners two reports received from different quarters but relating to the same facts, had inadvertently been regarded as independent and thus a false total had been reached. The latest returns show the number actually in Japan to be as follow:—

General officers	10
Staff officers	68
Officers	896
N. C. officers	8,460
Privates	50,985
Total	60,419
Prisoners taken in the Battle of the Japan Sea	7,281
	67,700

It will be observed that the number of prisoners taken in the naval engagement is larger than was at first supposed.

THE REASONS OF THE RUSSIAN DEFEAT.

A Japanese staff-officer, speaking in the Jiji Shimpō, cites as the first cause of the Russian defeat in the Japan Sea, their inferior gunnery. He says that good gun practice depends mainly upon the officers in charge of the guns, and that the Russian officers are lamentably without training. In the early stage of the battle the Russians scored only one hit for every three scored by the Japanese, and in the later stages the ratio fell to one to four or even lower. That may be described as signifying that the Japanese had from 3 to 4 guns in action for every 1 piece of the enemy's and under such circumstances there was nothing strange in the great disparity of casualties. But this officer does not agree with the theory that Rojestvensky owed much of his disaster to an error of judgment in choosing the Tsushima avenue. On the contrary, that was his wisest solution. The passage of Tsugaru Strait is a long business; the water is narrow; the season was just that when fogs prevail, and finally there was danger from artificial obstacles. As to Soya, its distance and the consequently large consumption of coal were serious objections, added to the fact that had Rojestvensky chosen this route he could not have successfully concealed his design, and his plight on emerging from the Soya passage would have been much less advantageous than he might reasonably have hoped it would be when emerging from Tsushima. A great mistake made by the Russians was that they marshalled their vessels in double column line ahead. From the moment of going into action in such a formation their defeat became a foregone conclusion. For apart from the impossibility of maintaining an orderly formation when pursuing such tactics for defensive purposes, there is the fact that only a few of the ships can bring their guns into effective action against an enemy attacking end on as the Japanese attacked. The latter were able to concentrate their whole fire upon the Russians' leading ships, whereas the Russians could only use a limited number of their guns. Had they adopted the strategy of imposing the brunt of the fight on their battle-ship squadron, while the rest broke through and steered direct for Vladivostok, they might have made a partial success. But the plan they pursued was that all the ships should mutually succour each other, and thus when the head of the battle-ship column got into trouble, the others steamed up, thrusting their heads into the lion's mouth without being able to accomplish any compensatory feat. Concerning the interesting question of battle-ships and armoured cruisers being sunk by gun-fire, this officer—who was in the battle, be it observed—thinks that an exceptional reason existed; the Russians were very deep in the water. A battle-ship's protection extends to only a certain height above the water-line. Rojestvensky, however, had taken great quantities of coal, provisions and stores on board his vessels, and probably also large supplies of ammunition. Thus heavily laden the vessels were at a great disadvantage when assailed by gun-fire in a rough sea, for wounds which, being considerably high over the usual water line, would not have affected the stability of the vessels under ordinary circumstances, became dangerous in the presence of a high sea pouring in through these rents as the vessels laboured and rolled. So far from this fight proving the superiority of arms to armour, it tends to demonstrate the contrary, for the captured vessels, notably the Orel, show that the newest kind of armour successfully resisted all the Japanese projectiles and was not pierced in any case. The wisest distribution of the armour was another question, and here the Russian builders do not appear to have yet adopted the most approved principles. The fight may possibly furnish some valuable data to naval architects. But while offering these explanations the officer does not attempt to deny that the results of the battle savoured of the miraculous. The fact that high seas prevailed during the day to the immense assistance of the Japanese gun-fire and to the accentuation of the Russian want of skill; the fact that the wind and sea abated sufficiently at sunset to permit the successful employment of torpedo craft; the fact that almost every movement of pursuit made by the Japanese on the following day was crowned with success—all these things go to make a very remarkable record.

As to Nebogatoff's surrender, this officer denounces anything like severe criticism. He says that Nebogatoff with his four ships—the Sannurad escaped at once—found himself surrounded by no less a force than 27 Japanese vessels, including the most powerful of Togo's ships. Had the Russian Admiral refused to surrender under such circumstances, his vessels would have been sunk forthwith: five minutes would have sufficed to seal their fate. Can there be any doubt that he adopted the right course when, rather than deliberately invite that catastrophe, rather than condemn to a useless death over 2,000 officers and men, he hauled down his flag? No one should say a word against him.

THE MINERALS OF TIBET.

Detractors of England at the time when the Tibet mission was making its way wearily through the Himalayan snows, roundly declared that Great Britain's hidden object in seeking a treaty with the Dalai Lama was to obtain the right of pre-emption of the vast mineral wealth of the Tibetan tableland. It was a beautiful little story and was much embroidered and enlarged upon in the course of its peregrinations round the world. Now comes the sequel. Mr. H. H. Hayden, of the Geological Survey of India, was attached to the Tibet expedition, and he has contributed to the records of the department a report on the result of his investigation. The country is, he states, strikingly poor in minerals of economic value, the only one found in situ being gold, which was obtained in very small quantities from the coarse gravel beds of the Tsangpo. The largest yield obtained by panning was only at the rate of 28 grains of gold per ton of gravel. Concentrates were found to contain, in addition to much magnetite and zircon a small quantity of rutile tourmaline and hercynite, and probably uraninite. Persistent rumours of the existence of coal at Lhasa were found to be groundless. During the stay at the Lamasitic capital, Mr. Hayden bought a number of samples of the gem stones employed by the local jewellers, amongst them being turquoise, ruby, tourmaline, emerald, and sapphire. The jewellers stated that all these stones were brought from a considerable distance, some coming from Ladak and Mongolia, and others from India. Mr. Hayden could obtain no trustworthy information as to the existence of any indigenous sources of gems, and he came to the conclusion that, with the exception of turquoise, practically all the gem stones came from foreign countries. One more myth is therefore shattered by the hammer of scientific fact.

NAVAL "KANJO."

The following is an epitome of the reasons assigned by Admiral Togo for the Kanjo awarded by him in connexion with the recent battle in the Sea of Japan:—

THE CONVERTED CRUISER "SHINANO MARU."

Performed outlook duty day and night throughout the month of May, watching for the enemy's coming; reported him in sight at dawn on the 27th, and by this timely information greatly benefited the Japanese strategy.

THE CRUISER "IZUMI."

Got into touch with the enemy early on the 27th of May, and in spite of his fire watched him closely; assisted the Japanese military transports; sent frequent reports of the enemy's condition and materially promoted the Japanese plans.

THE CRUISER "CHIHAYA."

During the fight on the 27th of May watched her opportunity, closed in frequently; discharged torpedoes; approached the badly injured flag-ship Kniaz Suvaroff, and in spite of the hot fire of her neighbouring consort, bravely carried out a torpedo-attack against her.

NO. FIVE DESTROYER SQUADRON.

During the fight on the 27th of May, closed in on the enemy's injured flag-ship Kniaz Suvaroff and made a gallant attack with torpedoes in broad daylight in spite of a hot fire from the ships in the vicinity; after sunset, in company with other torpedo-boat sections, carried out vehement and determined night-attacks; on the 28th the Shiranui (one of the destroyers of this section) captured the enemy's ship Admiral Nakhimoff, and then, in co-operation with torpedo-boat No. 63, sunk the enemy's destroyer Gromky; again the Murakumo (another unit of the same section), in company with the Nitaka, sank the enemy's destroyer Buistovi off Chukpyang Bay.

NO. FOUR DESTROYER SQUADRON.

During the fight on the 27th of May closed in on the enemy's injured flag-ship Kniaz Suvaroff, and made a gallant attack in broad day-light in spite of a hot fire from the ships in the vicinity; on the morning of the 28th, made a sudden attack upon the enemy's ship Nararin and sunk her.

NO. ELEVEN TORPEDO SQUADRON.

On the evening of the 27th of May attacked the enemy's flag-ships Kniaz Suvaroff and sunk her.

NOS. ONE, SEVENTEEN AND EIGHTEEN TORPEDO SECTIONS.

On the night of the 27th closed with the enemy's ships in spite of wind and waves, and regardless of heavy casualties, not only carried out a vehement attack, but also caused the enemy to scatter, and on the morning of the 28th indirectly rendered no small assistance to the pursuing ships.

NOS. NINE AND TEN TORPEDO SECTIONS.

On the night of the 27th of May, steaming through a heavy sea and a high wind, closed with the enemy, delivered a gallant attack, compelled him to scatter and indirectly assisted the pursuing ships on the 28th.

THE DESTROYERS "SAZANAMI" AND "KAGERO."

Engaged 2 destroyers of the enemy on the south of Ulneung Islands on the 28th of May, captured one of them, and made prisoner of the enemy's Commander-in-chief.

RUSSIA.

The telegrams from Russia suggest a most unquiet state of affairs. So disturbed and disaffected are the people said to be that they are welcoming Japanese successes as a means of shaking the grand-ducal edifice. How much these messages may be exaggerated we can not tell, but probably a large margin must be taken off. Evidently the indiscretion—if so it may be called—of the press in interpreting the Tsar's promise of a national assembly has added fuel to the fire of discontent, for the nation's hopes were thus suddenly raised to a high pitch and the re-action must have been correspondingly painful. There does not appear, however, to be any kind of revolutionary organization, and in its absence the military must remain masters of the situation. It is true that in the Caucasus some disaffection among the soldiery is spoken of. Were that to occur on any large scale the situation would become very serious for the autocracy. In the main, however, the troops seem to be faithful to the Throne. To whatever extent these disturbances make for the cause of peace, they are to be welcomed, but there is no concealing the fact that if they be carried much further they may temporarily paralyse the administrative machinery and deprive the Government of capacity not only to carry on responsible negotiations but also to fulfil any pledges given by the negotiators. Far-seeing publicists have from time to time expressed apprehension that if peace be not made now, and if the war be carried on much longer, Russia will fall into such a condition as to preclude the payment of an indemnity even though she be willing to do so. We trust that she is not already on the verge of such a plight.

When this war commenced there were publicists who ridiculed the notion of Russia being beaten. Their imagination was defective; they could not conceive her accepting defeat at the hands of a Power comparatively so insignificant as Japan. These same publicists labour to-day under a similar disability. They find it impossible to picture Russia bowing to defeat, and therefore they predict that from the moment when peace is concluded she will begin to get ready for a war of revenge. She will reorganize her military programme so that a million of men armed and trained in the most up-to-date manner shall always be available for East-Asiatic service; and she will consummate such a scheme of ship-building that at the end of ten years she will possess 25 first-class battle-ships, 40 of the finest armoured cruisers afloat, with great flotillas of torpedo craft. Certain influential German journals endorse this forecast. So do several French. And, after all, it is a very natural forecast. But it suggests some want of reflection. We can not tell what the terms of peace will be, but one thing is absolutely certain, namely, that they will not include the restoration of Port Arthur to Russia and that no naval base will remain to her in the Far East except Vladivostock. Another thing certain is that she will be deprived of the East-China Railway from Harbin to Liaotung. In fact she will be restored to the position she occupied 10 years ago. No one has ever pretended to think that Vladivostock could suffice for the requirements of a great navy such as is enumerated above. Vladivostock has indeed been spoken of as a harbour "capable of accommodating an almost unlimited number of vessels of deep draught," yet the Russians, who well know its capacity, never regarded it as sufficient for the wants of a large fleet and never attempted to assemble a large fleet in Far-Eastern waters until they obtained Port Arthur and Dalny. There is only one dock at Vladivostock capable of accommodating a war-ship of over 3,000 tons, and though that defect might be remedied, it could scarcely be remedied on a scale such as would be demanded by a fleet of 65 battle-ships and armoured cruisers with a cloud of torpedo craft. In short Russia with Vladivostock alone does not suggest anything very formidable in the naval line. Her huge army of a million men, too, must have means of transport to the scene of action, and this involves the whole question of the great railway's future. Thus alike from a military and from a naval point of view the scheme of revenge is beset with many difficulties, though to pronounce its consummation impossible would be rash indeed. Its exclusion from the range of practical possibilities seem to be attainable only by extending the Anglo-Japanese alliance.

A telegram to the Fiji Shimpō from London says that there is much anxiety in St. Petersburg lest the Japanese should send a squadron to attack the shores of the Baltic. The estimate is that the Japanese might seize Åland Island and make it a base of operations, and as Russia has only one vessel which she could oppose to them, she should be virtually helpless. The Government has decided to take immediate steps for increasing the railway-carrying facilities, but as to what railways are affected the telegram does not say. Of course it is quite within the range of possibilities that Japan might attack Russia in the latter's home waters, and the dramatic character of the enterprise might be balanced by the presence of Russian vessels in the Japanese line of battle. How greatly the position has been affected by the destruction of the Baltic Squadron! Should Russia prove obstinate in the peace conference, the invulnerability which seemed so complete a few months ago might become apocryphal.

THE SINKING OF THE "IKHONA."

It is stated that intelligence has been received in Yokohama, by Messrs. Samuel Samuel and Company, of the sinking of the steamer Ikhona by a Russian auxiliary cruiser. This is a vessel more than once alluded to already. She has borne various names—Isan, Esau, Kona, Ekona and Aikona—, but it seems to be certain that she belonged to the British-India Steamship Company; that she was a new vessel of 5,200 tons; that she carried 7,000 tons of Rangoon rice for Japan; that she left Hongkong on the 2nd, and that she was sunk by the Terek on the 5th. These piratical Russian cruisers have behaved in a manner which really appears irreconcilable with any theory save that of a deliberate design to embroil England. No naval officers could show such indifference to the rules of international law and to the solemn engagements given by their country, unless they were inspired by some motive apart from the sense of duty. But so long as the Russian Government does not uphold them in their lawless practices or refuse to make due reparation, the series of piratical incidents need not disturb the relations between the two countries.

The arrival of the Dutch steamer Parak at Singapore carrying the master and crew of the Ikhona, 85 souls in all, puts an end to all doubt as to the fate of the latter ship. She was sunk by the Russian auxiliary cruiser Terek at a point about 150 miles north of Hongkong on the 5th instant, and on the 19th her crew were transferred by the Russian vessel to the Parak, which was summoned to stop for the purpose of the transfer. One of the most perplexing features of these piratical outrages is their senselessness. If the vessels sunk were Japanese property, or if even their cargoes were Japanese property, there might be some intelligible motive for such destruction, but where British or German property alone is concerned the destructive doings of the Russians assume the character of wanton outrages. Some excuse might also be found if the Rion, the Smolensk and the Terek were able to establish a blockade of the southern seas, thus interrupting trade with Japan. That, however, is out of their power. Their coal supply is limited, and they certainly could not re-fill their bunkers at any neutral port. These proceedings, then, are the outcome of a mere momentary access of blind destructiveness by which two neutral states, Great Britain and Germany, alone suffer. Of course Russia herself will be the main sufferer in the end, but meanwhile the doings of her naval officers seem as devoid of sense or reflection as those of a half tipsy reveller who smashes the furniture of the bar-room in a moment of berserker excitement.

UNTO THE HILLS.

Some swear by hotelled Miyanoshta;
The Law makes Hakone its home;
Each summer the childerfolk muster
Where Anida dreams by the foam;
Ikao each season doth number
Its denizens; others be led To yon hill-cradled lakelet a-slumber
That wakes as it falls out of bed.

To the township, whereof an Archdeacon
Is honoured as founder, some fare,
And the moor of the Smouldering Beacon;
Some cleave unto Rokkozan's Mayor;
Some seek a cool modus vivendi
Where cedar-aisled Sanctity dwells;
The mist-veiled vignettes of Chuzenji
Have cast over many their spells.

But ye others who boast not of besso
Once more will you shoulder your packs,
And tramp through the backwoods of Yezo,
Or bike by unglotrottered tracks,
Climb for air—and the good of your liver—Hida's snow-roof, or launched on the surge
Of the lean, writhing Sky-dragon River
Toboggan from hill to sea-verge?

Are ye man-mind-and-matter-sick? Would ye
Just peace? Why then, visit again
The still, woodland fringes of Fuji
By the Lake of the Lava Moraine;
Somnambulant sampan untether
And drift mid the Islets of Pine,
Or just laze through the long lotus-weather
At the steps of the Inland Sea Shrine.

Choose quick: when high summer to June-tide
Succeeds, it is time to take flight
From the semi who rasps i' the noontide,
The mosquito who snipeth by night,
From the Bar to the forest-cooled fountains,
From the Bund to the countryside lane,
To the free Open Mart of the mountains
From the close Open Ports of the plain.

CHINESE STUDENTS IN JAPAN.

Chinese students continue to reach Japan in ever increasing numbers. The Jiji Shimpō says that scarcely a steamer brings less than a hundred, and that three or four hundred are always waiting in Shanghai for an opportunity to come. Looking back to the beginnings of this movement, the first entry in the record shows that two students were sent from Chehkiang by the Chinese Government in April 1897. These were the pioneers. Now in their eighth year of education they are studying at the Engineering College of the Imperial University. Thereafter the arrivals became more frequent, some students coming at their own charges, others at the charges of the Government, and it appears that among all the 18 provinces of the Middle Kingdom Kansu is the only one which has not hitherto contributed to the total. Dividing the students according to localities, the following table is obtained:—

Shensi	3
Shantung	60
Hupeh	400
Chehkiang	191
Kiangsi	52
Kwangsi	26
Kwangtung	175
Yunnan	126
Shansi	56
Honan	12
Hunan	363
Kiangsu	406
Anhui	84
Fukien	76
Szechuan	321
Kweichow	38
Total	2,641

There are three classes of students, those sent at Government expense, those sent at public expense, and those that defray their own expenses. "Public expense" means simply that the charges are defrayed locally. For example, if a student, having graduated with distinction at a provincial college, desires to proceed to Japan for further education but is too poor to meet the outlay himself, then the faculty of the college, if they consider him worthy of such aid, may arrange to assist him out of the local funds. It would be interesting to know exactly how many students of each class are in Japan, but that information is not furnished in any return that we have seen. As to the disposition of the principal students the figures are:—

Tokyo University	5
Kyoto University	2
Waseda University	23
Tokyo Law University	23
Keio Gijuku University	1
Meiji University	3
Law University	296
Tokyo High Normal School	12
First High School	45
Second High School	1
Third High School	22

Many others are to be found in minor educational institutions. Then there are the men studying military and naval matters, namely:—

Seijō Gakkō	151
Shinbu Gakkō	305

The greatest number of all are in Mr. Kano Jingoro's Kobun Gakuin, namely 1,100. It must be understood that these students are not all young men. One of them is 64 and one 60. None is younger than 12, and by far the largest majority are between 20 and 30.

THE WEATHER.

The continuous rain since the wet season set in (10th instant) is said to be injuring the prospects of the sericulturists as well as those of the farmers. The barley crop is in a very precarious condition. Unless the weather clears up rapidly very heavy losses will be experienced. Meanwhile there are no signs of clear skies. From various quarters come reports of centres of depression, and though it is not expected that any violent storms will occur, the downpour of rain may continue for some days. Inundations have occurred in several districts, especially Hiroshima and Formosa.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

Our readers remember, doubtless, that on the 28th of last November seismic disturbances began to be reported from the Bonin Islands, and that they eventuated in the appearance of a new island 480 feet high and 5,200 yards in circumference. This was reported to Tokyo on the 6th of March, together with interesting details furnished by some of the Bonin folks who had visited the new land. A party of scientific men and journalists was formed to conduct investigations and on the 5th of May they set out in the Hyogo Maru. At the Bonins they made provision of workmen and then they pushed on to the site of the island. But there was no island. It had disappeared. Whether rough seas had disintegrated it or whether the same agencies that drove it to the surface of the ocean had withdrawn it again, the fact is that it had disappeared. Possibly it may emerge de novo as was the case with the island called Satsuma Fuji, which is now an old acquaintance and has a crater of its own.

Some weeks ago a paragraph, taken from a German newspaper, was circulated throughout the Far East, in which it was declared that General Stoessel had been found guilty by Court-martial and sentenced to be shot. Now we find the North China Daily News of June 20 printing the following:—

We learn that it was generally understood in Tsingtao, that a secret service message had been received by the German Admiral there to the effect that General Stoessel had been found guilty of having sold Port Arthur for three million yen, and had been shot in accordance with the finding and sentence of a Court-martial. No secret was made of this, we understand, in Tsingtao; but pending confirmation, we give the report with all reserve.

We rather think that if this fate had befallen the defender of Port Arthur Japan would have heard of it in a less roundabout way. Indeed, the Tsingtao correspondent of the Ostasiatische Lloyd, wiring to his journal under date of June 20th, says:—

Nothing is known here of the report, mentioned by the North China Daily News, about General Stoessel being convicted by a court-martial of having accepted a bribe from the Japanese and surrendered Port Arthur. Vice-Admiral von Prittwitz authorises me to state, that he has not received any telegram about the proceedings instituted against General Stoessel.

Japanese papers say that the Sapporo, Nippon and Asahi Beer companies have combined to form a trust. It was known that a committee had been considering this matter for some time. The arrangement now made is based, of course, on the market prices of the companies' shares and on the state of their finances. Thus in the combination the shares of the Asahi will be put in as the unit, and against every one them the Sapporo must put in a share and a half and the Nippon two shares. Each company will have to pay up the full amount of its uncalled capital, and with this the debts will be paid off, whereafter the trust will have a total capital of 5 million yen. The other details are to be arranged during the present month, and before the middle of July a general meeting will be called to endorse the programme. Hitherto the competition among these three companies is said to have entailed a total annual loss of 300,000 yen. Working in coöperation they expect to reverse the record completely. It is further stated that they intend to devote much attention to the export trade.

A telegram to the Asahi Shinbun says that the Russian Government contemplates laying a line of railway along the north of the Amur to Kabarovsk, presumably from Strehchinsk. This would be the line originally planned before an opportunity offered to carry the road through Manchuria along the chord of the Amur arc instead of following the periphery of the arc along the left bank of the big river through dense forests and an unpopulated bleak region. It is impossible not to admire the splendid energy of Russia's development. No sooner is she checked in one direction than she strikes out in another. Quite recently we heard of her having achieved the building of a line from Orenburg to Tashkend, a distance of 1,000 miles, traversing uninhabited unproductive steppes, thus doubling her facilities for mobilizing troops in Central Asia. Now, while the last chapters of a disastrous war are being written to her vast discomfort and loss, she is actually planning another huge development. This new railway scheme, this laying of a road throughout her own territory from first to last and its linking up with the Vladivostock line at Kabarovsk, means that Vladivostock is to be developed for all that it is worth, and means, too, that the disarming of the fortress is not contemplated.

The Shimbi Shoin (52 Nihonmachi, Shitaya, Tokyo) have issued three more sets (6 each) of the beautiful pictorial post-cards for which they are famous. The motives of one set are flowers, foliage and birds; those of another, landscapes, reproductions of pictures by the well known ukiyo-ye artist Hiroshige; and those of the third, ladies and children. All are printed in colours from wooden blocks, and are really admirable specimens of such work. They are marked "Series No. 4," "Series No. 10" and "Series No. 11." We strongly commend them.

We have to acknowledge receipt of a set of five copy books, written by Mr. E. Gauntlett and published by the Sanseido. The examples set are executed with skill and artistic taste upon which we may congratulate the author. The books are very creditably issued by the Sanseido.

The German Government (Asahi's telegrams) has drawn from the battle in the Sea of Japan the lesson that larger and more heavily armoured vessels are essential, and has accordingly issued orders for laying down a line-of-battle ship—or an armoured cruiser, we can not clearly decipher which is meant—with a displacement of 18,000 tons. Nothing is said, however, about the thickness of the protection, though that is the really interesting point. No doubt this battle will furnish important data for naval architects, but, after all, it has to be remembered that if Russian battle-ships and armoured cruisers went to the bottom under the weight of Japanese gun-fire, no Japanese battle-ship or armoured cruiser met with a similar fate. If we very far indeed from having secured that effective command of the sea which is the very object of its enterprise and the sole purpose of its existence. So long as it remains at Vladivostok it can do nothing whatever to impair the Japanese communications with Manchuria. Meanwhile a great deal of water—and probably not water only—will run under the bridges of Manchuria, while Rojestvensky is resting, refitting, and preparing for belated action under the guns of Vladivostok. We know the fatal attraction that fortresses have for fleets which have once managed to evade their adversaries. A fresh and decisive victory of the Japanese arms in Manchuria would alter the whole situation and might go far to neutralize the advantage which Rojestvensky would presumably gain were he to reach Vladivostok unmolested—and even that, as Captain Mahan says, he is not likely to do if it be in the power of Togo to prevent him.

KOREA AND JAPAN.

THIS is the title of an essay which appears in the Korea Review for May, and has attracted some attention as well as some endorsement: attention because the relations of the two neighbouring empires profoundly affect the whole Far-Eastern question; endorsement because the writer's conclusions are unfavourable to Japan and whatever is unfavourable to Japan is quite sure to be quoted and approved by a certain class of local publicists in this part of the world. We do not, however, bracket the Korea Review's essayist with that coterie of critics. On the contrary we credit him with every desire to be fair. Such desire, coupled with the fact that his knowledge of Korean affairs should not be inconsiderable, invest his essay with interest which unfortunately does not survive its perusal. Nothing is commoner, nothing more misleading, than incapacity to distinguish between what is really in men's minds and what we read into them out of our own minds. That incapacity is conspicuous all through the essay now before us. Its writer at one moment describes the Koreans from an objective and historical point of view; at another draws a wholly subjective picture of them. The result is bewildering. Thus we learn that "strong conservatism" is a prominent trait of Korean character; that at the time of the renewal of Japanese intercourse with her neighbour in 1876, "Korea not only took no forward step but even attempted to retire more deeply into her political solitude"; that she entirely lacked the two factors which had led the Japanese into the path of radical reform; and that the common people "did not understand or appreciate the ideals of the progressives." Yet we presently find these same Koreans "convinced that Japan was unable to effect the changes which were necessary in order to prepare for the real progress of the country"; a little later we are told that "the people were enthusiastic over a Japanese occupation and hailed it as a sign that all abuses were to be done away;" and yet a little later we are assured that "the people have been waiting for reforms and hoping against hope that they would be instituted." The fact is that as a historian the essayist is compelled to recognise the ingrained conservatism of the Koreans, with which all the world is familiar, but as a critic they become eager advocates of progress to suit the purposes of his argument. We do not mean to suggest anything disingenuous. The most sincere controversialist is often betrayed into these contradictions by the current of his own argument. It would be a pleasure indeed to think that the Koreans are so eager for progress as to be willing to buy it at the cost of their independence, but it occurs to us that such enthusiasts for reform might have effected something on their own account in all these years, instead of helplessly waiting until some foreign nation assisted them out of the morass of conservatism.

If we are astonished by the Protean character thus attributed to the Koreans, not less are we surprised at the exceeding shallowness of the historical assertions advanced by the essayist. The Satsuma Rebellion, he tells us, was due to an unsatisfied desire on the part of the rebel leaders to force reforms upon Korea at the point of the sword. What a theory! He further tells us that in 1894, the Japanese, "throwing over diplomacy, assisted the Korean radicals in a sanguinary emete in which seven cold-blooded murders proved the quality of the would-be reformers." Now if there be one thing which Japan's enemies have conspicuously failed to prove it is that she abetted in any way the wild coup d'état of KIM OK-KYUN and his associates. She did encourage these politicians at the outset—politicians of whom the essayist himself affirms that "their ideas were excellent" and that "what they proposed would have been for the good of the country,"—but she never prompted them to wreck their programme permanently by a deed of sanguinary violence and high-treason. Similarly, though with more reserve, the essayist indicates that the Japanese were privy to the murder of the QUEEN; a foul crime which produced throughout the length and breadth of Japan a mingled sentiment of horror and disappointment; horror for the savagery, and disappointment because the injury it must inevitably do to the cause of progress was fully appreciated. What principle of justice directs that at Japan's door should be laid every crime of political violence committed in an alien State where the dagger and the poison-bowl have been the familiar instruments of political intriguers from time immemorial? Because Japan stood for enlightened and quiet progress, is she to be held accountable for every sin committed by the delirious disciples of radicalism? In such a context it seems superfluous to allude to an error so paltry as that which assigns to Japanese interference the enforcement of the silly sumptuary laws of 1895. It is well known to every accurate student of the times that Japan had nothing to do with these laws, and that she emphatically disapproved of despotic meddling with matters of costume or coiffure.

Underlying such criticisms as those of the Korean Review's essayist there is the obvious yet strange misconception that Japan has enjoyed a free hand in Korea for many years back. In one place he emphatically asserts that "England never began to have such a favourable outlook in India as Japan had in Korea beginning with the year 1876," and he then proceeds to lay upon Japan's shoulders the main, if not the whole, responsibility for Korea's failure to move forward with the times. Whether injustice or inaccuracy is here more prominent, we need not attempt to determine. It is a matter of the commonest knowledge that even up to the present time every move made by Japan in Korea is watched by more than one strong Western Power with the keenest jealousy. It is a matter of the commonest knowledge that the fiction called the independence of Korea has to be carefully preserved, and it is a matter of the commonest knowledge that any open interference by Japan in Korea's domestic affairs is denounced as a breach of promise and an evidence of aggressive purpose. In short, Korea must be let go her own way and yet led into the way of progress, and it is upon Japan that the task devolves of achieving this impossibility. We find here a repetition of the old tendency to measure Japan's acts by a standard to which no Occidental State has ever attained. In the same number of the same magazine and evidently by the same writer this tendency is forcibly illustrated. Referring to Dr. MORRISON's enthusiastic appreciation of Japan's work in Korea, an appreciation flagrantly at variance with the essayist's condemnations, we are told that "the great public works put through solely for the benefit of the people of Egypt have absolutely no counterpart in Korea." Where are these great and purely altruistic 'public works in Egypt? Where are the British capitalists who have been spending their millions "solely for the benefit of the people of Egypt"? It is time that we should all cross over finally to the Sadducean side of the road and abandon these hypocritical self-glorifications which merely make us objects of ridicule in the eyes of intelligent Orientals.

There are, however, two specific charges which deserve special notice, since they relate to current conditions and are advanced with evident sincerity. One is a charge too often repeated to be dismissed as baseless; the charge that many acts of roughness and violence are committed by Japanese subjects in Korea against the persons of natives. Frequently has attention been called to this lamentable state of affairs, which assuredly the Japanese authorities should be able to correct. We frankly admit that Occidental intercourse with what the West is pleased to call "inferior races" has been marked and is still marked by similar exhibitions of brute force and that its history includes examples of cruelty so shocking as to be almost incredible. We also take leave to doubt the entire integrity of a tale related by the Korea Review's essayist, namely, that merely because a Korean inadvertently stepped upon a forbidden path, three or four Japanese rushed upon him, knocked him down and beat him into unconsciousness. And we further take leave to query an appended allegation that "this sort of thing is going on all over the country." But it seems to be beyond question that low-class Japanese in Korea behave in a manner quite inconsistent with Japanese character, as we know it in Japan, and in a manner very much opposed to their own country's best interests.

The second charge is more obscure: so obscure indeed as to be scarcely intelligible. It is that "the Koreans are being deprived of their property without receiving proper compensation." By whom is this spoliation effected? Apparently by Japanese adventurers, for in the immediate context of the accusation we find an elaborate condemnation of the Japanese Government for not restricting emigration to Korea and for allowing mere adventurers to flock thither. But it is obvious that a Japanese adventurer has no power to deprive a Korean of his property without "proper compensation." The Korean need only decline to be deprived. No Japanese individual can tumble him out of his house or carry away his land. Reading on carefully we find an apparent explanation of the mystery. It is the Korean Government that has been doing the spoliation. The Korean Government, we are told, guaranteed to secure the land for the building of the great railway through the peninsula. "Was it not the duty of the Japanese," the writer asks, "to see to it that this land was paid for by the Korean Government before it was seized?" So then the sin laid at Japan's door is failure to protect Korean subjects against arbitrary acts of the Korean Government. It seems a little hard that Japan should be held up to obloquy as a kind of international criminal because she has not restrained the arbitrariness of a foreign Government, and it also seems a little hard that she should be accused of "despoiling the Koreans" and of "absorbing the territory of the peninsula" because she builds railways on land duly handed over to her by the Korean Government without strictly inquiring how the Government obtained it originally. We do not know anything about this land question at first hand. But it is our business as intelligent readers of contemporary history to scrutinize statements which may go to the making of history, and that is what we have here done.

SUBJECTIVE ALARMS.

MARQUIS DUBOIS contributes to the Correspondant (Paris) an essay some portions of which are translated into the columns of The Literary Digest. The gist of the essay is that Japanese expansion will be in a southerly direction. In Korea they may colonize but they will not settle in Manchuria on account of the comparatively inclement climate. From China they are practically excluded by the already over-populated condition of the country. Thus they must go southward. The Philippines, English Indo-China, Borneo, Java, Sumatra and Holland's other Eastern possessions, French Indo-China—all these will sooner or later become objects of Japanese active ambition. Having laid down this creed, Marquis Dubois proceeds:—

"How favorable to the Japanese is the prospect of expansion in the islands and peninsulas of the south! The Philippines could afford room for twenty or thirty millions of descendants of the present Japanese; Borneo, Sumatra, Java, and the deltas of the Indo-Chinese region for hundreds of millions. Why then did the Japanese strike the first blow of vengeance at Russia, and not at other rival whose possessions they covet just as eagerly as they do those of the Russians? Their object was clear. They found the naval preparation of Russia quite unequal to the emergency, and the Russians farther removed than any of the power whom they would profitably attack from their naval base in Europe. Doubtless they counted also upon the startling moral effect which would follow the unexpected blow; the obsequy with which they persisted in the storming of Port Arthur was not a piece of inconsequent folly, it was part of a diplomatic game conducted with consummate skill."

"There are five maritime and colonial powers of Europe, and one of North America now threatened by Japanese ambition. Instead of washing their hands like Pontius Pilate over the war between Japan and Russia, instead of having recourse to the honeyed promises of peace congresses, these powers should without delay call for active measures. They should consolidate their forces, and sign a convention guaranteeing the inviolability of the colonial territory pertaining to each and every party. The Japanese will not remain quiet before the day when Russia, Germany, France, and Great Britain have formed a defensive league with exclusive reference to affairs in the Far East. The terms of the alliance will provide for the perpetual presence in the waters of the Far East of a naval squadron of each nation concerned, these four or five squadrons, and those of any other Powers that may join the league, to manœuvre in company. It is to be hoped that the United States of America will waken up to the wonderful temptation which the Philippines offer to the eye of the Japanese. The balance of power on the ocean, thus arrived at, should be maintained by four ironclads and four cruisers from the fleet of each nation, and this 'cooperative fleet' should cruise in as close neighbourhood as possible to the Japanese ports, in order to keep watch over Japan's naval armaments and their movements. Japan is even more anxious to found colonies than to export goods. She therefore requires territory, she requires the 'ruins of conquest, she is bound to acts of seizure by force of arms. It is this point that makes especially formidable in the future the problem of Japanese expansion in the Far East, unless European powers will withstand it by a solid front. It is useless to discuss the rights of the case when only interests are likely to be considered; and, indeed, in politics right is little more than interest writ large. But here we are not playing with words. The Japanese are keenly alive to their own interests, and they have a perfect right to pursue them. They also have the power to do so, and it is possibly this circumstance that raises for them in Europe so many eloquent champions of their rights. The best course for the European Powers to take is to follow their example, and unhesitatingly to face this question of self-interest instead of singing hymns of peace, and pronouncing denunciations against war, a course which can do little either to suppress war or promote peace."

In all probability this language will seem very convincing to many readers. It appears to have the ring of practical common sense. But it will not bear close examination. In the first place the reader will observe that Marquis DUBOIS sets out by the very common error of controversialists: he begs the question. He asks the world to believe that Japan went into this war solely under the impulse of earth-hunger, and that had she found any other Power more unequal to the emergency, that Power would have been the object of attack. How completely this statement ignores historical facts as well as existing conditions. Can there be set up for one moment an honest comparison between the strength of Russia and the strength of Holland in the Far East, or between the values of the possessions held by each? Had earth-hunger been Japan's prompter; had the south been the direction that attracted her, and had she adopted the natural precaution of choosing the line of least resistance, is it not quite obvious that the Dutch East Indies would have been a thousand times preferable to Manchuria? Yet even that appraisal of the situation is incomplete for it omits the essential factor that the prize in this war is not territorial at all. Japan is not fighting for the acquisition of Manchuria. Manchuria belongs to China and will be restored to China, for the most part at any rate. Japan is not fighting for the acquisition of Korea since she has promised that Korea shall remain an empire. The only territorial acquisition she can hope to make is that of Saghalien, and Saghalien's value is mainly strategical: it does not invite colonization and is unlikely to repay the cost of administration. Marquis DUBOIS, therefore, represents Japan as engaging for the sake of territorial expansion in a war which could not bring any such expansion, and as choosing for vis-a-vis one of the strongest military Powers in the whole world, to say nothing of the Russian navy also being much superior to the Japanese at the outset, whereas she might have chosen a Power virtually incapable of offering any serious resistance and offering a splendid territorial reward to the victor. Thus loosely does the French publicist reason: thus entirely does he ignore existing conditions. Historical facts too have no weight with him. He forgets altogether that in order to avoid this very conflict which he depicts Japan as deliberately inviting, she offered to efface herself altogether in Manchuria provided only that Russia, in return, promised to abstain from aggression in Korea. It is most notable that all anti-Japanese publicists ignore that important, that vital fact. To the average reader M. DUBOIS' essay suggests that Japan alone was the restless aggressor, and that to her insatiable ambition alone this war due. It would not be possible, we think, to pervert the truth more completely. The places of Japan and Russia are interchanged, and the Power whose restless greed and unscrupulous impulses of expansion were solely responsible for the breach of peace, is made, in M. DUBOIS' caricature, to occupy the place of a State forced into the lists by the legitimate instinct of self protection.

It does little credit to the political discernment of the French that they should be conspicuous exponents of this fanciful menace. To the EMPEROR OF GERMANY belongs the honour of having conceived the Yellow Peril, but after Russia, which is naturally interested in fostering the myth, it has not found such persistent endorsement anywhere as in France. Again and again French publicists have harped on this strain, and the league of States now proposed by Marquis DUBOIS is, in fact, nothing more than the materialization of the suggestion embodied in the KAISER'S celebrated picture. If, how ever, we look beneath the surface of the proposition what we see is a band of actual Occidental aggressors combining to protect the fruits of their aggression against a potential Oriental aggressor. Every yard of territory held by Western States in the East has been won by the strong arm; has been taken by violence from its rightful owner. That phase of the situation matters little, however, except for the sake of its piquancy, there being a distinctly comical element in a solemn appeal that spoilers should unite for the preservation of their spoils. Would it be a condition of the union that each should pledge himself to abstain from further aggressions at the cost of the Orient, or is it M. Dubois' idea merely to organize an aggressive trust from which Japan would be excluded? Strange to say, too, one most palpable fact seems to escape him altogether; the fact that England has no occasion to enter such a league. England is doubly guaranteed against the danger imagined by the French writer: guaranteed by her own naval strength with which Japan can never hope to compete; and guaranteed by her alliance which constitutes a pledge of Japanese good faith not only towards herself but also towards every friend of hers. This latter consideration may be commended to the attention of M. Dubois and his fellow-thinkers. When their peace of mind is disturbed by the Yellow-Peril nightmare, let them remember that England is the ally of the Yellow Peril.

THE HIGH CLASS PRIMARY SCHOOL MORAL TEXT-BOOKS.

In January, 1904, as the result of long deliberation and after much discussion on the precise moral standard to be adopted, the Department of Education issued four text-books bearing the title Kōtō Shōgaku Shūshinsho. The books were compiled with great care and before publication were submitted to a committee of experts with Dr. Katō Hiroyuki as chairman. They have naturally during the last 12 months been the subject of keen discussion. It may be said that on the whole they have created a good impression and they are regarded as a step in the right direction. It seems to us that in the case of a State Department which has the charge of national education it is highly desirable that it should have a clearly defined moral ideal, and that it should take such steps as are practicable for placing that ideal before the minds of the boys and girls undergoing training in State schools. It cannot be said that until very recently the Mombushō has shown any signs of possessing such an ideal. Ethical policy has changed with successive Ministers, and few Ministers have gone into the question of the type of humanity which Japan should endeavour to mould. Speaking generally, the ethical policy of the Department during the past 20 years may be said to have favoured a reiteration of Confucianism in one form or other, while allowing teachers to introduce western ethical teaching when so inclined. The result of this policy has been considerable confusion of thought. The old and the new have not been blended together by any means, and the minds of young men to-day as a consequence of this are very unsettled as to the moral standard which every true-hearted, loyal Japanese should implicitly follow. In this country morality as a rule does not rest on religion, and the Mombushō has most resolutely set its face against basing moral teaching on religion. But the Department has naturally wished at the same time to make its moral teaching authoritative, and it has now hit on the happy expedient of building up a system of morality firmly based on the most indestructible of all foundations, utility. The four text-books before us are essentially utilitarian from beginning to end. They aim at developing the type of man and woman needed in this thirty-eight year of Meiji. The finest codes of morals the world has known have all been based on the principle of utility, understanding utility in its highest sense. There is no higher authority required for any set of rules designed to control and influence human conduct than that derived from the benefits to be obtained by their observance. There is nothing so constantly and so universally desired as happiness; and that close adherence to a sensible code of morals conduces to this no right-minded person ever doubts. The publication of these text-books marks a new era in Japan. The Department of Education has at last reached the conclusion that moral codes which suited the nation well enough in feudal days do not quite suit it to-day; that the Meiji new civilisation, new form of government and new customs render the recasting of the nation's code of morals a necessity. Traditional Japanese morality is tainted with a certain amount of despotism. Moreover, it is a one-sided system designed especially to support the cause of those in authority. While it defines the duties of inferiors to superiors, it says little about the duties of superiors to inferiors. Individualism as a principle is not included in the old system. There is no attempt to give due weight to egoism as well as to altruism, to teach self-development, self-respect, independence of spirit and the like alongside with devotion to others and self-sacrifice. The interest of these text-books is just this. They teach the boys and girls of Japan to-day that they are under an obligation to perform numerous duties of which the children of pre-Meiji days never heard. They are designed to bring Japan's moral creed up to date. They are undoubtedly an impartial and a pretty thorough representation of national sentiment on ethical questions. Hence to foreigners engaged in studying the development of the Japanese mind they are of unusual interest.

In Western countries it has been found very difficult to decide on moral text-books for use in State Schools on account of difference of opinion on religious questions. The Japanese are not troubled with this difficulty at all. These moral text-books would serve the purpose of Christians and Buddhists alike, insisting as they do on all the most fundamental principles of morality.

As to the question whether morality can be better taught in schools with text-books than without them, it seems to us that in elementary schools such books are absolutely necessary as aids to the memory and as the means of making subjects thoroughly intelligible to untutored minds. In Middle and High Schools the feeling in Europe seems to be in favour of leaving teachers free to use text-books or not, and it is said that many of the most successful teachers of ethics do not supply their students with text-books. Japan, we should say, will not insist on the use of ethical text-books in the higher schools.

Before commencing to give an account of the contents of the new Shūshinsho, we wish to say something about the opposition which they have aroused among a few conservative statesmen led by Count Higashikura, Vice-President of the Privy Council. The ground taken by these critics is that the new text-books do not give sufficient weight to the culture of loyalty, filial piety and patriotism. They do not deny that these virtues are treated here and there, but they are put on a level with the development of independence of spirit, self-reliance, and the like; whereas in the opinion of these old statesmen they should occupy a higher rank. Dr. Katō Hiroyuki has answered Count Higashikura in the pages of the Taiyō. He maintains that traditional Japanese ethical teaching is embodied in the text-books in a most unmistakable manner. But at the same time he and the compilers of the text-books are of opinion that the altered circumstances of the country demand that Japan should add some new elements to the moral training she gives her young people, and the most important of these elements is the cultivation of self-reliance, self-respect and independence of spirit. In Japan these qualities are not so highly developed as they are in the West, observes Dr. Katō, and this fact militates considerably against Japan in her competition with foreigners. Count Higashikura, we take it, represents a very small section of thinkers. Not only the younger generation of officials, but even many aged statesmen are said to approve of the step the Department of Education has taken. But notwithstanding this the Minister of Education has promised to revise the text-books by the end of the year.

The text-books are graded so as to meet the capacity of elementary school children during the first four years of the course. The chapters are all very short and the language is most simple. The plan is to begin with the most easily understood subjects, reserving the most difficult ones for the last volume, though it can hardly be said that any of the topics treated are above the comprehension of boys and girls of average ability. We will now proceed to comment on the books in order. Book I for First Year students has 28 short chapters. Chap. I holds up for imitation the devotion to duty displayed by the Emperor during the China-Japan war. Chap. II is on the noble way in which Prince Kitashirakawa and Prince Yoshishisa sacrificed themselves for the country in Formosa some ten years ago. The next four chapters enjoin purpose in life, diligence in the discharge of duties, loyalty to the throne and a pushing, progressive spirit, and the life of Hideyoshi is made to furnish illustrations of what may be done by resoluteness of purpose and steady application. Chap. VII points out that true success must have integrity as its foundation. From Chap. VIII, treatment of the various cardinal virtues begins. These are all at first included the terms jūn (仁) and yū (勇); considerations for others and personal courage. It is questionable whether it is wise to use such a term as jūn in its broadest sense as the equivalent of a whole group of altruistic virtues in a text-book designed for the use of very young children. The life of Katō Kiyomasa is cited as an example of the manner in which jūn may be combined with yū. In the chapters that follow various moral qualities are briefly alluded to and references are made to the manner in which they were illustrated in the lives of eminent Japanese, Europeans or Americans. The titles of the chapters will suffice to show the class of moral qualities whose culture is deemed most important. Here they are: Chivalry; Sincerity; Steadfastness of purpose; Economy; the Choice and Pursuit of some Occupation; Filial Piety; Politeness; Habits; a Way of forming Good Habits; Self-dependence and Self-support; Make Strict Rules of Life; Public Good (Chaps. XVIII-XXI. quote passages from the Life of Franklin); Work, Patience and Perseverance; Pity for Animals; Kindness; Benevolence (Florence Nightingale); Festival Days and Public Holidays; Recapitulation.

In the subsequent volumes slightly different aspects of the same subjects are treated and some new topics are dealt with. Among the new subjects which form the headings of chapters in Book II. are:—the Home; Masters and Servants; Friendship; Superstition; Diligence in Learning; Sympathy; Charity; The Emperor (3 chapters); Public Health; the Public; Luck (the evil of dependence on it); the Duties of Subjects of the Empire. In order to show the style of the whole four books we transcribe and translate below Chap. XXVIII, of Book II. It strikes us as being a model of conciseness and simplicity:

A GOOD JAPANESE.

A good Japanese is a man who strives to fulfil all the duties of a subject. As a citizen he bears in mind all that a citizen ought to bear in mind. In his national capacity he does all that the State requires of him. The members of his household and others he must treat in a proper manner. He must strive to excel in virtue, to improve his knowledge, to advance the civilisation of his country, to devise means for benefiting the public; to start industries and add to national wealth. A good Japanese must be upright and a man in whom valour is developed, who has contracted the habit of self-dependence and self-support, a man who shows steady industry in his business and who exercises ingenuity in order to improve his methods of business.

These qualities form the basis of all schemes for the development and advance of the country, and constitute the path which it is the august desire of His Majesty the Emperor that we should all tread.

Book III opens with some excellent advice to families. The subjects of special interest dwell on in this volume seem to us to be Ancestors; Relations; Society; Neighbours; Other Persons (how to treat them); Other Persons' Property; Other Persons' Liberty; Other Persons' Reputation; Gratitude; Contracts or Agreements; Large-mindedness [度量 Doryō] (illustrated by an extract from the Life of Washington)—an excellent little chapter, truly Japanese in spirit; Order in Society; the Progress of Society; Foreigners (enjoining politeness; kindness and a careful use of language in intercourse with foreigners and the observation of all the rules of conduct that are followed in the case of dealings with fellow-countrymen); Egoistic Morals, the duties of the individual as an individual. Four chapters are devoted to this subject.

The new topics to which Fourth Year Students are introduced in Vol. IV, are Self-examination or Introspection (反省); Moderation and Self-Control; Modesty; High Moral Rank; Language (enjoining distinctness of speech, carefulness in the use of language and in the choice of words suitable to special occasions); Dress (cleanliness and neatness taught); Work (its importance and sacredness); Competition (fair and unfair); Credit (on what it depends); Money (how to get it and how to keep it); Regular habits and order; the Application of Learning; the Practice of Virtue; Self-Development and Progress; Things to be borne in mind in Social Intercourse; the Treatment of Animals; Things to be remembered by all subjects of the Empire; Loyalty and Patriotism; the Duties of Subjects (2 chapters), Local Government Bodies (their claim to respect); the Election of Members of the Diet.

Many of the chapters end with proverbs or noted wise sayings. The last chapter gives such an excellent summary of the Ethics now being taught in the High Class Primary Schools of the whole country that we translate it literally as follows:—A good Japanese is one who fulfils all his duties to his parents, brothers and sisters, and relations, who never forgets the veneration due to his ancestors, who as a master is kind and considerate to his servants, who as a servant is faithful to his master. A good Japanese is a man who in his intercourse with friends, neighbours and the general public acts in a strictly correct manner, respecting the persons, property, liberty and reputation of other people. He will never forget benefits conferred on him. He will act straightforwardly in all things, scrupulously observing his agreements, acting in a generous and large-minded way to others, he will be kindly and charitable, a respecter of what is right and full of compassion for the unfortunate, holding in high esteem public order, devising schemes for furthering the progress of society and careful not to be guilty of any impropriety even in his dealings with foreigners. A good Japanese develops his physical powers, stores his mind with useful knowledge, cultivates valour, endurance, self-control, moderation, modesty and self-examination, ever bears in mind what is required of him in work, business, competition, and money-making, and how men's trust is to be won. He forms useful habits, he practices virtue, he applies his mind to the practical application of learning, he devises measures for self-development and continual progress. A good Japanese thinks highly of his country, and by the culture of a spirit of loyalty and patriotism strives to fulfil all the obligations of a good citizen. In this manner should we develop our own personality, raise families, and do all that is required of us to benefit the world and our fellow-men, and thus shall we constitute ourselves good Japanese and shall carry out the Imperial desires set forth in the Imperial Rescript issued on Oct. 30th, 1890. Then follows the Imperial Rescript printed big.

We can confidently recommend these four little volumes to missionaries and other foreigners engaged in studying the elements of the written language. The printing is excellent, the sentences short, the words used have been carefully selected and the books, we are told, have been revised and re-revised, so as to make them in the point of diction as perfect as possible. It remains to be seen how far the alterations which the Minister of Education has promised shall be made will go. It is to be hoped not very far. For the qualities held up to admiration in these text-books are certainly those which after centuries of experience and experimentation have in the West been found worthy of implicit confidence. As moral text-books they have a brightness, a crispness and pointedness which we should be very sorry to see removed. Compared with the dreary text-books of old times, with their long, learned and, to the child, unintelligible quotations, they are a perfect God-send to modern boys and girls.

YOKOHAMA MODERN SCHOOL.

ANNUAL PRIZE-GIVING.

The annual prize-giving of the Yokohama Modern School took place on Wednesday afternoon, May 28th, in the Public Hall. A drizzle of rain during the afternoon doubtless deterred many who otherwise would have been present. The hall was decorated with flags and numerous plants in pots.

Mr. JAMES WALTER occupied the chair and among those also present were Rev. E. S. Booth, Rev. W. P. Field, and Professor A. Lloyd, and there was a fair representation of parents.

The proceedings were opened by the Chairman who said:—

Ladies and Gentlemen.—At the present ceremony of prize-giving at this school I feel it an honour to have been asked to take the chair, but would have preferred to see a father of one of the scholars in my place, as he naturally would have a better insight of the working of the school than the present Chairman could be expected to have. The Modern School for two and a half years past has been looked upon as almost one of our Yokohama institutions, though in reality it is a purely private enterprise of Mr. Bruce Mitford. We have all watched it more or less closely and most of us will agree that Mr. Mitford has proved himself to be a good organizer, a most capable Head Master, and one who thoroughly well knows how a school should be conducted. Parents who have had to withdraw their sons in order to send them to the home countries to complete their education, have found their boys well prepared, up to their work, and quite able to hold their own in the large Public Schools. You will be pleased to hear that Mr. Morrison's son, John Pender, has graduated into Merchiston Castle School, Edinburgh, and is doing well. My eldest son, a former pupil of Winton House, Yokohama, is also in the upper school of Merchiston, is a Prefect, Captain of the cricket eleven, in which he has already scored his 2nd century, is well to the fore in the football team, and is an aspirant for the Captaincy of the School. (Applause.) This is just mentioned to show present Yokohama boys that the old ones are pushing ahead and trying to be a credit to the town in which they were born and brought up, and we wish you all to bear this in mind and to do the very best you can to do the same. I can see the boys here are anxiously waiting to receive their Prizes; that is what interests them chiefly at the present moment, so we will proceed with the work before us, and firstly I will ask Mr. Mitford to kindly read his Report, after which the prizes will be presented by Professor Lloyd, who has so kindly come down from Tokyo for that express purpose. The boys of the Modern School will then be dismissed; those having sisters here will then escort them home. With the kind permission of the parents and grown-ups remaining in the hall, I would very much wish to say a few words in regard to the status of the School, mainly touching upon its financial condition and future prospects.

The HEAD MASTER (Mr. C. BRUCE-MITFORD) said:—Mr. Chairman, References of the School, Ladies and Gentlemen: Since last it was my privileged duty to review in this hall the work and progress of the school whose second annual prize-distribution we are celebrating to-day, the institution has, I am glad to say, extended its borders, spread wider its influence, and gathered those associations of greater or less value which time brings in its train, the extension to which I have referred being not only figurative but literal. The sine qua non of efficiency, as far as education is concerned, is accommodation, suitable and sufficient. This we have secured by the addition to our premises of a class-room and dormitory erected during the summer vacation of last year, a much appreciated gain. Besides this material addition kindred organizations have arisen about and among us; of which I may mention a flourishing Chess Club, which brought its first season to a close the other day; a magazine, the interest in which appears to wax rather than to wane, and which has contributors in the shape of former alumni, from such widely sundered regions as England, America, and Hongkong; and that energetically conducted institution, the Boys Brigade the bulk of which is composed of the past and present boys of this school. All these are features which those who take a large view of education in the proper sense of the term, rejoice to see in happy and vigorous existence. Of the fifty-two boys whose names have been placed on the School books, a goodly proportion have come out into life. I have been told that boys born and bred in the East have been looked upon by such disavowal by business men that the latter prefer to get their assistants from home. This, Mr. Chairman, I hope and believe is not going to be the case any longer. Boys educated locally are now acquitting themselves creditably in the world of commerce; and more are in demand. In fact, judging by the numerous enquiries I have received from various firms for eligible smart lads, shorthand a recommendation, it would seem as if the idea prevailed in those quarters that the sole concern of a school-master was to get rid of his pupils as soon as they showed a certain degree of aptitude.

This brings us, Mr. Chairman, to an important point, the age at which a boy should leave school. Secondary education, in the accepted sense of the term, means a definite course of study pursued until the age of sixteen at least. This is the lowest age for entering a University—the parting of the ways for the different walks of life. If a boy is intended for a business career, he usually leaves school then: if for a profession he enters upon tertiary or University education. This, of course, presupposes an unbroken course of well-ordered school life from early years, which very few boys in Yokohama can be said to have had. Consequently it is a lamentable fact at the present time that the average Yokohama boy is not fit for the battle of life.

We hope to remedy this state of things, and we believe, Mr. Chairman, that we are doing it now. We have at present on hand a number of comparatively young boys who are doing good, steady work, and we expect before long to be able to report a very different state of things.

A few years ago, a desire was expressed from this platform: (1) That it might be possible for a boy to enter direct from this institution an English public school. (2) That some public examination should be here established. Mr. Chairman, both of these have come to pass. To the first you have already referred. With regard to the second I am happy to be able to announce that this school has been made a centre for the Cambridge Local University Examinations in Japan and the first Examination, for which work is now in full swing, will take place in December next. The limit of age for the Minor Examination, with the possibility of distinction, is 16, though candidates up to 18 years of age may satisfy the examiners. Our object is to make this a leaving certificate, and the cooperation of parents and heads of firms in this particular is requested. It is only just that a boy should be equipped as well as possible for his life's work, and while such a certificate is no guarantee for high scholarship, yet it does attest a fair general education sufficient for the conditions prevailing in the East.

In the work of the year the school has pursued the even tenor of its way. Whenever this is the case, classes are levelled up and progress inevitably flows.

During the spring term, to secure even grading, the valuable services of Mr. A. F. Cahusac, B.A., were enlisted, with results in every way beneficial. In English, and English literature the opposite processes of analysis and composition have been combined to form the basis of instruction, with the systematic study of such poems as the "Lycidas" of Milton, and Gray's pindaric Ode, "The Bard" which have been recited without error by a large proportion of the boys. "A store of remembered poetry," says a high educational authority, "is a treasure in itself." The school-boy does not probably appreciate more than a fraction of the beauties which such literary gems contain, but in later years he will. Educationally an intimate knowledge of such poems serves the double purpose of strengthening the retentive powers and furnishing models on which the student may base his own powers of expression—a good return for the labour expended.

In the study of mathematics, geometry is the portal. Every boy pursues it first in its practical application as instrumental drawing and later in its scientific and theoretical form. The slavish adherence to Euclid's Methods is gradually being abandoned in up-to-date academies, and reformed methods of teaching Geometry are now followed. In reasoning powers I find the boys in the Far East singularly deficient. The principles of geometry, so valued as a means of developing the mathematical faculty, receive therefore their full need of attention.

In the study of language the upper form has reached an interesting stage, that of being able to render into English the ideas embodied in another tongue. The utility of French is little in doubt but the precise educational value of the classics is a vexed question. The recent decision of the Cambridge University senate to make Greek an optional subject for the "Little go" is regarded as a victory for the opponents of a classical education, but a closer examination of the conditions of the voting and the elementary character of the knowledge of French and German required as a substitute reduce the significance of the victory. No educator advocates compulsory Greek for boys at school, but the position of Latin as a medium of mental training remains unassailable. The principal of one of the largest German Universities, through whose haunts some thousands of students pass every year, recently declared that as the result of his experience he preferred the classically trained pupils of the Gymnasias to those of the Real-schules. Their minds were better developed and on taking up science they reached a state of proficiency more rapidly even than those who had a course of scientiateaching before coming to the University.

"The study of classics," says Professor Sedgwick, "calls forth a more concentrated exercise of the faculties than any other could easily do. If both the classics were to cease to be taught in education, valuable machinery would be lost for which it would be difficult to provide a perfect substitute." The objection often raised to the study of the classics that in the early stages they are uninteresting; even granting that only that should be taught which is interesting is affected by the personal element. A skilful teacher can make anything interesting. I have seen a class of young boys, mainly through the stimulus of competition, keenly interested, to the point of excitement, over Latin Declensions. In brief, and mental training apart, a study which induces accuracy of thought and expression, which brings within our reach the treasures of ancient literature, which is in itself an aid to the mastery of our own language, and imparts to the mind a subtle refinement all its own, is an accomplishment worth acquiring. The claims of Nature-study have been duly recognized. The physical geography lesson is the avenue to more than one of the "ologies" and we have been favoured by lectures from the Rev. Henry Loomis and Rev. Walter Weston, in which these gentlemen in the departments of Nature-knowledge respectively are competent to speak. Needless to say these lectures have been listened to with the deepest interest and the best accounts of them, written by the boys, have appeared in our Magazine. Before concluding, I should like to draw your attention to some aspects of education, frequently overlooked by those unacquainted with its inner workings. A reference was made from this platform last year to the untrained young as "raw-material." There is of course raw-material and raw-material. The character of one variety may perhaps be gathered from the report of a school for Native Girls opened in Tunis four years ago. Referring to the improvement in his pupils the principal says—"they have lost their wild appearance and no longer bite one another." No one suggests that Yokohama produces material of that sort, and indeed as far as my experience goes the term calls for qualification, for much of the material in question may more correctly be described as "spoilt" material. I have had boys from 12 to 14 brought to me apparently of average ability, who did not know their multiplication table, and who had not the faintest conception of the parts of speech, a state of things almost inconceivable, and yet able to be accounted for. You have heard of little boys of 8 or 9 who were more than handfuls for their governesses, or who circumvented and defied the kind-hearted elderly ladies who vainly endeavoured to urge them on the thorny paths of knowledge. You have heard of pupils of a more advanced age giving themselves up to various forms of disorderly conduct owing to the inability of their teachers to control them. In such cases, as may well be imagined, the sweetness of the instructors, however great their capacity for imparting knowledge, much have been wasted on the desert air, and where such a state of things has gone on for a certain length of time, you have your backward boy, your educational failure, your "spoilt material." The causes leading to these consequences are obvious. The velvet glove has been in evidence, but not the iron hand, that strong directing, albeit benevolent hand which all educational authorities agree boys from the earliest school-age require. The moral to be drawn from such cases is that instruction without discipline, like faith without charity, is nothing worth, and I refer to them for two reasons. Firstly, in the case of those whose minds resemble as if were the vineyard of the sluggard, so graphically described by Solomon, the great essential, if lasting improvement is to be effected, is if years have been spent in the formation of habits of indifference, carelessness and inattention, amounting to mental debility, years will be required to correct and eradicate the same. Secondly, it is much to be desired that the educator should have the opportunity of sowing the seeds of knowledge and of good habits on a virgin soil. There are those who hold the narrow view of education that the business of the school master is simply to impart knowledge and no more. If that is so, the necessity for teachers in this age of enlightenment, disappears. Given an attentive class, the mere imparting of knowledge could be done equally well by a phonograph. But to each who thinks thus we would say, crede experto, the thing is impossible. It is impossible for a teacher in front of his class, still more for a schoolmaster in front of his school, to confine himself to that aspect of education. "The schoolmaster," says Bain, "is a moral instructor, whether he means it or not." A case of untruthfulness, or of cruelty on the part of a bigger towards a smaller boy, comes to our notice and we are bound to deal with it, for whatever such offences the schoolmaster ignores he in effect condones. We observe a lad giving himself an air of superiority to his fellows, warrantable or unwarrantable, and we correct him, that he may not grow up a snob. We find a youth given to tale-bearing—whom his comrades with school-boy justice dub a sneak; we admonish him that he may not grow up a busy-body and a gossip. Such evils as these, social in their character, we endeavour to banish from school, as one would from a community. We endeavour to teach our young charges not only so much geometry and Latin, but that true gentleness consists not in a thin veneer of polish which deceives only the superficial observer, but in goodness of heart, consideration for their neighbours, and that simple faith which Tennyson says is more than Norman blood. We endeavour to inculcate such feelings that when they grow up to be citizens of Yokohama they may not only be well-informed men, but may set their faces against all that is paltry and unkind and shed around them the happy influence of true charity. Finally, Mr. Chairman, we claim to be judged not by our methods, nor yet by our words, but by our results. If the boys of Yokohama are any better to-day, intellectually and morally, for the work which under circumstances of undoubted difficulty we are doing—and I am told they are; if in years to come they make their influence felt in this community so as to leave it better than they found it—and I believe they will, then we are rewarded for our toil, and the Modern School has justified its existence.—(Loud Applause.)

The CHAIRMAN, after a few congratulatory words to Mr. Bruce Mitford, called on Professor Lloyd to present the prizes.

Professor LLOYD said it gave him very great pleasure to come and be present at this prize-giving. And he considered it a very honour to perform his present duty. He quoted a Japanese proverb to the effect that the frog in the well knew nothing of the great world. He was a frog in a well—Tokyo being his well. But though he lived in a well he knew something. He had been told in Tokyo one thing about the Yokohama Modern School—that the boys of the school had esprit de corps. Well, when there was esprit de corps in a school that showed it to be a good institution. Where boys were allowed to do exactly as they liked with reference to the laws and regulations, where there was nothing to compel them to do certain things at certain hours, that school was not a good institution as it would be under a good, regular, sensible discipline. Therefore when he heard in Tokyo that the boys had esprit de corps in this school he knew that it must be a good school. If meant more, however. When he was a boy he learned much more from his companions than he did from his teacher. The schooling that he had from his teacher, the lines he had to undergo and some times the stick that he had to bear, all these things passed off like water off a duck's back, but a good thrashing from a boy in one's own class at school was remembered. He exhorted the boys therefore to show their esprit de corps by using a good wholesome sensible discipline among themselves. When he came first to Japan he took a great interest in the Victoria School then just starting at Yokohama, and he tried his very best to get Tokyo or Yokohama made a centre for local examinations, so that he was extremely pleased to hear that this school was to be made a centre for local examinations. When the object of one's studies was a long way off, one did not seem to appreciate the value or advantage of it, but when a person was working for something only three or six months away it was a different matter. These examinations coming periodically would furnish results that would enable the school to compare itself with schools in other parts of the world. He saw on the list certificates and prizes for knowledge, good conduct and so forth. Good conduct was the chief end of a school—to be a gentleman; never to hurt the feelings or shock the prejudices of others. He was glad to know that it was one of the things this school was trying to set before itself. (Applause.)

Mr. LLOYD then presented the prizes.

The following is the prize list:—

The CHAIRMAN then addressing the boys said: To you boys I would say that you have carried yourselves very well during the past year, you have made good progress in your studies, and by your general good behaviour have made an At reputation for the Modern School, which you must be very jealous and zealous to keep up. Now I wish you all a splendid midsummer holiday when the school breaks up, and much fun, but you still have some work to do before that jolly time comes, so good-bye and go straight at it.

At this stage, on behalf of the other boys Master Norman Brockhurst presented to the Head Master a beautiful basket of flowers, which the latter acknowledged. The boys then gave three cheers for him and were afterwards dismissed.

The CHAIRMAN said:—

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN.—It is most regrettable but nevertheless a fact that the Modern School as a private enterprise is not getting on financially in a way we would all wish to see it doing. It does not expand, and without expansion and the increased monetary support which that brings with it, we cannot expect to get what is a great desideratum, a larger staff of masters and consequently greater individual attention to the pupils. Mr. Bruce Mitford claims that with the assistance of Mrs. Mitford he can properly conduct a class of 30 boys, specially graded as those at present in the school have been. This may be the case but some parents appear to think differently. It must be borne in mind that below that number of 30 boys the school could not support a duly qualified assistant. Thus far the school has been no more than self-supporting and for Mr. Mitford a quite profitless undertaking. That it has met a very great want nobody will deny, for it is essentially needed as a preparatory for those going to home schools, as well as to those who have to get their whole education in this country. In former days our boys, and girls too, were sent to China, as being the nearest place where a good education such as British and Americans wished for might be had, and it is to be feared that unless some active steps be taken we may have to revert to the old order of things. Mr. Mitford upon commencing scholastic work here, had the certain knowledge behind him that the Victoria Public School, a Yokohama institution, and Winton House, a private enterprise, had both proved failures, but nothing daunted he considered that by working on other lines he might achieve success. It is perhaps difficult to define accurately the reasons for these failures, but at the time, and in the case of the Victoria Public School, which apparently was launched under very auspicious circumstances, there was certainly a prevailing opinion with Yokohama residents that the School management had erred in opening its doors too widely to pupils drawn from all classes of this community, and hence many parents showed their dissatisfaction by withdrawing their boys. It occurs to my mind that Mr. Bruce Mitford relied upon success by making his school more exclusive; such a discriminating policy was no doubt gratifying to many of the parents, but has it not reacted to the detriment of his school from a financial point of view? Cannot a middle way be found between these extremes? Touching this matter of exclusiveness, are not we parents in Yokohama somewhat too particular (not to use a harder word, illiberal)? If anyone will make a round of inspection in British schools in the old country he or she will find a sprinkling of Greeks, Hebrews from Bagdad, pure blooded Hindoos, Eurasians from Bombay, Calcutta and Ceylon, children of British parents from Barbadoes and Jamaica, some of them quite off colour and now and then an Esquimaux, this being one of the consequences of having a world-wide Empire. Of course such pupils form a small minority, and that being the case nothing is heard from the parents about the school not being sufficiently select. Our boys in England have hobnobbed with Togo and Ranjitsingh; why can't we do the same in Yokohama? As to the moral tone of a school, the Masters are mainly responsible for that, and the scholars take their tone from them, "as is the Head Master so is the school" is an educational proverb. If you want good school tone you will find plenty of it near by in Tokyo; only one instance need be given, that of the Keio Gikoku, known as Fukuzawa's School. No Japanese boy can carry a better credential than that of having been a pupil there, and he knows it, and is most jealous in safe-guarding through life the reputation of that school which is in his hands for safe-keeping. The Modern School being wanted in this place, which after this war is certainly going to grow, every effort should be made by parents and others to keep it up. The cost of education in England is some three times as much as it was about 40 years ago, and is still advancing; the cost here by comparison is very small. We British and Americans are not alone in this difficult problem of providing a good school for our children. Look at our fellow residents the Germans; they have realized the necessity of having a school of their own and promptly set about raising the money. Many of that nationality of hard thinkers say "school first and church afterwards." However that may be there is a good deal of sense behind it. Education cannot do any harm to true religion, but we know of places where there is plenty of religion of a kind, but precious little education. The Germans knowing that their school could not possibly be self-supporting any more than a hospital can be entirely so, they set about starting an endowment fund to which all the German firms subscribed liberally as well as individuals; in this way nearly yen 12,000 was raised, and this has been supplemented by a grant from their Government, it is understood. Now we neither believe nor expect that from English and American firms, or their respective governments, like results will be obtainable, so that we will have to try other means. The heads and chief employes of most of our large firms have their children in the home countries already at school and have to meet innumerable calls upon them for matters connected with the public weal. Though we do pay taxes to the Japanese Government; and perhaps both directly and indirectly do assist in defraying an infinitesimal portion of the Government's outlay for educational purposes, still we would not care to ask and could hardly expect to get any assistance from that quarter. It should be mentioned here that there are over 70 members of the German School Society from all parts of Japan who agree to subscribe yen 5 each per annum. The accrued interests and other sources of income apart from the Scholars' Fees amount to about yen 2,500 minimum, yearly. Granting that it would be impossible to raise an endowment fund, it might be feasible as an alternative to raise annually a sum of about yen 2,500, which would suffice to cover the rental of the school, amounting to half that sum, and the balance to go towards the salary of an Assistant Master. This sum to be raised by forming an Educational Association of British, American and other Residents wishing to join, members of which association would contribute yearly or more 10 yen subscriptions as they felt disposed. A committee would be formed to collect and look after the disbursement of this Fund and to act as a consulting committee for the admission of new boys to the School, whose names would be submitted to that committee for approval and elected by them. The movement could be started by each parent trying to get as many members as possible whose names might be sent to the Chairman of this meeting.

No one in the body of the hall being inclined to speak,

Rev. E. S. Booth said the plan submitted by the Chairman was a workable and necessary one. He would like very much to see this scheme or one like it put forward; but the present audience seemed hardly sufficiently representative and he suggested that the Chairman should call a meeting of residents at a convenient time when the matter could be placed before them. Twenty-five yen annually would not be burdensome. It would encourage Mr. Bruce-Mitford who for the past 2½ years had been maintaining a school in a community that was so badly handicapped by the reputation of having buried two similar institutions in the past. His courage was yet equal to the task of keeping this one from being buried also if only the community would come forward with the necessary support.

The CHAIRMAN expressed his agreement with Mr. Booth's suggestion.

This terminated the proceedings.

INTERTOWN TENNIS.

Owing to lack of interest in Yokohama the proposal from Tokyo for a Challenge Cup has fallen through.

It has, however, been arranged to play five single matches and four double matches,—the former will be played in Tokyo on Saturday next and the following gentlemen will do battle for Yokohama:—K. Van Smith, J. M. Mollison, M. F. Stephens, Kenneth Wilson and E. Salinger. The doubles will be played at Yokohama some day next week.

Each match won will count one point. It is hoped that this will become an annual fixture and that the number of matches will be increased next year.

HOTOTOGISU.

Little bird's a-singing
In the greenwood tree.
Little bird, pretty bird,
Is your song to me?
In my heart, in my heart,
Singing, singing still.
"Would she say she will?
Would she say she will?
Hototogisu."

The stars are in her eyes
And the sun is in her hair,
No mom is half so sweet
And no eve is half so fair.
In my heart, in my heart,
I am saying, saying still,
"Would she say she will?
Would she say she will?
Hototogisu."

Her cheeks are dainty roses
Set about with lilies pure;
Her eyes are sweet as iris blooms
Beside the reedy shore.
In my heart, in my heart,
I am dreaming, dreaming still,
"Will she say she will?
Will she say she will?
Hototogisu."

Her voice is clear as waters
That chatter down the hills
Where the cool, deep-hearted mountain
Its silver bounty spills.
Could that voice to me so sweet
Ever answer word of ill?
Will she say she will?
Will she say she will,
Hototogisu?

Little bird, pretty bird,
Sweet your song to me!
All the world is full of joy,
All the land and all the sea.
When I spake her loverlike
Then she answered loverly.
"Will you, Love?" "I will."
"Will you, Love?" "I will."
Hototogisu!

庸 中
THE UNIVERSAL ORDER OR CONDUCT OF LIFE.

(A TRANSLATION OF ONE OF THE FOUR CONFUCIAN BOOKS HITHERTO KNOWN AS "THE DOCTRINE OF THE MEAN.")

Confucius remarked of his favourite disciple, Yen Hui: "Hui was a man who all his life sought the central clue in his moral being and when he got hold of one thing that was good, he embraced it with all his might and never lost it again.

NOTE.—Epictetus says, "Would you know the means to perfection which Socrates followed? They were these; in every single matter which came before him, he made the rule of reason and conscience his one rule to follow."—As the Emperor Shun in the text above is the type of the intellectual nature, true representative of what Mr. Matthew Arnold calls Hellenism, so Yen Hui here is the type of the moral, emotional or religious nature true representative of what Mr. Arnold calls Hebraism. Mr. Arnold says, "We may regard this energy, driving at practice, this paramount sense of duty, self-control and work, this going forward manfully with the best light we have,—as one force. And we may regard the intelligence driving at true ideas, which are, after all, the basis of all right practice, the ardent sense for all the new and changing combinations of these ideas, which man's development brings with it, the indomitable impulse to know and adjust them perfectly,—as another force. Now to give to these forces names from the two races of men who have supplied the most signal and splendid manifestations of them,—we may call them respectively the forces of Hebraism and Hellenism."

Confucius remarked: "A man may be able to renounce the possession of Kingdoms and Empire; be able to spurn the honours and emoluments of rank and office, be able to trample upon bare, naked weapons. With all that he shall not be able to find the central clue in his moral being."

NOTE.—The word 抑 in the text above, literally "even, equally divided," is here used as a verb meaning to be "indifferent to 平 視 hence to renounce." As in the chapter immediately following that in which he describes the characteristics of the great intellect, the writer of this book shows the conceit and uselessness of the half intellect, the characteristics of false Hellenism, so in the present chapter following the above in which he gives the true type of Hebraism, he here again quotes Confucius showing the characteristics of false Hebraism, the evils and abuses resulting from the loss of balance on the moral, emotional or religious side. The religious history of the world with its manifestation of asceticism and fanaticism proves how truly Confucius has here seized the characteristics of false Hebraism or loss of balance, the moral, emotional or religious side of man's nature.

Goethe says, "Religious piety (from 'migkeit') is not an end, but only means wherewith through the most complete calmness of temper and state of mind ('gemüthsruhe') to attain the highest state of culture or human perfection." What Goethe here says of religious piety, the highest inculcated virtue of Christianity and Buddhism, is also true of the virtues insisted upon by the Japanese Bushido viz.—self-denial, self-sacrifice and valour or fearlessness in presence of pain and death. These virtues insisted upon by the Japanese Bushido are also not an end, but only means to an end. Indeed, as Mr. Matthew Arnold truly says, Christianity is not a dead set of square rules of conduct, but a temper, a certain state of mind. It is perhaps more correct to say that Christianity, Buddhism as well as Bushido is really only a discipline, a method for the education of the temper and spirit of mankind. This discipline consists in the exercise of certain virtues, of piety in the case of Christianity and Buddhism and in the case of Bushido—of self-denial, self-sacrifice and valour. The exercise of these virtues is, as Goethe says, not an end, but only the means to enable a man or a nation of men to educate their temper and state of mind into a perfect condition and through that perfect condition of temper and mind to attain the highest state of human perfection or, as in the case of a nation, what is called the highest state of a civilization.

But the disciplinary exercise of these virtues may be carried to excess or carried out in a way which is contrary to and destructive of the end which the exercise of these virtues is meant to serve; in fact carried out in a spirit which, instead of promoting, injures and destroys the perfect state of temper and mind which the exercise of these virtues is intended to promote and bring about:—in such a case the exercise becomes not a good, but a harmful discipline. Thus for example, the exercise of the virtue of denial when carried to excess and in a spirit of hatred and defiance as it was with the ancient Stoics; in a spirit of militant vainglory as it was with the early Christians and is now with the modern Salvation Army:—such exercise of the virtue of self-denial becomes, when judged from the point of the universal order, not a virtue, but a vice, a sin; because it does not promote, but injures and destroys the sweetness and harmony of temper and mind and thereby does real harm to the cause of human perfection, of true civilisation in the world. In the same way, the exercise of the virtue of valour or fearlessness in presence of pain and death insisted upon by the Japanese Bushido, when carried to excess or exercised in a spirit of hatred and defiance becomes fanaticism or moral madness which is not a virtue but a vice, a sin; and ceases to be an exercise of true Bushido.

It is indeed true, as Ruskin says, that the trade of a true soldier is not the trade of slaying, but of being slain. But the soldier does not wantonly give away his life; he must give his life only for a purpose, for the true purpose for which he becomes a soldier. Now what is the purpose for which the moral man becomes a soldier? Moltke, the greatest modern European, as well as Sun-Wu-tzu the greatest ancient Chinese strategist, both agree in saying that, true strategy and tactics consist in winning a battle with the least number of men killed or injured not only on one's own side, but also on the side of the enemy; and that to win a battle by killing or injuring more of the enemy than is absolutely necessary, is bad tactics and bad strategy. We see now the true purpose for which the moral man becomes a soldier and goes to war. As the true object to be aimed at in a battle,—the greatest masters of the art of war tell us, is to render the enemy harmless so the true purpose of war is to disarm: to disarm savages; to disarm an unreasonable, violent, armed, dangerous madman or a nation of such men who threaten to injure and destroy moral, civil or social order, the cause of true civilisation in the world. The honour and glory of the true soldier therefore does not lie in killing the enemy. The glory and honour of the true soldier lies in his being willing to be slain in trying to disarm the dangerous armed madman. The temper and state of mind, therefore, with which the true soldier goes of war, to the work of disarming the dangerous madman, is the spirit and temper not of anger, hatred, defiance or exultation, but of sadness, sorrow and infinite pity at the inevitability of having to do it. When the true soldier gets slain in trying to disarm the dangerous mad man, he dies not with hatred, defiance, thought of vengeance in his heart, but with the spirit and temper of peace and satisfaction for having done his duty, having done what his whole being tells him to be right to do. The true discipline of Bushido therefore does not lie in hardening of the mind and body to the sensibility of pain and fear of death, but in ordering the natural impulses and passions of anger, hatred and vengeance and bringing these impulses and passions under control and not allowing them to disturb the calm and evenness of a man's temper and state of mind.

The spirit, temper and state of mind with which the true soldier becomes a soldier, goes to war and dies, can be best seen in the life and death of General Gordon. The life and death of General Gordon is the truest exercise of Bushido in modern times. I have said that Bushido is a discipline for the education of the temper and state of mind of a man in order to enable him to attain human perfection. I will add here that the life of the true soldier while he lives is a discipline which is confined more especially to himself, but the death of the true soldier in a right and necessary war, is a discipline for his nation and for the world. The spirit, temper and state of mind with which General Gordon faced and met his death at Khartoum, as revealed in his last journals, approaches that highest form of discipline known in this world for the education of the spirit and temper of mankind, viz.—the discipline of martyrdom called by Goethe the depth of Divine Sorrow. Carlyle says, "Small is it that thou canst trample the Earth with its injuries under thy feet — Greek Zeno trained thee; but thou canst love the Earth while it injures thee, for this a greater than Zeno was needed and he, too, was sent."

Now that greater than Zeno whom Carlyle meant, is the Divine Man of Nazareth, whose life and death two thousand years ago gave to the then so-called civilised people in Europe who were then as now becoming or had become incarnate devils, a new civilisation or a renewal of civilisation: the civilisation known now as modern European civilisation which the Chinese are so much called upon to admire and which I am sometimes accused of not being able to admire, a civilisation which among other wonderful things, has produced a Dante, Renaissance with its art and artists, Chivalry, Bayard, Shakespeare, Elizabethan literature, Goethe, Moltke, German literature and philosophy, Carlyle, Ruskin, Gordon, Mayflower Puritanism, Emerson, the United States of America, with its largest population of the greatest good-natured fools and its recent biggest variety show at St. Louis, the great Russian Empire with its Count Tolstoi, its Kolonial Politik, its present war for the cause of civilisation, and its Moscow Gazette, which calls the whole Japanese nation a viper and preaches the doctrine of no quarter and no prisoners in warfare; finally, last and not least of wonderful things, which the civilisation originally created by the life and death of the Divine Man of Nazareth has produced, namely—Christian missionaries in China who demand six hundred thousand and tael from the starving people of China for the death of a Christian Bishop killed in a street brawl of his own seeking! Truly, as Count Tolstoi says, men should bethink them and consider what civilisation really is before they export and bring that article into China, into Japan, and now into far Tibet!

But to return. The moral of what I have been trying to say in illustration of the text above is that the object to be aimed at in moral education, in religious instruction, is not the practice of this or that or any particular virtue. The object in moral education is to promote and bring about a certain temper, spirit and state of mind. The essence and power of Christianity,—as indeed it is with all great systems of religious teaching,—does not lie in any particular precept such as even the golden rule, much less in the collection of theories, rules of conduct and discipline which men in after times have reduced to a system called Christianity; the essence and power of Christianity lies in the perfect state of temper, spirit and mind in which Christ lived and died. Mencius, speaking of two ancient worthies famous for the purity and saintliness of their lives and character who,—living in a world then of anarchy, amidst militarism and wars for the cause of civilisation,—rather than give their consent and approval to that state of things, chose to starve themselves to death at the foot of a lonely mountain, said: "When people even after a hundred years heard of the spirit and temper of Pe-yi and Shuh tsch'i (關伯夷叔齊之風), the covetous man became unselfish and the cowardly man strong." (貪夫廉懦夫有立志) In this connection I cannot help venturing to call the attention of educationalists in Japan and of all men who have the cause of moral culture at heart, to the set of moral text-books now in use in public schools in Japan. It is my humble but very deliberate opinion that if there is anything in modern Japan which will make the Japanese people lose entirely not only their original fine and high moral culture, but all moral culture, it is this terrible set of moral text-books recently issued by the Department of Education. I have said that the object to be aimed at in moral education is not the practice of this, that, or any particular virtue, but in promoting and bringing about a certain perfect state of temper, spirit and mind. Now the only one way to promote and bring about that perfect state of temper, spirit and mind, is by coming under the influence of some great religious genius, such as those who have given their names to great religious systems of the world, by studying and understanding not only his life, his conduct, his precepts, but his way of feeling and thinking, his temper, spirit and state of mind—in fact what we Chinese call his tao (道)—his way or manner of being or living. I venture to say therefore that for the object to be aimed at in moral education, such a sentence from the New Testament, "Learn of me that I am mild and lowly in heart and ye shall find rest unto your souls," or to take a sentence from the sayings of Confucius, "The master is gentle, simple, earnest, modest, humble," (夫子溫良恭儉讓)—such sentences, when properly apprehended and taken in by a scholar, will do more for the education of his moral character, of his temper, spirit and state of mind than the most exact and rigid set of square rules of conduct about public and private virtue which the most accomplished and erudite professor in Tokyo or Berlin can ever hope to draw up. Mr. Matthew Arnold says:—"It is a mistake to suppose that rules for conduct and recommendations of virtue, presented in correct scientific statement or in a new rhetorical statement from which old errors are excluded, can have anything like the effect on mankind of old rules and recommendations to which we have been long accustomed, and with which our feelings and affections have become entwined. Pedants always suppose that they can, but that this mistake should be so commonly made, proves only how many of us have a mixture of the pedant in our composition. A correct scientific statement of rules of virtue has upon the great majority of mankind simply no effect at all. A new rhetorical statement of them, appealing, like the old familiar deliverances of Christianity [or of the sacred books of China and even the Buddhist sermons in the Okio hajinaru in Japan] to the heart and imagination, can have the effect which those deliverances had, only when they proceed from a religious genius equal to that from which those proceeded. To state the requirement is to declare the impossibility of its being satisfied. The superlative pedantry of Auguste Comte is shown in his vainly imagining that he could satisfy it; the comparative pedantry of his disciples is shown by the degree in which they adopt their master's vain imagination."

KU HUNG MING.

THE FORWARD MOVEMENT OF THE KINGDOM.

[A Sermon preached before the Japan Mission of the American Board at Arima, May 28th, 1905, by the Rev. C. B. Olds, of Miyazaki.]

"And as ye go preach, saying, the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Matt. 10:7.

Among the many responsive chords that were sounded at the great gathering of the National Council at Des Moines last fall, none struck deeper to the hearts of those who were looking for greater things in the kingdom of God than that contained in the utterance of Chancellor Stevens of Kansas University, representing the Methodist Protestant Church, and speaking apropos of the new plan of Church union. After dwelling upon the elements of strength in the two fellowships in question, the Congregationalist's loyalty to clearly conceived statements of truth and the Methodist's zeal in the propagation of his faith, the speaker exclaimed: "To your clearness of view we would add fervour of Christian experience. We have made a discovery that the world is to be saved by passion. What is better to-day than a marriage of sanity and passion?"

If we estimate rightly the movement of present-day thought we must be aware of a new temper of mind that is coming to pervade the Christian Church and looking in the direction of more effective service. Hostile and destructive criticism is giving place to positive affirmation; rationalistic and speculative philosophy is giving way to rational faith, and the restlessness of the past few decades is changing to a feeling of confidence, and assurance that we are on the eve of a great forward movement within the church. It is of this movement, its raison d'être and its conditions of success, that I wish to speak this morning, and if I judge correctly the three words that best express the strength and the drift of the thought of the Church are the three words suggested in that last sentence of Pres. Stevens: Sanity, unity and passion. That is to say, if the statement of the kingdom's principles of faith is adequate and unassailable, if the forces employed in the kingdom's extension are united, and, thirdly, if the motive power developed is the divine passion of bringing men to God, then a general advance movement of the Church is not only to be considered possible but it is for us to stake our faith upon it.

In elucidation of my theme I wish now to direct your attention successively to what I think you will recognize as three dominant modes of expression of the life of the Church to-day.

1. First I will speak of the significance of the movement that is making for a more acceptable intellectual conception of Christian faith. That in other times the statement of our faith has not always been satisfactory to thinking men needs not to be argued. The formulated theology of the Church has, I mistrust, ever been too narrow to allow a scholar to give freest range to his thought within it, and the doubt and scepticism of sincere men has been its legitimate fruit. Now, however, it is my contention, that within the last few years, there has been an extraordinary movement toward a statement of the Christian faith and philosophy that is satisfactory, and as this has been brought about through a series of tests applied to Christianity such as no religion nor philosophy in any age was ever subjected to, I want to speak of a few of these in some detail.

First is the attempted impeachment of the character of Jesus Christ. We need not delay long on this point. Suffice it to say that though for 1900 years Christ has been assailed by malignant criticism from every quarter of the globe and that though evil men have exhausted their resources in the attempt to blacken the name of Christ, yet all these attacks have fallen on his character as harmlessly as the buffeting of the Jewish rabble on the crucifixion morning, and Jesus stands to-day as never before, for all the world, "the perfect paragon, the crystal Christ." Never was his sufficiency as a world-saviour, nor the validity of his claims as Son of God championed by such a multitude of great advocates as to-day. With ever increasing frequency Jew, Hindu and Buddhist, firmly as they may hold to their primitive faiths, are coming to lay their crowns at the feet of the great sage of history because they find in him the supreme manifestation of God.

Secondly, not only has Christianity's founder been put to the test, but its documentary sources also, in recent Biblical criticism. This has been a desperate contest, with mighty combatants engaged on either side. It has been a fight to the finish which was to issue in once for all undermining and shattering the foundations of Christian faith or else in placing Christianity upon a rock that the most desperate and vindictive assaults of time should not be able to affect. It is safe to say that the amount and character of the discriminating study that has been spent upon the Bible during the last generation has never been paralleled in the whole range of human investigation, and out of this conflict the Scriptures have emerged, not only unscathed, as concerns their essential value but confirmed and buttressed till now they have the strength of Gibraltar. We have some times been led to fear lest the wounds that were being inflicted by thrusts of the German doctors might paralyze the Bible's power, but like St. Sebastian who, though his body was pierced full of arrows, yet stood undaunted because no vital part had been touched, so stands impregnable the rock of Holy Scripture, whose surface wounds, like those of Christ hanging on the tree, will but serve to attract men to its eternally living heart.

The wave of Higher Criticism has already culminated. The painful and barren years of readjustment to the resultant conceptions are passing and the Church is already beginning to feel the new power that has been imparted. Where ten years ago Biblical apologetics was the great subject of preaching, to-day it is the newly vitalized truth of the Bible that claims the attention. Whereas five years ago the young people were waiting for the verdict of the critics before venturing into the mazes of Bible study, now they are drinking deeply from the fountains of truth. Bearing out this statement, Secretary Ober of the Y.M.C.A. reports that the associations have nearly trebled their attendance at Bible classes during the last five years. It is too late to decry the Higher Criticism. Its power as an ally in world-wide evangelism has already been made sufficiently apparent to shut the mouths of gainsayers. Thanks to fearless scholarship we now have a Bible from which the whole world may draw its light and its salvation.

A third test that has also resulted in added strength to the cause is science's challenge to Christian philosophy. We are all aware of the mighty changes that have been produced in the world during the last half-century through the rapid development of science and the scientific method. This province of thought has precipitated a crisis upon the church also, which has produced consternation, loss of faith in a vast number and a temporary set back to the progress of the church. But out of it all tremendous advantage has accrued to the Christian cause in that without surrendering an iota of that truth for which she stands the church has so adjusted herself to the form of the world's thinking as to be able to speak now to a scientific age in its own language. And so if we make due allowance for the rash overstatements, which always come into prominence when a really live issue is involved, we need not fear what is termed the new theology. New theology is simply the expression of eternal truth in terms of of current thinking. Already the disquietude which the church has manifested during the readjustment, is giving place to a feeling of confidence that we are on firmer ground than ever before because of what has taken place. The spokesman of our own denomination, Washington Gladden, moderator of the council, declared in a speech a few weeks ago: "In my view science is swinging around to the position of religion's mighty ally and helper." Science too, on the other hand, is changing her front so that the great leaders of thought like Komane and Wallace and Fiske and Lord Kelvin have begun to take the ground that the only philosophy upon which scientific investigation may successfully proceed is the Christian philosophy. There is no longer a dividing wall between science and religion. They flow together. That was a grand conceit of Dr. Hartraft of Hartford that theology is the queen of the sciences, inasmuch as theology, like no other, includes all the sciences, and when rightly ordered embraces within itself all human thinking as tributary to its own. The church is ready for a forward movement of unprecedented breadth because she is becoming catholic enough to consider as part and parcel of her own thinking all that pertains to the true life of men. There remains now to speak of one more challenge and this perhaps greatest of all, the alleged claim of Christianity to possess an compelling motive for right character. Do the facts bear out the claim? It is obviously unnecessary before such an audience to adduce examples to prove that Christianity is working out its ideal in a thousand ways throughout the world, in spite of the fact that in certain directions the devil's power is exhibited more conspicuously in Christian countries than anywhere else. Nor is it necessary for me to take the time to show that in proportion as individuals or nations have clearly conceived the Christian ideal and sought to attain it has its power in character been demonstrated. But I wish to point out the fact that there is in the world a something that is making for better character in individuals and nations, and also that society is slowly coming to the conclusion, that, whether directly or indirectly Christianity is at the bottom of it.

This is an age of social reforms, it is an age when nations are looking for a basis of comity among themselves, when the business world is being rent asunder by the popular demand for righteous dealing, when the ruling classes and the oppressed masses, Christian and non-Christian alike are crying out with a mighty insistence that the law of Christ shall rule, as the only hope for an evil world. Even the secular press is keenly sensitive to the Christian ideal. Witness, for instance, the hue and cry raised recently by the entire associated press of America against the church for its Christian use of a millionaire's money that was suspected of taint. The evident seriousness with which the discussion was taken up is a straw that shows which way the wind is blowing.

However little it may appear that the Christian ideal has yet been wrought out in Christian character throughout the world it is at least true that the ethical sense of the world was never as alert, the conception of what the normal Christian life is was never as clear and the insistence upon adherence to absolute Christian righteousness on the part of the church member was never as uncompromising as it is to-day.

2. This brings me to my second main point—the movement of the church toward unity. All I wish to do here is to call your attention to a few of the important considerations involved in this movement. I have spoken of certain ideas that are dominant in the thinking of the time. Another such idea is that of the solidarity of human interests in view of the brotherhood of men. It is beginning to be felt as a truth of practical importance that the world is one; that what concerns one city or state or nation, concerns in varying degrees every other portion of the globe. This truth has been given special force by reason of the present war, and by a hundred other great world movements and events which are compelling men to recognize the great centripetal force that is drawing the world to a common centre. It is with peculiar power now, therefore, that the church is beginning to realize what the truth means in her own life.

The recognition of interrelationship has given rise to two tendencies, in the church as in the world generally—the one a tendency toward tolerance and the other toward organic unity. In the first place, the world says—our life is communal; yet, since in action and thought we are individuals we must expect and allow diversity. The church also is coming to the same conclusion and there is a growing disposition to permit every man to hold his own peculiar way so long as what he thinks and what he does is not absolutely prejudicial to the cause. The way is being cleared for effective unity by the tendency to discriminate between the essence and the accidents of faith and between the wrong and the inexpedient in action.

The second tendency, the tendency toward unity of organization, is the natural outcome of the other. We see how it is working in the great defensive alliances and conventions among the nations of the world, in the national labor organizations, in the vast combinations of capital under single management, in the centralization of educational facilities in a colossal university organization and in the countless brotherhoods, guilds, fraternities, unions, societies and federations all of which aim at and result in increased power. The combination idea has so thoroughly seized upon present day thought as to make it seem that organization is a pre-requisite of success for any great enterprise, and increasing so as the enterprise assumes greater magnitude. If unity of action is a pre-requisite of success, what then of the church whose purpose is grander and more far-reaching than any other enterprise on earth! The church must get closer together for service. As well may we expect Japan to win against her monster enemy by sending out a score or more of detached regiments, each fighting in a way that seems best in itself and mutually jealous of each other as to expect the church in a similar fashion to win against the hosts of Satan. That the church is realising this and is taking measures to bring her forces together is a closer union is one of the significant signs of the times.

Note a few of the evidences that this is so. We all know of the federation existing among the non-conformist churches of England and how for the sake of economy of effort the churches have distributed the fields among themselves, agreeing not only not to interfere in each other's work but in every way possible to aid each other. Similar to this, though of more recent origin, is a federation of churches in New York city; there is another also in Pittsburg and still others elsewhere. Indeed the federation idea has spread into every branch of the Christian church and its beneficent working can be seen in the multitude of local church alliances everywhere.

But even closer unions are observable, such as the recent amalgamation of the free Presbyterian churches of Scotland. Unfortunately the little hearts of the "wee frees" have not yet expanded to the thought but even they will ultimately yield to the inevitable. Our own denomination has recently taken a step which by some is considered one of the most significant in her entire history, namely, the effort she has been making to effect a corporate union with the Methodist Protestant and United Brethren church bodies. That the people are in hearty sympathy with the idea has been made apparent by the hosts of champions it has raised up throughout the churches. And not only is it so in America but in Australia and in Canada also a like movement has been going forward with equal seriousness. In the Presbyterian body also a like spirit is manifest and to a greater or less extent in the Methodist body and in the Christian body, a movement has even been inaugurated for uniting into one great whole a score or more of the leading denominations of America. Who can not see the possibilities in a movement like that.

These efforts may any one of them or all of them fail of immediate accomplishment, but the important thing for us to note is that the spirit of combination which is abroad in the world has entered the church, and though as yet we have proceeded but little beyond the stage of discussion this discussion will never end until all Christendom is effectively united for service.

The great interdenominational societies and conventions have done much to break down barriers of prejudice. Witness the Infant Religious Education Association, which has gathered into itself the best of all sects from Methodism to Universalism, not for the purpose of discussing theoretical differences or shades of critical distinction, but to study with zeal and with open minds the conditions to be fulfilled in bringing in the kingdom of God, and so thoroughly has the idea appealed to the best that is in our church life that in the recent convocation in Boston it was necessary to provide for 15 simultaneous meetings in order to accommodate all who came together. Witness again the Ecumenical Councils which have wrought so effectively for harmony. Note the temper of mind of the young people of to-day, the church leaders of to-morrow, as exhibited in their allegiance to the Y.M.C.A., Christian Endeavour and the oldest Volunteer. Are not such united movements as these but precursors of something yet greater to come? As the last century was the century for the erection of denominational barriers, are there not signs already that this century is to be distinguished as the century for the dissolution of those barriers. The time will yet come when the walls of partition will melt away and all who name Christ's name will march forward shoulder to shoulder under one banner.

What special form the developing organization may finally assume it is useless for us to inquire. The spirit is the important thing. The spirit will embody itself in suitable form. We have no right to say that the Presbyterian idea or the Episcopal idea or the congregational idea or the Roman idea will win the day, as in the administration of nations it is coming to be recognized that there is no one ideal form of government, but that is best which is best adapted to the people to be governed, so in United Christendom that form of polity will prevail which is best calculated to serve the purpose of the whole, with local modifications ranging over the whole field of present day church goes. Each new people and race as it comes successively under the domination of the Christian idea will add its quota of thought and feeling and experience which will serve to modify the whole. Each ethnic religion, each school of thought of the world, which Christianity touches, in the future as in the past, is to impress itself upon Christian thought and action which, when absorbed, as it will be, shall add strength to the common whole. Isaiah saw in his vision Assyria and Egypt each a third with Israel in extending Jehovah's way and that even mercenary Tyre was to affect the issue with blessing. Shall not then Japan and China and India be one with Europe and America in the campaign of Christ, while each adds her distinctive blessing to us all? Probably the most beautiful Madonna the world has ever seen is one that has just been produced by making a composite of all the great Madonnas of the world's history. So the perfected Church of the future will be strong and beautiful because it is to contain the qualities and strength of all in one perfectly blended whole; the likeness of whose features that it reflects to the world will be the face of Christ.

And now I come to speak in the third and last place of the power in the Church that breathes through these other modes of expression as the dynamic of the great forward movement in the Kingdom of God.

What is the motive power working in the church which can result in the world-wide triumph of the Kingdom? It is two-fold. On the one hand it is the Holy Spirit, or in other words, it is God's effective devotion of Himself for the victory of his cause. And on the other hand it is that which in the wisdom of God is just as essential, it is that which in man corresponds to the Holy Spirit in God, namely, the passionate absolute devotion of himself for the triumph of God's cause. Thus as the greatest power on earth, the passion of humanity, is bound in closest union with the greatest power in heaven, the passion of God, the consummation, is possible. The Holy Spirit is ever ready and his power is unquestioned. But until mankind, or a considerable portion of it, becomes suffused with the passion of God, the triumph of the kingdom will not eventuate nor will it move forward apace. Universal assent to scientifically stated truth drawn from a flawless Bible and grounded upon an unimpeachable and divine Christ is, after all, but dry bones if the flame of devotion to the truth does not set the heart on fire. All Christendom coördinated and organized to the utmost satisfaction of the military ideal, is but lifeless mechanism if the spirit of the living creature is not in the wheels. But when a world brotherhood of apostles standing upon a foundation of impregnable faith feel in their hearts the answering throb of God's passion for men a mighty onward movement of the kingdom will manifest itself.

As we think of the transformations that have been wrought in the church during the last few years this movement for intellectualized faith, for unity, and for tolerance, we may well stand in hesitation and fear rather than in gratulation. Hesitation lest perchance this trend toward a rationalized faith may end in rationalism, fear lest the spirit of tolerance regarding non-essentials may work havoc through a growing indifference to the fundamentals, and lest through this excessive organization, the power of the church may dissipate itself in the multiplicity of wheels.

The movement does indeed augur ill to the church of God if a new and consuming passion does not kindle these elements of strength into power. Well does Dr. Dawson cry out, as he looks over the churches of two continents, "What ministers and churches need most to-day is the passion to get men into the presence of God." Not passion for the truth of God, observe, not passion for an organized church, but passion to bring God to men and men to God. What is needed in the pulpits is men able to swing the whole firmament of truth and with fearlessness and god-like passion convince the world that Christ is the only Saviour. What is needed in the pews is men who, for the love of God, are willing to cast differences aside, and consumed by a common crusader-like zeal will march forward in solid phalanx to win mankind for Christ.

Let us stop now and ask ourselves whether this passion is in the world to-day or not, for if it is not now evident, whatever we may hope for the future, we must abandon the thesis that we are on the eve of a new forward movement. What are the signs of the times? I ask you first to turn your thoughts to that little country that is drawing all eyes to itself. What does it mean that little backward Wales is being shaken from end to end by a power that cannot be described nor explained? There is no adequate human leader, there is no reason why, that science can give, to explain the new joy which is flooding the thousands of lives in that land, that is working out mighty transforming of character that is the astonishment of all the world—we cannot account for a movement like that which is sweeping scientist and scoffer, learned and unlearned alike, into the mighty current of revolutioned life. We can only pause and say a passion for God is there. Look at Liverpool, with its recent harvest of thousands of souls who are feeling a new and blessed future, or at London where the contagion for God is stirring society to its depths, and when we reflect that it is not with the persuasive words of man's wisdom always that the gospel is being preached in those cities, we stand in awe of the Godward passion. Look again at Australia, or at our own beloved land, and mark the score or more of great cities from Boston to Los Angeles, where the absorbing thought of the hour is revivalism. Says G. Campbell Morgan, writing in the Daily Chronicle, "If the Church does but know her day America is on the eve of a great religious revival." And the Church is beginning to know her day. Mark the tone that pervades our congregational thought. At the National Council 6 months ago, evangelism was the one great subject of discussion. Our leading religious papers, which formerly scoffed at revivals as belonging to an age that is past, are now subordinating everything else to this all-engrossing topic and are the most ardent heralds of the new awakening. The new theology and the Higher Criticism, as current phrases, have had their day and in their place evangelism is the one word on every lip. The secret of the success of the Religious Education Association idea is that it is exhausting its energy in a new, sane passion for God. Ministers gather in retreats and with one mind implore the power of the Holy Spirit for evangelistic service. Home letters, whether from friends, or pastors, or Board secretaries all throb with the same note of expectancy and enthusiastic confidence. Annual religious conventions of whatever name and sort convey to the world that there is but one absorbing topic of interest before the Church. Ministers are being more and more actuated by one ambition to become evangelistic pastors, and passionless time servers are becoming Dawsons, or Morgans, or Roberts—Chrysostoms, who are putting their eloquence and their blood into their preaching.

The religious motive is coming to the fore also in the secular world. Says Dr. A. S. Hoyt, "a genuinely religious spirit pervades our literature." Says Pres. Harris, "There is I think more practical religion in the colleges to-day than in any period of their history." Dr. Chapman bears witness to "the unparalleled interest of men in spiritual things." The daily press discusses religious subjects equally with other great concerns of humanity, forced to it by the times. Education is looking to religion for its sanction and its controlling impulse. Prof. Coulter is leading the American scientific world to feel an enthusiasm for Christ as the perfect norm of truth and life, while Sir Oliver Lodge is doing a similar work for England. What does it all mean? What but that there is only one sovereign impelling motive of human progress, and that the world is just beginning to find out what it is—the God passion in men. Do I paint the picture in too glowing colors? Perhaps so. But I am concerned now in championing the optimistic and true vision, which we must behold if we are to do the Lord's work in this or any other land. Brethren, however disheartened we may be by our visions of sin and failure, I believe we stand facing a day of great opportunity. The age has reasoned out for itself a faith that is adequate; the church begins to feel the esprit de corps of an army organized for a victorious campaign and the fire of passion is being kindled. What is before us? Let us not make the mistake of thinking that the victory is already within our grasp, that the enemy will now fall back discomfited and impotent and that the forces of the Lord will ride in on the crest of the now rising wave to a haven of enduring peace. The end is not yet. The contest is yet age-long. The enemy also is just beginning to arouse itself to united action. The odds are tremendous. But it is enough for us to know that the newly furnished machinery of the church is adequate, that the forces are drawing together for a united advance and that the dynamic employed is the very power of God.

If these things are so, fellow-workers, what remains for us but to re-iterate those words of Henry Martyn, "Now let me burn out for God." We are factors in putting Japan into the swing of this great world-movement. We must then be men who keep ourselves abreast of truth and are its worthy champions; we must move forward shoulder to shoulder, heart to heart with each other, with our fellow missionary-workers of other Boards—with all that is best in this great nation, but most of all we must be men whose lips the seraphim have touched with live coals from off the altar and whose absorbing passion—whose very life it is, to get men into the presence of that "great, dear figure standing with out-stretched arms" to embrace the whole world.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE CHRISTIAN DOGMAS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In his reply to my letter, your correspondent "Layman," in the interests of the "hideous sufferings of the submerged thousands in Christian lands," condemns the energy and money spent in the work of Christian Missions in Asia. As his arguments are exceedingly ad hominem, I may be pardoned if I make a like reply. It is a noticeable fact that the men and women who are spending their lives or their money in the relief of the submerged thousands in Christian lands do not make such criticisms of foreign missionary work. But they are usually made by people who are doing nothing at all either at home or in foreign lands for the relief of suffering humanity. Your correspondent speaks of my work personally. Therefore I will speak of him personally. If he himself were down in the slums of London or New York "at work with his coat off," then he would have better grace to call me from my work here to his side. Otherwise, of course, his words are as sounding brass and a clanging cymbal.

He speaks in disparaging terms of the American and English women who are doing missionary work in China, women in whose presence neither he nor I are worthy to stand. I can show him a more decent direction for his caustic criticism. There are thousands of women in America and England who are living almost utterly selfish lives, spending all but a trifle of their time and money for their own comfort and pleasure, doing nothing real at all for the "women and children sunk in want and degradation in their own country" or in any other country. And yet, instead of them, your correspondent in his own keen zeal for suffering humanity, criticises the women missionaries in China! And there are millions of money spent in America and England for luxury and display in spite of the "piteous claims of starving children in Europe and America." And yet your correspondent chooses to lay the blame on the money spent for Christian Missionary work in Asia!

"Layman" should know that the Christian religion is not cosmopolitan but world-wide. The work of preaching the Christian gospel and the work of Christian benevolence are not national nor racial but world-wide. Where each man shall do his share of the common work must be decided individually. But certainly those who are doing their share of the work in foreign lands should not be condemned because so many of those who stay at home neglect the need for work there. There are plenty of people and there is plenty of money to relieve the suffering and destitution in England and America. And if it is not done, the blame should be put where it belongs, upon the people who are doing nothing at all. The people who are doing Christian work at home and the people who are doing Christian work in foreign lands are in perfect sympathy with each other in a common kinship of labour.

In the same issue of your paper "A Man in the Street" corrects a statement of mine and says that by "dogmas" he does not mean the religious beliefs of men. But as he goes on immediately and characterizes every religious belief he refers to as a "dogma," his distinction does not seem to have any practical bearing on the subject under discussion.

He tells us that our Christian training and tradition have had a profound psychological effect on our mental attitude to the Christian gospel. And then he makes a caricature of the Christian story and dresses it in Chinese clothes in order that we may know how an unprejudiced mind would receive it and how in particular intelligent and educated Japanese and Chinese would receive it. Why does he go to such pains to illustrate what is a plain fact all about us? Why does he ask us to stand on our heads in order to see what we can see more plainly and sanely standing on our feet. The Christian story—the story that the Son of God came into this world in Bethlehem and lived a human life and died for the sins of the world and rose again from the dead—for two thousand years has gone into every nation, and intelligent and educated men have received it and believed it and have obeyed its insistent demand that they should live no longer unto themselves but unto Him who died for them. And intelligent and educated Japanese and Chinese are constantly reviewing it and believing it—its dogmatic assertions and all. If it were so inherently improbable as "A Man in the Street" paints, it would have died away into mythology long ago. For it has not made its way amid superstitious darkness, but in the midst of the blaze of the world's intellectual life. And it has carried everywhere with itself its insistent ethical demand.

Does your correspondent imagine that we who believe and teach the Christian gospel have never stripped it of our prejudices and traditions and honestly faced it in its nakedness. I assure him that we have done so. But when we have done so, the utter beauty of the story and its profound reasonableness have conquered our hearts and minds anew, and we have gone from the test to try again to live no longer unto ourselves but unto Him who died for us.

Your correspondent asks if the belief in "hell and eternal damnation" is one of the dogmas that are to elevate the Eastern world, and I unhesitatingly say, yes. But the Christian doctrine of eternal punishment is a thousand celestial diameters from the travesty of it that your correspondent is pleased to quote. The possibility and the law that underlie the Christian doctrine of eternal punishment are woven into the warp and woof of our whole human life. The possibility of sin against God is necessary to the make-up of free manhood. And not even God can make a man righteous in his heart by force. And so in the freedom of man we have the possibility of eternal moral separation from God. And the law is the universal law by which a man loses what he does not use, whether it be the power of the muscles of his arm or the faculties of his mind or the motives of his spiritual nature. Darwin in his magnificent devotion to scientific investigation lost all his power to love music and it was an utter bore to him. And when men in their freedom choose wickedness until they have lost all power and motive for unselfish love, what can God do but to put them apart by themselves in eternal separation. The Bible and the Christian Church teach that God's attitude toward eternal punishment is that of infinite sadness. He either had to make a world with nothing in it but bluejays and robins and cherry blossoms, or a world with free men and the possibility of hell. Jesus Christ with all his tenderness and kindness and love for men taught over and over and over again the possibility of eternal punishment. With our human measure of his infinite sorrow we must teach it too.

I have a just complaint to make against the opponents of the Christian faith in public print and speech. They have just as much a right to oppose the Christian faith publicly as I have to defend it. But they are continually setting up men of straw and valiantly demolishing them. Instead of stating the Christian beliefs as Christian people believe and teach them, they make caricatures and travesties of them and hold them up to ridicule. What would they think if Christian ministers should write letters to the papers describing and demolishing old scientific theories in astronomy and medicine, and proving falsehood thereby that all scientific theories should be thrown aside! Because people have been killed by false medical theories, therefore all medical theories should be thrown aside! But that is exactly what they are doing with theology. I would recommend to your correspondents that if they write any more letters about the Christian religion they take the pains to find out first what Christian people really believe. I think I should be careful to do that if I were to write on any subject in science or business. If I did not, I should be afraid I would expose my ignorance. It will make their task harder perhaps, but they will have the satisfaction of knowing that they are not tilting against men of straw.

In the meanwhile nothing that your three correspondents have written has touched my original contention. That contention was that the Y. M. C. A. work in Manchuria and practically all the great benevolence and philanthropy of the world are due to the influence upon the hearts of men of the great Christian dogmas, or beliefs, or truths, whatever you may choose to call them, chief among which is that splendid belief that the Son of God died for the sins of the whole world.

Sincerely yours,

A. D. B.

BY THEIR FRUITS YE SHALL KNOW THEM.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Very many of the readers of your paper must be grateful to Mr. Berry for his recent excellent letters—excellent not only in substance but in tone: indeed were a tyro, believing that a tree is known by its fruits, seeking to determine the relative excellence of the dogmas of unbelief and of belief, he could, so far forth, find a sufficient answer to his inquiries in the recent correspondence. Of course "The Writer of the Article" in question and the writer of all similar articles in your paper (they all bear the same hall-mark) is to many of us, I suppose, a very thinly veiled personality; and we are glad to believe that though there may be many foreigners in Japan who fail of Christian faith yet there is only one who has adopted their peculiar and very regrettable personal attitude towards Revealed Religion.

Yours faithfully,

C. H. BASIL WOODD,
Momoyama School.

THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Your correspondent, the "Writer of the Article," in his last letter modestly asserts his thorough knowledge of the world's philosophical and religious belief. Perhaps it will do him good if I tell him that his knowledge of the Christian religion is exceedingly shallow. Since I came to Japan every article of his on the subject of religion in your paper has betrayed the fact that he has an utter misconception of the Christian religion. He has probably read widely in certain lines of modern religious thought, but he never shows the glimmer of any deeper comprehension of the movement of Christian theology. In his frequent tiltings against what he fancies to be the Christian religion or Christian theology your correspondent is a veritable Don Quixote—although there is no humour but only pity excited by the performance.

He shows his own astonishing ignorance when he comments on my sentence: "If any man in this world think he can satisfy his conscience and keep the Moral Law without the help of Jesus Christ, it simply means that he does not know his own conscience and does not know the Moral Law." He asserts that I meant by that sentence that there has been no high ethical attainment without a knowledge of Christianity or that our salvation depends upon certain beliefs about Christ! He even says that I mean by salvation, "a title to enter paradise." In other words he ignorantly reads into my sentences his own antique conceptions of what Christian people think and teach.

If your correspondent had read more deeply of the ethical endeavor of mankind he would have known that from the beginning of all endeavor there has been an ethical sadness and despair. And it has been the high-souled men of ancient and modern times who, in spite of all their splendid attainments, have most felt that sadness and despair. And if your correspondent had thought his way more deeply into the philosophy of ethics he would have known that the reason for that ethical despair is that the Moral Law demands a perfect obedience. To keep the Moral Law is no cheap thing. The obedience must be perfect in the heart and in the outward action, and in the past as well as in the future. The Moral Task set before every one of us is like climbing up to the stars. Of course there are men who when they see the height of the moral task reject it and sink back into mere sporadic or utilitarian morality. But other men in all ages and in all nations though they have felt the hopelessness of the task have kept their faces toward it. But the plainest ethical fact in the world, shown alike to be true in ethical history and in ethical theory and in our own hearts each man for himself, is that no man, who does not flout or dull his conscience with sin, can with the resources of his own heart satisfy his conscience and make an ethical peace with his past and find a hope for the future. To do the moral task would require a faultless memory and a faultless judgment and faultless motives—and then, we have already broken it.

The Christian interpretation of their ethical phenomena is this: Men were not made to live under the merciless demand of the Moral Law alone. They were made to live under it with a Helper. And Jesus Christ the Son of God has come into the world to be the Helper, to give men an ethical peace with their past and an ethical help in their present struggle and an ethical hope for all the ages to come. As for the "condition of salvation" on the human side it is everywhere the same, that ethical attitude of the human heart toward the Moral Law and toward God expressed in the world, repentance and faith. Whenever in the probation of this world, a man puts himself honestly in the attitude of repentance and faith toward the moral law and toward God, God will sooner or later bring that man into relationship with Jesus Christ and from Jesus Christ he will get his ethical peace and help and hope.

Now your correspondent has a perfect right to disagree with all I have written in this letter as in previous letters. But he has no manner of right to read into what I have written his own ignorant misconception and then to flout before your readers his own superior wisdom. I am sorry to speak thus harshly, but the occasion seems to demand it. Your correspondent likens me to the frog in the well. Did he ever read the story of the frog which sat in a mud puddle but imagined all the while that he was out in the sweep of the big ocean!

Yours sincerely,
Aoyama, Tokyo, June 24th, 1905.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S SUGGESTION.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—President Roosevelt's suggestion rendered for the consideration of the belligerent Powers is at once humane and just. It is the most beautiful blossom of the civilization of the 20th century. The theory of humanity dawns to light in the world of practice. The present Czar is a lover of peace. He is, in fact, the proposer of the famous peace conference at The Hague and holds himself out as the foremost peace promoter. Nevertheless, a furious war is waging between his country and Japan. It is working the destruction of peace not only in Asia but also even in that part of Europe which lies outside of his dominions. How keenly must his peace-loving heart be mortified? How ardently must he be longing for the return of peace? Any further prolongation of this sanguinary warfare is in sheer contradiction to his sacred motives to love peace. Yet there is hardly any fair hope for his army and navy to restore peace by winning a decisive victory over the enemy in the near future. Thus he has been thrown into a transport of dark agony, of self-contradiction, between war and peace. However strong may the political advisers be for war, with a firm heart for peace, Nicholas II. can hardly be doubted not to avail himself of the lofty and opportune suggestion of peace and humanity by his great friend of the mighty Republic—lover of humanity and justice. That he will not allow himself to be governed by any selfish ambition which will endanger the permanency of peace even when it will have been restored, seems likewise to invite fair hopes of the international public.

There are, however, some pessimists who entertain some serious doubts that the magnanimous suggestion expressed by the great President will not unfortunately bear the desired fruits of peace. They strongly discredit the Russian autocratic bureaucracy. In their honest opinion, it is entirely apathetic and indifferent as to the sufferings of the people. The Czar politically acts by the advice of his ministers and also of certain aristocrats. Thus neither the sovereign nor his advisers feel in their heart responsible whatever consequences may follow their maladministration. Monarchical aristocracy or aristocratic bureaucracy, whatever may it be called, is destitute of sympathy for the governed and ever greedy for wild ambitions to take opportunities for displaying their self-valued abilities even at the expense of the sovereign or the people. Such a vain ambition for glory is the ruling passion in the Russian Government, or rather in the governing circle in Russia. The government is not for the people; but the people are for the government to serve as the means for its achieving greedy ambitions which may or may not be for their good. However rightfully they need peace they may not have it so long as the governing circle is not satisfied in their ambition.

The defeats after defeats on land and on water naturally caused the people to discredit the government's promise of political freedom. To be strong abroad, Russia must be harmonized at home. To make political harmony, the foreign war works a great hindrance. But to do away with it is impossible except by proposing peace to the enemy. The Russian aristocratic bureaucracy has not courage to frankly propose peace to Japan even after the complete destruction of their boasted Baltic fleet. A fine opportunity is before them now. They seized upon it at once, but they will trifle with this peace affair and procrastinate the settlement as long as possible and break it up eventually. Meanwhile, the people in Russia will be smothered with some quasiprivileges in their political rights. Armed with the people thus contented and the home harmony so created the vainly ambitious government will renew the warfare. There is not a particle of truth or desire for the re-establishment of peace in the Far East, with sincere wishes for the everlasting peace and the coming development and prosperity of civilization or humanity in the yet comparatively dark corner of the eastern hemisphere. The motives which prompted the great President to suggest peace and the motives with which Nicholas II. accepted are in material diametrically opposite. Such is, in brief, the pessimistic view of the coming peace conference.

If Russia show her tendency not to be willing to establish peace on such a firm ground as to secure the world's permanent peace, the very act is tantamount to disclaiming peace and holding the world of humanity in defiance.

OUR SUCCESSES AND THE YELLOW PERIL.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In summing up all the arguments recently advanced by Japanese casuists and their friends in reply to the charge of the yellow peril raised against us on account of our successes on land and water, we can as yet find nothing either new or praiseworthy. Europe is too strong to have any apprehensions from the Japanese arms; the Japanese never fight but for their national existence, their motto being peace, justice, and humanity; they would never wage war aggressive in nature, nor do they ever fight for fighting's sake. The Japanese are not a warlike nation in the bad sense of the term, and their generals themselves testify the fact by their regret over the carnage and misery attending the fight, and that even in the very midst of their victories. Their politicians and statesmen would bear anything short of national annihilation rather than appeal to the arbitration of the sword—what a bundle of truths and falsehoods mixed up! Can arguments like these satisfy a sane man? Did Hideyoshi invade Korea because our national existence was threatened? Did not Kenshin occasionally fight for fighting's sake? What was the "War of the Flags"? Was it carried on simply for the sake of peace, justice, and humanity? Did Hojo and Ashikaga raise rebellions because it was just for them to fight against their master and emperor? Of course not. There were many battles fought with no exalted ideas. We are not "the yellow monkeys," as the Russians allege—we know right from wrong, but at the same time, we are not gods. Should it be at all wondered at if our harp of a thousand strings should, once in a while, make some discordant music? "The British are mighty, but God is almighty," was I understand, the vehement cry of the Boers; small, weak nations make a loud noise, while their powerful neighbours calmly redress their wrongs and assert their claims with the sword. And why should Japan alone be an exception to the general rule?

But before proceeding further let us see what is the real signification of that weird phrase, "the yellow peril." Some fifty years ago, Bakunin, the founder of Nihilism, escaped from Siberia to Japan. Gifted with wonderful foresight and acumen, he examined the characteristics of the Japanese, and was struck with their enterprising spirit. Ten or fifteen years later we find the same Bakunin at Geneva discussing the Japanese peril. He roused the attention of all Europe by his declaration to the effect that within fifty years, Japan would be master over the whole region from the Baikal to the shores of China. This was probably the first yellow peril ever preached by Europeans. About the same time or a little later Renan, a profound French scholar, wrote in a somewhat similar strain, or at least he cautioned Europe against the immense power of the yellow race. A few years after this, a distinguished soldier seeing the fertile resources of the Chinese empire, which, under an able hand, might easily be turned into a most formidable power, startled the world by his cry of the "Yellow Warrior." Since the China-Japan War astonished our neighbours, the "Yellow peril" became our sole monopoly! In the meantime, the phrase began to mean more than it used to do, and it struck the Kaiser's fancy to represent it pictorially for his amusement, but unfortunately many took it seriously. If I rightly remember the picture, the most conspicuous figure in it was that of Michael with his drawn sword of justice. Facing him and on the right margin appeared the feeble light of Buddha, or rather "the darkness visible," the archangel, directing all the good spirits, or the occidental Powers, to form a holy alliance, lest the damned hordes of the darkness, recovering their strength and emerging, in their new and terrible form of yellow dragons, out of the Stygian flood where they had been flung and stupified for ages, might ravage the lands of bliss bathed in the pure, serene light of the Cross, so much so that the saying where "the Tartars trod, no grass grew" would become applicable to these monsters.

Well, if the yellow peril means, as they allege, nothing short of the annihilation of the world's civilization by the Japanese arms or at least by the united power of the yellow race, it is too absurd to try any refutation. To begin with, it ignores distance, the most important consideration in modern warfare. Many papers maintained that no other nation on earth, except the British, could have continued and won the Boer War, and so it was. Japan is not half so rich as Great Britain, and yet she would face and crush the combined forces of all Europe! Besides, we are neither the Huns nor the Tartars, nor even their descendants. The Chinese have, as you know, the "l" sound but not "r," and we Japanese have "r" but not "l," while the Koreans have both. For instance "lu" in their language means "to leak," but "ru" is a name for tall buildings. Moreover, our language has nothing common with either the Chinese or the Tartar. But if we were exactly of the same tribe as they, who could possibly believe that we prefer destruction to improvements, or barbarism to civilization? It does not require the wisdom and sagacity of the Kaiser, a master-mind of the twentieth century, to discern the whole sophism and absurdity.

But there are a few other points hardly ever touched by the blind advocates of the yellow peril; and though they are simple and clear they speak not a little for this strange aberration. First of all comes the law of natural selection, or rather that of the struggle for existence, working incessantly through all grades of creation from the highest to the lowest of the low. This fact, together with our rapid increase of population, creates awe in the mind of the weak. Europe, which has been looking on with not a little alarm at the encroachments, and the annual surpluses of the Slav race, may now feel some uneasiness about our multiplication. The second is the balance of the European Powers, or rather that of the whole world now-a-days finding its pivot off the coasts of Japan, "the lonely isles of the East." In other words, we find ourselves besieged on all sides by the great powers of the world and in close juxtaposition into the bargain. Well, if Japan becomes powerful, should she not prove a menace to some of them? Here is the true yellow peril, though it is very different in its scope and character from what has been conceived by the croakers and casuists. We must grant that no human powers combined can long withstand the law of Nature, though it is easy enough by foresight and wise management to profit by it rather than get injured. I don't mean to say Japan cannot be crushed by the united efforts of the Powers. But I mean to say she is a Transvaal rather than a Poland; no, she is a dozen scores of Transvaals combined and consolidated into one indivisible whole. A hard job indeed to crush her. It would scarcely pay, under any ordinary circumstances; those only, who are blind and selfish like the Russians, would undertake it, whereas the blind and selfish are the last ones who ought to undertake such a hazardous task, as Teliuz, Mukden, and the battle of the Japan Sea amply testify. Besides, if Japan were to cease to exist as a strong power, the partition of China, followed by the anarchy of the East would ensue; that sacred balance of the European Powers would necessarily fluctuate; and the shock would be something terrible. "Nations shall rise against nations, and kingdoms against kingdoms." "For the indignation of the Lord is upon all nations and his fury upon all their armies." This is what we call "Killing the bull in trying to straighten his horns." Certainly, it is much worse than either the yellow peril of Japan or the white peril of Russia. In fact, it would be a downright act of Satan, for which we could find no better name than that of the "black peril."

In the face of these facts, what would be the wisest course for all to take? Should Japan be allowed to exist? There would be the black peril. In trying to give a satisfactory answer to this dilemma, we naturally solve another question lately much discussed, but not thoroughly made clear yet, namely, why did the little brown men grow big suddenly? Why should they beat the big Russians in every encounter? And the whole thing is explained by a single word, if one sufficiently understands its true meaning. Bushido. If it were not for this unwritten code, the living tenets, of our chivalry, we Japanese should have fallen far behind other oriental nations. When I was a little boy, I once asked my father what was the use of wearing swords. "Burei-mono wo kirisuteru tame" was his laconic answer. Unfortunately, I did not find his true meaning, before I had wounded several children and our big dunce of a servant maid, all of whom I took for burei-mono—as they chanced to offend me. In short, one of the great principles of Bushido is forbearance—forbearance especially towards the weak. On a similar ground, no true Bushi, or Samurai, would stab a fallen foe. On the contrary, there are many cases where stout warriors intentionally fell victims to the swords of youngsters. For one instance, I narrate here briefly how a distinguished knight died by the hand of a little boy. The story exemplifies Bushido in more than one of its phases.

One dark night, a samurai passing by the waterfall of Kiyomizu, was startled by the feeble murmur of a child, who was there doing penance, praying for the recovery of his mother and sister. He was also praying for the discovery of their enemy. "Brother dear, give me your hand," said his dying sister, when she saw him enter, shivering with cold, "I am low, O what will become of mother, when I am gone? Come nearer, dear, you know we must revenge our father's death on Yamanaka Samanosuke, the inveterate foe—Yamanaka Samonosuke! receive now my wrath and my dagger! Did I not fast, did I not pray to revenge his death upon you? But alas! Where is Yamanaka? If he were here, in this room, how could we know him? When father was killed by the cowardly villain, I a little girl, was away in the country as a 'satoko,' and you were just born; and mamma had been blind ever since. O how could we ever hope to find him out?" "I'll find him out for you," says a voice, and instantly the door is flung open and lo! there stands a knight tall and dignified! "Pardon me fair maiden," says the knight, "your brother's piety at the fall made me follow him unconsciously to this very door of yours. I have overheard you, which I never meant to do, of course. Now, I pledge my word of honor that I will fetch Yamanaka Samanosuke for you, and let your little boy revenge your father's death. I, however, believe Samanosuke was not a cowardly villain, since I assure you, he fought a fair fight with your father in broad daylight. The thing was, you know, simply an outcome of a young samurai's waywardness, and nothing more. But I say, your father's death shall be avenged." The girl fixed her large eyes upon him for a minute or two, and suddenly shut them forever! After her death, the knight helped them in every way. But the mother's illness grew worse and worse. At last, the doctor told them that she could not possibly live another day. "If that is the case," said the knight, "I must bring Yamanaka at once. So, madam, your may soon meet him." "How soon," said the dying woman. "Now," answers the knight. Then casting off his upper garment, he cries out: "Behold! Yamanaka is here, whom you seek to slay!" And he stands dressed in pure white—a death garment. Turning to the boy he says: "Master Kobayashi, stab me." "No," says the mother collecting all her remaining breath. "No, we cannot do that, because you have spared our lives which you have might have easily taken at any time, and thus put a stop to all future danger to yourself; besides your justice in—no; I mean—yes, well, your kindness and—" "Madam," interrupted the knight rather abruptly, "I should have been killed that very night of our first meeting, but I thought I would rather see your boy grow up and slay me in open combat, as I did his father. But now I can't wait for that. A samurai cannot lie, as you know. I did tell you that I would let your boy revenge his father's death." Then he made the unwilling hand of the little boy grasp the naked blade and drove it home into his own body. "O Heaven! witness," says he, "Kobayashi's son revenges his father's death!" And thus he died.

Perhaps, I presume too much if I say that Yamanaka's case shows many Bushido virtues such as compassion and sympathy, meekness and condescension, charity and affection, self-sacrifice rather than selfishness or the love of life; and honour or duty before everything. But all these virtues must, more or less, have influenced Yamanaka to throw himself down before a child to be killed. Out of this spirit of self-sacrifice, and the exalted sense of fame and honour, aided by our natural affection and respect towards others, comes one strong motive of ours which no earthly power can shake. Out of the meekness and the condescension comes our civilization! Or at least they have been its indispensable factors. Our hobby phrase, "Kareno cho wo tori waga tan wo ogoro" (To cure our defects with others' excellencies) is simply an outcome of the Bushido meekness and condescension. That strong motive just referred to, together with the salutary influence of our civilization both indirect products of Bushido, leavening our whole empire, and working through the veins of every man at the front makes the little brown men invincible even before the formidable armament of the mighty Tsar. Christianity and Bushido have often been compared. Some go so far as to call Christianity the new Bushido. In many points, they do agree no doubt. For example, a true Bushi is always ready to lay down his life for the sake of his friend. But our doctrine differs from the former in promising no recompense hereafter. In fact, a Bushi feels insulted to think that when he dies for others he might live and enjoy everlasting bliss. Good must be done for its own sake. It also differs from Christianity in making revenge a virtue. "One should never live under the same sky with the enemy of his master or his parent." Still he considers it honorable to return good for evil, provided that evil has been done to himself! But if the evil has been done to his parent, or master, or what he is bound to honour and respect, he would never forgive it—no, never! Then his sense of revenge becomes, to say the least, strong, fierce, and enduring. Thus such injuries would be resented to the very last degree by men, women, and even children, unless it were in some exceptional cases, such as that of Kobayashi's widow mentioned above, where so many things concurred to extenuate the offence, including the justice of the offender. Yes, there must be, at least, some strong plausible excuse on the part of the offender besides his other good qualities or kind offices, to let the injured desist from taking active vengeance. I dare say, that famous saying of the great Turk: "I have gold for a friend and sword for an enemy" shows in reality one phase of Bushido doctrine. It is, however, a great mistake to suppose that a true Bushi is quarrelsome, and fond of bloodshed. "The courage of wild tigers and leopards" becomes him not. Like Brutus of old he has the same dagger for his enemy as for himself. His sword should despatch "burei-mono" and "burei-mono" only, whether it be found in others or in himself. At least, he should under no circumstances draw his sword at random. He must forbear. But when his sword once leaves his scabbard, lo! it is the sword of a Michael that "smote and felled squadrons at once." Or it is a Harpe which jealous Gorgons face all but to be annihilated.

If the yellow peril or the ways of Japan's aggression must break out, in accordance with the laws of Nature, why who can help it? But when and where would it break out, if it breaks out at all? Certainly not on the weakest. Because Bushido enjoins us to forbear the most towards the weak enemy. Because Bushido calls it shame to trample down the meek and helpless. When Japan is forced to take up arms against anybody, she would naturally rise against a "burei-mono," or in other words, she would fight for power as well as for vengeance. Her first blow would fall upon those who, like the Russians, had despised and ill-treated her. Hideyoshi's expedition was never intended against the Koreans. His ambition could not stoop to make much of the narrow peninsula. His object was China. It was a war of aggression as well as of retaliation, revenge for the great Mogul Armada.

Since Bushido, a natural outcome of the Japanese characteristics, has nurtured and strengthened those very characteristics, as the honey which the bees make nurtures and strengthens them, all our deeds, whether sweet or otherwise, are seasoned by the old tenets. Since man is governed by emotion rather than by reason, the Japanese, Asiatics by birth, and samurai by education, cannot but move by feeling, especially sympathy, which is one of the vital elements Bushido, rather than by cool calculation and selfishness. Japan, like Russia, may surprise the world at any time, by the apparent ignorance of her own interest, though her motives and actions and the results thereof, compared with her enemy's, must be diametrically opposite. Nay, her sympathy may sometimes carry her too far and make her appear awkward and stupid. She would not send out a Baltic fleet to the Japan Sea though.

Those who let her alone need fear anything from her. Those who befriend her are sure to get her thanks, and also her reward, if such is in her power. Because if she never forgets injuries, neither does she ever forget kindnesses. She would commit seppuku and die seven times before she could be tempted to betray her friends and benefactors. But Japan is as yet young and premature in her powers, though she is old in age and experience. Like Ariosto's fairy, she may at times lose her usual glory, and appear as abnoxious as a crawling reptile. But woe to those who in her hour of humiliation shall try to crush her! And happy are those, who having dared to receive her in her degraded form shall at length be rewarded by her in the time of her beauty and glory.

Our recent success in the Sea of Japan renews the cry of the yellow peril elsewhere, while our school boys shout "banzai" with their lighted lanterns. I, a queer old fellow, quietly pen this queer letter to the editor of the Japan Mail, imposing upon his goodness and forbearance, and flattering myself that I might add one little lantern's light to their noisy procession, if it could not at all illuminate the darkness of those who understand us not.

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SPECIAL SERVICE.)

RUSSIA'S PEACE PLENIPOTENTIARY.

London, June 23.

M. Nelidoff, Russian Ambassador at Paris, has been definitely chosen as the Russian peace plenipotentiary.

GERMAN MAIL STEAMER STOPPED.

Reuter's correspondent at Sydney, New South Wales, states that the Russian auxiliary cruiser Dnieper stopped the German mail steamer Prins Sigismund off the north of Luzon on the 1st inst. and examined her papers. She then allowed her to proceed.

BRITISH MILITARY SCANDAL.

Yielding to the pressure of the Opposition, Mr. Balfour, the Prime Minister, announced that the Stores Commission will have statutory powers to compel evidence.

PRINCE AND PRINCESS ARISUGAWA.

Prince and Princess Arisugawa have arrived at Brussels.

THE FRANCO-GERMAN SITUATION.

M. Rouvier, the French Premier, has handed a Note to Prince von Radolin, German Ambassador to France, declaring that he is disposed to accept the proposed Morocco conference, but must first know the points to be considered thereat.

CANADA AND JAPAN.

Speaking in the Canadian House of Commons, the Minister of Agriculture announced that a dispatch was sent to the British Foreign Office on the 7th inst., asking that Canada might be included in the Anglo-Japanese Commercial Treaty of 1894.

The Tokyo Government has intimated its willingness to overlook Canada's previous refusal to participate in the Treaty.

ROUVIER'S NOTE.

London, June 24.

It is intimated in Berlin that Rouvier's note is not regarded as satisfactory.

THE TSAR AND THE ZEMSTVOISTS.

The Russian Government has issued a circular rebuking the newspapers for constructing the Tsar's speech to the Zemstvoists as promising the establishment of a national assembly on a constitutional basis. The Tsar simply meant convocation strictly under the fundamental laws of the Empire.

THE RUSSIAN PRIVATEERS.

Later.

Reuter's correspondent at St. Petersburg says the outcome of the British representations is that British warships will be despatched to convey orders to the Dnieper and Rion to cease interference with shipping and to return immediately.

SCANDINAVIAN COMPANY FOR FAR EASTERN TRADE.

It has been decided at Copenhagen to start a company to trade between Japan and Scandinavia.

THE FIGHTING AT LODZ.

London, June 25.

News from Lodz is to the effect that 130 were killed yesterday, and that hundreds were wounded. Forty-one died during the night, in the hospitals, which were overflowing. The fighting continued on the 24th, when 18 were shot and wounded up to noon. The dead bodies were hurriedly removed to the cemetery in the municipal dust-cart.

THE "ST. KILDA."

London, June 26.

The Russian cruiser Dnieper has arrived at Jibouti with the crew of the St. Kilda.

MOROCCO.

Although there is no indication of Morocco's decision in regard to the Borsaida matter other than a serious result, it is suggested that Morocco is bluffing in order to obtain a stoppage of the importation of arms.

NO ARMISTICE.

It is believed in Washington that there is no likelihood of an armistice before the plenipotentiaries meet in the middle of August.

THE EFFICIENCY OF THE FRENCH ARMY.

London, June 27.

Speaking at Versailles, M. Bertheaux, the French War Minister, while wishing to say nothing that could be taken as an allusion to the present difficulties, said that, thanks to the efforts of thirty-five years, "our fighting material is of the best, our equipment complete, and our officers can bear comparison with those of any nation."

THE "IKHONA" AFFAIR.

London, June 28.

Sir Charles Hardinge, the British Ambassador at St. Petersburg, has been instructed to bring the sinking of the British-India steamer Ikhona to the notice of Count Lamsdorff.

THE TIBETAN TREATY.

Mr. St. John Brodrick, Secretary for India, speaking in the House of Commons, said that negotiations were still proceeding relative to the adhesion of China to the Tibetan treaty.

PRINCE AND PRINCESS ARISUGAWA'S ENGLISH WELCOME.

Baron Hayashi, attended by the staff of the Japanese Legation, Admiral Neville and General Nicholson, met Prince and Princess Arisugawa at Dover. The Prince of Wales and the Duke of Connaught welcomed the distinguished visitors in London, full military honours being accorded. The party drove direct to Buckingham Palace, where they had tea with King Edward and Queen Alexandra. They afterwards drove to York House, which has been set apart for them, where their Majesties returned the visit.

Later.

The Standard, referring to the visit of Prince and Princess Arisugawa, says:—The visit will strengthen the regard we entertained for the Japanese even before they had given incontestable evidence of a progressive spirit and martial capacity. The preponderant opinion in Great Britain is in favour of turning a dormant contingent alliance into an active treaty for mutual defence. It is difficult to imagine any circumstances where, in the weakening of either Power would not directly injure the other.

Later.

Prince and Princess Arisugawa this morning drove out in semi-state, paying a series of calls upon the British Royalties. They were frequently recognized in the streets and loudly cheered. In the afternoon they attended the Japan Society's garden party at the Royal Botanical Society's Gardens, and in the evening dined with their Majesties at Buckingham Palace.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT AND THE CHINESE.

President Roosevelt has ordered the U.S. immigration authorities to show the utmost courtesy to Chinese.

THE PEACE NEGOTIATIONS.

Russia and Japan have informed President Roosevelt that the peace plenipotentiaries are to meet in the United States during the first ten days of August next.

MARTIAL LAW AT LODZ.

Martial law has been proclaimed at Lodz and order restored there. Hitherto 561 victims of the disturbances have been buried. Thirty-four battalions of troops have arrived in Warsaw.

Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman's vote of censure on the Government, mentioned in the telegram of the 22nd inst., has been rejected by 329 to 225 votes.

GERMANY'S REPLY TO FRANCE.

London, June 29.

Prince Radolin has presented Germany's reply to the French Note. It is understood that the reply insists on the necessity of a congress but that it does not consider that any previous discussion of its scope is necessary. The general tenor of the reply is so amicable that it appears to facilitate the purely formal concessions to which Germany seems to attach value, and it makes it difficult for France to refuse a conference, especially as her exceptional position on the Moroccan frontier is fully acknowledged, and the prohibition of the transit of munitions of war, which has already placed the Sultan's forces at Ujda in a most critical position, is withdrawn.

THE ARISUGAWAS IN LONDON.

The King conducted Princess Arisugawa to dinner and Prince Arisugawa conducted the Queen. There were no speeches. The guests included the Duke of Connaught, Lord Lansdowne, Lord Rosebery, Lord Spencer, Mr. Balfour, Viscount Hayashi, and the Secretary of the Japanese Legation. A concert followed.

The Duke of Connaught yesterday conferred the Grand Cross of the Bath on Prince Arisugawa.

(Received at the Military Head Quarters; p.m. 22nd.)

YINGGECHING QUARTER.

(Yinggeching is in the eastern section of the field between Hsingking and Kirin.—ED. J.M.)

On the 21st about 1,000 of the enemy, advancing from the direction of Wankautszkau, drove in our reconnoitering force at Hungtsaotien (about 2½ miles west of Wankautszkau) and pushed on reaching the vicinity of Hsiangyangchelin (about 10 miles south-west of Wankautszkau) at 4.30 p.m. Our troops then attacked, and driving the enemy back with heavy loss, engaged in pursuing him.

WEIYUANPAUMUN QUARTER.

Our force which occupied Yangmulintz on the 18th instant, having accomplished its task, returned. Thereafter a body of the enemy consisting of about 3 battalions of infantry, 4 sotnias of cavalry, 11 mountain and field guns, and 2 machine-guns advanced south to a point on the east of the Kirin highroad, and a smaller force to a point on the west. From 11.30 a.m. on the 21st these troops made their appearance on the hills from Chapengun to Likiatun (about 5 miles north-east of Nanchingtsz), while his artillery, taking up a position on the highland south-east of Lienhwachieh, opened fire against the hills north of Nanchingtsz at 1.15 p.m. Our troops in this quarter, after a fight lasting several hours, assumed the offensive, and completely repulsing the enemy at 7.45 p.m. occupied the highlands near Kuanshiling, thereafter continuing the pursuit.

In other quarters there was no change.

[From the above report it will be seen, as we conjectured at the time, that the forward movement made by the Japanese on the 19th instant was not the beginning of a general advance, but had for immediate purpose the shattering of the enemy's cavalry which was preparing for a flanking enterprise in the direction of Hsinmintun. It is possible, however, that the Japanese extreme left may have been thrown forward beyond Liaoyangwopeng, but we have no evidence of this in the official reports, and the Russian claim to have re-occupied Linoyangwopeng.—ED. J.M.]

(Received by the Military Head Quarter Staff; p.m. 24th.)

MANCHURIA.

With the intention of driving back the enemy who since the 21st had been pushing southward to Nanshan-chingtsz (about 18 miles east of Yinggeching), a body of our troops, from 4.30 p.m. on the 22nd attacked from the north-west the enemy who were occupying the highlands north-west of Nanshan-chingtsz. At 5.40 p.m. the enemy wavered and part of his force began to retreat, but as his troops on the highlands west of Nanshan-chingtsz held their ground and resisted obstinately, our troops made a vigorous charge at 6.10 p.m., captured the highlands, and then came into action with the enemy on the hill north of Nanshan-chingtsz. A force was sent to make a turning movement on the north-east of Tapingtientsz (3 kilo. north-west of Nanshan-chingtsz). It pursued and fired on the retreating enemy, inflicting heavy loss, and throwing him into great confusion. His infantry and cavalry at the time of their retreat raised the Red Cross Flag to avert our fire, but we continued our pursuit and drove them to the north in disorder. The enemy had some 3,000 cavalry and infantry and several guns in this action. He left over 50 dead upon the field so his casualties must have been at least 200. Our losses were two privates and one horse killed; one officer, 16 rank and file and 1 horse wounded. There is no change elsewhere.

From 6.30 a.m. on the 26th about 5 companies of the enemy with 6 guns advanced towards Changkientien, which is some 13 miles northwest of Changting, but were repulsed by our troops. They retired northward. Elsewhere only outpost skirmishes took place.

NORTHNRN KOREA.

On the 26th our troops occupied Suson, which is 11 miles north of Kyongsong.

(Issued by the Naval Department.)

THE NAVAL BATTLE.

(Telegrams that passed between Admiral Rojestvensky and the Tsar.)

After having been picked up by our ships Admiral Rojestvensky asked Admiral Togo to forward the following message for him to the Tsar, and Admiral Togo consented:—

To His Majesty the Emperor, Tsarkoe Selo.

At 1.30 p.m. on the 14th of the fifth month (27th May) between Tsushima and Japan we came into action with 12 Japanese vessels forming the main squadron and at least 12 forming the cruiser squadron.

At 2.30 p.m. the Surovoff was obliged to leave the fighting line.

At 2.30 p.m. a portion of my staff and I myself were transferred in an insensible condition to the destroyer Buini, on board of which were a part of the crew of the Ossliabya which had already sunk.

I handed over the command of the fleet to Nebogatoff. At midnight the Buini lost sight of the fleet, but on the following morning she fell in with the Dimitri Donskoi accompanied by two destroyers, and she transferred the Ossliabya survivors to these ships, while I was transferred to Byedoni, which went on with the Grasutsky.

I learned that on the evening of the 15th (28) the Byedoni had surrendered to two Japanese destroyers.

On the 17th (30th) the Byedoni was towed to Saseho.

On the 18th (31st) I learned that Nebogatoff was at Saseho.

(Signed)

ROJESTVENSKY.

His Majesty the Emperor of Russia sent the following message to Admiral Rojestvensky through the French Representative in Tokyo:—

9th of 6th Month.

To Admiral Rojestvensky care of the Minister of France, in Tokyo, M. Harmand.

"We profoundly approve the fact that you and the officers and men under your command, entering the battle for the sake of Russia and Us, disregarded your lives and faithfully discharged your duty. Though Providence was not pleased to grant you a glorious victory, your immortal valour will ever be a source of pride to the ancestral country. We trust that you will soon be restored to health, God will comfort you, (Signed) NICHOLAS.

Soon after reaching Japan, Rear-Admiral Nebogatoff asked Admiral Togo to convey the following telegram for him to the Tsar:—

To His Majesty the Emperor; St. Petersburg.

I have the honour to state that after the fight of the previous night, the battle-ships Nicholai I., Seniavine, Apraxin and Orel, and the cruiser Isumrud were steaming toward Vladivostok on the 15th of the 5th month (28th of April) when they were surrounded by 27 Japanese war-ships (exclusive of torpedo-craft). We were short of ammunition, our guns were injured and the Orel had been put out of action. We were therefore in a condition which rendered it wholly impossible for us to oppose the enemy's squadron. Since then it would have been useless to sacrifice the lives of 2,400 men and there was no way of escaping, our vessels, with the exception of the Isumrud which got off by means of her high speed, surrendered on condition that the officers be allowed to retain their swords and that the Japanese Government be asked to permit them to return home on parole. The Emperor of Japan has been graciously pleased to sanction these terms.

I respectfully beg for Your Imperial Majesty's instructions,

Killed—Captain Count Milboff.

6 petty officers and men.

Severely wounded—Captain Yung (Orel).

Wounded—Captain Smirnov (Nicholai I.).

Lieut.-Colonel Teodcheff.

Captain Kurosh (Army).

Captain Suikofsky (Navy).

22 petty officers and men.

The losses in the Orel are omitted.

(Signed) NEBOGATOFF.

On the 12th of June Admiral Rojestvensky again asked to have the following telegram transmitted to the Tsar:—

"Your Imperial Majesty—With profound respect we have received Your Majesty's gracious message. Some hours ago I was informed that the battle-ships Orel, Nicholai, Seniavine and Apraxin had surrendered to the enemy. Learning of this catastrophe I was quite bewildered. I feel that the whole responsibility rests on me. I pray for your Majesty's instructions to your servant in his grief.

(Signed) ROJESTVENSKY."

Up to the present there has been no reply to the above two telegrams. Rear-Admiral Nebogatoff and his officers also surrendered do not wish to return to Russia without their Emperor's instructions, but as it is mutually inconvenient that the Naval Authorities should retain charge of these officers, it has been decided to transfer them to the Military Prisoners' Quarters with the promise that they shall be allowed to return to Russia on parole should a message in that sense be received from the Emperor.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE)
RUSSIAN FAR EASTERN COMMITTEE.

The St. Petersburg Telegraphic Agency says: That for the purpose of investigating important administrative problems relating to the Far East, and in view of the necessity of examining and unifying the laws and regulations now in force in the Empire, with reference to perfecting legislative and high administrative duties, an Imperial Order has been issued, directing the opening of a Far Eastern special committee.

THE RUSSIANS IN KOREA.

Seoul, June 22.

The Russians are said to be steadily retiring in North-eastern Korea. They have 2,000 cavalry on both sides of the Tumen. North of the river their forces are apparently small. Reconnaissances are in progress.

RIOTS AT LODZ.

According to Wolff's telegraphic agency, on the 21st a threatening demonstration took place at Lodz. About 70,000 men were concerned. The streets were thronged; 25 red flags were raised and incendiary speeches delivered. The troops endeavouring to restrain the demonstration produced a collision, with the result that 18 were killed and 100 wounded.

CABINET CHANGES IN SPAIN.

There has been a change of Cabinet in Spain. The new President of Council is Senor Monteorioz (?) and the new Minister of Foreign Affairs Senor San Sezman (?).

ALEXIEFF.

Alexieff has been relieved of his position as Viceroy of the Far East and has been appointed a member of the National Council.

RUSSIAN AFFAIRS.

The Home Minister has suspended the newspaper Russ.

A Wolff's telegram says that the press censor has forbidden all the newspapers to publish any comment on the Tsar's answer to the representatives of the local assemblies. The reason of the veto is that whereas the answer did not contain one single word indicating any intention of changing the fundamental law of the State, certain journals interpreted it to mean that a national assembly would be convened on the lines of Western and constitutional countries.

News from Warsaw says that a serious disturbance is going on in Lodz. Barriers have been erected and fighting is in progress.

In Warsaw also constant collisions take place between the police and insurgents.

In Limfsk an uprising of the farmers has developed serious proportions.

The latest news from the Caucasus indicates the existence of indescribable anarchy. Many Armenians have been murdered. Russian journals say that in nearly every quarter strikes have taken place within the last ten days. This statement includes Moscow, Kiev, Kharkoff, Lodz, Wilna, Sevastopol, Odessa, Voroneff, and elsewhere. In the majority of cases the strikes are continuing.

Very many trades are concerned: for example ship-engineers, fishermen, carpenters, postmen, butchers, motor-men, boatmen, factory hands and farmers.

Collisions with the military are taking place and casualties occur.

At Kharkoff the soldiers utterly refused to fire upon the farmers and actually took part with them. There is no doubt that this also the case at several other places.

The direct causes of complaint are: lowness of wages, long hours of work, and heavy taxes. The heavy taxes, combined with the difficulty of obtaining work have produced found distress.

Matters are worse in the Caucasus. Travellers returning thence say that a state of anarchy practically exists. There is no Government order and the troops do not obey instructions. The law courts cannot enforce their decisions. The people are endeavouring to establish local order in Gori, where there is a small republic.

PRINCE ARISUGAWA.

Prince and Princess Arisugawa arrived at Brussels on the 22nd. The King went to the station to meet them. A state coach was provided. The Palace being now under repair their Imperial Highnesses proceeded to a hotel. They were received immediately in audience, and on the evening of the 25th a banquet was given to them in the Palace.

The greatest attention was shown to them. State cars were placed at their disposal. Their Imperial Highnesses left for England on the 26th, and arrived in London at 5 p.m. that day.

THE RIOTS IN POLAND.

Wolff's Agent, referring to the disturbance in Lodz says:—"Rioting commenced at 20 places in the town. At all these points numbers of barricades were erected, and the troops charged, assisted by the engineers. Some 60,000 armed workmen fought against 4 regiments of infantry and 2 regiments of Cossacks and Dragoons. Bombs were thrown everywhere and they caused heavy losses to the troops. It is said that the riots have already caused over 2,000 casualties. To re-inforce the garrison a Division of infantry and one of cavalry have reached Lodz.

SAKHAROFF RESIGNS.

The Novoe Vremya says that General Sakharoff, Minister of War, has resigned and will be succeeded by General Redigar.

LINEVITCH'S REPORTS.

A report from General Linevitch dated the 27th says:—

"On the 24th instant the enemy's advanced post confronting our southern fighting line near the railway, resumed the offensive against our cavalry outpost, and receiving re-inforcements of infantry and cavalry, drove in our outpost, which was obliged to retreat in a northerly direction." [Japanese official reports do not make any reference to this affair on the 24th.—Ed. J.M.]

General Linevitch's report continues:—

"On the 24th instant our cavalry outpost in the Hailungching region at Chinho was driven in by the enemy. We sent forward some of our best troops to re-inforce the outpost, but they were ambushed by the enemy's artillery at Sanchatao. Japanese infantry was seen on the hills also."

[Concerning this affair, too, the Japanese official reports are silent. It must be admitted that General Linevitch is remarkably outspoken, or else that the Russian Government is adopting a new rule of publicity.—Ed. J.M.]

The report continues:—

"On the 22nd the enemy resumed the offensive, and several companies of cavalry attacked our advanced guard, which retired after a fight."

[This also is not mentioned by the Japanese. They merely tell of the occupation of Kyongsong on the 21st and that of Susong on the 26th.—Ed. J.M.]

THE PEACE NEGOTIATIONS.

Washington, June 26.

President Roosevelt to-day transmitted to the Japanese Government the names of the Russian Plenipotentiaries. Mr. Nelidoff, Russian Ambassador in Paris, is the chief. The meeting of the conference will take place during the first 10 days in August.

San Francisco, June 26.

President Roosevelt has proposed that the meeting of the Peace Plenipotentiaries shall take place at Washington in the beginning of August. It is certain that the two countries concerned will agree. The Russian Plenipotentiaries have been appointed and President Roosevelt has already been informed of the names of the Japanese Plenipotentiaries. The President will not make any proposal for an armistice.

(RECEIVED BY THE "HOCHI SHIMBUN.")

PEACE NEGOTIATIONS.

Washington, June 29.

The action of President Roosevelt has temporarily interrupted the progress of the peace negotiations.

It is believed that the first meeting of the plenipotentiaries will be of a tentative character. The Japanese plenipotentiaries will arrive in Washington on August 21st. Russia has agreed that the first meeting shall be in the early part of August.

China has asked to be represented on the conference.

FRANCE AND THE ANGLO-JAPANESE ALLIANCE.

France wishes to join the Anglo-Japanese Alliance. She will withdraw her Asiatic squadron.

Skin-Tortured Babies AND TIRED MOTHERS Find Comfort in Cuticura

INSTANT RELIEF and refreshing sleep for Skin-tortured Babies and rest for Tired Mothers in warm baths with CUTICURA SOAP, and gentle anointings with CUTICURA OINTMENT, the great skin cure and purest of emollients, to be followed in severe cases by mild doses of CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS, to cool and cleanse the blood. This is the purest, sweetest, most speedy, permanent, and economical treatment for torturing, disfiguring, itching, burning, bleeding, scaly, crusted, and pimply humours, eczemas, rashes, irritations, and itchings, with loss of hair, of infants and children, yet compounded.

MILLIONS USE CUTICURA SOAP

Assisted by CUTICURA OINTMENT, for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and soothing red, rough, and sore hands, for baby rashes, itchings, and chafings, in the form of baths for annoying irritations and inflammations, or too free or offensive perspiration, in the form of washes for ulcerative weaknesses, and for many sanative, antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves to women, especially mothers, and for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. No other medicated soap ever compounded is to be compared with it for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, scalp, hair, and hands. No other foreign or domestic toilet soap, however expensive, is to be compared with it for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. Thus it combines in ONE SOAP at ONE PRICE, the BEST skin and complexion soap, and the BEST toilet and BEST baby soap in the world.

CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS (Chocolate Coated) are a new, tasteless, odorless, economical substitute for the celebrated Liquid CUTICURA RESOLVENT, as well as for all other blood purifiers and humour cures. Put up in screw-cap pocket vials, containing 60 doses.

CUTICURA REMEDIES are sold throughout the world. Australia Depot: R. TORRES & Co., Sydney. British Depot: F. B. Charterhouse Sq., London. French Depot: J. B. de la Paix, Paris. Forras Dado and Co., Genoa, Italy. Boston, U. S. A.

MR. C. A. GRISCOM, father of the U. S. Minister, has left Tokyo for western cities. He will return home via Manila.

A SEVERE shock of earthquake was felt at 9 a.m. on July 1st at Maidzuru, Otsu, Miyazaki and other western points.

NAZAROFF, a Russian soldier in the Fukuoka prison, has applied to the Japanese government for naturalization papers.

K. ASHIDA, a policeman of the Shimonoseki station, has absconded with two thousand yen belonging to the office.

THE King of Korea has decorated Mr. Y. Mitsui, President of the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha, with the Third Class of Merit.

MR. STEVENS, adviser to the Korean Government arrived at Moji on June 29th by the Ohio. He left by train for Tokyo. A telegram to the Kokumin says that he will proceed to Washington on important business.

THE Asahi was fined yen 70 on June 29th in the Tokyo District Court in accordance with Art. 31 and 32 of the Press Regulations.

A CASE of small-pox is reported among the passengers on board the Ohio which arrived at Moji on June 29th from Chemulpo.

THE shareholders of the Tokyo Bay Steamship Co. held a meeting on June 29th and decided to increase their capital by yen 400,000.

MR. MIYAOKA, Minister Resident, who was at The Hague for the horse-tax affair, arrived in Yokohama by the China via America.

LIEUT.-COL. S. ITO, Aide-de-Camp to the Emperor, has been appointed Secretary of the Military Council in addition to his present duties.

DR. MORRISON, the Peking correspondent of The Times, is reported by Tokyo papers to have left Peking on July 1st for Washington via Yokohama.

PRINCE and Princess Arisugawa are expected to leave London on July 7th or 8th for New York, and will arrive in Yokohama on August 14th or 15th.

DR. KOCHIBE has been employed by the Korean Government as adviser for mining affairs, and Mr. Tamura and four others have also been employed as assistants.

THE Osaka Shosen Kaisha's steamer Taichi Maru was launched on June 30th from the Sakurajima Shipbuilding Yard belonging to the Osaka Iron Foundry.

THE Ministers of State held a conference on the afternoon of June 29th at the official residence of the Premier. Tokyo journals say that they discussed financial affairs.

EIGHTY-FOUR cases containing silver bullion valued at yen 363,615 were brought on July 3rd from Shanghai to Nagasaki. The bullion was destined for the Osaka Mint.

MR. ODAGIRI, Japanese Consul-General at Shanghai, arrived on July 4th at Shimonoseki on official business. He left for Tokyo by train. On the same day, Major-General Usakawa left Kobe for China.

THE construction of an electric railway between Yokohama Railway station and Nishino-hashi—the bridge at the corner of No. 161 Yamashita-cho—being completed, traffic opened on July 7th.

THE income of the Hokkaido Colliery and Railway Co. for the first half year is estimated at yen 450,000. The interim dividend is believed to be at the rate of 6 per cent (12 per cent per annum).

T. TSUCHIYA and four other directors of the Tsukama Bank, Niinura near Matsumoto, were arrested on July 5th and their dwellings were searched. The charge against them is not yet reported.

T. KANEHARA, an employee of the Matsushita Shipping and Landing Agency, has been arrested by the Isezaki-cho police and removed to the Yokohama District Court. He is reported by the police to have stolen yen 20 from Messrs Illies and Co., yen 35 from the China and Japan Trading Co. and others amounts from other foreign and Japanese firms by means of bills and stamps.

GENERAL OGAWA has returned to Osaka from Murodzuka where he was under treatment in consequence of wounds sustained at Port Arthur. He is reported by Japanese papers to have now quite recovered.

A TELEGRAM from Nemuro, Hokkaido, reports that the steamer Suminoe Maru (1,425 tons) has gone ashore off Kunishiri, Chishima (Kurile islands). The steamer Gyosei Maru was sent to the scene on June 29th.

THE owners of the British steamers Apollo and Harberton and the American steamer Tacoma, which have been confiscated by the Yokosuka Prize Court, lodged appeals on July 1st in the Supreme Prize Court, Tokyo.

WE learn that Fleet Surgeon Moon R.N., and Mrs. L. A. Macpherson have received from the Japan Red Cross Society, medals of special membership in recognition of their services in connection with the bandage rolling work.

EARLY on the morning of July and, fire occurred at Hongo, Tokyo, destroying three houses. About the same time, another fire broke out at Mukojima, Honjo, burning down one house. The cause of both was negligence.

ADMIRAL MISHU, who sustained injury to his left eye in the last naval battle and who is now under treatment in the hospital of the College of Medicine in Tokyo, is reported to have almost recovered. He will leave the hospital about July 15th.

A NAGASAKI telegram reports that the steamer Minnesota, while emerging from the Mitsu Bishi dock, at 8 a.m. on July 3rd, collided with large lighter containing seventy coolies. The boat was sunk, two men were drowned and three are missing.

AN official report says that on July 1st, nine cases of plague and on the following day, five cases, appeared in Fomosa. Since the first appearance in January up to the present, the cases number 2,353, and of them 2,057 have proved fatal.

THE steamer Bocho Maru went ashore at 1 p.m. on June 16th off Sonchling, Korea, on her way from Wonsan. The crew—30 in all—were saved. This ship left Shimonoseki on June 22nd for Korean ports. The Hochi adds that the ship subsequently sunk.

UNDER the instructions of Princess Kan-in, President of the Ladies' Patriotic Society, Prince Iwakura and Mesdames Okumura, Tashiro, Nonaka, and Toguchi, left Tokyo on June 29th for the front to make enquiries into the health of the officers and men.

OWING to heavy rain on the night of July 4th, inundations took place in the district of Nagaoka, Niigata prefecture, and traffic on the Hoku-yetsu Railway was suspended. A telegram reports that on the same night, a strong wind was experienced in the Soya Strait.

It is reported by a Shimonoseki telegram that on the night of June 28th, a junk was attacked by pirates in the neighbourhood of Hiko island, and one of the occupants of the boat was killed and several articles were taken away. One of the culprits was subsequently arrested by the harbour police.

MANCHURIA.

Friday, June 30.

A perplexing element in the official reports which reach Tokyo from time to time is that the Japanese, in the west of the field at all events, do not necessarily retain positions occupied by them in the sequel of attacks. We hear of them taking such and such a place on a certain day, and presently we hear of the enemy making an essay which would not have been possible had the Japanese retained their previously reported position. This was notably the case with Liaoyangwopeng which was taken by the Japanese on the 16th of June for the purpose of breaking up Mischienko's cavalry camp, whereas on the 26th news came that the Russians, with 5 companies of infantry and some guns, had made an attack at Chiangkiatien, which they could not have done had Liaoyangwopeng remained in Japanese hands. There have been other similar instances, and what they indicate is that the Japanese are not making any general advance in this part of the field, and that although in consideration of the enemy's movements they sometimes sally from their lines and drive in the Russian outposts or otherwise harass the enemy, they do not necessarily retain the positions thus won unless some special advantage attaches to doing so. In connexion with this we may quote an officer who is cited by the Kokumin as having stated, on his recent return from the front, that although preliminaries to an advance may be said to be in progress and although the opportunities furnished by abortive enterprises on the part of the Russians are taken advantage of; there is nothing in the nature of a general advance nor there will be until a change of situation takes place. The main positions of the two armies are still far apart, although their advanced lines are as close as 2,000 metres in some places.

We may here mention that in recently pointing out the desirability of quickly dispelling such erroneous impressions as that conveyed by a telegram appearing in a London journal to the effect that the Japanese were continuing their victorious advance and that the Russians were completely outflanked, our object was to avert a repetition of the Liaoyang experience. Prior to the battle of Liaoyang correspondents of European and American journals drew such graphic pictures of a great Japanese movement which was to result in the converging of three armies on the doomed Russians, that the world looked for nothing less than the annihilation of Kuropatkin, and thus the result of the battle, though signal enough, proved profoundly disappointing when viewed by the imaginary standard. It is certainly a part of every newspaper's business to prevent a repetition of such incidents, and for that reason we pointed out the error of the London telegram.

Saturday, July 1.

A telegram to the Hochi Shimbun from the front says that on the 22nd the Japanese central army sent a reconnaissance to a point 4 miles north-west of Changtu, but beyond the capture of 15 prisoners, no incident occurred. The spirits of the Russians are said to be very low. Indeed the wonder is that they have any spirits at all. Nothing speaks more eloquently for their courage and the endurance than their continued willingness to fight after 17 months of uniform ill-success.

The Asahi's telegraphic correspondence relates that, according to the prisoners most recently captured, Linevitch is greatly troubled by his inability to locate the position of the main Japanese force. He has twice visited Supinglich for the purpose of investigation, but the Japanese have proved too clever for him. The repeated enterprises organized with small bodies of Russian infantry and cavalry, which are reported with such frequency as to be quite a remarkable feature of the situation, reflect in reality the perplexed condition of the Russian commander-in-chief's mind. He is perpetually endeavouring to find his bearings by these means, and although the losses suffered by his troops in such reconnaissances must aggregate a very considerable number, he still sees no other resource.

Sunday, July 2.

The Fiji Shimpō urges that the armies in Manchuria should make a signal effort. Linevitch is not yet humbled. From the day that he relieved Kuropatkin big things began to be said of what he would accomplish, though in truth he had been fighting from the first against the Japanese and should have known perfectly what kind of stuff they are made of. The battle of Liaoyang was a signal victory for the Japanese, yet many onlookers took the perverted view that the main credit belonged to Kuropatkin because he managed to escape annihilation. There is some danger of a repetition of that farce. Linevitch has not been defeated signally, and we shall presently hear that he has achieved success by the negative virtue of shunning battle and thus escaping disaster. The Fiji advocates striking a crushing blow. At present the laurels for thoroughness are with the Navy. One signal success over Linevitch would greatly enlighten the situation.

It is not to be wondered at that some impatience should be felt at the apparent inaction of the past 3½ months, but we would point out two things. The first is that the inaction is on the side of the Russians just as much as on that of the Japanese—if indeed there has been any inaction on either side; and the second is that in every instance when the Japanese armies have presented the appearance of slowness throughout the course of this war, they have subsequently been found to have been maturing some large scheme of operations. As between the two forces, the duty of striking a blow certainly devolves upon the Russians, who have been driven from point to point and are now almost excluded from Manchuria. Linevitch must know well that victory never can be won by purely defensive tactics. On the other hand the Japanese have demonstrated from first to last that they fully understand the advantages of the offensive. The main question is, what facilities does the country offer for the movements of great armies. We have heard the apparent tediousness of this campaign compared with the comparative celerity of the German operations 35 years ago. But a moment's thought shows that no intelligent comparison is possible. The Germans moved constantly through a region intersected by the finest roads in the world—for France has the finest roads—as well as by numerous railways, whereas in Manchuria, especially in the part now forming the scene of operations, roads fit for military purposes can scarcely be said to exist at all; there is only one railway, and the topography is of the most difficult character. We suspect that both the belligerents are not a little embarrassed by this state of affairs. But what may be accepted with absolute confidence is that the Japanese are not idle.

Thursday, July 6.

A Russian telegram from Harbin published in Shanghai announces a combat on the 1st instant near Liaoyangwopien, the result of which was the annihilation of a Japanese battalion. This telegram ends by saying that the Russians returned at night-fall to their original position. The affair is called a reconnaissance in force. Japanese official reports give a very different account of this affair. They describe how, on the 1st, some 1,500 Russian cavalry, including an adixture of mounted infantry and accompanied by 18 guns, advanced to a point on the Changtu road and made an attack which ended in their complete repulse at 2 a.m. the following morning, the Russians losing over 400 men, the Japanese 90. Both accounts agree as to locality and date, and both lay stress on the presence of a considerable force of artillery on the Russian side. But there all resemblance ceases. The Russians claim to have won a complete victory, annihilating a battalion of Japanese and withdrawing leisurely at sunset. The Japanese say that the fight lasted until 2 a.m. on the 2nd, when the Russians were driven back with a loss of over 400 and having inflicted only 90 casualties. Which story is the more credible? We can not say that the Japanese have invariably been quite frank about their losses, since they have not yet published any official statement of the exact casualties at Port Arthur or in the Battle of Mukden. But we can say that they have never yet exaggerated or wilfully practised deception with regard to any event which they undertook to report officially. Their estimates of Russian losses have invariably been conservative, and their statements of their own—official statements—invariably full. If they really lost a battalion in their fight at Shihshihku, that is to say, lost about a thousand men, whereas they pretend to have lost only 90, the record is completely upset, and we must cease hereafter to place the smallest reliance on their official reports. There will be no hesitation in determining whether that is necessary. The public have not made the acquaintance of Ogorodinkoff's and Pflugs for nothing.

The Asahi Shimbun, without indicating the source of its authority, describes the defensive works which the Russians are constructing on the left bank of the Tumen and says that they have a force of twenty thousand men of all arms posted in that region. On the right bank there are said to be fully ten thousand, so that the whole force available for disputing the passage of the river and resisting any irruption into Russian territory is not less than thirty thousand. This is much the highest estimate hitherto given, and fuller information is needed before crediting it. We are precluded from discussing the strength of the Japanese battalions in north-eastern Korea, but if the Russians have thirty thousand men concentrated there, the campaign in this part of the field assumes quite considerable dimensions.

The Fiji Shimpō gives some details as to distances and roads. Speaking broadly there are two roads from Susong to the Tumen. One strikes inland, and after traversing a distance of 145 miles, strikes the river at Onsung. The other travels along the coast and reaches the Tumen at Chusanpo, 65 miles from Susong. These two points, Chosanpo and Onsung, are joined by a road running along the right bank of the river. The inland road has been regarded from time immemorial as a route of great importance, and there are six points along it which constitute the frontier fortresses of Korea. The Tumen has a length of 225 miles, being thus 125 miles shorter than the Yalu, which also exceeds it in width and depth. There is an island at the mouth of the river, and steamers of 100 tons can navigate to a distance of 25 miles up-stream.

THE TODO-SHIMA AFFAIR.

Tuesday, July 4.

This affair begins to assume a new complexion. Twelve Japanese fishermen have arrived at Wakanai on the southern coast of the Soya Strait. Their story quite contradicts the report circulated on the 2nd instant in Tokyo. They say that a number of Russian soldiers, or marines, did actually attack the Japanese on the island of Todo (Moneron), but were repulsed with a loss of six who were killed by the explosion of a hand-grenade, with which instruments the Japanese are well provided. On the side of the islanders the casualties were one man killed. It appears that the Japanese community on Todo-shima aggregate several hundreds—the number is variously stated—and that they went there originally on or immediately before the outbreak of war, under the leadership of a Mr. Shida, who had long been engaged in fishing enterprise. They have colonized the island, and they doubtless regard themselves as a section of the Japanese army. Under these circumstances the attempt of the Russians to expel them was legitimate.

Wednesday, July 5.

It is now stated that the trouble at Todo Island on the 28th of May was not due to a deliberate attack by Russian soldiers. A party of Russians were on their way from Notoro to Korsakoff, having been to the former place to obtain provisions. They were driven out of their course by bad weather and reached Todo-shima, where they attempted to obtain provisions by forced requisition. This led to a fracas, in which 6 of the Russians were killed and one Japanese. The island is a very small place, only some 8 miles in circumference. But it has a fine harbour, Komai Bay, on the east coast, and abounds in sea-lions. Indeed it derives its name (todo) from the large numbers of this animal that frequent it. The statement that the Japanese inhabitants proceeded thither on the outbreak of war seems to be incorrect. They had been long residing there, though the Russian ownership of the island is not disputed.

Since the above was in type news has been received that 27 of the Japanese fishermen were killed or wounded in the encounter and 17 of the Russian soldiers. All these accounts are conflicting and it is difficult to know the truth.

GENERAL SAKHAROFF AND DUKE ALEXIS.

A telegram from San Francisco to the Kokumin Shinbun says that the resignation of General Sakharoff from the Ministry of War and that of Duke Alexis from the Navy indicate a defeat of the war party and an emphatic improvement of the peace prospects. There prevailed in some quarters of Europe an impression, when the news of the conference was first published, that Russia had no intention whatever of making peace, and that she would send plenipotentiaries to Washington merely for the purpose of ascertaining Japan's demands in order to use them as a weapon for inciting the nation to continue the war. That is one of the suspicions which would immediately present itself to the class of publicists who love to see much farther below the surface than any one else. It is not easy to conceive Russia deliberately engaging in such round-about and useless trickery. She already possesses a quite sufficiently clear conception of the terms Japan will formulate. It is not necessary for her to flout America and to behave as a colossal farceur merely to obtain over the conference-table knowledge which she had long ago.

The Nichi Nichi Shinbun insists on the necessity of obtaining an indemnity. It notes that before the war the national debt amounted to only 12 yen per head of the population whereas now it reaches 31 yen, and while the taxes used to be only 5.10 yen per head, they are now 8.30 yen. There should be no idea whatever of imposing a fine on Russia or attempting to cripple her financially. But she ought certainly to indemnify the Japanese for the heavy expenses they have incurred. In our contemporary's opinion that is the cardinal point to be discussed at the conference.

The Kokumin Shinbun admits that M. Muraviev is of the war party, but it thinks that, on the whole, the appointment of a man with such acknowledged proclivities is rather a hopeful sign, inasmuch as it amounts to a covert admission that the war party wants peace. At any rate our contemporary reminds its readers that a peace conference now-a-days is a comparatively simple affair. There is very little room for an exercise of diplomacy. Japan will merely state her terms and it will be for Russia to take them or leave them. We (Japan Mail) do not altogether share our contemporary's view as to that.

THE DOINGS OF THE "TEREK."

Saturday, July 1.

This Russian commerce-destroyer continues her depredations. There is now news that on the 22nd instant she sank the steamer Princesse Marie somewhere in the neighbourhood of Saigon. This steamer is apparently a Danish boat.

Another report says that the Terek is at Batavia, where she is disarming. Of course the outcome of these doings will merely be a heavy bill of damages for Russia.

Sunday, July 2.

The Princesse Marie was consigned to Messrs. Samuel Samuel and Company Yokohama. She was a Danish vessel of 5,416 tons, bound for this country, on her second voyage from Copenhagen. Her cargo did not include any contraband. It consisted of iron bars, paper and miscellaneous goods, and many Yokohama firms are reported to be interested. But no definite news of the vessel's destruction has yet been received.

Monday, July 3.

The Dutch Authorities at Batavia seem to have made short work of the Terek. They refused to allow her to employ coolies, and they declined to let her remain long enough to fill her bunkers for a voyage to Madagascar. Nothing remained, therefore, except disarming and internment. The Dnieper and the Rion remain still at large, however, and may commit farther piratical depredations before their career is effectually checked. The doings of these three ships constitute the strangest page in the war's history. Conjecture exhausts itself in vain attempts to fathom the object of their law breaking. They can not have acted with the authority of the Russian Government. In the face of the explicit and categorical promise given by St. Petersburg after the Dogger-Bank affair, to direct these cruisers to sink British merchantmen without bringing them before a prize court would be an open challenge to England. On the other hand, the captains of the cruisers must have had some one's orders. Obviously Rojestvensky's. Thus there seems to unfold itself a deliberate programme for inviting international complications, a programme which began at Madagascar, was continued at Kamranli and Honkohe and concluded, if it be yet concluded, when the Princess Marie was sunk off Saigon.

PRINCE ARISUGAWA.

The Japanese press has shown much satisfaction at the very cordial nature of the treatment accorded to Prince Arisugawa on his visit to England. The Kokumin Shinbun confines itself to expressing gratification, and the Nichi Nichi Shinbun supplements its expressions of recognition by recalling the facts that Prince Arisugawa received his naval education in England and that he represented Japan at the Queen's Jubilee. But the Fiji Shimpō seizes the occasion to emphasise its habitual argument in favour of not merely renewing the alliance but also of extending it so as to render it a genuine instrument for preserving peace. Our contemporary believes that the Governments and peoples of both countries are in favour of such extension and it thinks that Prince Arisugawa's visit and the reception given to him must tend to deepen the feeling on each side.

A telegram to the Nichi Nichi Shinbun relates that at the Mansion House banquet given in his honour Prince Arisugawa said that the alliance between England and Japan was not merely one of covenant: it was also one of sentiment. Viscount Hayashi, in his speech, declared that the two nations were drawing closer together day by day.

The Asahi Shinbun, commenting on the splendid receptions given to Prince Arisugawa in England and on the satisfaction of the Japanese nation, adds its voice to that of the Fiji in declaring that the two peoples have proclaimed themselves in favour of so extending the alliance that it shall be a complete guarantee of peace. Our contemporary believes that the Prince's visit will certainly have that result.

MAJOR-GENERAL REIS.

The Fiji Shimpō notices that Major-General Victor Reis has now been appointed a member of the General Staff in St. Petersburg. This officer was one of the garrison at Port Arthur, and was released on taking oath not to serve against Japan throughout the course of the war. It may be pretexted that as a member of the General Staff in St. Petersburg he is not actually serving against Japan. But this would be a mere subterfuge. The General Staff has everything in the world to do with the conduct of the Manchurian campaign. If such an appointment has been made, it is a shameless violation of that which every officer prizes above his life and which every Government should assist him to preserve, his parole. The Fiji is confident as to the identity. We can not believe it. There is an old Chinese proverb, "desperation is disorderly," but it really seems incredible that the Russian Government should have deliberately taken such a step.

THE PEACE PLENIPOTENTIARIES.

On Monday's Official Gazette announced the appointment of Baron Komura and Mr. Takahira to be the Japanese Peace Plenipotentiaries, and announced also that Count Katsura will discharge the duties of Minister of State for Foreign Affairs during Baron Komura's absence.

Those that will attend Baron Komura are: Mr. Yamaza, Chief of the Political Bureau in the Foreign Office. Mr. Sato, Minister unattached. Mr. Adachi, Secretary of Legation in Paris. Mr. Honda, Private Secretary. Mr. Konishi, Assistant Diplomatic Official. Mr. Ichiji, Assistant Secretary. Mr. H. W. Denison, Foreign Adviser. Colonel Tachibana, Military Adviser. Captain Takeshita, Naval Adviser.

The appointment of M. Muraviev in place of M. Nelidoff as Russia's principal peace plenipotentiary is now certain. He will be associated with Baron Rosen, the Russian Representative in Washington. Baron Rosen's presence in the conference will be welcomed by Japan and by all lovers of peace. That he was associated intimately with negotiations which ended in this cruel war may have been partly owing to his failure to appreciate the quality of Japan's purpose and her potentialities, but certainly was not due to any desire of his own for war. Everything depends, however, on the mood of the Russian Government. If St. Petersburg has not yet reconciled itself to accept defeat, the personality of the plenipotentiaries makes little matter.

M. Muraviev, who has now been appointed to represent Russia at the Peace Conference, is a nephew of the celebrated Muraviev, who pushed his country's sway down the valley of the Amur in the middle of the 19th century, carried it to the shores of the Pacific and may be said to have made Russia's Far-Eastern Empire. The great commander's statue stands to-day in Khabarovsk, and it may be taken for granted that the tradition of his achievements is dear to his family. His nephew, who now goes to Washington, has had a purely legal career. He has distinguished himself greatly as a juriconsult and he became Minister of Justice in 1894, his labours and publications having then stamped him as a legal luminary. But he has never shown himself to be possessed of the diplomatic qualifications needed for the discharge of the duties now entrusted to him. He may possess these qualifications, however. As to that his Imperial master must have had some idea when he recently sent Muraviev to be ambassador at Rome. Apart from the fact that Muraviev's anti-Japanese abuse of his judicial position last year must render him anything but a persona grata to Japan, his family connexions certainly do not indicate him as specially qualified to conduct peace negotiations, which, if they are to be successful, must involve some sacrifice of the goods and chattels won for Russia by Muraviev's renowned uncle. His appointment is not a graceful act on Russia's part, to say the least. Grace, however, is the last quality she has taught the world to expect from her.

Russia, if telegrams from Peking may be credited, has not lost anything of her often-displayed diplomatic wiliness. She is making it appear that the appointment of M. Pokotiloff to assist at the peace conference is for the purpose of safe-guarding China's interests. This, of course, is not stated in so many words. The proposition takes the form that since there are many points which closely affect China's vital interests, and since she herself is not to be directly represented at the conference, therefore it is manifestly well that among the Russian plenipotentiaries there should be one who, to an intimate knowledge of Chinese affairs, adds appreciation, obtained at first hand, of the wishes of Chinese statesmen. The Peking Government must be profoundly grateful for Russia's consideration in this matter. It contrasts rather strangely, one must confess, with the previous attitude of the Great Northern Power when the absorption of Manchuria into the Muscovite empire was among the practical possibilities of the time. M. Pokotiloff appears to be acting his part with commendable adroitness. He is visiting the leading officials in the Chinese capital, having audiences at the Palace, and holding secret conferences with prominent statesmen. Perhaps it is all in the routine of ordinary legation duties.

Na Tung, Prince Ching and Wu Tingfang are said to be strongly in favour of sending a Chinese representative to the conference but Viceroy Yuan persists in his opposition. Na Tung himself is indicated as the delegate, were such participation possible, which it certainly is not.

Baron Komura had a special audience of His Majesty the Emperor on the 6th inst., and received the following Imperial address to the Peace Plenipotentiaries of Japan:—

The President of the United States, grieved to find that the war between Japan and Russia has not yet been brought to a close after the lapse of more than a year, and impressed with the urgent need, in the interests of peace and humanity, of terminating the conflict, has suggested to the two Governments that they should appoint plenipotentiaries and cause them to meet together and negotiate for peace. It was contrary to Our expectation that we were compelled to resort to arms in spite of Our constant and abiding wish for peace. If, in consequence of the conciliatory spirit of Our opponent, the hostilities could be brought to an end, nothing would be more satisfactory than such consummation. Accordingly we have at once accepted the suggestion of the President of the United States, and we hereby charge you with the mission of negotiating and concluding peace. You should devote yourselves with all your power to the discharge of your mission and make every effort to secure the re-establishment of peace on a durable basis.

SAGHALIEN.

The Fiji Shimpō in an article which some will regard as of a rather chicken-counting character, discusses the procedure that ought to be adopted by the Japanese when they take, or occupy, Saghalien. There is now a population of 33,200 on the big island—bigger than Kyushu and Shikoku rolled into one—and of these 29,000 are Russians. Not ordinary Russians, however. The greater part of them are convicts. A worse or more ungovernable set of men it would be hard to find. Many of them are said to be enrolled as volunteers, and to be divided into small forces of from 200 to 300 each, scattered about at the important places along the coast. The garrison of regulars does not exceed from three to six thousand, so that no great military difficulty is likely to be encountered. The problem will be the subsequent administration of an island with such a population. Our contemporary's view is that a strong hand should be shown from the outset, and that these turbulent spirits should be terrorized into docility. That is certainly one course, but it has the great disadvantage that it would expose Japanese administration to severe and probably unjust criticism. The Japanese can not yet afford to treat themselves to the luxury of a free hand. What a European State would do in given conditions without shocking public opinion, may be quite impermissible for the Japanese. Surely the easier and simpler plan would be to deport all these convicts and ticket-of-leave men to Russia? Japan is not bound by any principle of justice or expediency to take over the dregs of the Russian population. If she stipulates for the cession of Saghalien, the stipulation can easily carry a rider for the disposal of the Island's Russian inhabitants. Those that have settled down peacefully and are engaged in the pursuit of legitimate industry belong to a special category and need not be disturbed. But every man or woman still undergoing sentence or subject to police surveillance should be handed over to Russia, and their transfer should be a matter of pre-arrangement.

It appears that very evil weather continued for several days in northern seas and that it cleared up finally on the 2nd. If any military operations were contemplated in that part of the arena, they must have been effectually interrupted.

The Fiji Shimpō quotes a paragraph from the German journal of Shanghai and inserts it in this context, to the effect that the troops in Saghalien consist of 2 battalions of reserves with a battery and a half of artillery and a battalion and a half of volunteers; the latter being recruited from the convict class. This would mean a total force of not over 4,000 men, but information from other quarters indicates a considerably larger number. We presume that the same bad weather has interrupted operations in North-eastern Korea.

KOREA.

The capture of Kyongsong seems to have been effected without anything in the nature of a conflict. The Japanese troops moved out on the 14th from Myongchhon, preceded by a reconnoitering party under Captain Shioda, which drove in the enemy's outpost and kept touch with it as it retired. There were good roads which had been constructed by the Russians for their own uses, and the Japanese advance was thus easy. On the 18th Kyongsong was reached. Apparently the Russians had not interpreted the movement correctly, or possibly they never intended to make any serious resistance if resolutely attacked. The latter view is partially confirmed by the fact that 8 dummy guns were found on one of the eminences commanding the town—black logs of wood mounted on Korean ox-carts. At all events the three thousand men forming the garrison set fire to their stores of fodder and retreated without firing a shot. The people are said to have welcomed the Japanese warmly. There had been much suffering during the Russians' occupation; commandeering of all kinds of stores and the usual brutal treatment of women.

The First Bank and the Industrial Bank have joined to guarantee the new 7 per-cent Korean loan of 2,000,000 yen. To-day the issue of bonds takes place, the minimum selling price being 95. The loan will lie unredeemed for 3 years, and will thereafter be paid off in 2 years. Subscriptions will be received up to the 15th instant, and calls must be paid by the 24th.

THE POLITICAL PARTIES AND PEACE.

The mutual agreement of the two great political parties to abstain from explicitly formulating any terms of peace was a wise step, but it can not be said that the Progressists adhered strictly to the programme of reticence. The Seiyun-kai's resolution was sufficiently vague. It spoke merely of compensation for expenditure; of territorial concessions such as may help to guarantee the permanence of peace; and of a solid settlement of the Manchurian and Korean problems. These are tolerably wide outlines, and there is ample freedom for movement within their limits. But the Progressists went farther. They laid down the doctrine that restrictions must be imposed on any military preparations constituting a danger to Japan or threatening China's frontiers. It must be plain, we think, to all thoughtful persons that to propose such restrictions would be exceedingly painful to Russia's pride, and that to enforce them over such a wide area—an area virtually representing the whole of Eastern Asia since China's borders are included—would scarcely be within the range of practical statesmanship. If this clause be introduced by the Progressists in order to serve as a foundation for subsequently building an attack on the negotiators and the Government, it will doubtless meet that purpose. But we should hesitate to suspect the Progressists of sacrificing national interests to party politics at a juncture like the present.

Count Okuma, in his speech to the meeting, said that just two years have elapsed since the conviction was forced upon Japan that Russian aggressions must be resisted with arms. He put the date of that conviction in June, 1903, a most interesting historical assertion. On the other hand, Russian aggression has been going on for a hundred years, and so palpable was its ultimate tendency that no second opinion could exist in Japan with regard to the necessity of resisting it. Japan's arms had been crowned uniformly with victory, yet she had never allowed herself to be puffed up or carried away. Nay, although Russia had frequently adopted barbarous methods of fighting; had sunk peaceful merchantmen; had butchered sick and wounded; had abused the red cross flag, Japan was ready to forgive and forget from the moment when peace should be restored. Nevertheless, only a few days ago Mischenko's troops had reverted to the shocking cruelty of butchering surgeons and nurses and destroying a hospital. It was very much to be doubted whether such a country was about to enter the conference chamber with a sincere desire for peace. The Count then paid some high compliments to the disinterested intervention of the United States in the cause of peace, and denounced the idea that the people's voice should be hushed on the eve of the peace conference. They had gone to war in defence of their national rights and of justice, and peace must be made in accordance with the same principles. If he advocated the advisability of not accurately enumerating Japan's terms, it was because her terms of to-day might be very different from the demands she would make to-morrow should Russia fail to take this opportunity of concluding peace.

Mr. Oishi Masami, questioned as to the reasons for not publishing Japan's terms, declared that he counted on the conference failing. Already three serious blunders had been committed by Japanese diplomats: they had agreed to enter a conference without ascertaining anything about Russia's intentions; they had agreed in advance of Russia; and they had agreed to Washington as the place of conference. Could success be anticipated with such diplomacy?

NAVAL NOTES.

The Japanese Naval authorities call attention to the fact that the Peresviet, which has just been raised at Port Arthur, was one of the strongest ships in Russia's Pacific Squadron. She left Kronstadt in 1901. The Peresviet and the Ossliabya were laid down in 1898 under Russia's new programme of naval expansion and were supposed to embody the best results of modern naval progress. The success that was accorded to them by expert opinion, led to the laying down of the Pobieda, a sister-ship, in 1899. These vessels do not carry a very heavy armament—four 10-inch and eleven 6-inch guns. The Hochi Shimbun says that the Poltava will be the next vessel to be floated, and that she will be followed by the Pobieda. The Poltava is a smaller type of vessel and somewhat older. Her displacement is 10,960 tons and her speed only 16 knots. She is lying on an even keel. The Pobieda has a slight list, but it is not expected that any serious difficulty will attend her raising. The Retvisan (battle-ship, 12,700 tons, completed 1900) and the Pallada (protected cruiser, 6,630 tons) are said to be the most injured, but the expectation is that they too will be saved, and in that event the Sevastopol alone would remain at the bottom. This forecast, if trustworthy, means that there will be added to the Japanese navy 3 first-class and 1 second-class battle-ships; 1 first-class armoured cruiser and 1 protected cruiser. Adding the results of the Battle in the Sea of Japan, and the salvage operations at Chemulpo, we get this table:—

SHIPS TO BE ADDED TO JAPANESE NAVY.

	Tons.
Orel , battleship, 1902	13,516
Retvisan , battleship, 1900	12,700
Peresviet , battleship, 1898	12,674
Pobieda , battleship, 1900	12,674
Poltava , battleship, 1894	10,950
Nicholai I. , battleship, 1889	9,700
Bayan , armoured cruiser, 1900	7,800
Varyag , protected cruiser, 1899	6,500
Pallada , protected cruiser, 1899	6,630
Senjamine , coast-defence iron-clad, 1894	4,126
Apraxin , coast-defence iron-clad, 1896	4,126

It is stated that much of the success achieved in raising these ships is due to a new pumping machine recently imported. Two of these are at work. Each pumps 4,000 tons per hour. The name of Captain Sakamoto is specially mentioned in connexion with the work. He commanded the unfortunate Yushima and his exceptional skill in salvage operations has been conspicuous in the raising of the Bayan.

There is a telegram from Singapore to the Kokumin Shinbun which says that a Russian transport called the Amadoya—her name is quite unfamiliar—has arrived at Diego Suarez in Madagascar, carrying 327 men who escaped after the Battle in the Sea of Japan.

The Naval Department announces the completion and commissioning of a new destroyer, the Ushio (380 tons).

The Kniaz Potemkin, which has been the scene of such a terrible calamity at Odessa, is one of the finest ships in Russia's Black Sea Squadron. She has a displacement of 12,500 tons and was completed in 1900. Her complement is 636, and the murder of all the officers except three in a vessel of such size signifies a catastrophe.

The launch of the new Japanese battleship Katori (15,981 tons) took place at Barrow on the 4th instant in the presence of Prince and Princess Arisugawa.

The battleship Nicolai I. is reported to be a not very valuable prize. Her arrangements for the accommodation of the crew are so defective that much reconstruction will be required. She was hit many times but not so badly injured as the Orel. Her armament, however, consists entirely of old-fashioned guns, and moreover parts of the weapons were thrown over-board before the surrender. Originally the vessel had a speed of 15 knots, but she was capable of doing only 12 at the time of the battle, and further her engineers introduced sea-water into her boilers when surrender was determined on, so that they are now much corroded. She is also an old vessel, having been completed in 1889.

News from the north indicates that the weather, which had cleared on the evening of the 2nd, became stormy again on the morning of the 3rd, and the wind, blowing from the west, brought up heavy banks of fog which extended as far south as Tsugaru. It may be assumed that these climatic conditions effectually interrupt any military operations which may have been contemplated in that quarter. Speaking generally the weather is considered to be in a very doubtful condition. A centre of depression is reported from the south, and though it seems somewhat coy of coming northward, it may change its mind at any instant.

The next ship which is expected to float at Port Arthur is the Amur, a transport of 2,590 tons. It is stated that the salvage operations are proceeding most satisfactorily. The gunboat Giljak's case is hopeless, however.

CAPTAIN BOUGOUIN.

The Japan Advertiser writes that Captain Bougouin is to be tried under the first article of the Law for the Preservation of Military Secrets. That article says nothing of illicit correspondence with the enemy but merely provides that any person who examines into and collects matters which he knows to be military secrets is liable to imprisonment. We trust that our contemporary's information may prove correct, for the investigation and collection of military secrets may be done with the most innocent intentions in the world, and in Captain Bougouin's case may well have been, and probably was, in connexion solely with his business interests. The Japan Advertiser expresses surprise that we have not hitherto given publicity to this point, which, our contemporary says, is "known," but for our own part we had never learned the fact until it appeared in the columns of the Advertiser. It was not published in connexion with the finding of the magisterial inquiry, and it has not been published by any Japanese newspaper. Indeed, the nature of the charge as suggested by the term which Japanese newspapers employ is different from that now explained. However, we are sincerely glad to assist in giving publicity to the Advertiser's intelligence.

The Department of Communications intends to issue a fourth illustrated set of post cards for the war commemoration. It is said that each set will consist of 12 cards, and that the illustrations will include views of Mukden, etc.

THE LESSONS OF THE NAVAL WAR.

A Japanese naval officer, speaking through the columns of the leading journals, says that the teaching of the last great naval battle does not represent any very new lesson. Many points, always recognised as of vital importance, remain unaltered. Thus the man behind the gun is as cardinal as ever; so is the necessity of homogeneity of units; so is the value of high speed; so is the inadvisability of having weak vessels like special-service steamers attached to a squadron; so is the disadvantage of going into action with heavily laden ships and without an adjacent base. All these things must be recognised as not less important than ever. Again, there has been no reversal of the theory that the power of the gun is still inferior to the resistance of armour: in point of fact the armour of the Russian ships resisted excellently. Further, it has been demonstrated that heavy guns are much more accurate than light, and that battle-ships are essential factors in a naval fight. As to the idea that torpedo-craft are not capable of signal service, the lesson of the war is that the utility of these vessels depends mainly on the men handling them. Naval experts have been tolerably unanimous as to all these things, and their verdict now will be that no reasons for a radical change of opinion have been furnished. Nevertheless there are some noteworthy points. The first is that in the armament of a battle-ship there should be not only 12-inch guns, but also 10-inch and 8-inch, with an auxiliary equipment of 6-inch pieces. Speed too must be at least 18 knots, and there should be bunker capacity to suffice for a long voyage. Every battle-ship should also have armour capable fully of resisting an armament such as she herself carries, and this means that her displacement must be over 16,000 tons. Further, if the probability of improved explosives be taken into account, the armour demanded to resist them may involve building ships with a displacement of something like 20,000 tons. Many of these arguments apply to armoured cruisers also. When their special duties are taken into account as well as their certain place in the line of battle, they too will tend to become larger, probably reaching a displacement of 15,000 tons. As to the armament of such cruisers, the line now taken in England is to mount two 9-inch guns, but this officer thinks that two 8-inch with strong shields are fully as effective. He considers, however, that there can be no doubt of the inferiority of four 6-inch pieces to two 8-inch. He believes that the cruiser of the future will probably have four 10-inch guns mounted in turrets fore and aft, with 8-inch pieces for auxiliary armament; the alternative being that the whole should be 8-inch weapons. There is room for further experiment in this direction, but on the whole the indications are in favour of a mixed armament of 10-inch and 8-inch pieces. What is beyond all question is that these cruisers must be capable of developing a speed of at least 23 knots. Coming now to the question of protected cruisers, there has been much learned. Wireless telegraphy was expected to dispense with some of the functions of cruisers, but wireless telegraphy is shown to have its limitations. Protected cruisers remain a necessity. The torpedo-destroyer, with its great speed, suggests itself as a good scout, but its structural weakness and its inability to face high seas are plain disqualifications. The cruiser must to a large extent serve as the eyes and ears of the fighting squadron, and as a commerce-destroyer. Here the great speed now given to merchant steamers has to be taken into account. There have been many instances of failures on the part of cruisers to capture merchant steamers, and the lesson is that for scouting as well as commerce-destroying there should be attached to every fleet a number of cruisers of from 3,000 to 4,000 tons displacement with a speed of 25 knots at least, something of their protection being sacrificed if necessary. The Russian cruisers Zemchug and Ismrud are approximately suitable types, and what is now wanted is an improved form of these vessels. They should also be able to steam to great distances without re-coaling. Concerning torpedo-destroyers, the only direction in which improvement seems specially desirable is that of sea-going capacity. Some minor changes of internal arrangements suggest themselves, but the power of making voyages is the main point. As to submarines, they remain in the experimental stage. Finally with regard to the general question of the forms of ships, there does not appear to be any reason for change.

MONGOLIA.

Russia continues her manoeuvres in the matter of Mongolia. Her attitude towards that phase of the complication has not been distinguished by consistency. There are abundant proofs that the neutrality of Mongolia has never received the smallest practical recognition at her hands. One salient fact is that she has been drawing supplies thence for her Manchurian armies from the very outset, enormous supplies, without the least pretence of concealment. Had there been any lack of practical evidence the fact would have been established by the letters of newspaper correspondents attached to the Russian army. Moreover, the Russians have marched through Mongolia whenever strategic expediency dictated such a course. The latest example was Mischenko's big cavalry raid, a raid in which some twenty thousand Cossacks were engaged, in the Kangping district on the 19th of June. Yet, in the face of these facts, the St. Petersburg Government has lately been clamouring for the strict maintenance of Mongolia's neutrality and threatening China with dire consequences if she fail to enforce it. A telegram now published by the Fiji Shimpō shows also that this indefatigable Power is attempting to rehearse the old programme of aggression in Mongolia. She has complained to China that as the line of telegraphs between Koolung and Kiachita is frequently injured by Hunghutsz, the wisest and most practical plan would be to entrust to Russia the duty of posting troops to guard it. In this case a convention is in question. China is pledged by treaty to protect this line. But is it conceivable that the Chinese should labour under any doubt as to the inevitable sequel of Russian military guardianship of railways and telegraphs? It is now an old story, perfectly familiar to all the world. Peking has replied that it will itself discharge the function of guarding. That, too, is an old story. Are we then destined to witness in Mongolia a repetition of the Manchurian drama? Truly there is something that compels admiration in the vitality of Russian expansion. Disaster does not check it for a moment. Confronted with the loss of the railway she has been at such heavy charges to build through Manchuria, she immediately projects a new line on the left bank of the Amur, and threatened with the permanent arrest of her aggressive programme in East Asia, she forthwith begins to show restless activity in Central Asia. There is an element of magnificence in such indomitable perseverance.

MAMIYA AND NEVOLSKOY.

A very interesting incident is to be noted in connexion with the publication of a new map by the Suifu-bu (Hydrographic Bureau) of the Naval Department. On this map the Strait of Tartary, which divides Saghalien from the mainland, is marked Mamiya Kaikyo (Strait of Mamiya) and the Amur Gulf, northward of the Strait, is marked Mamiya Kaikyo Hokubu (northern part of Mamiya Strait). This name "Mamiya" recalls a remarkable historical event hitherto not known, we believe, outside Japan. Mamiya Rinzo was a Japanese subject, who had associated himself with researches in Saghalien. The Tokugawa Government sent him in 1808 with another official, Matsuda Denjuro, to investigate the conditions in this northern quarter. The little party travelled in a boat 60 feet long with 4 feet beam. They suffered many hardships, but they succeeded in making the important discovery that Saghalien was an island, separated from the continent by a narrow strip of sea. Thenceforth this water was known as Mamiya-no-umi (the Sea of Mamiya). Foreign nations, however, had no cognisance of Mamiya's discovery, and when Muravieff commenced his celebrated exploits in the Amur in the middle of the 19th century, Saghalien was supposed to be a part of the main land. Nevolskoy discovered the error in 1848, and thenceforth the strait was called "The Strait of Tartary" on Russian maps. But as in Mamiya's case so also in Nevolskoy's, outsiders remained ignorant until the extraordinary incident of the Elliott expedition in 1855. Sir Charles Elliott, with 3 strong ships, posted himself in the Gulf of Tartary where, as he supposed, his squadron blockaded a Russian Squadron lying in De Castries Bay. But within a fortnight the ice broke up in the Strait of Tartary, whose existence Elliott did not suspect, and the Russians steamed away north, passed through the Strait, and left Elliott blockading an empty bay. Of course the resumption of the old names by the Japanese has its obvious significance. Mamiya was 40 years earlier than Nevolskoy, and Saghalien is to revert to its original owners.

SHOJI.

Residents in Japan have long since made up their minds as to the beauty of Shoji, and now that the proprietor of the Shoji Hotel has fixed the tariff of charges all along the route the trip out there has become one of the most inexpensive of any in Japan. But tourists, who depend so largely upon the goodwill of the guides, are too often, we fear, deterred from going to Shoji through the wilful misrepresentation of these men. It is but human nature, for the ordinary guide looks for squeezes as one looks for strawberries in a strawberry patch and with fixed charges their opportunities for illicit gains are reduced to the vanishing point. From a letter which we print this morning we gather that one visitor to Japan at least has found that Shoji could be visited without a guide and his experience will go far towards inducing others to follow in his footsteps.

CHINA.

Friday, June 30.

The Asahi Shinbun has a very long telegram from Peking, suggesting that there is some disquiet in governmental circles. This state of affairs appears to have been caused in some degree by indiscretions on the part of Messrs. Mochizuki and Hiraoka, members of the Lower House, who are now in Peking. Mr. Mochizuki, who used to be a member of the Seiyu-kai but is now an independent, is said to have represented himself as being on the most intimate terms with all the leading politicians and statesmen in Japan. His assertions being credited, the Chinese interpreted his views as an expression of Japanese official opinion. There was nothing alarming in those views. Mr. Mochizuki merely said that Manchuria would be restored to China. But Mr. Hiraoka, a prominent member of the Progressist Party, spoke in a different sense. His line was that unless China were prepared to take responsible charge of Manchuria and to guard it against a repetition of Russian aggression, to hand it over to her would be only to invite fresh danger for Japan. These declarations are said to have greatly perturbed the Chinese, and to have created a feeling of distrust towards Japan, so that, on the one hand, the Viceroys and Governors were invited to express their views about the Manchurian problem, and on the other steps were taken to obtain representation at the peace conference. The Russians have cleverly contributed to sow doubts of Japan's strength. They have alleged that the proposal for a peace conference came from Japan, and they have pointed to the fact that her acceptance of the President's proposal preceded the Russian acceptance, as well as to the fact that the Japanese press has been busily formulating terms of peace, thereby, as they allege, indicating a keen anxiety to terminate the war. These crafty suggestions seem to have borne fruit in the minds of the Chinese, and altogether an unsatisfactory situation has been created, to the no small uneasiness of the British and American Representatives, who are naturally anxious to see the best possible relations preserved between the two neighbouring empires. They have pointed out to the Peking Government that China's admission to the conference would involve the admission of other Powers, and that the whole question would thus be placed on a basis not at all advantageous for China. The Nichi Nichi and the Hochi both have telegrams from Peking in a somewhat similar sense, and the former journal observes that it is most desirable that China should be taken into Japan's confidence as early and as fully as possible about the terms of peace. Japan's position is unquestionably very difficult, and her very best diplomacy will be needed to keep things smooth. We can not frankly say that the situation has been helped by the writings in the Tokyo press, or by the action of all the political parties.

Saturday, July 1.

Rumours continue to arrive indicating that China labours under much uneasiness about the fate of Manchuria. Many of her statesmen seems unable to conceive that Japan will be content with the East-Chinese Railway and the Liaoting Peninsula alone. They think that she will prove a second Russia and that she will assert her authority over the whole of the Three Eastern Provinces. It is very natural that China should be uneasy, for in the history of her relations with foreign states there is nothing that encourages her to be trustful. In this instance, however, one imagines that she might find comfort by counting the cost, and considering what Japan's potential gains might be and what her certain losses did she lay claim to the whole of Manchuria. There is nothing in the vast region to compensate the heavy outlays that would be needed for administering it, and most assuredly nothing that would begin to compensate for the forfeiture of the world's goodwill that must be Japan's reward if she showed herself so aggressive. It is plain enough that the problems of the railway and of the future of Manchuria are sufficiently complicated to tax the utmost resources of statesmanship, but what may be predicted with entire confidence is that Japan will show herself moderate and reasonable in her manner of dealing with these and other questions arising out of the War.

Viceroy Yuan, it is said, in reply to the Throne's inquiries, has written, or telegraphed, a long memorial in which he strongly advocates the expediency of negotiating with Japan direct on all these questions. His eminently sound view is that any attempt to enlist the intervention of other Powers or to gain for China admission to the conference chamber would have most mischievous results.

Sunday, July 2.

The latest news from Peking is that there has been a change of views there. It is said to be beyond question that at one time the tide of political opinion set in the direction of entrusting the solution of the Manchurian problem to England, America, Japan, Germany and France in combination, a course which would have been entirely consistent with China's traditional and astute policy of playing off one Power against another. Finding the Powers unwilling to entertain any such project, China sought to have her own representative admitted to the peace conference as a minimum precaution, and it is said that Mr. Wu Ting-fong was actually designated. But again the Powers proved lukewarm, and although much pressure had been brought to bear by Russia in Chinese official quarters, this scheme also fell through. Just then Viceroy Yuan's memorial arrived, recommending council with Japan alone, and that view has finally prevailed, it is said.

The well-known conservative Wang Wen-shao has retired from the Cabinet, and his place has been taken by Mr. Hsü, a strong partizan of Viceroy Yuan.

A telegram from Yingkow says that business has once again become brisk there. Numerous boats are ascending and descending the Liao, some carrying provisions and munitions to Tiehling, and some bringing staples of export to Yingkow.

The Hochi and the Fiji Shimpō publish telegrams from Peking saying that the Russians at Kirin have arrested a number of Chinese subjects, officials and private individuals, and have condemned them to death as spies. The Governor has communicated with Peking and a strong protest has been lodged at the Russian Legation.

Monday, July 3.

Viceroy Chang Chih-tung, in response to the Throne's demand for an expression of opinion as to the Manchurian question, is said to have replied that Japan and Russia are not to be included in the same category of political conscience. Japan may be trusted not to aggress in Manchuria, and therefore the wisest course for China is to negotiate direct with her and to repose confidence in her engagement. Viceroy Yuan has, it is rumoured, repeated his advice in the same strain. He speaks unequivocally of Japan's magnanimity and declares that to seek admission to the conference chamber, or to endeavour to enlist the intervention of other Powers, would be bad policy on China's part. These Viceroys, Yuan and Chang, may be said to be the most influential in China. Their plainly expressed views must have gone far to quiet the uneasiness which for a time disturbed the official mind in Peking.

The British Landrenters at Tientsin have unanimously authorised the Council to raise by loan the sum of Tls. 450,000 for the improvement of the Taku Bar. It is to be secured by a levy of wharfage dues at the rate of $\frac{1}{2}$ per mill, and tonnage dues of 1 mace per ton per trip on shipping coming to the Peiho. This resolution was unanimously supported at a very full meeting of the Tientsin General Chamber of Commerce, held the following day.

Twelve officials of Hupeh, the majority of them newly appointed to substantive posts in that province, and the others expectant officials, have lately arrived from Wu-chang en route to Japan for a six months' inspection of the laws and institutions of that country. They have been sent by Viceroy Chang Chih-tung, who is determined to send every official of any ability under him to Japan to have their "eyes opened" as to how the modern world is moving along. It is perhaps unnecessary to state that this step of Viceroy Chang's cannot fail to be of incalculable value to China and to Hupeh province especially. We are glad to note that many of the Viceroys and Governors of other provinces are also following his Excellency's laudable example.

Yokohama residents will be interested in hearing that late issues of the Tientsin papers are filled with reports of public meetings whose object is the establishment of a school at Tientsin; and the papers also print in full the accepted Provisional Constitution and By-Laws of the resultant "School Association of Tientsin," of which the following is the first clause:—"The object of the Association is, in general, to promote the education, though the medium of the English language, of those children and youth of Tientsin, and of the country dependent upon Tientsin, for whom English is the native language, or by whom English may be adopted for the purpose of their education and in particular to establish and maintain at Tientsin a school suitable for, the furtherance of the said object; but not for profit, the expectation of profit from the undertaking being expressly set aside."

Concerning the case of the tugboat Samson, in which Mr. Pavlov, of Korean fame, sued Baron Ward in the British Supreme Court at Shanghai—the decision of which we announced on Tuesday—our senior Shanghai contemporary has the following note:—"Quite unusual public interest was shown in the proceedings in the Supreme Court yesterday. During the morning, two ladies, friends of his Lordship, occupied chairs on the Bench, and there was a considerable gathering of spectators in Court. The entire day, after the opening address, was occupied in the examination of the plaintiff, Mr. A. Pavlov, who is still titularly Russian Minister to Korea. During the cross-examination by Mr. Morgan Phillips in the afternoon, the questions took on a distinctly sensational character. Mr. Pavlov bore his long examination with the greatest good humour, and the "smile" which, according to one of the letters put in, had greatly irritated the defendant on a previous occasion, was very much in evidence. Only once it vanished for a time, when Mr. Phillips after reading some distinctly uncomplimentary extracts from Russian newspapers, and finding they were lightly treated, asked His Excellency if he must not possess a "very thick skin." Mr. Pavlov drew himself up and said he should decline to answer more questions. His Lordship suggested that the remark would be more properly one for comment to the jury and Mr. Phillips did not press the question.

DEATH OF MR. JOHN HAY.

A telegram has been received in Tokyo announcing the death of Mr. Hay, United States Secretary of State. Mr. Hay had been ailing for some time from heart trouble but news was recently published that he had recovered and would speedily resume his duties in Washington. The hope proved delusive. He was one of the great men of the era and his country will not be alone in mourning his loss.

The Hon. Colonel John Hay, the third son of Charles Hay and Helen Leonard, was born at Salem, Indiana, Oct. 8, 1838, and graduated at Brown University, 1858. He was admitted to the Bar in Springfield, Illinois, in 1861, but almost immediately went to Washington as Assistant Secretary to President Lincoln, and subsequently was his Adjutant and Aide-de-Camp. During the Civil War he served for a time under Generals Hunter and Gillmore, attaining the rank of Colonel and Assistant Adjutant-General. From 1865 to 1867 he was Secretary of Legation in Paris, and from that time to 1868 was Charge d'Affaires at Vienna. He was appointed Secretary of Legation in Madrid in 1869, where he remained until 1870, when he returned to the United States, and became one of the editors of the New York Tribune. This position he resigned in 1876, upon his removal to Cleveland, Ohio; but he continued occasionally to contribute to its columns down to recent times. During the absence of the editor, Mr. Whitelaw Reid, in Europe, from April to November 1881, Colonel Hay returned to New York to take entire editorial charge of the Tribune. While on the Tribune he obtained considerable celebrity by his dialect poems of "Jim Bludsoe," "Little Breeches," &c.; which were afterwards published in book form under the title of "Pike County Ballads," 1871. In the same year he also issued "Castilian Days," a series of sketches of Spanish life and character. From 1879 to 1881 he was Assistant Secretary of State. He represented the United States at the International Sanitary Congress held in Washington in 1881, and was chosen President of that body. He was subsequently engaged (in collaboration with John G. Nicolay) in writing a Life of Abraham Lincoln, which was published as a serial in the Century, from 1886 to 1890, and was printed in 1890, with extensive additions, in 10 vols. 8vo, by Century Co. In the same year he published his collected "Poems." He took an active part in the campaign of 1896 which resulted in the election of President McKinley, and was appointed in March 1897 American Ambassador to England. He retired from his Ambassadorship, after representing his country with conspicuous ability and popularity, in September 1898, and was subsequently appointed United States Secretary of State. Col. Hay married in 1874, Miss Clara Stone, eldest daughter of Amasa Stone, Esq., of Cleveland, Ohio, the eminent railway constructor and philanthropist.

A telegram received at the Foreign Office in Tokyo says that the Hon. John Hay, Secretary of State, died on July 1st at The Fells, Newbury, New Hampshire. After his return from Europe, Mr. Hay spent some days in Washington and then repaired to his summer residence at Newbury. After his arrival there he was taken sick, but on the 30th June seemed to be recovering; consequently the news of his demise will come as a great shock to the whole world.

JAPAN'S FOREIGN TRADE DURING THE FIRST HALF OF 1905.

The general figures of Japan's foreign trade during the first half of the current year are stated to have been as follows:—

	Yen.
Exports.....	142,099,000
Imports.....	283,949,000
Excess of Imports ...	141,850,000

As to the movements of specie at Yokohama, Kobe, Osaka and Nagasaki, they were:—

		Yen.
Exports of Specie	Gold	6,417,000
	Silver	430,000
Total		6,847,000
Imports of Specie	Gold	16,756,000
	Silver	6,119,000
Total		22,875,000
Excess of Imports	Gold	10,339,000
	Silver	5,689,000
Total		16,128,000

The Asahi Shimbun commenting upon these figures, observes that the three great events of the year have been the fall of Port Arthur, the Battle of Mukden and the Battle of the Japan Sea. It is natural that the economic condition of the country, depending largely as it does on the war, should show a great change under the circumstances. Until the close of last year many people took a gloomy view of the future, and that there should be a corresponding restoration of activity is inevitable. The cotton-spinning and other industries show this clearly, and so do the rates quoted on the exchange market which are, in many cases, almost the double of what they were at the close of last year. It is not to be pretended, of course, that the above figures show a satisfactory growth of the country's foreign trade. Exports have increased by only some 5 millions as compared with the corresponding period of last year and imports present a sudden and excessive growth. At the same time any increase of exports in the very acme of such a great war is matter for congratulation, and in the case of imports there is the special consideration that merchants have been laying in large stocks in anticipation of the increased tariff rates which went into operation from the 1st of July. Moreover the first six months of every year are notable for a marked excess of imports and in the second six months the conditions are generally more or less reversed. Of course the inflow of specie is not due to commercial operations: it must be attributed to the Government's special financial transactions.

TERMS OF PEACE.

(COMMUNICATED.)

There are several opinions among the Japanese as to the terms of peace to be imposed upon Russia, but the main points lie in the following three: (1) Russia should return to China the whole occupied territories in Manchuria and waive all her treaty rights in Korea and Manchuria; (2) she should pay an indemnity to Japan equal to the amount that Japan has spent for the war since the outbreak of hostilities; (3) she should cede some part of her territory. Questions such as the assignment of the East China Railway and Russian enterprises in Manchuria, the surrender of all the war-ships which have been disarmed in neutral waters, and the acquisition of the rights of fishery in Kamchatka, of establishing settlements in chief towns in Siberia and of free passage of the Amur are no more than side issues of the above main points.

The first point involves the raison d'être of the war and Russia has to yield on this point as a logical consequence of her defeat. As to the second point, opinions differ in respect of the amount in accordance with the methods of calculating the expenses. However, almost all agree in charging practical war expenditures. The third point is most difficult for solution and Russia would be most unyielding as regards it. There is wide divergence of opinions as to the disposition of the question, but the main disagreement turns upon the question of the seizure of Vladivostok. In short, one party urges the taking of the port by any means, while the other does not think it necessary to take it. The latter says that it is desirable to acquire Vladivostok, but should Japan take possession of it, the world would begin to suspect her of being an aggressive country coveting the territories of her neighbours, and thus she would lose the sympathy of the world, which has hitherto stood her in good stead. Besides, should Japan demand too heavy terms, the war would be unnecessarily prolonged. Moreover, should she fail to avail herself of this good opportunity, fortune might cease to smile upon her. On that account, she might well leave Vladivostok to Russia, if she can obtain some reasonable concessions.

The former contends that though it is regrettable to prolong the war by demanding heavy terms, Japan should not be in such a hurry as to conclude peace by imposing a slight burden which might induce the vanquished to contemplate revenge. Japan must guard herself against revenge, for some of the Russian generals have already cried out for peace only for the purpose of gaining time. Should Russia retain Vladivostok and rally her strength sufficiently to be able to cope with Japan, the latter would find it too late to lament her over-indulgence. When one reflects what great effect the three cruisers of Vladivostok have wrought on the manoeuvres of the Japanese armies, one can easily understand the importance of the port from a strategical point of view. On that account, Japan must deprive Russia of her naval base in the Sea of Japan to put a stop to her aggressive measures in the Far East. This party goes on to say that the reason for taking the port is merely to drive Russia out of her strongholds and not to threaten other nations by getting a foothold on the continent; consequently Japan can leave the port open to the free intercourse of nations.

Both arguments stand upon reason. Japan, so to speak, is in a dilemma; should she take possession of Vladivostok, she would lose the sympathy of the world, but should she leave the port to Russia the peace of the Far East would always be disturbed. It is contended that it may be well if Japan make Russia demolish all fortifications and warlike establishments in Vladivostok and force her to avow that the port should be thrown open to the world. The opinion is good as an argument but it is of no practical use at least with regard to Russia. History is a witness that Russia has not kept her word. In the treaty of Paris, she gave her word that she would not float her fleet in the Black Sea; moreover she promised to throw open Batum as a free port. But within fifteen years' time, Russia has fitted out a Black Sea Squadron, defying all the remonstrances of Great Britain, and had converted Batum into a naval base. On that account, much faith can not be placed in Russia's promise to make Vladivostok an absolutely commercial city.

If it be impolitic for Japan to occupy Vladivostok and it be dangerous to leave it to Russia, what should be the disposition of the port? The only solution of the question is to make the port an eternally neutral city under the superintendence of the Powers that are interested in the Far East. The port should be used by the Powers in common as the Danube and the Congo stand under the joint supervision of the Powers. If the port should be thus disposed of, Russia would be relieved from the national disgrace of ceding one of her most useful ports to the enemy and at the same time she would be free from the danger of Japan's standing at her portal. As for Japan, there is no fear of Russia closing again the old stronghold and she would be released from the suspicion of the world. Consequently this solution not only alleviates Russia's burden and benefits Japan, but insures peace and promotes the well being of the world by throwing open Northern Asia to the free intercourse of nations.

S. N.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

Japanese securities show a slight downward tendency on the London market, and Russian stocks are rising. The former fact is attributed to talk of another foreign loan by Japan. Rumours on this subject are very insistent. Mr. Takahashi is said to have nearly effected an arrangement in New York, and the particulars are alleged to be 200 million yen at 4 per cent., the selling price 90, and the period 20 years. Should this prove correct, it will be a fine result, for Japanese 4 per cents are now quoted in London at less than 89.

In this context it may be mentioned that, according to rumour, certain foreigners, notably Messrs. Samuel Samuel & Company, are said by Japanese journals to be buying Japanese bonds on behalf of a London Syndicate. Twenty million yen worth are reported to have been purchased thus far.

The Higashi Hongwan-ji has been rescued from the verge of financial ruin by the assistance of the Nishi Hongwan-ji. The latter has never been torn by disputes, and is as remarkable for its wealth as for its charities and its good-doing. The pecuniary assistance now given by the Nishi Hongwan-ji signifies a re-union of the two sects of the Shin. It appears that this had its origin in a friendship cemented by Otani Yeisei (brother of the spendthrift abbot Otani Kayei) and Otani Kozui, Lord Abbot of the Nishi Hongwan-ji. The two men became friends while studying in London, and they agreed that nothing could be more regrettable than the existing schism among the followers of Shiaran Shonin.

It is stated that owing to the popularity of pictorial post-cards great numbers have been imported from abroad and are sold in Japan. But according to the Japanese postal regulations a post-card can not be treated as such unless it bears clearly printed on the face the words yubin hagaki, in Japanese characters. Otherwise the postage charged is 3 sen. A warning is published, in order to avoid what has become very common, namely, the necessity of levying extra postage from the recipients of cards, and their not infrequent rejection by their addressees.

There has been a riot among the prisoners at Hamadera in Osaka. Apparently the trouble had its origin in some question relating to insufficiency of fatty substances in the food supplied to the prisoners. The trouble attained such dimensions that the guards were obliged to use their rifles, with the result that one Russian was killed and 5 were wounded.

Captain Vederivekoff (?) of the Nicolaï I. attempted to escape from the prisoners' quarters in Saseho on the 27th, but was apprehended by a policeman.

Japanese newspapers regard the present crisis in Russia as the dawn of free institutions for that country, which consummation, they consider, will materially promote the peace of the world. The Jiji Shimpō is particularly emphatic. It declares that the weapons of civilization can only be employed by a civilized nation, and that Russia's discomfiture in this war must be attributed primarily to the defective state of her institutions and to her corrupt bureaucracy. It takes the view, and is endorsed by the Asahi, that the incidents in the Black Sea are merely symptomatic. They illustrate the altogether faulty relations existing between Russian officers and Russian soldiers, which relations in turn, reflect those existing between rulers and ruled. Of course there is some ridicule of Russia's pretensions to continue a great war in the face of such domestic conditions.

Admiral Rojestvensky has made steady progress towards recovery. There are no symptoms of brain trouble, and it is expected that he will be completely convalescent by the end of this month.

About seven weeks ago there died in Tokyo a celebrated poet, Mr. Noguchi Neisai. He was also a member of the Lower House. Inheriting a taint of leprosy, which, indeed, had declared itself in his person, Mr. Noguchi entered into a compact with his brother, an eminent Professor of the University, and his younger sister that all should remain unmarried so that their family might die with them. In their household, however, was a young student called Takebayashi Danzaburo, and between him and the young lady an intrigue sprang up. It ended in their marriage with the reluctant consent of the two brothers. But the conduct of the student became ultimately so outrageous that he was divorced and expelled from the family circle. By and bye Noguchi Neisai died suddenly, and there his story might have ended had not Danzaburo been apprehended on suspicion of murdering a druggist, Konishi. After the examination of the suspect orders were given for the disinterment of Noguchi's remains, and they are now undergoing chemical analysis. The yellow journals of Tokyo are full of the history. But it may prove a myth after all.

It is stated that Madame Rojestvensky has decided to join her husband in Japan, and that she will soon start by a German mail-steamer. She will land at Nagasaki, and her intention, according to rumour, is to remain in Japan until peace is concluded.

In the Official Gazette it is announced that the Government of the Argentine Republic has decided to establish a Legation in Japan, and that the present Chargé d'Affaires, M. Baldomero Garcia Sagastume was appointed Representative on the 15th of June, when he handed his credentials to the Minister of State for Foreign Affairs.

Consul-General Odagiri, who is now at Shanghai, says that there are 11 Russian ships interned at the latter place. Of their crews some 700 are combatants and 300 are non-combatants. The vessels are anchored in a very inconvenient manner. Instead of being segregated they are mixed up with the foreign shipping so that their control is exceedingly difficult.

Admiral Nebogatoff and his officers, since they are not to be allowed to return to Russia, have been sent to the prisoners' quarters at Fushimi, near Kyoto. They number 66 in all, but as some of them announced from the first their unwillingness to take advantage of the Japanese Emperor's offer to permit their return on parole, the number actually condemned to imprisonment by the Tsar is 58.

Japanese newspapers state that the directors of the Tokyo Electric Light Company have arranged with an American capitalist for a loan of 3 million yen, and that the representative of the lender will leave Vancouver for Japan on the 24th instant. This is said to be the first instance of a Japanese industrial company contracting a foreign debt.

There has been a violent gale on the China coast. It seems to have exhibited its greatest force at Amoy, where much damage was done.

THE LAW COURTS.

MR. A. C. ST. CLAIR.

The criminal case of Mr. A. C. St. Clair, an American, who is charged with fraud, came up again on July 1st in the Tokyo District Court. He was sentenced to three months' imprisonment with hard labour, six months' police surveillance, and a fine of yen 5.

The accused has lodged an appeal in the Tokyo Appeal Court.

THE TSUKIJI AFFAIR.

The trial of Captain Bougouin and his employee, H. Maki began on July 4th in the Tokyo District Court before Judge Imamura and Associate Judges Fukagawa and Oka, and Public Prosecutors Anju and Ochiai.

Messrs. S. Isobe, K. Seki and R. Tamaoki were employed by Captain Bougouin for the defence and Mr. M. Takagi by Maki.

Mr. Magaki, a lawyer of Tokyo, and Mr. Ogata, of the Yokohama District Court, were present as interpreters.

The Court was filled with the public, including Mr. F. Strange, son-in-law of Capt Bougouin, Mr. J. Adam, first interpreter of the French Legation, Mr. Kasaiwagi, Councillor of the Department of Justice, Colonel Uchida, of the Gendarmes.

The Court sat at 9.50 a.m. The presiding Judge declared that the trial was held to consider a case of suspected infringement of the Law of Military Secrets Preservation.

At the outset, the Court examined the accused as to their ages, residence, etc., after which the Court said that the trial was injurious to social peace and ordered the Court to be cleared. Messrs. J. Adam and Kashiwagi and Colonel Uchida, however, were permitted to remain in Court.

The trial continued until 4.30 p.m. The Court then adjourned till 9 a.m. on July 8th.

ALLEN v. THE "MAINICHI SHIMBUN."

Mr. G. R. Allen, who is under trial in the Tokyo District Court on a charge of alleged forgery of a private letter and calumny, has lodged, through Dr. R. Masujima, a prosecution of defamation in the same court against the Mainichi Shimbun.

NEBOGATOFF.

AFTER a long silence the TSAR, on the 2nd instant, conveyed to Admiral NEBOGATOFF an explicit refusal of that officer's application for permission to return to Russia on parole. Admiral NEBOGATOFF and his officers were kept at Saseho for a considerable time in the expectation of a reply from the TSAR to the two telegrams sent seeking instructions, one by Admiral NEBOGATOFF, the other by Admiral ROJESTVENSKY. Finally, as no suitable arrangements existed for the accommodation of prisoners at Saseho, and as more than ample time had been allowed for the receipt of a reply from St. Petersburg, the Admiral and his officers were sent to Hiroshima. Much surprise was felt that the TSAR should remain silent under such circumstances. The Nichi Nichi Shimbun, for example, expressed the opinion that HIS MAJESTY must have partially lost his sense of Sovereign duties since he so conspicuously neglected their discharge. Meanwhile the Russian officers were not treated at Hiroshima as ordinary prisoners of war. They were allowed to retain their swords and pistols, and were regarded merely as men awaiting their EMPEROR's permission to return home. On the 2nd instant, however, a message from M. BEZOBRAZOFF, despatched by order of the TSAR, briefly and coldly refused to permit the return of the officers. They are said to have been much cast down by the news, as well they might be. What thoughts prompted the TSAR it is not difficult to conceive. HIS MAJESTY has been unable to reconcile himself to the idea of four armoured ships surrendering en bloc to any squadron however superior. There has been a careful avoidance of any hastiness of judgment at St. Petersburg. Full time, ostentatiously full, was taken to consider, and the result of this leisurely reflection has been that Imperial sanction can not possibly be extended to such a precedent. This development will greatly heighten the interest of the incident, and can not fail to arouse world-wide comment. Is it to be concluded that the standard of naval conduct in Russia must always be death rather than surrender? That is what it amounts to. If any exercise of discretion be permitted, if any allowance be made for circumstances, then it would seem that never was surrender more justified than NEBOGATOFF's. It is true, we believe, that three out of the four ships were comparatively uninjured, and that the Orel, though her decks had been swept by the Japanese fire and though she was virtually incapable of further fighting, remained nevertheless quite sound so far as her main armour was concerned. But even granting that the four ships had still ample belligerent capacity, it is plain that the choice lay simply between two alternatives, destruction or yielding. They were four to twenty-seven. Such odds need only be stated. The Japanese say that five minutes would have sufficed to destroy the four ships had they declined to haul down their flags. Easily, too, can we conceive what must have been the state of the Russian officers' morale. They had fought all through the preceding day and had seen their consorts disabled one after another. They had contended all night against a cloud of torpedo-craft, which had given the death blow to ship after ship. And on the 28th, just after they had sighted Ulneung and were congratulating themselves, on certain escape, they suddenly found their little squadron environed by a force nearly seven times as numerous. They must have thought that fate was distinctly against them—fate or the deadly skill of TOGO in bringing his great squadron with unerring accuracy to the very point where their route could be cut. At the Liancourt Rocks the Sea of Japan has a width of 500 miles. Was it within the bounds of reasonable probability that TOGO should successfully select the precise spot in this five-hundred mile waste of waters to intercept the flying Russians with whom he had parted company twelve hours previously? There must have been something shocking, something appalling, in this unerring prescience, and very likely the uncanniness of the incident tended to shake NEBOGATOFF's self-confidence. That is a secondary consideration, however. The cardinal point is that escape was wholly impossible and that to refuse surrender would certainly have ended in the destruction of the ships and the loss of hundreds of lives. The TSAR has now virtually declared that even under such circumstances surrender was not permissible. Where does His Majesty draw the distinction between NEBOGATOFF and STORSEL? We do not see.

THE BLACK SEA MUTINY.

THUS far the accounts go to indicate that the mutiny in the Black Sea is triumphant. There are 9 battle-ships in the Fleet, and if Admiral KRUGER could trust his men he ought to be able to make short work of the mutineers. But the disaffection of the Pobedonosets at the moment of action very naturally caused him to hesitate. Had he persisted in adopting violent measures and had the mutiny extended, he might have condemned his country to a terrible catastrophe. His choice, since it suggests timidity, will be condemned in some quarters, but no observant person can suspect a Russian officer of timidity. The Admiral realized that the force under his command could not be relied on, and that the best course to take in Russia's interests would be to weed out the mutinous spirits and to re-man the ships. Therefore he and his council of officers decided to ungear the machinery in the remaining vessels and to permit the departure of any man who might desire to go, granting, at the same time, two months leave to the reserves. These measures have probably saved the ships, but inasmuch as they amount to an official acknowledgement of inability to deal with the mutiny, they shake the whole structure of the Russian Navy. From that point of view the gravity of the incident can not be over-rated. The mutineers, of course, will eventually become helpless. They can not obtain either coal or provisions unless they turn pirates. Possibly they may choose to adopt the latter character, and if they do they can hope to enjoy immunity for some time since the force which alone could have restrained them has been paralysed by the deliberate act of its officers. But the strong probability is that in the face of the passive difficulties confronting them they will disperse and disappear, to be gradually apprehended and brought to justice. Their own fate, however, is quite a secondary consideration. The ominous fact is that they have not only crippled the remnant of Russia's naval strength, but have also struck a deadly blow at the system by which the Russian autocracy is supported, the system of force. It is silly to take an exaggerated view of any event, yet one is constrained to observe that such an incident as this mutiny comes at a time when the Russian Government can ill afford to have its impotence demonstrated. The least that can be said is what the Kokumin says, namely, that for the next ten or fifteen years Russia can not think of stretching out a hand over-sea towards the Far East.

ENGLISH COUNTY CRICKET CHAMPIONSHIP.

The table below gives the result of all matches played in the county cricket championship up to June 8th, with the positions won last year:—

	Played.	Won.	Lost.	Drawn.	Points.
Yorkshire (2)	8	6	—	2	6
Lancashire (1)	6	5	—	1	5
Surrey (11)	6	5	—	1	5
Notts (4)	6	3	2	1	1
Sussex (6)	7	3	2	2	1
Leicester (8)	6	2	2	2	—

NOTE "Won" indicates won by Australia; "Lost" indicates lost by Australia.

Australia has thus played 13 matches, won 5, drawn 7 and lost 1.

MONTHLY SUMMARY OF THE JAPANESE RELIGIOUS PRESS.

It is very hard to find in the whole range of Buddhist literature any pronouncedly optimistic articles. The general sentiment among thoughtful Buddhists seems to be that the creed is more and more losing its hold on the small section of the nation that professes adherence to it. Christianity has doubtless benefited much in this country by its association with Western civilization and Western thought. Buddhism, on the other hand, loses much by its association with customs, ceremonies, and notions which no longer interest the active spirits in modern Japan. An article in the June number of the Rikugō Zasshi entitled "The Present State of Buddhism," contains the following remarks: In reference to the causes of the ineffectiveness of Buddhism there are many different opinions. The priests themselves seem to have no hope of reviving interest in their creed. They seem quite satisfied with the status in the country which tradition has conferred on their religion. We have, say they, more than 70,000 temples and about 100,000 priests, and as for adherents, with the exception of the Christians and Shintoists, whose number is comparatively small, the whole of Japan is Buddhist. And as regards profession this is to a large extent true. Religion in Japan as far as households are concerned has become quite formal. The head of each house decides what religious ceremonies shall be performed on certain occasions. This does not imply that he himself believes in a creed or that any members of his family take the slightest interest in its teaching. It is one of the many family traditions that the heads of households still scrupulously follow. So that in most cases Buddhism, though the religion of families, is not the religion of the individuals composing a family. The connection of the priesthood with the laity is almost exclusively that of the performers of ceremonies to those who in obedience to custom pay for their performance. The ceremony-performing function suffices for the maintenance of the priesthood. There are in Tōkyō to-day no less than 1,349 Buddhist temples and 1,880 priests connected therewith. The money paid for the ceremonies performed by these priests together with the charges for sepulture, &c., mount up to a very big sum every year. Beyond its connection with customary ceremonies what hold has Buddhism on the nation? None whatever. Its so-called adherents do not take the slightest interest in its teaching. What its future will be nobody can foresee.

The Rikugō Zasshi has much improved in both appearance and contents. Dr. Inoue Teisuijō is, we observe, one of the contributors to the June number. He writes on the permanently strong elements of Japanese nationality. Of these he finds distinct traces in the Shintō emblems, the sword, the gohei and the mirror. Mr. Nakajima Tokuzō writes on Ethics and the Rev. R. Minami continues his discussion of the Gospels and their teaching. Mr. T. Muramatsu in an article on "The Development of International Morality and the Diminution of War," maintains that during the last few decades there has been a distinct advance in favour of more arbitration and less war and that this sentiment is likely to grow with the increase of enlightenment in civilised countries.

Mr. Y. Hani, writing in the Rikugō Zasshi on Japanese home life, says that there is no subject more discussed to-day than home life, but that mistaken conceptions of what is desirable in the home are very prevalent. In the first place there is a great lack of seriousness about the ideas entertained. With many home is a place for pleasure and abandon, where each member of a family may do as he or she pleases, where the restraints of the school, the office, the shop being removed, all can enjoy themselves to their hearts' content. This notion is responsible for many an uncivil home. To the idea that home is chiefly a place for rest and pleasure Mr. Hani is opposed, and he thinks that the household being no other than a miniature reproduction of Society generally, the same rules of etiquette and consideration for others which hold good in general social intercourse should be scrupulously followed by members of families in their home life. The English, says Mr. Hani, make the husband the centre of the home. The home including the wife, exists for his comfort after his day's work is over. This arrangement does not perhaps give sufficient importance to the wife. Mr. Hani has much to say on the choice of wives and on the consequences of the thousands of unsuitable marriages that are constantly taking place. The gist of his article is that the home should be made a centre of elevating influences, of improving social intercourse and also a place where each member of the family meets with kind consideration and sympathy.

Following the practice of the Koye, the Fukui Shimpō (Presbyterian) has opened its columns to inquirers and from June 15th commenced to publish a series of questions and answers which cannot but be of particular interest to all foreign missionaries in this country. We give below specimens of these in a condensed form.

QUESTION.—At the General Synod of the Nihon Kirisutokyōkai held last year a resolution was passed bearing on the independence of churches that seemed to be quite anti-foreign in spirit. Is it right and proper that a Japanese church should assume an anti-foreign attitude?

ANSWER.—By referring to the minutes of the Eighteenth Synod of our Church it will be found that the measure known as the Dokuritsū-an appears in two forms, an original and a revised form. But they are very much the same in substance. In its original form the measure ran thus:—"Churches that receive support (that is, that are not independent), according to a clause in Art. 60 of the Church Rules, are disqualified to be regarded as properly constituted churches. (Tōsen Kyōkai taru shikaku no ushinai mono to su)." This measure is not to come into force till January 1st, 1907. The support received need not necessarily come from a foreign source, so that there is nothing anti-foreign in the measure. It simply asserts that a church which is not able to support itself is on a lower level than a church which can do so, that it is in a state of minority and cannot rank with adult churches. People who read into this measure anti-foreign sentiments fail to comprehend it.

QUESTION.—It is said that there are Japanese connected with the Nippon Kirisutokyōkai who object to carry on evangelistic work in conjunction with foreigners and who are in favour of getting rid of foreign missionaries altogether. What do you think about this?

ANSWER.—In our opinion nobody wants to put obstacles in the way of foreign workers in Japan. At any rate nobody connected with the Fukui Shimpō assumes this attitude. But there are a great many of us who desire to place our relations to foreign missionaries on a proper footing. Now, in co-operation the status of the co-operators is a matter of great importance. We will cite two examples. There is the co-operation of England and Japan as two allied thoroughly independent countries. There is also the co-operation of Japan and Korea, with Korea saying to Japan, "You construct the railways, you run the Post Offices and the Telegraph Offices, you superintend the finances and garrison the country," &c., &c. In the Church of Christ in Japan we have both these types of co-operation between foreigners and Japanese. Among our Presbyterian Churches there are churches in Kyūshū and North-Eastern Japan (Sendai) whose relation to foreigners is of the Korean type, differing nothing from that of the Methodists and the Protestant Episcopalians. This is a subject for regret, and bodes ill for the future of these Churches. That our relations to foreigners should be placed on a thoroughly satisfactory and proper footing is a matter of immense importance.

QUESTION.—At the last General Synod of the Presbyterian Church was this question of co-operation with foreigners discussed?

ANSWER.—No. The only discussion at all bearing on it was that of the independence of Churches referred to above. But the subject should be opened up and steps should be taken to correct existing abuses and provide against pending evils.

QUESTION.—It is reported that there are persons who are in favour of refusing all subscriptions towards our work coming from foreigners. Is that so?

ANSWER.—The evils attendant on the giving and taking of subscriptions depend on the ideas of the donors and the receivers. Donations cannot be dealt with satisfactorily without considering the circumstances under which they are made. There are gifts made in the name of the Lord to which no conditions are attached, which are plainly the outcome of Christian love. No church need refuse such gifts. Then there are all sorts of subscriptions made to charitable institutions the receipt of which does no harm. But in Christian work generally the offer of help from outsiders demands careful consideration before it is accepted or rejected. The question is, what will the receipt of help involve or lead to?

QUESTION.—Many of the advocates of independence say that we are going to join the Congregationalists. (Kumiai kyōkai) Is that so?

ANSWER.—Such assertions are made by ill-informed foreign missionaries or by certain ministers who want to frighten people for their own ends. But the truth is that nothing at all has been settled on this subject. The Presbyterians and Congregationalists were at one time united and only last year there was a conference between representatives of the two bodies to discuss the possibility of union. If it could be effected, we should like to see a union not of these two bodies only but of these and several other denominations. It is perhaps too much to expect that this should be brought about at once, nor even that we and the Congregationalists can combine in the near future. But there is nothing to be afraid of in the idea of union.

QUESTION.—Is the Nihon Kirisutokyōkai Presbyterian or Calvinistic?

ANSWER.—The Nihon Kirisutokyōkai is not the same as the Western Presbyterian Churches except in the form of Church Government adopted. In articles of belief and other matters the Japanese Presbyterians differ from their brethren in the West. Moreover, there is no guarantee that our church will always stay where it is now in the matter of belief and church management. Most of us approve of going wherever the Holy Spirit may lead us, and our watchword is progress. While feeling under no obligation to adhere forever to the Presbyterian form of church government, we do not see the necessity for immediate change. As regards Calvinism, according to our confession of faith, we are neither Armenian nor Calvinistic, but Apostolic. So the question you put is somewhat odd.

The questions and answers given above were published in the Fukui Shimpō of June 15th. The week following a perhaps still more interesting set appeared, which we give below:—

QUESTION.—It is said that somebody on the staff of this paper has advised foreign missionaries to retire from the Japanese mission field. Is this showing no anti-foreign spirit?

ANSWER.—A little time ago a certain foreign missionary called on one of the staff of this paper and complained bitterly of the difficulties encountered by missionaries in their work among Japanese. The Japanese gentleman applied to, being a friend of the missionary, frankly told him that the difficulties complained of were not imaginary but real and proceeded to go into them thus: Foreign missionaries can no longer lead Japanese Christians as they used to do. There are very few Japanese who are impressed by sermons or lectures given by foreign missionaries. (Gen ni sekkyō ya yemetsu deno gwaikoku senkyōshi ni shite kampakū sareru hito wa hotondo mare de aru.) They have lost their hold on our intellectual world (Karera wa seishinkai no shidōken (power to lead) wo ushinai tsutsu aru.) The reason of this is that the Japanese have progressed and are no longer struck by the commonplaces which used to interest them. This is the case in mission-schools as well as in church services. Formerly the very mention of a foreigner seemed to imply to a Japanese unusual talent. But now it is only foreigners of real power who are valued. In the main in the intellectual world Japanese and foreigners are on a level. Look at the Universities; where the education and knowledge of the teachers is about on a par, the Japanese is more successful than the foreigner on account of his knowledge of the Japanese language and of the prevailing ideas in students' minds. It is precisely the same in the religious world. And so it has happened that a great many foreign missionaries whose labours were at one time valued have lost their influence over the minds of Christians. Senjitsu seiryoku no atta gwat-hoku senkyōshi no ōku wa ima museiryoku de aru. Hence the majority of the missionaries find it hard to do any work. One can't but be sorry for them. (Sore da kara tasu no senkyōshi wa jigō ga dekinai de kurushinde oru. Hanahada kinodokuna arisama de aru.) The missionaries now fill the position of contractors for missionary work and superintendents of the workers. They don't do the work themselves in most cases, but hire it out to others. They themselves teach English, or overlooking successfully, superintend building, write reports of work for the home boards, keep the accounts of the missions; but missionaries who are powerful preachers are very scarce. The position of the majority of foreign missionaries seems to us deplorable. Their work can only be compared to trying to make water run uphill. Some missionaries seem to think that it is their duty to stay on in Japan under these circumstances till they die, but there are others who feel that the life here is mentally and spiritually injurious to them, that individual development and wide usefulness are alike impossible, and so they return to their own countries and there take up work in which they are eminently successful. It seems to me that you, sir, are a man of this sort and that rather than stop on here in a state of bewilderment, you had better go back to America, where you will find any amount of work to your liking and where you can develop all your capabilities.

Surely, continues the Fukūin Shimpō, to everybody this advice must appear as no more than kind. Yet there are people who have made it the foundation of serious charges against the staff of this paper. It has been said that the Fukūin Shimpō is the champion of anti-foreign sentiment, and on this account much needless anxiety has been felt on our behalf.

QUESTION.—However much truth there may be in what you have said, there is no denying that in the past the missionaries have effected great things. If the age of devotion, and self-sacrifice has given place to an age of ordinary work and duty, and if as a consequence missionaries no longer play the important part they did, that is their misfortune. There seems to be a call for a great change in their methods of working. Is there no remedy but to ask them to leave the country? Is it not possible to devise means for using them to advantage? What is your opinion on this point?

ANSWER.—Your question is a perfectly natural one. My reply is that our indebtedness to the foreign missionaries for their work in the past, for the love they have shown towards us, is very great and it is hence our duty to find a way out of the difficulty in which they are placed. The best solution to the problem of how best to use them is to cease employing them as mere overseers of the work of others. Let them shoulder their muskets and mix in the fight. Let them be evangelists in reality and not merely in name. The inefficient among them can go home. Men of power will do good. If they need native help, let them apply for it to independent bodies. What we most dislike in the present system is the use by the missionaries of Japanese subordinates for the saving of souls (Ima no soshiki de ichiban honomama koto wa, shitasoku ni yekono wo sukuwaseru hōhō de aru). This system of slavery ends in the degeneracy of the masters. The present methods may be said to be suicidal to the missionaries. A good many of them have already begun to die. In their libraries there are no signs of intellectual activity. Lacking the stimulus of active evangelistic work, their minds are not of the kind to give life and purpose to the young men who may apply to them. There are, we are thankful to note, a few bright exceptions, but the majority of missionaries have lapsed into a state of inactivity. Some of them say it is the climate, but it is caused by the mistaken system of evangelistic work. The restoration of energy depends on their branching out into new work. To use foreign missionaries as mere benevolent dispersers of alms, to assign to them the place of quiet sympathizers with the work of others is to kill them with poison. There may be other methods of renewing the energy of the missionaries, but this seems to us the most effective.

Mr. Uchimura Kanzō's organ, hitherto called Seisho no Kenkyū, has been rechristened Shinkibō (The New Hope). The magazine is on the whole strictly orthodox in character. Mr. Uchimura's separation from the church to which he once belonged does not seem to have been on doctrinal grounds. His magazine consists of short notes on Special Biblical topics and comments on the Scriptures. Occasionally he enters the field of controversy as, for instance, in the June number where he praises the Congregationalists of America for agitating against the acceptance of Rockefeller's 100,000 dollars subscription to the Board of Foreign Missions and goes on to remark that, though there is doubtless much corruption among American Congregationalists, he is thankful to say that they are superior to the Japanese Kumiai-yōkai Christians. A remark which seems to indicate that the writer has some grievance against the Kumiai-yōkai. To what extent this magazine is read it is difficult to say. It is exposed for sale in a good number of book-stalls. The range of subjects treated is very limited and student contributions are pretty numerous.

In the Gokyo (Methodist) the Rev. H. Kawasumi, discussing "the Spiritual Lessons to be learnt from the War," says that though every Christian must desire the cessation of War, in the world as constituted to-day it is unavoidable and that it confers certain benefits which perhaps could not be obtained by any less terrible instrumentality. (1) Among the things taught by the war is the value of religion. The nearness of death solemnizes the mind and makes men think seriously of a hereafter. Most of our soldiers are without religious belief and yet they face death with equanimity. But their want of religion, from our point of view, is to be regretted and we are glad to know that in many cases soldiers going out to battle have eagerly bought and read religious books. (2) The war has increased our self-confidence. We did not at all expect to have come out so well. Alternate victory and defeat was about all we anticipated. We now perceive that we are a powerful nation and competent to overcome great difficulties. (3) The war has taught us to hold in high regard what is just and right. In military dispatches the term, Tenryū (Help of Heaven) has occurred very frequently. I am one of those who think that this acknowledgment of the help of God by Japanese Commanders, is sincere and I take it to prove three things: (a) That those who use this term recognize that there is a living Being who governs the universe; (b) that this Being is active and that He controls the actions of men, and (c) that He helps the cause of the just. That our armies should all think that they are victorious because they are fighting in the cause of justice is certainly a subject for congratulation on the part of all religious people. (4) This war has revealed how much real love and sympathy there is in the hearts of men. To many war seems to be only barbarous killing, and they suppose that it so demoralizes men that they lose all their natural feelings. But the history of this war shows that our Japanese soldiers have retained their finer feelings, their humanity, even on the battlefield. Scores have been the instances of wounded men being borne on the shoulders or the back of a comrade amid a hail of bullets. Unselfishness, and self-sacrifice for others have been apparent everywhere—officers sacrificing themselves or giving up comforts for the sake of their men and men for the sake of their officers—men, at the risk of their lives, carrying food to their comrades engaged in working the guns—men giving bread and tobacco to Russian captives just taken. These and a thousand other noble acts all tend to raise one's opinion of average humanity, all tend to give the lie to those who say that virtue is dying out of the heart of the modern Japanese. Then there has been an enormous amount of charity and devotion called forth by this war, and the troops have felt inspired to action by the sympathy shown to them by the people at home. This sentiment is expressed in the following lines:

*Okurareshi kettō no kasa wa usukeredo,
Atsuki nasake ni samusa wasururu.

Throughout the whole country people of all classes have been vying with each other in providing comforts for the soldiers, high-class ladies have offered their services as nurses. This outburst of sympathy has been witnessed in every town and hamlet of the empire. The display of this noble feeling, though common among the Anglo Saxons, has never been witnessed before to the same extent in Japan. It shows that as a people we are actuated by the same benevolent sentiments as are displayed by Christian nations. With all this feeling to work on and to utilize we Christians surely ought to achieve great things.

The Gokyo announces that Bishop Harris is now on a visit to the various Chinese towns that have been occupied by the Japanese, giving addresses in English or Japanese at each place.

We have received from L'Abbe E. Ligneul a copy of another volume of his Theological series. It is on Practical Ethics. It opens with a definition of the term "virtue," then discusses the various classes of virtue practised by mankind, the best way of cultivating virtue, enlightenment, the right and the proper and the virtues connected therewith, courage and the virtues connected therewith, moderation and self-control and the virtues connected therewith. Part II of the book is devoted to a consideration of the doctrine of "Sin." First it is defined, then treated under the title "Major and Minor Offences," then under the title of "Various Kinds of Sin." Methods of computing the number of sins are given and the Part ends with a discussion of the origin of sin and its results. Part III treats of all the principal vices. The work covers 129 pages. The style seems to us a model of clearness, and each subject is presented in a taking manner. There is a freshness and a vivacity about M. Ligneul's works that cannot but be highly appreciated by Japanese readers. M. Ligneul is never discursive on any topic.

The Seikyō Shimpō (No. 589) has an article which epitomizes with approval the views of Rev. Geo. Albrecht of Kyōto on the fundamental difference between the ruling principles of Western and Japanese Civilisations. In the West the development of the individual is the ruling principle. In Japan, says Mr. Albrecht, the individual has from time immemorial been sacrificed to the welfare, convenience and exigencies of the family or the clan. From the statement made by the Seikyō Shimpō we gather that the Rev. Geo. Albrecht is of opinion that Christian teaching is needed to right what seems to him a fundamental misconception of human life and the development of character.

In another number of the Seikyō Shimpō an article written by Dr. Knox for an American journal entitled:—"Do the Japanese need Christianity?" is summarized by Mr. K. Yamada.

The Seikyō Shimpō has a leading article on the "Reform of the Russian Branch of the Greek Church." It says that now it has been decided that the head of the Russian branch of the Greek Church shall be elected by the Holy Synod, the mischievous notion that the Emperor of Russia is the Head of that Church ex officio has been dissipated once and for ever. That idea has always prevailed in Japan as well as throughout Europe.

The Kōyō (Roman Catholic) writes very trenchantly, but not unreasonably, on a subject which can not but have attracted the anxious attention of well-wishers of Japan—the baseness and meanness of the yellow press. What fairly astonishes us is the eagerness with which highly educated and refined gentlemen and ladies in Japan read scurrilous paragraphs in papers which trade on scandal. Were the demand for these papers less they would gradually disappear. The credulity even of polished Japanese scholars in the matter of scandal is most surprising. The title of the Koye's article is "The Slaves of Public Opinion and the Harm they do." It begins by dwelling on the power of the press, for both good and evil. It then proceeds to show in what a flagrant manner certain newspapers abuse that power. Sensation and not truth is their object. In reporting crimes they purposely drag in the names of persons, who have not even a remote connection with the crimes, intending to convey the impression that the characters of such persons are not altogether above suspicion; thereby doing them much harm. When one comes to consider who the people are that are influenced by newspaper reports, we find, says the Koye, that for the most part they are uneducated, immoral and low class people, and hence persons of high character may treat their opinions with indifference.* As regards converts belonging to our Church, continues the Koye, they have the consolation that comes from the approval of their own consciences, from the feeling that they need not be ashamed before God. They never expect to be appreciated or understood by worldly people. They appeal to a higher standard than so-called public opinion, and occasional slander is rightly reckoned by them as part of the price they have to pay for separation from the world and its evil ways.

* Though thin be the texture of the blankets sent, Thick is the kindness (of the donors), and we forget the cold.

The Koye has another article entitled "How fickle is Man!" which discusses the various sorts of fickleness that exist. The desire to change the place of residence, to change friends, to change religion, and the like, all proceed from a certain shallowness of mind, from failure to realize the fact that strong minds make circumstances and environment their slaves, transforming conditions by the manner in which they are employed for the carrying out of some great purpose. The happiness that depends solely on environment is, says the Koye, a very poor kind of bliss. Satiety, ennui and the like show an imperfectly developed and an ill-instructed mind.

* Unfortunately the persons who in this country credit base slanders are by no means confined to the above classes. We have a sad instance of this before us now that relates to a foreigner but which we are not at liberty to mention here.—(WRITER OF SUMMARY.)

THE FOURTH OF JULY IN YOKOHAMA.

The morning of the Fourth of July opened in Yokohama with one of those heavy sea-fogs which are the sure precursors of a hot day, the sun not winning its way through before nine o'clock. The day was observed in the usual fashion, American firms closing doors all day, while other nationalities made it a half-holiday. Owing to the lamented death of Mr. Secretary Hay, the usual reception at the Consulate-General was not held, but the programme of baseball-match, sailing races, and fireworks was carried out in its entirety. All the same it was a very quiet Fourth of July, the noisy effervescent patriotism of former years being entirely absent; but that it was enjoyed by all who participated in the events of the day there could be no doubt, while as usual the bonds of fraternal union between American citizens and British subjects were strikingly emphasized. There being no American war-vessel in harbour no salute was possible, but at the Grand Hotel at noonday America's national air was played by the Marine Band from Yokosuka. The following music was played there during the day:

Noon.

Star Spangled Banner.

1. The Advance Guard March J. Ord Hume.
2. Jubel Ouverture F. von Flotow.
3. Donau Wellen Walzer J. Ivanovici.
4. Feierlicher Marsch aus "Die Ruinen von Athen." L. von Beethoven.

5. Grand Selection "Faust" Gonnod.
6. Ungarischer Tanz No. 6 Brahms.
7. Chor a. d. Schöpfung Haydn.
8. Galop In Thunder and Lightning J. Strauss.

Washington Post March.

EVENING.

Star Spangled Banner.

1. "When the moon with glory brightens" March. J. Arbuckle.
2. Ouverture z. Festspiel König Stephan. L. van Beethoven.
3. Ueber den Wellen Walzer J. Rosas.
4. Selection from the "Geisha" S. Jones.
5. Die Mühle im Schwarzwald, Ein Idyll. Rich. Fienberg.
6. Französische Lustspiel Ouverture Kéler Béla.
7. Toledo, Spanish Valse J. Ord Hume.
8. Finsterwalder Sängers Marsch R. Bachhofer.

THE BASEBALL MATCH.

Two representative American nines came together at the Cricket ground in the afternoon, one team being captained by that old veteran of the game, Mr. W. L. Merriman, the other being led by Mr. L. E. McChesney. There was a fair attendance, but by no means so large a gathering as the Fourth of July generally attracts: the sun was much in evidence, but a south-westerly breeze made things very pleasant; while at intervals the Town Band played a selection of melodies.

Merriman's team went first to bat and the opening inning, if it produced four runs was, also remarkable for a prolific crop of errors, the fielding being wild and uncertain, showing plainly what lack of practice entails. The first three runs—Webster, McGowan and Thorn—were made at the expense of 5 errors. Merriman was the first man to go under, putting up a fly which McEwen held at third. Next Wiedemann went out at first, but Correa ran home. Stornebrink being struck out, the side retired. Four runs.

McChesney's first inning was short. Edwards, the newcomer, was struck out, Brown was put out at first through some smart work in the field; Blake got down to second, and McChesney rapped out a fly which was not declined. No run.

Two runs came in the second inning, after Webster had been caught by Thompson in the far left field and Miller forced off second, Thorn bringing McGowan home on the first base hit of the match and then sliding over the plate himself before the field had recovered themselves. Messer spoiled his own chances by batting the ball on to his foot. Two runs.

Ill-luck pursued McChesney's men, for although at one time all bases were filled, nobody got home. It was now the turn of Merriman to have a put down on the score, their opponents by this time having got used to their positions and playing better together, beside throwing in more carefully. McChesney's side again said ditto when they came to bat.

The fourth inning opened with Merriman leading by 6 runs to nothing, and before it closed he had piled up 3 more, Thorn, Correa and Merriman crossing the plate in the sequel of some amusing play. When McChesney's men went to bat a stern determination to do or die rested on their brows and their long-suffering patience and dogged perseverance,—not to mention some errors in the field—enabled them to score their first run, Thompson being the hero of the moment.

Two runs only were made in the fifth inning, and these were placed to the credit of Webster and McGowan, who both came in on a hit placed nicely in the right field by Correa. The opening of the second half of this inning saw Thorn, the catcher, badly hit, but after a few minutes he pluckily resumed his mask and pad and had the satisfaction of seeing his opponents retired for nothing.

Half the game was now over and it looked as if Merriman's team had a dead easy thing in hand; they had 11 runs to the others 1. But a change came over the spirit of the play and the last four innings saw McChesney bunch ten runs, while the leaders only knocked up 2. At the seventh inning, Correa relieved Brown as pitcher and this may have influenced the score a bit. Anyhow the game ended in a less over-whelming victory than the backers of Merriman's team at one time expected. Official score:—

SAILING RACES.

The weather conditions on Tuesday were most favourable for the yacht races. A good sailing breeze from the south came up shortly after the tiffin hour, and lasted until all the races were over.

The 39 Raters' race came first on the programme, and invited more than the usual amount of interest, as the latest addition to the fleet, Capt. Weston's new Kingfisher, was to make her debut. Mary, as usual, was ready, and Maid Marion, in charge of Capt. Ekstrand, made her first appearance in a race this season. The three yachts were under way some time before the preparatory gun; in fact the starter's watch must have been about 8 minutes behind standard time, as all the races were started late. The three 39 raters crossed the line at the same time on getting the signal to go, Maid Marion to windward, Mary to leeward, and Kingfisher in the middle. No spinnakers were set for the run out to the harbour entrance, where Mary had a lead of about half a minute. Expectant eyes were watching the three to see them settle down on the leg to the Lightship, but all hopes of an interesting race were speedily shattered, as Kingfisher ran on to the submerged end of the breakwater, and brought up with such a jerk that one of the jaws of her gaff carried away. Early last season, Nina hit this obstruction in a race, and the other owners were warned about it, but Spray, and then the old Kingfisher struck in the same place in subsequent races. It is a great pity that Capt. Weston overlooked his previous experience, as with the new Kingfisher put out of the race so early, it was robbed of one of its principal features of interest, the trying of the new yacht against Mary. But more disappointment was to follow, as very shortly after turning on the wind, Maid Marion's topmast went, and thus the race was a safe thing for the Mary. The Maid cleared away the wreckage, and sailed right round the course.

Mary takes the American Minister's Cup, and her owner adds one more to his long list of Fourth of July trophies.

The Cruising Class started at 1.30. Wanderer was an absentee, but the other four made a good start, Nina and Asagao leading from Kathleen and Surprise. Nina led at the Harbour Entrance, but misjudging the tide in making for the bows of the gunboat lying outside, lost some time to Asagao, and the latter, passing astern of the obstruction, got a lead of several lengths, and rounded the Quarantine ship first. Asagao travelled very well, and it is evident that the recent increase in her mainsail of 10 per cent. on her whole sail area, has improved her in a moderate breeze. Working the Honmoku shore very close, she drew away in the lead. The tide was running very strongly, and it was interesting to note how the boats lost heavily on every tack off shore. Asagao turned the Widow buoy with some minutes in hand from Nina, and spinnakers were set to starboard for the run back to the Quarantine ship. Surprise was doing very well as far as the Widow buoy, and seemed to have her time in hand from Kathleen. After gybing at the Quarantine ship, Nina's topmast went, a stray sando taken on board as a help having set up the preventer back-stay foul of the cross-trees. Nina then retired from the race, which Asagao seemed to have quite safe. But on rounding the buoy off Tachibana, Asagao got into a bald patch, and for some minutes was hardly moving, while Surprise and Kathleen were coming up rapidly. This was very hard lines on Asagao, and shews one of the worst points of racing on handicaps or eventime allowance. The yachts, widely separated, may be sailing in entirely different winds. Kathleen eventually finished just ahead of Surprise, and wins the prize with some minutes to spare on her handicap, which, it may be noted, was nearly three times Club time allowance from Asagao. Official times:—

The 21 Raters started at 2 p.m. and ten of them crossed the line to a very good start. The new scow, Aimée, assumed the lead early in the race, and kept it throughout, increasing her distance from start to finish. Pete, for some unexplained reason, seemed right out of it. Valkyrien, on the other hand, made a better shewing than she has done in any other race this season, and finished well ahead of Sunbeam, Winsome and Edna, which were very close together. THE FIRE WORKS.

In the evening the Bund beyond the Boathouse was packed by dense crowds, while the surface of the harbour between the Pier and Breakwater was covered with boats and launches, yachts and sampans all gaily hung with coloured lanterns. The spacious verandahs of the Grand Hotel were filled to their utmost capacity with guests, for whose delectation the Yokosuka Band was playing. At half past nine the firework display began and lasted for an hour. The set pieces included "Uncle Sam and Old Glory," and a capital portrait of President Roosevelt. The Band played "The star spangled banner" when the President was illuminated, and followed this with the Kimi-ga-yo, which brought the proceedings to an end.

The Korean Government has decided to raise a loan of two million yen in Japan, through the First Bank and the Bank of Industry.

AFTER THE MUKDEN CATASTROPHE.

(By P. KRASNOFF TRANSLATED FOR THE "JAPAN MAIL" FROM DER DEUTSCHE.)

I.—NIPPED PLANS.

A future description by the General Staff of our campaign will have to admit that on paper Kuropatkin's plans could face any criticism. Nor was there any want of bravery to carry out these plans. Notwithstanding this, however, the success was on the side of the Japanese, who seemed to work on the chess-board of the war like veritable mind-readers. There is something mysterious, something depressing, in this. The more or less skilful scouting by their cavalry cannot explain this, much less the Chinese spies who always see "ten thousand men." But the fact remains.

When Kuropatkin offered his first battle at Liaoyang his plan was to lure General Kuroki across the Taitseho and then crush him. His army-order on that occasion was a model which might be used in a military text-book. But just at the moment when this plan was to be consummated it was nipped. The 17th army corps, which was to take part in the operations toward the east, had to be moved to the southern front because the Japanese suddenly appeared there in great force and vigor.

The same has been the case in all subsequent fighting. Kuropatkin always initiated the plans, for at no time during the campaign did he see any advantage in taking the defensive. But instead of a parade there always came a blow from the Japanese. As I have already given you a description of the sight of a fleeing army I need not go into details save that these were more terribly grand. But a word with regard to the cause why our plan failed.

On the 23rd of February Kuropatkin announced the plan that Sandepu was to be stormed by the right wing, but without determining the time when this was to take place. Behind the front convenient roads had been constructed for the purpose of connecting the proposed centres. Before the tents of the Red Cross hundreds of tea-cups were set up for the purpose of giving refreshment to the wounded, and a long line of wagons were drawn up, lined with blankets and furs, in which to transport the sick and wounded, and at sheltered places warming-stations were established, with iron stoves, in order that the wounded might be kept from freezing while the doctors were attending to them.

But finally when all was ready for a night-attack on February 24th, and religious field services had been held in all parts, to prepare the men for the battle, it was discovered that within the past 48 hours the front of the enemy had been transformed into a veritable fort with heavy guns along the whole line of our right wing, against which every attack would have proved a failure. At the same time information came from the left wing that the Japanese had begun to attack in overwhelming force. Our intentions were upset.

Before Sandepu we broke up. In the night in which we were to storm the place we packed and loaded in fever haste. The 9th division of sharpshooters were the first to march off, then the whole first army corps left in order to reach the eastern mountains by a forced march where the left wing was being hard pressed. Our plan of attack had failed. But now it was thought to turn from the defensive to the offensive. There was talk among the men that Linevitch had said, "By to-morrow evening we are in Liaoyang."

Just then the first report came that the Japanese were encircling us in the west. Two Japanese cavalry brigades with mountain artillery and machine guns were driving northward with "the speed of jinrikisha runners" as the message said. For the first time during the war our opponents appeared with a large force of cavalry. In order to obstruct the course of this dangerous cavalry division our centre turned toward the right and the result was that our centre became too thin. On the thirteenth day of the battle, in the midst of a terrible sandstorm, the enemy broke through the centre and it became impossible to check the flight.

II.—A "QUIET" DAY.

Verechtschagin originated the shocking illustration to the telegram, "At the Shipka pass all is quiet." In our Manchurian campaign there were also days between battles in which nothing but that laconic report was sent to Petersburg, "At the front no change, only a few shots were exchanged." That is very quieting news when read in the papers. But at the front the impression is sometimes very different. On the 28th of February I rode across the country, in company with a Transbaikalian Cossack to the village of Chanchepu. At regular intervals the enemy sent his thunderous greetings. The six inch shells exploded with a terrible noise and smoke, and tore fearful holes in the ground. The soldiers then issued forth from their bombproof caves, to gather fragments as keepsakes. Some however, paid no attention to them at all. In their tea-kettles water was boiling and there was smoke in their kitchens. Some were chopping wood, others were hanging up wash. A few hundred meters further back, however, some wounded were being unloaded from open transport carts. From one place came terrible screams from a wounded man who was delirious and a half colony of a field bakery was standing about staring at this candidate for the grave. The less severely wounded quivered and their features presented a sad spectacle of hopelessness, save the satisfaction of knowing that they would now be sent away from this butcher-field. They were for the most part elderly men of the militia, farmers with unkempt beards. After hearing these moans and this crying one no longer enjoyed the bracing air, one felt like choking from this terrible odour of blood. Even the light of the sun became dim. About three hundred steps behind the village is a little brick house which belongs to a railway man, in which the colonel of a regiment was staying with his adjutant and an artillery officer was submitting a report. Suddenly a fearful shock was felt from the explosion of a six inch shell near by. "That is always the case between one and four o'clock," said the colonel to me in an indifferent manner, "yesterday it smashed all the windows." Now to our right, then to the left of our frail building death dug its talons into the earth. Possibly in the next moment it would strike into our midst. But life passed on in its usual course, in the kitchen dinner was being prepared and at the side-table marmalade and other sweets were being unpacked from the officers' stores. We just then again heard the ring of death of a shell pass by. "Passed over," said the commander in a pleasant way. As I rode away with the adjutant another deafening report was heard, stones and earth flew into the air, only fifty steps from us a shell had exploded, and a distant "bumm" responded. Everywhere little white and gray clouds could be seen. It was entertaining, but it was very different from sitting at the opera and listening to a ballet. We were in no hurry, why should we? We spoke of indifferent matters. We travelled about 500 steps during which time about ten shells exploded right and left of us. One of them meant especially. Its copper ring had become unfastened and it flew in sharp sounds past my head. The way seemed rather long to us. But our people at home in Russia are glad because this day is "quiet."

III.—MONGOLIAN SUPPLIES.

The fighting around Mukden required of the medical staff and the nurses almost superhuman exertions. For the purpose of making room at least for the wounded it became necessary to transport 40,000 men from the Harbin and other hospitals to European Russia. This was necessary even if there had been a sufficient number of beds. In the present state of the war the absence of each unnecessary eater is a gain. The anxiety of the commissary is an enervating spectre. Vladivostok, which in consequence of the Japanese blockade receives nothing from the sea, has to depend altogether on the hinterland and the Amur valley for its supplies. But even there there is no abundance. For this reason the city governments of Chabarovsk and Blagoveshchensk have forbidden all exportation of flour, meat and other food-stuffs. If we capture a load it is at once confiscated. The whole territory at the best has only enough to supply itself, and the army cannot count on obtaining any material supplies from Siberia. The army has to depend on the rich supplies from Mongolia, besides what the very few trains bring from Europe. The one single track railway is so fully occupied with the transportation of troops and munitions that comparatively very little can be done in the way of bringing provisions and forage. Nor could this line daily bring enough to supply the wants. The meat supply of the army alone requires one thousand head of cattle daily. Then the fodder for about five hundred thousand horses and other animals. Of the latter many perish in the traces while dragging their burdens through knee-deep Manchurian mud. During the retreats from Liaoyang and Mukden these losses were something enormous. This requires new supplies. In some places it required 20 horses to bring one field-gun into its proper place. For this supply, also, Mongolia is indispensable to us. Already before the war General Tschichagoff, the chief of the frontier troops of the Trans-Amur district, had opened for us the Mongolian market. Our relations with the Mongolian princes are of the best and the business transactions with these thoroughly honest Mongolians work perfectly smoothly. Now, however, we are threatened by the danger that this source of supply may be cut off. This territory of eastern Mongolia is about 200 versts wide and 900 versts long,—along the Harbin-Ikao line and around Hailat, the capital of ten principalities. The governor, who is appointed by the Peking government, is merely president of the council of the ten princes to settle difficulties that may arise between them, and to communicate to them the wishes of the Chinese Government. He possesses no authority, initiates no new business, and only visits the district once a year and then submits a report to Peking. This more or less decorative officer, usually a Mongolian prince, would scarcely be in the position to hinder our cattle trade. However, what this old and ever stupidly smiling Hailat-Wan cannot do may possibly be done some time by the Japanese.

Three small princes reside in the north-east corner of Mongolia, about a day's journey from Tsitsikar, Harbin and Bodune, who are friendly disposed toward us, although the son-in-law of one of them lives in Japan and at one time a Russian officer was murdered here. But unfortunately the supply of live-stock is not abundant in this part of the country. Further south, along the Mongolian tributaries of the Liachio, there is an abundance of fine stock. . . . Were the Japanese not largely rice-eaters they could already have drained this market by buying there and thereby cutting us off.

It is, therefore, not correct to compare this situation with that of 1812 and to advise us to lure the Japanese further inland. The further we retreat the more we endanger the existence of the army. Everybody knows this now. The next great battle must decide the fate of the campaign.

THE YOKOSUKA PRIZE COURT.

A decision given in the appeal of Messrs. Charles Nelson & Co., San Francisco, shippers of cargo by the captured ship Tacoma, is published in the Official Gazette of June 30th. The cargo, consisting of 8,990 casks of corned beef, 15 pieces and 9 bundles of bar steel and iron, and a case containing parts of machinery, was confiscated on the ground that the goods were contraband under the convention concluded in 1856 at Paris. According to Lieutenant Ukawa, Commander of the Japanese warship Takachiho, which captured the Tacoma, the captain of the American steamer and others, says the Official Gazette, these goods were shipped at Seattle under instructions of Major-General Dessino, a Russian agent at Shanghai, and the steamer left the American port on January 5th for Vladivostok. When the vessel approached the Okhotsk Sea, she was ice-bound, and drifted for about ten days. Escaping from the danger, she resumed her voyage on March 13th, but was captured on the morning of the following day 40 nautical miles southwest of Shibetsu point, Kurile islands.

MEMORIES AND RECOLLECTIONS.

This is Memorial Day, when flowers, music, and eloquence fill the streets and halls, give the grave a sunny and floral side, and attract around the soldiers' monuments and in the elect spots of the cemeteries, a reverent but happy throng. Somehow or another it makes the old veterans young again, and, though their lessening numbers make eloquent pictures of "the march of time," yet the large number of Sons of Veterans, members of the Womens Relief Corps, boys, and girls and children create a buoyancy of spirit. Some of us, who were boys when we dressed in blue and carried a musket in the regiments of Uncle Sam and knew something of real war, can scarcely believe that so many years have passed by since the nation struggled so strenuously for its existence. In later years, and especially since the change of name from Decoration Day to Memorial Day, there has been a tendency to give the celebration more of a religious spirit and aspect. The attendance in the churches with divine worship and a sermon by the various Posts of the Grand Army is now a settled custom.

It was fully remarked, by ex-Ambassador Andrew D. White, in his address before the Phi Beta Kappa Society (the first Japanese member of which was Kusakabe Toyo, of Fukui) at Cornell University, last Wednesday evening, that the poem, "The Blue and the Gray," had done more to unite the North the South again in unity than all the legislation of Congress and the orations and speeches of a generation. Judge Francis Finch, who is my neighbor, around the corner in Fountain Place, is still one of the lecturers in the Cornell Law School, though retired from the full professorship. We have still in our town one of the survivors of the Mexican War, who rode in the famous charge of Captain May's dragoons, that charged a battery and sabred the gunners, though no American Tennyson has yet arisen to glorify the achievement. We have also still living with us, in the Old Ladies' Home, the grand-daughter of Patrick Henry. Only a short time ago, we buried with military honors the hero, Barnard, who carried the flag up the heights of Lookout Mountain. Hence we do not lack for heroes, nor, let us hope, that we do not fail in appreciation of them. But a few months ago there was reared and unveiled in our town, by Governor Odell, an artistic bronze tablet, commemorating our local touch with the Revolution. As part of General Sullivan's great expedition, which destroyed the Indian Confederacy of the Six Nations and opened western New York to the settlement of white men, two regiments of Continentals, the Third New Hampshire (under Col. Dearborn, after whom Chicago's first settlement was named) and the Fourth Pennsylvania, under Col. Butler, marched through this place. It was all forest in 1779, with Indian villages along Lake Cayuga and the streams emptying into it, but the glorious waterfalls (one of them "our local Niagara") and enchanting scenery were felt and noticed in their diaries by the Continental officers.

The news of Admiral Togo's great victory in the Straits of Tsushima comes to us in good season. From the American point of view, it seems to be the establishment in the world's politics of the American doctrine, so clear in all the history of the United States from 1784 to 1905, that the Asiatic nations are to be treated as brothers, to be taught, helped, healed, and allowed to work out their own salvation. That this has been the American doctrine is manifest to all students of American diplomacy, and even more so to those who know the story of the sentiment and conviction of the people of the United States, which requires our Government to be the nation's servant, and not its master, nor even its leader, except as it is bidden. Within a few months of the definitive treaty of peace between Great Britain and the United States, trade was begun with China and henceforth began the steady movement of the sailor and explorer, the merchant, missionary, physician, teacher, and adviser for mutual benefit and for the uplifting of the nations of the East.

I have been recently visiting the birthplace and burial sites of John Adams and John Quincy Adams at Quincy, Mass. and of William H. Seward at Auburn, N. Y., and of Millard Fillmore at Summer Hill, N. Y., for lectures before the historical societies in these places. Some re-reading of their writings has shown how clear was the vision of the Adamsses, concerning the part which the United States had to play with the nations bordering the Pacific Ocean. Few perhaps, even of American people realize how, along with the friendly feeling for Russia, was the peremptory demand and determination that Russia should not dominate the American continent, or even limit the reasonable action of the United States in the Pacific region. Indeed it seems that the first clear expression in action, of the Monroe Doctrine, was in the utterance of John Quincy Adams, when Secretary of State under President Monroe, to Baron de Tuijl, the Tsar's envoy, that "We should contest the right of Russia to any territorial establishment on this continent, and that we should assume distinctly the principle that the American continents are no longer subjects for any new European colonial establishment." He thus, unconsciously perhaps, helped to secure the peaceful progress of China and Japan through American influences. By diplomacy alone he forced back the Tsar's demand to parallel of north latitude No. 55, thus preventing the Russian advance southward in America. Later diplomacy gained the Oregon country (the first missionary, educational, and industrial influences from the eastern United States starting directly from Ithaca, through Parker and Whitman). Under Seward, after California had been gained and the Pacific whitened by our whaling and trading ships, Alaska and the Aleutian Islands, with a vast front on the Pacific, were secured.

The incentive to tap the markets of Asia and awaken the hermit nations to commerce came when we were still a very scattered people, with only a thin population on the Pacific slope. A few weeks ago, I visited the birthplace of Millard Fillmore, which is but a few miles to the northwest of Ithaca, and realized more clearly the succession of ideas and the uniform policy of Adams, Monroe, Fillmore, McKinley and Roosevelt; for if there is one thing sure in American politics to-day uniting all parties, it is the determination of Americans to uphold the Monroe Doctrine on the American continents and to keep "the open door" in Asia.

Baron Kaneko spoke before Cornell University, in Barnes Hall, last Tuesday evening, on "The Problem of the Far East." He was the guest of Professor Jenks and of President Schuman, both recently in Japan. At the luncheon given in his honour at which I was one of the guests, I sat beside him. To the delight and gratification of a large audience, he spoke fluently, without manuscript, reviewing the history and illuminating the present. With deliberate utterance, but with the right word and gesture he held his audience over an hour, his personality making a profound impression. His insistence was that Japan the exponent and champion of Anglo-Saxon civilization in Asia, and that if Japan were defeated in the war with Russia no Oriental nation need henceforth attempt to enter upon the pathway of modern freedom. His antitheses were dramatic, his generalizations lucid, and his readings and translations of fresh transcripts from the newspapers of his own country were mightily enjoyed. He did not argue, but as ex-Ambassador White (whose autobiography, by the way, has just been published in two portly volumes) said, "Everything he uttered was solidly true." Dr. White's arraignment of Russia and of the present Czar, though very severe, are but the expression of his feelings when secretary and later as U.S. envoy in Russia, and of his utterances ever since, when, as a private citizen, he has been free to make the latter.

Commodore Perry is not likely to be forgotten, either at home or in Japan, even if his grandsons in New York were not among the ablest capitalists and promoters of financial and engineering enterprises. The directors of the Old South Historical work in Boston have issued in pamphlet form a generous excerpt from the narrative of the expedition. Furthermore if one were to suppose that Baron Kaneko glorified the Commodore unduly as the beginner of Japan's modern life, then perhaps these final words of Perry, statesman and man of science, as well as officer, may be pertinent to-day:

"We may hope to see the future negotiations of commercial treaties more and more liberal, for the benefit not of ourselves only but of all the maritime powers of Europe, for the advancement of Japan, and for the upward progress of our common humanity. It would be a reproach to Christendom now to force Japan to relapse into her cheerless and unprogressive state of unnatural isolation. She is the younger sister in the circle of commercial nations: let those who are older kindly take her by the hand and aid her tottering steps until she has reached a vigor that will enable her to walk firmly in her own strength."

The Century Magazine will contain, in its July or August issue, a paper on the Perry Expedition, by Rev. J. R. Sewall, of Bangor, Me. who was Captain's Clerk in the great expedition. Mr. Speiden, now in the United States Custom House, in New York, writes me that there are no fewer than seventeen survivors, officers, sailors, colored men, and boys, though Commodore Somerville Nicholson, U.S.N., who died a few days ago reduces the number by one. Mr. Sewall has also written a book on "The Peaceful Armada," which will be out before the end of the year.

The memory of Townsend Harris is also kept green in other ways than through biography. At the farewell ceremonies in the chapel of the old building of the College of the City of New York, his name and work were glorified. Townsend Harris may be called the founder of the Free Academy, from which the College of the City of New York grew. An admirable portrait, painted when he was president of the Board of Education of the City of New York, still hangs in the auditorium of the magnificent new building of the Board of Education on the corner of Park Avenue and 59th street. In the new college building, at St. Nicholas Avenue and 137th street, the proud home of the College of the City of New York, Townsend Harris' name will have fresh honors.

At Elmira, N.Y., a few miles southwest of us in New York's glorious lake region, "the first college for women, chartered to confer degrees for work equivalent to that offered in colleges for men," was founded in 1855. Samuel Robbins Brown, the well-known missionary to Japan, was its intellectual father. His mother, Phoebe Hinsdale Brown, one of our earliest American hymn writers, longed during all her life to see such an institution arise, and she lived to see it. At the recent annual lunch, at Hotel Manhattan in New York, of the Elmira College Club, Dr. Brown's name was the one celebrated with highest honors. This successful precedent at Elmira prepared the way for the more famous Vassar College at which the wives of Marshal Oyama and Admiral Uriu have been educated, and from which graduate in June of this year more than one daughter of men long interested in Japan. Elmira College calls back all her daughters to celebrate in June the semi-centennial under President McKenzie. Among the hale members of the faculty, is the Nestor, Dr. Cowles, who for over thirty-five years has been in active service in the college. The Professor of Science, Dr. R. Ford, who died last November, spent many a year in Japan and much of it in Yedo, while Townsend Harris was American Minister.

In this association of ideas, we recall that professor Lewis Du Pont Syle, (son of the late Rev. Edwin S. Syle, so long chaplain in China and Japan) died a few months ago. Professor Syle, after graduation from Yale college and a consularship at Funchal, Madeira, taught English literature at the Colorado State University, and later at the University of California, at Berkeley, Cal. He edited, with scholarly notes, several volumes of English masterpieces of literature. Among his own compositions was a story exploiting the idea that somewhere in Japan a native cult in memory of Will Adams still kept alive the language and traditions at the great pilot. When told of Anjin cho in Tokyo and the annual pilgrimages to the tomb of Will Adams at Yokosuka, he was both surprised and pleased. One of Mr. Syle's dramatic pieces was handsomely staged and played a short while in Syracuse, N.Y., but proved a financial failure. Mr. Syle left a widow and an adult daughter. W.E.G.

YACHTING.

A race was scheduled on Saturday for the 39 raters, and it was expected that the new King-fisher would make her debut. But at 2 p.m. there was no wind, so that the race had to be postponed.

The Mosquito Yacht Club race to be started at 2.15 was also declared off. By 2.30 a faint N.E. wind had sprung up as the 21 Raters made a start for their race over the Mandarin Bluff and Tachibana course. Six of them started, but the wind was so faint that the Larks, starting at 2.45, were close on top of them. The wind improved later, and promised a good race. Edna was in the lead at the Quarantine ship, and turned the buoy off Tachibana some distance ahead. She increased her lead on the run back towards Mandarin Bluff, but the buoy was not to be found. It appears that some sendo had gone out to bring the buoy back, thinking that the boats had not to round it again. The race had therefore to be abandoned: very hard luck for Edna, as she was so far ahead that barring accidents the race was hers.

Four Larks raced over the Tachibana and Mandarin Bluff course, and the finish was very close between three of them.

Times taken as they crossed the line were:—

CORRESPONDENCE.

AN ARMY SURGEON'S APPEAL FROM MANCHURIA.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

438, Furu Skinyashiki, Kumamoto.
SIR,—Dr. Hayakawa, Chief Secretary of the Military Base Hospital, at Liaoyang, is anxious to start two magazines in connection with it. Liaoyang being a Base Hospital, all cases are sent there till destination is determined upon. He wrote in April that in March, 53,000 men passed through the Hospital and very wearisome they found it. He has sent the following appeal to me for translation and begs that it may appear in all the English newspapers in the country.

I shall be greatly obliged if you will kindly find space for it in your paper. Dr. Hayakawa will attend to the translation of literary contributions, when sent in English, if any friends are kind enough to respond.

Believe me, very sincerely yours,

H. RIDDELL.

(TRANSLATION OF DR. HAYAKAWA'S APPEAL.)

The war between Russia and Japan being one of the greatest the world has seen, it is inevitable that we should have a multitude of wounded and invalid soldiers. The military hospital in Manchuria, in which I am serving, is always full of them and so are the others. No effort is spared to meet their physical needs and to soothe their bodily pain. But

There is one very grave problem which it is beyond our power to solve; I mean the spiritual consolation of these inmates of our hospitals in Manchuria.

Spiritual felicity is a thing one naturally longs for even under the best of conditions. Is it to be wondered at then that these poor soldiers, who are confined in hospitals in a strange land, so far away from their dear ones, should yearn for something more than drugs or food? In fact, those men become peculiarly thoughtful and keenly susceptible to religious and moral influences, and many of them seem as if their whole souls had been suddenly awakened by their recent baptism of fire.

It is exceedingly regrettable that, being so far away from our homeland, we lack the facilities to meet this spiritual demand. Newspapers, magazines, phonographs, &c., all fill their own place, but still there is a gap which we propose to fill by publishing two magazines of about 200 pages each, one of which is to be called "Consolation for the Sick and Wounded," and the other "The Soldiers' Companion." For materials we have applied to prominent men of our own nationality in various departments, from whom we are receiving encouraging answers.

Now we come to you, our foreign friends, asking for literary help in this enterprise. To make our needs clearer, they are:

1.—Articles on religious, moral, or educational subjects; stories, biographies or poems; pictures; photographs or other works of art will be gratefully accepted.

2.—Contributions need not be those expressly prepared for us; old compositions or clippings will be very useful.

3.—All contributions are to be sent to

Dr. Kojiro Hayakawa, Army Surgeon,
In charge of Yokosuka Military Hospital,
Kanagawa Prefecture, Japan.

From whence they will be forwarded to me in Manchuria.

SCHOOL FOR YOKOHAMA.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—If there are any gentlemen really willing to cooperate in establishing a well-equipped public school to be conducted on practical non-sectarian lines and to be thrown open, like similar British and American institutions, to children of all nationalities without invidious and narrow minded distinctions of class or creed, I can assure you that the enterprise will not fall through from lack of money.

I have authority for stating that a considerable endowment fund will be forthcoming for a school formed as a juridical person and placed under the control of an efficient board of managers, but the would-be donors object to endow any institution of a private nature or one which is going to close its doors to any particular section of the community. Pro bono publico is their motto, and they will not put their hands in their pockets to foster a half-fledged scheme to provide for the wants of any particular class or race, although of course they wish as a primary object to provide for the education of the offspring of foreigners sojourning in this land.

The money can be raised with very little difficulty, but not one penny unless the school is founded on the most liberal and enlightened principles.

Yours truly,
J. E. DE BECKER.
Yokohama, June 30th, 1905.

A CAUTION.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—If any of your readers should receive a call from a Mr. D. Masutani, who professes to be collecting subscriptions for the "Gunjin Izoku Kyugo Gikwai," of 15, Tsukiji, Sancho-me Tokyo, I would recommend them to accommodate the above-named gentleman with a chair, while they make enquiries at the Kagacho Police Station as to his bona-fides.

Should the result of such enquiries prove satisfactory subscribers will feel all the happier in knowing that their charity is not misapplied.

I am, yours faithfully,
ALAN OWSTON.

AIMLESS AND USELESS CONTROVERSY.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Your readers are probably quite sick of the Berry v. the "Writer of the Article" controversy. In his instructive essay on the "Art of Controversy" Schopenhauer argues that in disputes there is nothing that answers better than unmitigated "cheek." Mr. Berry is evidently of this opinion. Being challenged in my last letter to show wherein my articles were anti-Christian, instead of replying to that challenge, he goes meandering off into a confused, confusing and dry discourse about the Moral Law. He not alarmed, kind reader, I won't follow him a single step in this direction. Having no argument ad rem and none ad hominem, not being personally known to him, he tries to create an argument ad auditores. He says of me, "Perhaps it will do him good if I tell him that his knowledge of the Christian religion is exceedingly shallow." To persons who know the "Writer of the Article" this remark will afford great amusement. It happens that the "Writer of the Article" passed, many years ago, no less than 9 examinations in Christian Theology at a first class Church of England Theological Seminary, that he was subsequently examined in Christian Theology and passed by one of the greatest modern theologians of Europe, the late Dr. Lightfoot, who was then examining chaplain to Archbishop Tait, that he was ordained a deacon in the Church of England, and subsequently, after passing another examination in theology, was ordained a presbyter in the same Church. Now, Sir, of course Mr. Berry in reply to this may fill a couple of columns in trying to demonstrate that compared with American Methodists our great English theologians are nowhere.

Having resided a long time in this country I have among my personal friends a great many veteran missionaries, Methodists and others. Not one of them has yet ventured to hint that a man who spent at least 20 consecutive years in the study of Christian Theology is ignorant of the subject. Audaciously, with Mr. Berry, is one of the finest of virtues. Ever since Mr. Berry undertook to enlighten the public on the Christian religion he has done nothing but charge at windmills. To master the point of view of an opponent is something of which Mr. Berry seems quite incapable. Hence I decline to waste any more time in carrying on an utterly "aimless and useless controversy." Neither the articles in question nor the writer of them has been discredited one iota by the prosy, pointless disquisitions of the Rev. A. D. Berry. If that gentleman is so very anxious to have a Theological tilt with the "Writer of the Article" I am prepared to devote an hour to demolishing his arguments at any time. But let neither of us bore newspaper readers any more. The wisest sort of Missionaries don't back writers of the Berry type.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.,

THE "WRITER OF THE ARTICLE."

July 2nd, 1905.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—The writer of this letter would like to be clearly understood that in criticising what he believes to be false dogmas, he criticises the dogmas per se, and not the people who perhaps conscientiously believe in them. If there are people who conscientiously believe in a god who delights in the smell of roast beef and hot mutton, or in Mumbo Jumbo, or in a totem pole, the writer of this letter is disposed to respect if not the beliefs at least the believers, in so far as they are honest and sincere. When, however, a dogmatic belief is advocated in the correspondence columns of the public unsectarian press, it becomes another matter altogether.

In a letter which appeared in your issue of June 30, A.D.B. recommends us to find out what Christian people really believe. The writer of this letter has been at considerable pains to do so. Of course I cannot know exactly what or how many people A.D.B. will admit to be Christians in addition to himself. One can only take the understanding of the word Christian that is generally accepted. If then, we examine the beliefs held by Christian people we find them to be a trifling conflicting. For example, take one of the largest branches of the Christian Church, the Greek Church, the church which is doing so much for human progress and enlightenment in Russia! The members of this church would no doubt be very indignant if we denied that they were Christians, and yet their beliefs differ very materially from those of A.D.B.

If we turn to what is known as the Protestant church and the older church our difficulties increase. For we have on the one hand those who believe in the divinity of Christ; and on the other hand we have the Unitarians who do not. We have the Calvinists who believe that a few, a predestined few, will be saved; and we have the more liberal Universalists who believe that all will be saved. We have others who believe that when we die we shall lie in the grave until what is known as "the judgement day," and that when this great day comes a trumpet will be sounded, and "we shall all rise again." Then our little party, that is the sheep, will be separated from the other party, that is, of course, the goats. Then again we have others who hold that the souls of men, after death, will go neither directly to heaven nor directly to hell, but will pass through a state known as purgatory, which exactly corresponds to what is described as Kama Loka (or the place of desire) in the Ancient Indian books. On the other hand there are others who maintain that the condemned murderer who has committed every crime on the calendar if he will only "accept salvation" may swing from the scaffold directly into heaven and have all his sins "washed away." Of course the effects of his sins are not washed away and many innocent people may suffer from these effects. That, however, is a mere detail. In addition we have the "Christian Scientists," and the "Mormons," and the "Quakers," and the "Shakers," and the "Calithumpians." We have the "Free Kirk" and the "Wee Kirk" (and how they do love each other!). We have the Zionites under the able spiritual guidance of Elijah (known to the ungodly as John W. Dowie, of Chicago, Illinois.) And we have several hundred other varieties besides.

How then are we to decide which are the real Christians, and which are the true beliefs? Someone will perhaps reply that the criterion is the Bible. But unfortunately for this argument, all of the various conflicting bodies who are included in what is generally known as the Christian Church, are founded upon the Bible, which they interpret in various ways. On the other hand it may be maintained that whether these various claimants are Christians or not may be known by their works. Well, would any impartial person say that the work's of the Methodists, for instance, are in any way superior to those of, say, the Unitarians? Are the former more intelligent or better educated or better behaved than the latter? And yet from a conscientious study of the same Bible one believes that Jesus Christ was God and that he died "to save" mankind, and the other—the Unitarian—believes that Jesus Christ was born just as all other men are born; and that neither he nor anyone else died to save mankind. These beliefs are therefore diametrically opposite. And yet both Unitarians and Methodists, though each would probably deny the title to the other, call themselves, and are generally called, Christians.

Instead therefore of wasting more time in endeavouring to find out what Christian people believe, I will confine myself to what A.D.B. admits that he believes and in order not to in any way obscure the issue I will confine myself to one belief.

In my last letter I asked your correspondent A.D.B. if the dogma of hell and damnation is one of the dogmas that are to elevate the Eastern world. A.D.B. replies unhesitatingly "Yes." He says that he believes in eternal punishment, but that his belief is a "thousand celestial diameters" from the belief of the Scotch theologian that I quoted. This is so far satisfactory. It is gratifying to note that thanks to the efforts of troublesome critics like the writer of this letter—the temperature of hell has grown cooler and cooler. We must be thankful for small mercies and it is highly satisfactory to note on the authority of A.D.B. that we are not to be roasted—Scotch theologians to the contrary notwithstanding. We are not to be provided, as another theologian expressed it, "With asbestos-like souls which will burn for ever without being consumed." A.D.B. is comparatively generous, he says that we are only to be eternally punished. That's all. He doesn't say just how we are to be punished; but he says that we are to be separated from God. This, however, may not be such a serious deprivation; it depends on the kind of God that we are to be separated from. But even allowing that we are to be separated from A.D.B. and his God, what then? Are we to just sit twiddling our thumbs throughout the ages?

When A.D.B. talks about his fellow creatures being punished eternally, does he even faintly realize what he means? Does he not think that peradventure after, say two or three million years of punishment, the poor wretch might be given another chance? If A.D.B. thinks so would it not be well to candidly admit it? If he says that this point has not been revealed, doesn't he think that it is high time it were revealed?

If, however, A.D.B. really believes in the infernal dogma, if he really believes that any unfortunate human beings are to be punished eternally the only answer is that he and all who hold to this morbid belief simply classify themselves. They classify themselves as people who have lost that sense of common justice that every sane and normal man should possess.

In conclusion the writer of this letter would like to add that he has a profound respect for all great teachers who have tried to benefit mankind, whether in India, in China, or in Palestine. He has quite as much respect for the character of Jesus Christ as A.D.B., and perhaps more. And he believes that by no one would the poor, emasculated parody that masquerades in the name of Christianity be more utterly and sternly repudiated than by the original teacher himself.

Yours respectfully,

A MAN IN THE STREET.

AN INEXPENSIVE EXCURSION.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—My wife and myself wished to take a trip to Shinji but some friends of ours learned from a guide that the cost of the trip would be more than 100 yen per head. Notwithstanding this we came without a guide and found that the charges on the route were all fixed and the rates were moderate. I would like to mention this as, given fine weather, this is one of the most delightful trips imaginable and the views of Fuji from Shoji over the lake are very fine.

Yours truly,
WILLIAM NELSON.

CLEARER SKIES.

London, June 29.

The general feeling in Europe is that the sting has been taken out of the Moorish question by the conciliatory tone of Germany, while it is also pointed out that it was Morocco not Germany which proposed the conference; therefore the latter cannot limit the discussion. Germany also displays no disposition to utilize the Moroccan difficulty for her own purposes, but is willing to meet the views of France.

THE ARISUGAWAS IN ENGLAND.

The Times, in a leading article welcoming Prince and Princess Arisugawa, says that no news would be more welcome to the British nation than the extension of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance.

Prince Arisugawa has authorized the statement that he and the Princess are greatly enjoying the visit. They are highly gratified at the welcome extended to them on all sides.

In the afternoon they visited the Admiralty and in the evening were present at a party given at the Japanese Legation by Viscount Hayashi.

London, June 30.

Fifteen hundred persons attended Viscount Hayashi's reception at the Japanese Legation in London. It was a brilliant function, and practically the Japanese colony in London, and the leaders of society were present.

Prince Arisugawa visited an exhibition of old Japanese arms, organized by the Japan Society. King Edward, who contributed a number of arms, arrived shortly after, and accompanied His Highness round the exhibition.

London, July 1.

Prince and Princess Arisugawa last evening attended a ball given in their honour by the Duke and Duchess of Westminster at Grosvenor House. King Edward and Queen Alexandra and other Royalties were present.

London, July 2.

Prince and Princess Arisugawa attended the Opera yesterday.

Later.

The luncheon at the Mansion House in honour of Prince and Princess Arisugawa was a most brilliant function. Two hundred and fifty guests were present, including Lord Lansdowne, the Cabinet Ministers, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, the Chiefs of the Army and Navy, bankers and merchants.

The Lord Mayor, in proposing the health of the Mikado, said that no monarch was regarded with greater admiration. The progress made by Japan was the marvel of our time. The Lord Mayor then welcomed Prince Arisugawa as "the distinguished representative of an allied nation." He emphasized the bravery, resource, self-restraint and devotion shown by the Japanese during the war.

Prince Arisugawa, speaking in English, was greeted with a great ovation. He returned thanks for the reception given by the illustrious city of the great nation with which Japan is allied by treaty and by national sentiment. He referred to the happy early years he had spent in England and concluded with these words:—"I am here as the channel whereby Japan reciprocates friendly sentiments and expresses her sympathy with the whole of the British Empire."

Prince Arisugawa then conferred on the Lord Mayor (Alderman John Pound) by command of the Emperor of Japan the Order of Commander of the Rising Sun.

Both on arriving and leaving the Prince and Princess were greeted by the huge crowds with enthusiastic cheers.

Prince Arisugawa and the Prince of Wales were present last night at the dinner given by Mr. Balfour in honour of the King's birthday.

London, July 3.

Prince and Princess Arisugawa lunched with the Duke of Connaught yesterday and then visited Windsor Castle.

London, July 4.

Prince and Princess Arisugawa dined on Saturday with the Prince and Princess of Wales at Marlborough House. They leave London to-day to be present at the launch of the battleship Katori, at Barrow.

Mr. Takahashi, Vice-President of the Bank of Japan, presented himself to the Prince and Princess as soon as they arrived in London.

London, July 6.

Princess Arisugawa was present at the successful launching of the new Japanese battleship Katori at Barrow. There were ten thousand spectators who cheered when the ship took the water. She was launched weighing 9,400 tons, which is a record launching weight. The weather was brilliant.

The Prince and Princess received an ovation. Viscount Hayashi and many of the leading Japanese residents were present. After the launch the builders presented to Her Imperial Highness a pendant of diamonds with a jewelled miniature of the Katori.

Prince Arisugawa, in the course of a speech, recalled the fact that Admiral Togo's flagship (the Mikasa) was built at Barrow, and expressed the hope that the Katori would prove a valuable addition to the Japanese navy and be a guarantee of future peace.

In connexion with the visit to England of Prince and Princess Arisugawa, Viscount Hayashi and Mr. Saito Monotaro have received the Grand Cross and other members of the Prince's suite minor grades of the Victorian Order.

Prince Arisugawa has given the Lord Mayor of London a donation of one hundred guineas towards the King's hospital fund.

MUTINY OF THE BLACK SEA SQUADRON.

London, June 29.

The Standard's Odessa correspondent states that revolutionary mobs last evening fired the quarantine station, warehouses and other buildings in the harbour and prevented the firemen from extinguishing the flames. The military were terrorized by the guns of the battleship Kniaz Potemkin (flagship of the Black Sea Squadron), whose crew mutinied last night, and which shelled the Cossack pickets, killing and wounding 24. One torpedo-boat, accompanying the Kniaz Potemkin, entered the harbour and seized a Russian steamer together with her cargo of 2,000 tons of coal. The Governor of Odessa telegraphed to Sevastopol asking for the rest of the fleet, but it is feared that the mutiny will spread, as all the crews are dissatisfied; and it is even reported that the crews of four battleships have already mutinied, and that two of them are en route to Odessa. Grave anxiety is entertained by Lloyds as many British ships are at present in the harbour.

London, June 30.

All the officers of the Russian battleship Kniaz Potemkin, except three, were murdered.

Before burning the warehouses, the mob carried off the goods, the loss occasioned being a million roubles.

The city is enveloped in smoke, the shops are closed and traffic is suspended. The troops hold the main streets and hundreds of rioters have been shot. The port is partially burned. Martial law has been proclaimed.

London, July 1.

The Kniaz Potemkin started bombarding Odessa at half-past eleven on the night of the 29th June. The crew of the transport Vesha joined the mutineers.

Four battleships, a cruiser and several torpedo boats have left Sevastopol with orders to sink the Kniaz Potemkin if she refuses to surrender, and assist to restore order in the town.

London, July 2.

The Daily Mail's Odessa correspondent, wiring on the 1st of July, said that despite the official announcement that the Kniaz Potemkin had surrendered "I am reliably informed that the Kniaz Potemkin has been joined by the Georgi Pobiedonosoff and both are now using their searchlights in the harbour as if expecting an attack from the remainder of the squadron, which is fifteen miles distant."

There was no fighting in Odessa yesterday.

Later.

The American Consul has wired to Washington that the Black Sea Fleet has arrived at Odessa and that the Kniaz Potemkin surrendered without firing a shot.

London, July 3.

Nothing further has been received from Odessa except a private telegram that the mutineers on the Kniaz Potemkin were joined by the crew of another mutinous battleship.

The battleship Kniaz Potemkin Tsvetichsky (the crew of which had mutinied) has arrived at Kustenj (in Roumania) and asked for provisions to be supplied immediately.

Admiral Kruger's fleet has returned to Sevastopol, where a council of admirals and captains was held on board the flagship Rostislav. It was resolved to ungear the machinery, and officers and men desiring to land were authorized to do so.

Reservists were granted two months' leave of absence.

The battleship Catherine II, which had remained at Sevastopol, has been disarmed.

The crews at Sevastopol state that when the squadron, including the Georgi Pobiedonosets, reached Odessa, the Potemkin defiantly refused to obey the signal to rejoin, upon which the crew of the Pobiedonosets also mutinied. The Squadron then returned to Sevastopol.

Later.

The Potemkin has not surrendered but has been joined by the Georgi Pobiedonosets. The news is most conflicting.

London, July 4.

The Roumanian Government has ordered the battleship Potemkin either to leave port or surrender. In the latter case the mutineers will be treated as foreign deserters. The mutineers are now considering the demand.

London, July 5.

The crew of the Russian transport Fred

Original from

mutinied before leaving Kustenji. The mutineers hanged the Prefect and issued a bombastic proclamation declaring war against all Russian ships not joining them, and notifying their intention of bombarding Russian ports but to respect neutrals.

Later.

The battle-ship Georgi Pobedonosets has formally surrendered. The officers have returned on board, and the ringleaders of the mutineers have been sent ashore.

London, July 6.

The situation at Odessa is improving. Many troops have left the city, although they are within easy reach.

The Government workers in the Putiloff works have joined the strikers in St. Petersburg.

REVOLT AT LIBAU.

London, July 1.

The naval seamen at Libau have mutinied and wrecked their barracks. The Artillery and Cossacks have been called out and fighting has ensued. No details are to hand.

London, July 2.

The mutiny at Libau has been quelled.

THE "TEREK."

The Russian converted cruiser Terek was disarmed at Batavia on the 26th June.

MOROCCO.

France has accepted the Morocco conference.

DEATH OF MR. SECRETARY HAY.

London, July 3.

From Washington comes the news that Mr. John Hay, Secretary of State, is dead.

THE "ST. KILDA."

The Russian converted cruiser Dneiper has landed at Port Said the people taken from the English steamer St. Kilda before she was sunk north of Hongkong on June 4th.

THE PEACE PLENIPOTENTIARIES.

It is officially reported from Washington that Count Mouravieff and Baron Rosen will be the Russian and Baron Komura and Mr. Takahira the Japanese plenipotentiaries.

Later.

It is officially announced from Washington that the Russian and Japanese Governments have notified President Roosevelt that they have appointed their plenipotentiaries to meet as soon as possible after the 1st August. Both sides have entrusted their plenipotentiaries with full powers to negotiate and conclude a treaty subject only to the ratification of the respective Governments.

London, July 5.

M. Shipoff, Director of the Treasury; M. Pokotiloff, Minister to Peking; Professor Martens, General Yermoloff, Military Attaché, London, Captain Roussine, ex-Naval Attaché at Tokyo, and other experts, will assist Count Muravieff and Baron Rosen in the peace negotiations.

London, July 6.

It is understood that the St. Petersburg Government in its Note to President Roosevelt points out that the selection of the Russian peace representatives indicate that the Tsar is sincerely desirous for a lasting peace.

DISORDER IN RUSSIA.

London, July 4.

Telegrams from various parts of Russia report general restlessness and disorder. A general strike has broken out among the workmen and dockers at St. Petersburg; work is at a complete standstill. Fifty thousand troops have been concentrated in the city.

THE FRENCH CHAMBER.

London, July 5.

The French Chamber has adopted the Bill for the separation of Church and State by 341 to 233 votes.

RUSSIA'S NEW WAR MINISTER.

London, July 6.

General Roetiger has been appointed to succeed General Sakharoff as Minister for War.

(Received at the Military Head Quarters; p.m. 30th June.)

MANCHURIA.

A force of our troops sent from the Hsing-ching quarter in the direction of Hailung-ching drove back some 300 of the enemy, infantry and cavalry, from Tashatan (some 3 miles north-west of Wankautskau) at 9 a.m. on the 29th of June, and occupied the highlands on the north of that place. On the 28th, part of this force occupied San-hienfaang (about 18 miles east of Yingching and 5 miles north of Nan-Shanchintsz). On the 29th this force advanced further north.

There was no change in any other part of the field.

(Received at the Military Head Quarters; p.m. 3rd July.)

NORTHERN KOREA.

At dawn on the 2nd some 400 of the enemy with artillery made their appearance near Changhang (about 6¼ miles north of Susong) on the Puryong road. Our troops at that place engaged them, and having inflicted heavy loss on them drove them northward at 7.30 a.m. Another body of our troops which had made a long detour to the north for the purpose of cutting the enemy's line of retreat, attacked his infantry posted on the heights north-west of Hothongu (some 14 miles north of Susong on the Puryong road) at noon the same day, and opening fire on the enemy's cavalry which was retreating from Changhang, threw it into disorder. In this day's fighting we took 1 saddle-horse, 28 lances, 66 overcoats, besides a quantity of tents, entrenching tools and ammunition.

MANCHURIA.

At 8 a.m. on the 1st instant some 600 of the enemy's cavalry advanced towards Pinnuho (a place on the right bank of the Liao River 12½ miles north-east of Kangping), but were repulsed by our troops in that district. Again, at a little after 9 a.m. some 1,500 of the enemy's cavalry (including mounted infantry) with 18 guns, advanced and attacked Shihshihku (about 7½ miles north-west of Pinnuho). At 2 o'clock the following morning our troops repulsed them. In this fight the enemy had over 400 killed and wounded; our casualties were 90.

There were skirmishes in various directions.

(Received by the Naval Department.)

THE "PERESVIET."

Vice-Admiral Shibayama telegraphs from Port Arthur under date of June 29th, that the battle-ship Peresviet was floated on that day without mishap.

[The Peresviet is one of the four first-class line-of-battle-ships in the Russian Squadron at the outbreak of the war, the three others being the Retvisan, the Tsarvitch and the Pobieda. She is a vessel of 12,674 tons and she steamed 19½ knots on her trial trip in 1898. The Orel, captured by Togo at the Liancourt Rocks, is a still finer vessel, having a displacement of 13,516 tons with a speed of 18 knots, and having been commissioned in 1902. The addition of these two ships to the Japanese navy will go far to make up for the loss of the Hatsuse (15,000 tons and 19 knots, built in 1899) and the Yashima (12,300 tons and 18 knots, built in 1896).

It is quite possible, too, that the Retvisan (12,700 tons and 18 knots, built in 1900) and the Pobieda (12,674 tons and 18½ knots, built in 1900) may be raised as successfully as the Bayan and the Peresviet have been. In the matter of cruisers, the finest ships lost by the Japanese have been the protected cruiser Takasago, (4,300 tons and 24 knots, built in 1897) and the Yoshino, protected cruiser (4,180 tons and 20 knots, built in 1892), and against these they can set the Bayan, armoured cruiser (7,800 tons and 21 knots, built in 1900) and the protected cruiser Varyag (6,500 tons and 24½ knots built in 1899), to say nothing of the second-class battle-ship Nicolai I. (9,700 tons and 15½ knots, built in 1889) and the two coast-defence iron-clads Seniavine and Apraxin.

Admiral Togo's report dated the 18th of December, 1904, said that the Peresviet was then lying at a point 200 metres north-west of the extremity of Tiger's Tail promontory, her head pointing N.E. ½ N. At full tide her bows were above water as far as her torpedo-tubes, and her stern-work was under water. She was resting on the bottom on even keel and her central smoke-stack was much injured.—ED. [M.]

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

THE BLACK SEA MUTINY.

A Wolff's telegram says that a serious mutiny has taken place on board the battle-ship Kniaz Potemkin. She was en route from Sevastopol to Odessa towing 2 torpedo-boats, when one of the seamen, representing the crew, made a complaint about the bad quality of the food. The officer to whom he complained drew a pistol and shot him dead. Immediately on this becoming known the crew rose in a body, killed the officer, threw the captain into the sea, and murdered all the other officers with the exception of 8 who joined the mutineers. On the arrival of the ship at Odessa the men declared that they would shoot any one who attempted to arrest them. They raised the red flag. The inhabitants of Odessa sympathise with them and the whole town is in a state of disturbance. The Black Sea Fleet was to arrive there on the 28th of June. The Mayor of Odessa has set out for Moscow. Sounds of rifle-firing are heard all over the town.

The following information has been published with reference to the trouble at Odessa:—"In consequence of the authorities refusing to allow supplies to be furnished to the Kniaz Potemkin, the vessel trained her guns on Odessa and opened fire. A ship at the entrance to the port took fire and the flames are spreading widely. A violent disturbance has occurred in the town also and shops and store-houses are being smashed. Three hundred men have already been killed. News from London alleges that trouble has broken out on board 4 other ships in Sevastopol and that 2 of them have already left the harbour to join the Kniaz Potemkin. A St. Petersburg telegram says that a battle-ship and a cruiser were despatched from Sevastopol to Odessa on the 29th of June.

Later.

A Wolff's telegram from Libau dated the 24th of June says that marines stationed at that place have mutinied, attacked the arsenal, stolen a quantity of small arms and fired on the houses of the officers. The artillery of the garrison has been ordered to proceed to the coast. A body of infantry and a regiment of cavalry are advancing to the place with all speed.

Later telegrams from Odessa say that the harbour-master's offices, the store-houses and the auxiliary cruiser Saratoff are in flames. The town is in a terrible state of disturbance, and the troops can not control it.

It is rumoured that the foreign consuls in Odessa have applied to their Governments to send war-ships for the protection of their nationals.

Vice-Admiral Kruger with 4 battle-ships, one cruiser and several torpedo-boats has left Sevastopol for Odessa. It is said that he has been ordered to call upon the Kniaz Potemkin to surrender and to sink her in case of necessity.

Later.

According to newspapers of June 30th, Odessa has been cannonaded since yesterday (29th) evening. The insurgents on shore have joined the mutineers at sea, and have sacked the town. There is mutiny also on board the transport Vesha and two torpedo-boats which left Sevastopol for Odessa two days ago.

A Reuter's telegram from St. Petersburg says that the marines attached to the Naval Division at Libau mutinied last evening, smashed their barracks, sacked the store-houses, attacked the officers' quarters and fired at the windows with rifles. Hereupon the artillery of the Division was assembled, and on the morning of the 29th of June a body of Cossacks and a regiment of infantry were despatched to the sea-shore. A fight resulted and several casualties are said to have occurred. Details have not yet been received.

There are symptoms of mutiny at Reval and other parts on the Baltic.

The Tsar has issued an ukase placing Odessa and its neighbourhood under martial law.

Later.

With reference to the mutiny of the crew on board the battle-ship Potemkin at Odessa, Lord Percy, replying to a question in the House of Commons, said that with the exception of a report from the Consul at Odessa the Government was not in receipt of any official news. According to that report, when the Potemkin arrived at Odessa her crew mutinied; all her officers except 3 were murdered, and speeches inciting the people to revolt were being openly delivered at several places. Also firing had commenced between the police and the people. The consul's report added, however, that there were no signs of any danger to the lives or property of British residents at Odessa.

The Prime Minister, in reply to another question, said that it was quite out of the question to adopt any precautionary measures against a disturbance outside the limits of British jurisdiction.

A Wolff's telegram from St. Petersburg dated the 29th of June says that the meeting of representatives of the municipalities has resolved to issue a manifesto in the following sense:—"It is of the most pressing necessity that an assembly of popular representatives on a constitutional basis should be convened. To frame any law with respect to such an assembly without the participation of the people's representatives is practically impossible. Moreover to postpone the operation of a reform that has once been promised is to render the situation daily more difficult."

One hundred and seventeen representatives of the most important towns in Russia met at Moscow on the 28th of June and issued a manifesto couched in discontented terms similar to the above. It says:—"Good results can no longer be fully attained by means of resolutions of local assemblies only. Under the circumstances there is nothing for it but to resolutely demand a constitution. Such a course as convening of an advisory council can not possibly satisfy Russia."

A Reuter's telegram from St. Petersburg dated July 1st says that the crew of the Kniaz Potemkin have surrendered to Admiral Kruger.

(RECEIVED BY THE "NICHU NICHU SHIMBUN.")

London.—The central station at Odessa has been burned. Among the ships burned is the volunteer steamer Saratoff, a vessel of 8,556 tons and 19 knots speed.

(RECEIVED BY THE "HOCHI SHIMBUN.")

London.—According to rumour the mutineers in the Black Sea have organized a temporary government and have appointed councillors.

A report from St. Petersburg says that M. Compret, chief of gendarmes at Kishineff has been murdered.

Berlin.—The Russian battle-ship Potemkin and one torpedo-boat have arrived at Odessa. The crew killed all the officers and opened fire upon Odessa. A conflagration has broken out at the entrance to the harbour and a large strike has commenced in the town. The disturbance grows. The conflagration is spreading among the store-houses and ships. At Libau also the sailors have formed a plot, and it is feared that other ports may follow the example.

(RECEIVED BY THE "JIJI SHIMPO.")

London, July 3.

The whole of the Black Sea Fleet is in a state of mutiny. The Potemkin has not surrendered. On the contrary, the battle-ship Georgi Pobiedonosets (10,280 tons) has come to join her. The captain of the latter vessel has committed suicide.

The mutineers challenged Admiral Kruger to fight, and he has retired.

The Council of Admirals has decided to destroy the machinery of the ships and to discharge the crews that openly joined the mutiny.

All the Black Sea ports are in a state of confusion.

(RECEIVED BY THE "ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

London, July 3.

The affair of the Black Sea Fleet is altogether wrapped in profound secrecy. The true conditions can not be ascertained. Admiral Kruger has decided to ungear the machinery of all ships belonging to the Black Sea Fleet so as to make it impossible for them to move. This news suffices to show that vehement discontent has spread through the whole fleet. The official statement that the Potemkin had surrendered was nothing but a deception. She still enjoys her liberty.

General Shiik (?), in accordance with the Government's decision, has received orders not to proceed with mobilization in the St. Petersburg district.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

A telegram from Vienna says that the Washington news of the Potemkin's surrender has been contradicted by several telegrams from Bucharest on the 3rd. According to these, the battle-ship, with a crew of 700, but no officer on board, anchored at Constantza (a Roumanian port) and asked for coal and provisions. By order of the harbour authorities this application was refused and information was conveyed to the crew that if they landed without arms they would be treated as deserters, but if they took any warlike measures the Roumanian Government would proceed against them by force. The issue is not yet clear.

A telegram from Sevastopol says that the crew of the battleship Georgi Pobiedonosets also have mutinied and joined the Potemkin.

(RECEIVED BY THE "HOCHI SHIMBUN.")

London, July 3.

The United States Consul's report that the Potemkin had surrendered was a mistake. The truth is precisely the converse. The Potemkin advanced direct against the front of the Black Sea Fleet which came from Sevastopol and opened fire with the result that the Fleet made a humiliating failure and returned to Sevastopol without accomplishing anything. Thus the task of subduing the mutinous warship ended in total unsuccess.

The mutinous war-ship has been joined by the Georgi Pobiedonosets. The Potemkin, with 26 or 27 torpedo-boats, has left Odessa and proceeded to Constantza in Roumania, where she has asked for provisions.

The Pobiedonosets is still at Odessa. The citizens continue to fly from that place. The losses have reached 70 million yen.

A meeting of commanding officers of the Black-Sea Fleet has been held, when it was decided that as the crews had adopted a mutinous attitude, the machinery in the various ships should be ungear.

At Odessa the armoured war-ship Ekatarina has been disarmed.

It has been announced that Sevastopol and Nikolaief are invested. (This is unintelligible.—ED. J. M.)

The mutiny shows signs of spreading at Kronstadt and Libau.

There is a universal strike in St. Petersburg.

A mutinous feeling pervades the whole of the Black Sea Fleet.

London, July 4.

The crew of a battleship at Libau have mutinied and taken possession of the vessel.

The crew of the Georgi Pobiedonosets have run her ashore and surrendered.

The Kniaz Potemkin is cruising round the Black-Sea ports seeking coal and provisions.

[A Foreign-Office telegram says that she has left Constantza and returned to Odessa. ED. J. M.]

The workmen at all the factories in St. Petersburg have ceased work. A great strike is taking place throughout the whole city.

(RECEIVED BY THE "ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

Later.

The British Consul at Odessa has chartered 4 British steamers, and one foreign to wait at the entrance of the harbour and take off the British residents in the event of danger. A hurried exodus of the inhabitants is taking place and there is great consternation. The crew of the Pobiedonosets are said to have surrendered under the provisions of an exceedingly severe law, but the fact is uncertain. Artillery has been posted on a road overlooking the harbour. The ships are in the inner harbour.

Later.

Immediately on his return to Sevastopol Admiral Kruger summoned all the commanding officers of the Black Sea Fleet to his flag-ship the Rostislav (a sister-ship of the Sissoi Veliky) and held a conference, when it was decided (1) to ungear the machinery of all the vessels; (2) to allow any of the crews to depart who wished to do so; and (3) to give two months' leave to the reserves. The battle-ship Ekatarina (10,181 tons) alone remained at Sevastopol, but she has been disarmed.

Later.

When the Black Sea Fleet arrived at Odessa to deal with the Potemkin and summoned her to surrender, her crew, instead of complying, ran up an invitation to the crews of the other ships to join in the mutiny. The Pobiedonosets at once accepted the invitation, and it was then that Admiral Kruger, fearing further disaffection, decided to return to Sevastopol. All the reports received from Odessa are confused and conflicting, and it is impossible to ascertain the truth.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

As to the Odessa mutiny, it is stated that the Potenkin has not surrendered. After making the tour of the Roumanian ports she has returned to Odessa for provisions. The other mutinous vessel the Georgi Pobedonostsev has surrendered. The various war-ships at Sevastopol have been disarmed and their machinery unguaranteed, so that if their crews mutiny the vessels cannot be taken out of port.

The Russian Government has published in the Official Gazette a detailed statement of the Odessa affair but the main points agree more or less with those already published in the newspapers. The only difference is that the Kiyas Potenkin, after leaving Kustehji has not since been heard of.

FRANCE AND GERMANY.

Paris, June 29.

Conversations between Monsieur Loubet and Prince Radolin have considerably approximated the original French and German points of view. It is possible to foresee a prompt solution, which will take into consideration the reciprocal interests and friendliness of the two countries.

RUSSIAN WAR MINISTER.

General Sakaroff, Minister of War, has resigned.

AUSTRALIAN POLITICS.

The Australian Federated Parliament met on the 28th June. The Protectionist party has severed relations with the Government and has in fact made a union with the Labour Party. The Opposition by a large majority passed an amendment to the Address to the Throne and dissolution or resignation of the Ministry is expected to follow shortly.

PEST.

Chefoo, 1st July.

The Consular body at Chefoo and the Taotai have agreed to recognise Hongkong and Foochow as pest-infected places. Medical examination will be enforced from the 3rd against ships coming from those ports.

RUSSIANS RESIGNATIONS.

According to a Wolff's telegram the resignation of General Sakharoff has been accepted, and the resignation of the Home Minister, M. Bulygine, is said to be imminent. It is said that his successor will be Ignatieff, formerly Governor of Moscow.

NEW WAR MINISTER.

According to a Wolff's telegram from St. Petersburg General Rodiger has been appointed Minister of War.

STRIKE AT ST. PETERSBURG.

A telegram from St. Petersburg says that there is a general strike there. The factory hands have joined those at the dock yard. All business is at a standstill.

BRITISH AT ODESSA.

The English Foreign Secretary, answering a question in the House of Commons on the 3rd instant, said that there was no sufficient reason connected with the state of affairs at Odessa for not observing the rule against the entry of foreign war-vessels into the Black Sea. Neither was there any ground whatever for supposing that the Russian Government had failed in the duty of protecting British subjects in common with other nationals. The arrival of British war-ships would not be regarded as likely to correct existing conditions.

(RECEIVED THE "ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

MOROCCO.

The collision between Germany and France with regard to the Morocco problem seems to have entered the route to a peaceful settlement. This is because France, having come to an agreement with Germany as to the questions for submission to the conference that is to be opened between the Powers which are signatories of the Madrid Treaty, has consented to take part in the conference. According to the newspapers of the 3rd instant the points of agreement between France and Germany are:—(1) The preservation of Morocco; (2) that no effect shall be produced on the sovereignty of Morocco; (3) that all the treaties between Morocco and foreign states shall be observed; (4) that there shall be no injury to the Anglo-French or the Franco-Spanish treaty; and (5) that since France's territory borders upon Morocco, the former's special rights shall be recognised.

(RECEIVED BY THE "HOCHI SHIMBUN.")

M. NELIDOFF.

London, July 2.

M. Nelidoff has declined the position of peace plenipotentiary and M. Mouravieff, Russian Ambassador to Rome, has been appointed in his stead.

[NOTE.—The resignation of M. Nelidoff is believed in official circles in Tokyo, but nothing is known about Mouravieff.—Ed. J. M.]

PEACE NEGOTIATIONS.

Washington.

The President is at Oyster Bay. He is to meet the plenipotentiaries of Russia and Japan there, and they will be carried thither by the U.S. steamer Dolphin and by the President's yacht Mayflower. (Oyster Bay is about 30 miles from New York).

RECEIVED BY THE "NICHU NICHU SHIMBUN."

Washington, July 5.

President Roosevelt is satisfied with the progress of the negotiations. Russia has attached the following officials to her plenipotentiaries:—M. Shipof, of the Treasury; M. Pokotiloff, Minister in Peking; M. Marten, Professor of International Law, and Major-General Yerumoroff. These names have been officially communicated.

LAUNCH OF THE "KATORI."

London, July 4.

Princess Arisugawa performed the ceremony of naming the Japanese battle-ship launched at Barrow. The weather was fine and a number of people assembled to witness the launch. The builders, Messrs. Vickers and Company, gave a congratulatory luncheon, at which 300 covers were laid. Prince Arisugawa spoke. His Imperial Highness said that the Katori, under the flag of the Rising Sun, would be a preserver of peace in the Far East, and would help to maintain the prestige of the Japanese Empire.

(RECEIVED BY THE "JIJI SHIMPO.")

RUSSIAN PRISONERS.

Shanghai, July 5.

The North German Lloyd Steamer Company has opened a special office for business relating to the transport of Russian troops (namely, prisoners in Japan as well as Russian forces in Manchuria) from the Far East to ports in the Black Sea. Colonel Maisel, who is to oversee the work, has arrived here by the P. and O. steamer Chusan. His staff will come by the Scharnhorst. The steamers Trafalgar and Wittekind, which are to carry away the Russian refugees, have passed the Suez Canal. Several other North German Lloyd vessels are to arrive here soon for the same purpose.

THE BOXER INDEMNITY.

The principal points of the Indemnity Agreement just concluded are that China will buy gold at the market rate of the various countries and will convert it into bills which will be handed in at Shanghai to the banks which are to act as receivers in behalf of the Powers. The sums still remaining unpaid will be dealt with in the same manner.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The fishing industry in Kagoshima prefecture seems to be extraordinarily prolific. The interim dividend of the Kagoshima Fishing Company for the first half year was at rate of 375 per cent (750 per cent. per annum). The dividend last year was 250 per cent.

The Supreme Prize Court, Tokyo, has given a decision in an appeal lodged by the Kamchatka Commerce and Industry Co. against the confiscation of the steamer Kotik by the Yokosuka Prize Court. The Court dismissed the petition. The Kotik was captured by the Anagi on Feb. 10th last at Yokohama. She had no cargo.

Since the outbreak of the war up to the present foreign steamers captured by Japanese cruisers are as follows:—12 British, 16 Russian, 6 German, 3 Norwegian, 3 French, 2 Austrian, 1 Dutch and 1 American, making a total of 54, the tonnage of which aggregates at 131,132 tons gross. Of them, 2 Norwegian and 6 British ships were released; the confiscation of 17 was confirmed by the Supreme Prize Court; and the remainder are still under examination.

Two tragical incidents took place on the night of June 30th in Yokohama. One was a coolie named S. Morisaki (32) who murdered Chiyo (32), the wife of F. Kamino (47) another coolie, in the inn called Otsu-ya, Miyoshi-cho, where the couple were staying, and inflicted severe injuries with a sword on her husband. The culprit was arrested while escaping. Another was a similar trouble. G. Ishizaki (48) a coolie, assaulted with a sword, Yone Kabahashi (31) and her younger sister, Mitsu (23), in another inn, the Nakadaya, also in Miyoshi-cho and inflicted severe injuries on both. The culprit is still at large. In both cases, the cause was jealousy.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.

The situation is practically unchanged. Consuming markets refuse to pay the prices which holders here require and there is very little buying on the part of foreign shippers. Direct exporters have finally commenced operations and are paying the prices which we quote below with the view of holding up the market, but America and Europe do not respond and we look for a lower market here shortly.

SAVE YOUR HAIR

With Shampoos of Cuticura Soap and Light Dressings of Cuticura.

This treatment at once stops falling hair, removes crusts, scales, and dandruff, soothes irritated, itching surfaces, stimulates hair follicles, supplies the roots with energy and nourishment, and makes the hair grow upon a sweet, wholesome, healthy scalp when all else fails.

MILLIONS USE CUTICURA SOAP

Assisted by CUTICURA OINTMENT, for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and soothing red, rough, and sore hands, for baby rashes, itchings, and chafings, in the form of baths for annoying irritations and inflammations, or too free or offensive perspiration, and for all the purposes of the toilet, as well as by millions of women in the form of washes for ulcerative weaknesses, and many sanative, antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves to women and mothers.

COMPLETE TREATMENT FOR EVERY HUMOUR,

Consisting of CUTICURA SOAP, to cleanse the skin of crusts and scales, and soften the thickened cuticle; CUTICURA OINTMENT, to instantly allay itching, inflammation, and irritation, and soothe and heal; and CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS, to cool and cleanse the blood. A SINGLE BATH is often sufficient to cure the most torturing, disfiguring, itching, burning, and scaly skin, scalp, and blood humours, with loss of hair, when all else fails. YOKOHAMA: SATURDAY, JULY 15TH, 1905.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

A CASE of cholera was reported on July 7th in Muro-machi, Kokura.

A LONG shock of earthquake passed under Yokohama on Friday morning.

THE net income of the Mitsui Bank for the first half year of 1905 was yen 553,099.03.

A DEAD rat infected with plague was found on July 6th at Kamezawa-cho, Honjo, Tokyo.

CAPTAIN HOFFMANN, of the German Army, arrived on July 6th in Tokyo from the front.

MAJOR-GENERAL TANIDA, Commander of the Formosan garrison, left Taipei on July 10th for Tokyo.

A TELEGRAM says that on July 7th, a case of plague appeared in the district of Oye, Tokushima prefecture.

A TELEGRAM under date of July 6th from Matsuyama says that a cholera case has appeared in the village of Noda.

ON July 9th, a case of cholera appeared in Okayama. It proved fatal. The victims was a young man.

THE net income of the Osaka Shosen Kaisha for the first half year was yen 430,000. Yen 130,000 was paid out to shareholders as an interim dividend. A general meeting will be held on July 22nd.

THE steamer Yoneyama Maru went ashore on July 10th in Moji Strait. A few hours later she was floated without damage.

TOKYO journals report that Mr. M. Hayashi, a lawyer of Tokyo, has been arrested and removed to the Tokyo District Court.

It is officially reported that Prince and Princess Arisugawa left London on July 11th by the German mail steamer for home.

THE repairs of the battleship Iwami (formerly Qrel) having been completed at Maidzuru, on July 8th she was removed to Kure.

A CASE of cholera was reported on July 6th in the village of Voyohata near Tokyo. It proved fatal. The victim was a man, 31 years old.

THE damage caused to barley and wheat by the recent rains in Otsu and the surrounding districts of Aichi prefecture is estimated at yen 553,800.

THE Nichi Nichi has a telegram from Peking that M. Pokotiloff had audience of the Emperor of China on July 6th and presented his credentials.

A THUNDER-STORM was experienced on July 5th in the district of Yasu, near Otsu. Three persons were killed by a thunder-bolt and two were injured.

ACCORDING to the Official Gazette of July 7th, four blue-jackets were killed on July 17th by the explosion of a mine off the entrance of Port Arthur.

THREE hundred workmen employed by the Nakabe factory belonging to the Oji Mill, in the village of Sakuma, Shizuoka prefecture, struck on July 6th.

THE net income of the Mitsu Bishi Bank for the first half of this year amounted to yen 246,152; an interim dividend has been declared of 5 per cent.

SIX Russian medical officials who were captured in the battle of the Japan Sea were removed on July 8th to Kobe and delivered to the French Consul there.

DR. MORRISON, the Peking correspondent of The Times, arrived on July 11th at Nagasaki from Shanghai. He left for Yokohama on his way to Washington.

A RUSSIAN sergeant at Nagoya was sentenced on July 7th by Court Martial to three years' imprisonment with hard labour. He assaulted one of the officials of the detention house.

FOURTEEN Russians who recently drifted ashore at Kitami, in Hokkaido and who were brought to Yokohama via Aomori have applied to the Kanagawa Kencho for papers of naturalization.

THE Bank of Japan will hold a general meeting on August 19th to submit to shareholders the accounts for the first half-year. The Fiji believes that the interim dividend will be 6 per cent.

A SAD affair was reported on July 10th from Kawasaki. Kin (36), the wife of a police man named A. Sonobe, killed her three children with a sword. The woman was arrested and removed to the Kawasaki Police Office. The cause of the crime was temporary insanity, the woman having been suffering from brain troubles.

THE captured ship Kotik has been assigned to the Yokosuka Naval Station. She was seized on Feb. 10th last by the gun-boat Amagi at Yokohama. She is a small steamer of 271 tons gross.

THE Emperor has decided to send two of his aides-de-camp to Manchuria to enquire after the health of the men in the fighting lines and to distribute presents. These officers will leave Tokyo within a few days.

AT 7 p.m., on July 7th, a land slide occurred at a point near the Aotani tunnel on the Kwansei Railway while a train was passing through. The locomotive and five carriages were derailed and two passengers were injured.

N. ZAMA, a teacher of the Sakuma Primary School, Tokyo, has been dismissed. It is said that he was interested in socialism and declined to give his pupils the ethical lessons compiled by the Department of Education.

THE Nichi Nichi says that the Hon. William H. Taft, Secretary for War of the United States, Miss Alice Roosevelt and party left San Francisco on July 8th for Japan. They are expected to arrive at Yokohama on July 16th.

AT Ogaki station on the Tokaido Railway, at 1.10 a.m., on July 7th a locomotive collided with a train from Kobe. Eleven soldiers among the passengers sustained injury. The cause seems to have been the negligence of a pointsman.

A MIYO telegram says that Mr. Nemoto, a farmer residing in the village of Shimana, has murdered his father and disappeared. The culprit, however, was arrested on July 10th. The cause of the crime was a dispute as to the transferring of property.

CAPTAIN BOUGOUIN, who was sentenced on July 10th to ten years' confinement with hard labour on a charge of having infringed the Law for the Preservation of Military Secrets, lodged an appeal on the following day in the Tokyo Appeal Court against the decision. H. Maki also appealed.

MR. MASUJI MIYAGAWA, a graduate of the Law College of the Imperial University, having passed an examination for a Master's degree at the Indiana State University, has been made an attorney-at-law in the United States and admitted to the bar in the Federal Courts. This is the first Japanese who has become entitled to appear in the Federal Courts in America.

AT 10 p.m., on July 9th, fire broke out in the 10th warehouse in the compound of the Kobe Customs. The result was that the building was destroyed and 15,000 bags of flour, a great quantity of hemp, combed wool, beans and bean-cake in this godown and about 400 bales of cotton in an adjoining place were all burned. The cause is under investigation. The loss on buildings alone is estimated at yen 6,875.

ON Sunday afternoon, T. Sakai (25) a shampooer, living in Onoye-cho, Yokohama, attempted to murder Sei (23) the eldest daughter of another shampooer named K. Esaki, residing in a neighbouring place. He inflicted severe injuries with a sword. The culprit was arrested on the scene while attempting to commit suicide. The victim was immediately removed to the Juzen Hospital, Noge. Her condition is very serious. The cause is reported by the Isezaki-cho police to be jealousy.

OCCUPATION OF SAGHALIEN.

Tuesday, July 11.

Mr. Kambei Oichi, who appears to have travelled much in Saghalien and made a special study of its conditions, delivered a lecture about the island on the 7th instant before the Geographical Society. His appreciations are very discouraging. The island certainly has a quantity of coal, but the beds lie on the western side where there are no good harbours, and the cost of carriage to a place of easy shipment would be deterrent. The same remark applies to timber. The southern districts abound with fine forests but they remain quite unexploited owing to difficulties of transport. Neither does the island present any attractions for agriculturists. In short, it is a distinctly uninviting place, never likely to make a good colony and regarded by the Russians themselves as a nuisance rather than a valuable. Its fisheries are its one redeeming feature, and even these demand preservation, for, if left to be exploited indiscriminately, they would soon become worthless. Mr. Kambei thinks that Japan should merely seek for her fishermen the right to ply their trade freely and without tax on the coasts of Saghalien, and that she should also ask for a similar right along the shores of the Russian Maritime Province. That is the gist of his lecture.

Wednesday, July 12.

It will readily be supposed that the renaming of certain places on the coasts of Saghalien has special significance. Thus the substitution of the term Higashi-fushimi Bay for Aniva Bay is designed to commemorate the destruction of the Novik by the Chitose and the Tsushima, in the former of which ships Prince Higashi Fushimi was serving. In the same incident are to be found the causes of calling Enzuma Cape "Tsushima Cape," and Kososei Bay "Chitose Bay." As for the names now given to the promontories at the entrance to Aniva Bay, that on the east, hitherto called Shiretoko, is now to be known as "Juzo-zaki," and that on the West (Notoro Point) will be called "Kondo-zaki," these two names being intended to commemorate the exploits of Kondo Juzo, who, in the 18th century, conducted extensive researches in Saghalien and published a five-volume work called Hokuen Bunkai Zukai.

It is evident from looking at the map that the Japanese approached Korsakoff from the east. The expedition rounded Shiretoko Point, and steamed towards Korsakoff, on the east of which place the landing was effected, the Russians retreating along the main road which leads due north. It is not probable that the Russians have any large force in Saghalien. The principal points of military concentration were recently stated to be Korsakoff in the south, Alexandrofsky on the west, Riukoff in the centre and Bogovi on the north-west coast at the point where the Strait of Tartary (now the Mamiya Kaikyo) narrows so that communication with the mainland is possible over the ice in winter. The Kokumin says that the regular forces in Saghalien do not exceed 3,600 and that the volunteers number 6,000, but we imagine that these figures are more or less conjectural. The strange thing is that no attempt was made by the Russians to defend Korsakoff. They had some two thousand men there, and the most perfunctory intelligence should have taught them that a Japanese expedition had been imminent for weeks if not months. In fact it is now possible to affirm that nothing deferred the expedition except uncertainty as to the Baltic Fleet, for, had not the menace of Rojstvensky been in the air, the Japanese would surely have selected May for the enterprise in preference to June or July when fogs are a normal feature in these waters. It is easy to see that had Rojstvensky reached Vladivostock with any efficient squadron under his command, great risks would have attended an attempt to transport a military force from the north of Japan proper, under the very eyes of Vladivostock, to Aniva Bay. The fact is that when the Baltic Fleet went to the bottom in the Sea of Japan the fate of Saghalien, in common with many other issues, was settled. Possibly the Russians placed their trust in Rojstvensky and reckoned that however ill he might fare at Togo's hands, there would remain to him a force sufficient at all events to render wholly insecure the over-sea communications of any Japanese army in Saghalien. We see no other method of accounting for the singularly ineffectual resistance offered at Korsakoff. No mines were laid in the Bay. The Japanese had fully anticipated the presence of these deadly obstructions and had adopted all precautions accordingly. But although two or three squadrons preceded the transports and dragged every yard of the approaches, not a single mine seems to have been found. Such neglect of an obvious precaution speaks volumes for the perfunctory character of Vladivostock's doings, for nothing could have been easier than to send a few craft from the northern base to strew the Korsakoff approaches with defences such as are said to exist at Vladivostock itself. Indeed when we consider that eleven months have elapsed since the Vladivostock Squadron encountered Kamimura and fled home in a badly wounded condition, and that the two big cruisers, the Rossia and the Gromovoi, have remained in port ever since, not even sailing forth at the supreme crisis of their country's naval history in the Far East, the whole story of Vladivostock's part in this war becomes inexplicably apathetic. But even without the aid of mines the Korsakoff garrison of 2,000 men, if handled with anything like resolution, should have made the Japanese landing a sanguinary affair. They appear to have retreated, however, without firing a shot, certainly without inflicting a single casualty. The guns taken by the Japanese are supposed to have belonged to the Rurik, but the latter did not carry any 12-pounder pieces.

A very interesting point is the future conduct of the campaign. The road northward from Korsakoff runs inland for a time, and then, emerging on the east coast, follows it within rifle shot as far as Nayoso, where it trends inland to the northwest, finally emerging at Alexandrofsky on the east coast, which is the capital of the island. It is easy for a Japanese force to be carried over sea to Alexandrofsky, the capture of which place would not only give the whole island into the hands of the invaders, but would also cut off the retreat of all troops in the southern parts.

Saghalien is a long narrow island. It measures 670 miles from north to south, has a width of from 20 to 150 miles, and a superficies of 24,560 square miles. Its population consists of 30,000 Russians, 1,500 Ainu, 2,000 Giljak, and about 1,000 various. There are only 1,400 free Russian emigrants, all the other Russian inhabitants being criminals or their families.

Japanese papers publish portraits of Vice-Admiral Kataoka and Vice-Admiral Dewa, who, as we know from official despatches, command the ships engaged in the expedition; and also portraits of Lt.-General Haraguchi and Major-Generals Takenouchi and Naito, who, presumably, are in command of the military, but as to that we can not speak. Colonel Koizumi is Chief of Staff.

Japanese journals naturally rejoice at the event, which they call, not the "conquest" of Saghalien but its "recovery," since it undoubtedly formed at one time a part of the Japanese empire; but its effective administration from either Yedo or Sailyo might be difficult to prove. Apart too from the mere occupation of the island, there is the fact that the Russian Maritime Province as well as Kamchatka can now be easily invaded, and that the whole structure of Russian dominion in the Far East is threatened.

Thursday, July 13.

Harbin's official accounts dated the 9th instant put the number of ships engaged in the Saghalien expedition at 14 war-vessels, 26 torpedo-craft and 10 transports. They say that a landing was effected on the 7th instant at a point fifteen versts south-east of Korsakoff, and at 3 p.m. 15 torpedo-craft approached Korsakoff and opened fire. The Russians, using guns which had been saved from the Novik, silenced the Japanese fire. After having exhausted all their ammunition, the Russians destroyed the guns, as well as everything afloat in the harbour, burned the official building, and retired to a place 15 versts northward, having had 5 men killed and one missing. Subsequently a number of Japanese torpedo-boats approached this place (Soroiyofka) and bombarded it, so that the Russians had to abandon it and to retire to Vladimirofska, still farther north. Another account from Harbin says that the Japanese landed 12,000 men of all arms at Korsakoff.

Probably these figures, especially those relating to ships, are pretty near the truth. An officer of Vice-Admiral Kataoka's rank, associated with Vice-Admiral Dewa and Rear-Admiral Togo, would not be in command of any petty squadron. It is plain that in planning the dimensions of this expedition, the Japanese must have had Vladivostock in view. Eleven months have passed since the Rossia and the Gromovoi escaped wounded into Vladivostock and they have since been joined by the protected cruiser Almaz. If the two big cruisers are not thoroughly repaired and fit for sea by this time, the fact is inexplicable. Their absolute inaction during the period when Rojstvensky was drawing up the China Sea and preparing to fight his gallant action at Tsushima, would be a clear indication in the case of any other Power than Russia that the vessels are not yet sea-worthy, but it must be confessed that the acts of Russian officers are not always to be gauged by ordinary standards. The Bogatyr is probably incapable of anything just now. Accounts agree that she has been in dock, but she appears to have been taken out again in an incompletely repaired condition and to be now kept afloat by means of pontoons. There are also in the northern port many torpedo-craft which show considerable activity. They made their presence felt not many weeks ago among the tiny Japanese coast-trade steamers and fishing schooners, which have been the special prey of Russian war-ships during the war, and they are known to make frequent visits to Possiet Bay and the mouth of the Tumen. Hence the squadron escorting the Japanese transports en route for Tsushima had to provide against a real danger, and they were also strong enough not only to protect the transports but to make an end of the Russian ships once for all should the latter venture out to attack.

Telegrams from Washington and London indicate that the loss of Saghalien at this juncture is a serious blow to Russia. One account says that she had contemplated giving the island in exchange for a considerable slice of the indemnity which she will be asked to pay, but another account suggests that she hoped not to lose Saghalien at all. We are disposed to credit her with the latter view, for although Saghalien may not be a specially wealth-conferring possession, its position is of great strategical importance, and Russia must be most reluctant to abandon the place. It was one of the stepping stones that brought her to Vladivostok.

Kondo Juzo, whose name has now been revived and immortalized in connexion with Saghalien, was Chief Librarian to the Tokugawa Government at the close of the 18th century. In 1798 news having been received of appearances of Russians in northern waters, he was sent to make investigations, and visiting the island of Etorofu he found that these active aggressors had hall-marked the island by their then habitual and very simple device of setting up pillars with legends announcing the territory to be Russian. Kondo rooted up these evidences and replaced them by posts on which the characters Dai-Nihon were conspicuously engraved. It was after this adventure that he published his five-volume book Yōhen Bunkai Zuzo (map indicating the delimitation of the country). It dealt mainly with Saghalien (Karafuto), the Kuriles (Chishima) and Kamchatka. He showed much political insight. Japan's northern frontier consisted, he said, of a number of islands so that the boundaries were ill-defined. When farmers disputed about the limits of their farms the local authorities settled the question, but when countries began to wrangle about boundaries, the only tribunal of appeal was that of arms. Many Japanese held that their country had only to be self-contained: only to sit at home and close its ears to the wrangling of the outer nations. That would be a sufficiently practical policy if the gates behind which Japan sat were well-defined and clearly recognised. But if her gates were not fixed they could not be kept closed. By leaving them unfixed she furnished to foreign countries a pretext for aggression. Such were Kondo Juzo's views. They have been remarkably verified by events. What may be truly said, however, is that Japan was not then in a position to put in the proverbial stitch in time, and it has been with her a veritable case of the alternative nine.

Friday, July 14.

News carried by a steamer which has just returned to Awamori from Korsakoff, is to the effect that the Japanese expedition reached a point 20 nautical leagues from Korsakoff at dawn on the 7th instant. The operation of sweeping for mines commenced at once, and by 10 a.m. the torpedo-craft engaged in this work had arrived within range of the shore. The Russians were evidently prepared, though it does not appear that they had laid down any mines. Two forts had been built, one on either side of the harbour, and from them a cannonade was opened on the Japanese in reply to the latter's fire. Very bad practice seems to have been made by the gunners in the forts. They did succeed in dropping a shell within 100 metres of a transport, but not one of their shots hit any of the ships, whereas the Japanese projectiles wrecked buildings and caused much damage. It would seem from this account that the conflagration resulted from the Japanese cannonade, but it will be remembered that the Russians, in their official report, claim to have themselves burned the stores and Government buildings. This exchange of gun-fire lasted until 3 p.m.—a period of 5 hours—by which time the forts were silenced and a large part of the harbour buildings were burning fiercely.

The Asahi has a telegram saying that the Russians who retreated to Vladimirofka halted there. They are not making any defensive preparations, but are engaged chiefly in sending to the rear the provisions and materials stored at the place. The arms carried by the convicts and the volunteers are comparatively modern, but the men themselves have had no training. It is stated by the inhabitants that the Russians have in their possession six 12-cent-guns, six 4-cent., eight quick-firers and a number (13 or 14) of machine guns. The greater part of these were landed from the Novik. The guns abandoned at Korsakoff and Sorolyoka number eleven or twelve, the remainder have been sent to Alexandrofsky.

Further changes of local nomenclature are announced. The most important is that Patience Point is to be henceforth called Kataoka Misaki and Patience Bay Shichiro Wan, these terms being adopted in consideration of the fact that Vice-Admiral Kataoka Shichiro commands the naval expedition. Presumably the names of the military commanders will be similarly immortalized. If our readers look at the map, observe the position of Patience Bay, the western shore of which is skirted by the main road from Korsakoff northward, and consider the general configuration of Saghalien, they will be able to form interesting speculations as to the future progress of the campaign. We are not allowed, however, to formulate any such speculations distinctly in these columns.

CHINESE STUDENTS.

It appears that the Chinese Government made, some time ago, a signal departure from the exceedingly conservative system of public examination, the object of the change being to encourage students of foreign sciences. A decree was issued directing that in the case of students studying in Japan the usual provincial examinations, hitherto an essential preliminary to the final examination in Peking, should be dispensed with, and that certificates of graduation obtained at Japanese Schools and colleges should rank equally with certificates obtained from local examiners in China. Thus lads who graduate in this country can proceed at once to Peking to compete for the much coveted degrees which open the door to the highest official appointments. The first examination under the new system has just been held in Peking when 8 students secured the first degree and 5 the second. These 13 successful candidates are to have audience at Court in a few days. It is scarcely necessary to point out what immense encouragement is given to Chinese students in Japan by allowing their work in this country to stand on the same plane with the immemorably consecrated local and provincial examinations in their own country. Probably that remarkable concession is largely responsible for a recent increase in the number of Chinese studying in Japan: they now total some three thousand.

THE TODO-SHIMA AFFAIR.

Monday, July 10.

It appears that the subsequent accounts given of the Todoshima affair were in the main correct. Twenty-seven Russian soldiers, en route for Korsakoff in Aniwa Bay, were driven out of their course by stress of weather, and landing at Todo-jima, attempted to obtain a supply of provisions by forced requisition. The Japanese resisted and some firing took place. As to the number of casualties nothing is now said. The Russians were driven off, but the Japanese, fearing lest the soldiers should obtain re-inforcements and return subsequently in large numbers, took to their boats and left the island, with the exception of about a hundred.

Wednesday, July 12.

Detailed accounts of this affair show that on the 28th of June a Russian boat containing 27 soldiers—one an officer and one a sergeant—called at the island. The inhabitants fled inland for the most part, but some who could speak Russian remained. To inquiries made by these the Russians explained that they were en route for Korsakoff, and had been driven out of their course. They asked for food and drink. The Japanese gave 8 bags of rice and some tubs of sake. Presumably the Russians imbibed the latter, for that evening they commenced looting the dwellings of the Japanese, which occupation they renewed in the morning. Resistance became inevitable. Two of the Russians were killed, and a fight ensued in the course of which the Japanese threw some hand-grenades, and being greatly outnumbered, made their escape. The Russians subsequently took their departure having burned several houses and left 2 dead. The Japanese had one killed and one wounded.

KOREA.

We read in the Nichi Nichi Shimbun's correspondence that the Russians have a force of 1,000 men at Musan—a place remembered in connexion with the notorious timber-felling concession—and 1,000 at Kyongheung on the right bank of the Tumen. These troops are apparently prepared to withdraw across the river at the first indication of attack. Meanwhile the Japanese are steadily pushing northward. They do not encounter any resistance from the enemy but they are much obstructed by the state of the roads which are so bad as to render military movements extremely arduous.

The people of Pyongyang have decided not to accept the new Japanese coins. Their trouble seems to be that spurious nickels abound in the region, and they shrink from the loss incurred in exchanging these at the recently determined rates. In fact the nickel question is giving trouble everywhere. The market is flooded with these coins, and they have fallen to a great discount, as much as 4 to 1 in some places.

Meanwhile the new postal organization is proceeding satisfactorily. The transfer of the various offices was completed on the 2nd. There were 462 offices in Korean hands and 61 Japanese. There have all been combined and re-organized, the total number under the new regimen being 361.

The Japanese Imperial Household has taken one half of the Korean loan, and there thus remains only one million to be subscribed by the public. About one-half of the latter has already been put up.

MANCHURIA.

Friday, July 7.

Rumours are repeated of a serious epidemic among the Russian forces in Manchuria. The nature of the malady is not clearly indicated—cholera was recently spoken of—but the number of victims claimed daily is said to be very large.

It is stated that the inflow of Russian reinforcements into Manchuria has now fallen to some 400 daily, a number insufficient to meet normal casualties. But it is almost wonderful that Russia can send out any troops at all considering her internal condition.

The news of the Battle of the Japan Sea and of the subsequent peace proposals has now spread, it is stated, through the whole Russian army and has produced profound depression. Letters designed to augment this despondent mood are circulated among all ranks, and the Commander-in-chief has announced that any one writing or assisting to forward such documents will be shot.

Linevitch, according to all accounts, continues to be altogether perplexed about the situation of the Japanese main force, and consequently about the nature of the Japanese strategy. His perpetual reconnaissances in force indicate this condition of uncertainty. During the past two months these reconnaissances have been the prominent feature of the situation in Manchuria. With wearisome monotony the public has read, day after day, in Japanese official reports how such and such a Russian force, sometimes of cavalry alone, sometimes of infantry alone, sometimes mixed and often with quite a formidable park of artillery, has advanced against this point or that, or moved in one direction or another, always with the same result—"repulsed with loss." The number of these essays has been legion, their issue uniform, and the tale of consequent casualties must have mounted to a formidable aggregate. Since the beginning of this month there has been a comparative cessation of reconnoitering, if we except the affair on the 2nd in the Changtu region, where the Russians claim to have annihilated a Japanese battalion, though in truth they put only 90 men hors de combat and had 400 casualties on their own side. Rumour alleges that Linevitch had planned a general forward movement, to commence on the 3rd, but no practical evidences of any such movement have been discernible. The Russian General's intentions remain wrapped in mystery. He can never hope to restore the fortunes of the war by remaining quiescent in his lines. He has been driven from the capital of Manchuria and his country has lost everything that invested the Three Provinces with any political, strategical or imperial value. To mend the situation it devolves on him to assume the offensive. He has not done so and there are no signs of his doing so. Most assuredly unless he soon accomplishes something, his substitution for Kuropatkin will be recognised as another of the great mistakes of the war. Possibly it is true that he had contemplated a forward movement commencing on the 3rd. Spies are represented as having said so. But the fact is that there has not been any movement. Did St. Petersburg veto it in view of the peace conference?

Saturday, July 8.

The Fiji Shimpō describes a reconnaissance at Tapchihin which is in the Hsingking district. On the morning of the 5th a body of Japanese troops moved out in the direction of that place and opened fire on the Russians at 4,000 metres range. The Russians suffered many casualties—70 or 80 are spoken of—but their return-fire did not accomplish anything beyond the wounding of one Japanese. They are said to have shown much want of spirit. The account, however, is not official, and it will be observed that the range spoken of is long, even for field-guns.

A Japanese officer, speaking through the columns of the Asahi Shimbun, observes that the Russian attacks on the Japanese have grown markedly less in number than they used to be. This he does not interpret to mean that they have successfully completed their reconnaissances, or that they consider they have checked the Japanese advance, but merely that they believe their fortifications to be complete. A similar experience was noted at the Shaho. So long as they were labouring at their fortifications the Russians made repeated petty attacks upon the Japanese front but when they imagined themselves secure against the enemy's advance they desisted from these operations. They must have sacrificed a very large number of men in the aggregate along the Kirin-Changchun lines and at their advanced positions, but they have not succeeded in discovering the whereabouts of the Japanese main force and therefore it can not be supposed that they will now desist from further reconnaissances. Moreover, the lines of both armies are now so close that a general engagement may take place at any moment. At one time, indeed, it looked as though the Russians were determined to attack along their whole front before the commencement of the wet season.

Sunday, July 9.

Some skirmishes are officially reported. At 10 a.m., on the 6th, 11 companies of the enemy's cavalry approached Wanlinpao (about 23 miles north-west of Yingching on the road to that place from Kaiyuan) but were repulsed.

At 5 a.m. on the same day some 50 Cossacks were driven north at Sanshillipau (on the Fenghua road 10 miles north of Changtu). The Russians lost 5 men and 4 horses. Their horses were, at the same time, discovered at Shunshanpau (some 2½ miles north-east of Sanshillipau)—the troopers having apparently dismounted—and were fired on, one of the men and 3 horses being killed.

At 8 p.m. the same day 4 companies of the enemy's cavalry appeared at Lungwang-miotsz (5 miles north-west of Kangping), but they retired north on observing the advance of our infantry.

The Kokumin Shimbun's correspondence says that Mischenko's cavalry is still near Laoyangwopeng but that it shows no sign of activity. There are some 60 sotnias in the Fakumun district and from 40 to 50 near Changtu. Things are comparatively quiet. The Russians near Changtu treat the Japanese wounded very kindly but those in the Fakumun district kill the wounded, strip them and don their uniforms for the purpose of approaching the Japanese lines. The Fiji's correspondence assigns an army of 350,000 men of all arms to Linevitch, and says that his main concentrations are at Hwaitieh, Changchun and Kirin.

Tuesday, July 11.

London telegraphs that the annihilation of the Baltic Fleet, the opening of a peace conference, and the mutiny in the Black Sea Fleet have greatly broken the spirit of the Russian armies in the field, a result which might have been anticipated. It is now stated that there has been a change of the original Russian dispositions, which had for main defences the line from Kirin to Changchun. The gist of the change is that Linevitch has considerably thrown forward his lines. His main positions extend from a point immediately south of Fenghua viâ Kaoshantun station (vide our map of June 30th) to Hailungching. Along this line he has built various defensive works and is very strongly posted. His most advanced line extends from Touwa to Suping-chieh, and his second line is based on Panienchling whence it extends east and west. In these various positions he is said to have 8 corps d'armée, or something like 250,000 of all arms. Linevitch himself is said to have his head-quarters at Kung-chuling on the railway north of Fenghua (vide our map of April 23.) Renenkempf is at Hailungching with one army corps, and Kuropatkin is spoken of as having two army corps at Kwokiatien. These dispositions would indicate that Linevitch looks for the chief Japanese advance, or contemplates making his own chief advance, along the line of railway.

The Asahi Shimbun's correspondent quotes Lt.-General Okubo, who commands the Sixth Division, as saying that the rumours of peace are very unwelcome news to the army. The men do not want peace and do not allow any thoughts of it to trouble them. They have no idea of abandoning the war at this stage. The summer heat of Manchuria has now come, and the thermometer ranges daily in the neighbourhood of 90°. The troops have fought in mid-winter and in mid-summer and they are well accustomed to it all. There is less sickness than there would be under ordinary circumstances at home. Not more than 80 or 90 men are on the doctor's lists out of each Division. General Okubo speaks with great admiration of General Nogi. He says that from first to last Nogi fares exactly like the commonest soldier under his command, and that every one of his men is ready to die with him. "I can't get on myself," continues General Okubo, "without having something good to eat occasionally, but Nogi appears to be quite independent of creature comforts."

Thursday, July 12.

Moji telegraphs that cholera has broken out in the first and second Russian lines and that ten deaths are occurring daily. Much consternation is said to prevail, and it is supposed that this was the reason why a general forward movement, contemplated by Linevitch on the 2nd instant, did not take place. Stringent precautions are being adopted by the Japanese, who, up to the present have enjoyed excellent health. There have been 5 cases of cholera in the lines near the Liao, but the disease seems to have been stamped out, and with the exception of a few cases of typhoid and a still smaller number of kakke no unfavourable symptoms are apparent.

The railway southward of Liaoyang will be opened for general traffic from the 20th instant.

Thursday, July 13.

Russian reports speak vaguely of an advance by three battalions of Japanese infantry and 2 companies of cavalry on the western front of the Manchurian position. This occurred on the 7th instant, but the report does not speak of any fighting.

Another account from Russian sources says that on the 4th instant the Japanese advanced in north-eastern Korea as far as Pukochin, which is midway between Susong and the Tumen.

The Nichi Nichi says that owing to the nature of the communications there can scarcely be any serious fighting south of the Tumen. What may be entailed in an attempt to cross the river, should such attempt be in contemplation, is another question.

M. POKOTILOFF.

This new accession to Russia's diplomatic ranks seems to be making himself very busy in Peking. He is said to be going round the principal Chinese officials and assuring them that Russia intends to withdraw from Manchuria and to abandon her lease of Liaotung, concerning the subsequent fate of which places China had better consult with Japan. As to the East-China Railway, however, M. Pokotilloff alleges that it is not an official enterprise, having been built by the peoples of the two empires, and that China must not by any means agree to its passing into Japanese hands, especially as it would prove an instrument of aggression. In fact, M. Pokotilloff seems to be most earnestly devoting himself to the effort of persuading China that, when all is said and done, Russia is her best friend. He repudiates the idea that St. Petersburg has any intention of embarrassing Peking by demands based on China's imperfect fulfilment of her neutral duties, and he maintains that the real cloud on the horizon is in the direction of Japan. It need scarcely be observed that large gifts of money sit across the pages of this narrative, and that the celebrated eunuch, Li Lien-yung, is spoken of as the destination of certain douceurs. The whole story suggests that M. Pokotilloff is not observing Tallyrand's caution against trop de zèle, but we must make allowances for the shortness of the time at his disposal. He has to leave Shanghai by one of the Empress boats on the 10th or the 11th, and even then he will be one of the late arrivals at the conference chamber. As for the arguments attributed to him, it can not be said that they display much ingenuity. The declaration that Russia intends to abandon Manchuria and surrender her lease of Liaotung is scarcely a graceful method of acknowledging a necessity, and the pretence that the East-China Railway was built by the peoples of the two empires and is not an official asset, can only provoke a smile. M. Pokotilloff is supposed to know the Chinese. Has he really found them so naive that logic of the above nature seems suited to their intelligence? Has he not rather fallen into the mistake of Bill Nye and the childlike and bland Ah Sing? It may be, however, that rumour misrepresents M. Pokotilloff, for he enjoys the reputation of being a very clever man. To us the most interesting feature of his doings is that they constitute an indirect evidence of the Tsar's sincerity in the matter of peace. If Russia did not intend to lie down, M. Pokotilloff would not be so assiduous in preparing a couch for her.

Since the above was in type further news from Peking indicates that M. Pokotilloff has been working very strenuously to induce the Chinese Government to demand representation at the Peace Conference. The Russian Minister is said to have laid special stress on the railway question. He insists that if, after the conclusion of peace, Japan does not restore the line, China will be obliged to compensate the shareholders. In short, he is adroitly endeavouring to preserve for his country a permanent interest in the railway, and it must be confessed that his policy is sufficiently intelligible. He seems to have succeeded in impressing Prince Ching and Na Tung so strongly that they agreed to hold a secret conference of statesmen to consider his advice, and possibly things might have taken the turn desired by M. Pokotilloff, which would inevitably have resulted either in a flat refusal from Japan or in throwing open the conference chamber to all the Powers directly or indirectly interested, had not Viceroy Yuan again repeated his emphatic counsel against any such unwisdom. Yuan sees clearly that his country's only hope at this juncture is to place implicit reliance in Japan's good faith and good will. He understands that China's voice would count for very little in a conference of the nations, whereas it may count for a great deal in Japan's private ear. We do not gather quite clearly what decision the secret council of statesmen reached, but apparently their ultimate idea was to send a special ambassador to Japan.

THE BLACK SEA.

Had the trouble in the Black Sea continued a little longer it might have led to unpleasant complications owing to the necessary intervention of foreign Powers. Telegrams from London suggest that England was becoming very uneasy on account of the lives and properties of her subjects in that region, and even that she had made diplomatic representations on the subject, though the language attributed to her is by no means credible. Happily the incident is now closed by the surrender of the Kuiaz Potemkin to the Roumanians, which event took place, apparently, on the 8th instant. But the mutiny broke out on the 29th of June, and thus what the world had seen is the extraordinary spectacle of a Russian battle-ship remaining for 10 days in a state of open mutiny within a few hours steaming of a strong Russian fleet, and finally escaping any effective restraint by the latter. It was a most singular display of naval impotence, and no one can imagine that its effect upon the prestige of the Russian navy will fail to be far-reaching. One is forcibly reminded now of Captain Klado's strong recommendations that the Black-Sea Squadron should be sent eastward with the Baltic Fleet. Would the former have followed Rojestvensky quietly? There is room for a maze of thrilling conjectures.

The old proverb of the ill wind is illustrated by this occurrence. Rumour says that it was the news of the mutiny in the Black Sea which drew German financiers into the new Japanese loan.

Meanwhile it is to be hoped that Russia's internal troubles are beginning to approach an end. There always hangs over European nations the appalling contingency of her bankruptcy. Were she to repudiate her debts the shock to the world's finance would be stupendous. That is a strong hold which she possesses on public sympathy.

NAVAL EXPANSION.

It appears that there are people in Japan who argue that this country may rest content with the additions its navy will receive from Russia. That is an idea which the Jiji Shimpō opposes most stoutly. Our contemporary recalls the great changes that the manufacture of armour plates has undergone during the past ten years. Thus the Fuji and the Yashima, completed in 1896, had Harvey plates, but since their time the Harvey-nickel plates have been found much superior, and now, by the addition of chrome, we have the Krupp plate which has much greater powers of resistance, and was used in building the Mikasa. Among the Russian ships likely to be added to Japan's Navy the only up-to-date vessels are the Rekhsan, the Pobieda and the Orel, battle-ships, and the armoured cruiser Bayan. Even these may at any moment pass out of date. Russia is defeated at sea, but no one supposes that she will rest content with defeat. Most indubitably she will construct a big new fleet according to the best principles of modern naval architecture. Japan wants lasting peace. The alliance with England will be a great help towards that end, but if Japan relies solely on the alliance she will certainly have cause to regret such inaction. She must be always prepared for any emergency. Only thus can she secure peace.

This article may be supplemented by observing that the proofs of splendid efficiency furnished by her sailors should be remembered by Japan. Nothing is necessary except to place good and sufficient material in the hands of these men. The one source of profound uneasiness to Japan throughout this war has been the possibility of losing the command of the sea. She ought never again to expose herself to such a peril.

THE "KOKKWA."

This now celebrated magazine has made a second new departure in its history. During the first eleven years of its existence its monthly numbers had a purely Japanese letter-press and were thus inaccessible to the generality of foreigners, who, although they fully appreciated the beauty of the plates and the advantages of possessing a work which would familiarize them gradually with all the surviving treasures of Japanese art from the earliest time down to our own day, were nevertheless deterred by inability to follow the descriptions accompanying the pictures or to understand the excellent historical, technical and aesthetic appreciations with which the volumes abounded. One hundred and thirty-two numbers laboured under that disadvantage, but with the 133rd a new departure was made: a special edition was issued partly in English and partly in Japanese. This continued for 4 years longer, and now, with the 182nd number we have yet another change, namely, the whole of the reading matter in English. The magazine will henceforth rank among the highest publications devoted to art in any part of the world. It offers one special attraction: the writers are all Japanese, so that the periodical furnishes an insight into art motives, methods and ideals as they present themselves to an Oriental people who are universally acknowledged to be a race of artists. The first number of the new issue opens with a well-written introduction, which is followed by the initial essay of a series, promising to be very interesting, on the characteristics of Japanese painting by Mr. S. Taki. Then there is a minute description, with pictures, of the celebrated Tamamushi Shrine, originally in the possession of the Empress Suiko, and the periodical closes with an illustrated essay on sword-ornaments. The plates are all beautifully executed and if the standard reached by this first volume be maintained in future numbers the magazine will be most welcome to all foreign students of Japanese art.

WOMAN'S PLACE IN THE WORLD.

The "New Woman" has not been so prominent a topic of discussion, ridicule, or analysis in contemporary newspapers, magazines and novels as she was a few years ago. Perhaps the movement has passed its meridian and the current of public sentiment is setting in an opposite direction, for a time at least. From the earliest ages there has always been a Woman's Question to bewilder and entangle humankind, and there always will be so long as the world continues to swing down the ringing grooves of change. Necessarily each generation has a different phase of the matter to deal with, for is not woman a jewel of many bewildering facets, and is not the particular facet turned for the moment to the light the most important of the lot? At least she thinks so and she forces her belief upon the world at large whether it will or not. The emancipation of woman from the domination of man engaged the feminine mind long before burning Sappho sang her ineffectual love songs, and when in the closing years of the nineteenth century Madam Sarah Grand and the host of neurotic scribbling females who followed in her wake, reopened the discussion from another point of view, the world, when it got over its first shock of surprise, realised that it was only listening to age-worn arguments decked out in new verbal garments of ungainly texture. The Neurotics and the Striking Sisterhood had their day and are passing away into the limbo of forgotten things, but they have left a miasma-laden atmosphere behind that requires some healthful blais of commonsense to effectually dispel. President Roosevelt has been prominent among those who have introduced fresh healthy currents in the stagnant puddle of public thought, and in no direction has his efforts been more successful than in that we now discussing. "The prime duty of man," he recently said, "is to work to be the bread-winner, the prime duty of the woman is to be the mother, the housewife. All questions of tariff and finance sink into insignificance when compared with the tremendous, the vital importance of trying so to shape conditions that these two duties of the man and of the woman can be fulfilled under reasonably favourable circumstances." No splendor of monetary prosperity, he declared, with all the picturesque vehemence for which he is famous, "can compensate for the absence of abundant children, vigorous of body, and clean and strong of mind."

President Roosevelt's words fell on kindly soil. "Lucas Malet," one of the most gifted of English lady writers of the present day, read them and was tempted to take the President's declaration for the text of an article in The Fortnightly. She sets out by asking if President Roosevelt's warning has not come too late? "Is it possible to thus set back the hands of the clock and eradicate tendencies which have been enthusiastically fostered during two generations in England, and are now in active development in various Continental countries?" Woman's position and ideals, it is asserted, have changed very little in the highest class. "She was always fairly well educated. She is so still. Marriage was her object, if not always her destiny. It remains so." And it is in the bond that she should bear children. "In the highest class the man is very much master still." Very much the same can be said of the woman of the working classes. It is in the middle class, using the term in its widest acceptance, that "Lucas Malet" finds that "the so-called Woman's Movement in England has done at once most good and created most danger." She makes scornful reference, in passing, to "a certain foolish contingent, whose aspirations are exclusively worldly, who ape the clothes and pastimes of their betters on insufficient incomes, regard marriage as the gateway to cheap intrigue, and waste their time at ladies' clubs with much the same detrimental consequences to family and household as is the case with women of the people who waste them in the public-house. They are infected by a greed of notoriety, of publicity, of gadding. They must catch the eye and be talked of."

But the question particularly dealt with in the Fortnightly article, is the effect of the Woman's Movement upon the sober-minded majority of the English middle-class. It is here that she finds the "emancipated"—the independent, because money-earning woman. Here "the man no longer is master. He has lost prestige since the woman has pitted her brains, her mechanical skill, her physical endurance against his. He ceases to impress her from the moment she is capable of earning her own bread." So the attraction of marriage is lessened. In the course of her argument "Lucas Malet" touches upon "the decrease of the maternal passion among the women of the English middle class. These women are not less courageous than their mothers and grandmothers. They have plenty of presence of mind. It does not occur to them to scream or to faint. But their courage is of the active and militant, rather than of the passive and silent sort demanded by the long malaise of child-bearing and the pains and perils of childbed. They have something of a healthy man's disgust for invalidism, and his jealous care that the body, for work's sake, be kept active and fit. The minds of many of them moreover, have been infected by the morbid views of certain feminine essayists and novelists who stigmatise child-bearing as a gross animal function against which refinement and what by such persons is known as the 'higher morality' alike protest. If the race can only be continued by these repulsive methods, well then—they say—perish the race! The result is a singular one—an attitude of pitying contempt towards the mother, and of sentimental apology towards the children whom she has done the very doubtful kindness of bringing into the world." But "Lucas Malet" is convinced that this distaste for domestic life is largely a temporary thing, a mere fashion. "There is no fighting against the quiet persistence of Nature. Motherhood and housewifery will reconquer any lost ground. The Woman's Movement has been of immense assistance to girls who have to earn their own bread and make their own way in the world. But the exaggerations, the abnormalities and absurdities which have been engendered by it will vanish, borne away by the breath of that strange wind of destiny which sweeps across the human field of wheat."

CHINA.

The appointment of M. Pokotiloff in connexion with the Peace Conference is causing much conjecture. What is currently believed is that he will be entrusted with some duty in connexion with the East-China Railway, the affairs of which are familiar to him. The Russian Government may possibly endeavour to prove that the railway is private property, for which end a consignment of it to a Franco-Belgian syndicate is vaguely spoken of as having already taken place. There may also be some scheme for anticipating the time conventionally fixed for the surrender of the line to the Chinese Government. No solid facts have been ascertained but it is certain that M. Pokotiloff's appointment inspires strong suspicion of some crafty manoeuvring. Whether M. Pokotiloff and his Government are to be congratulated or otherwise on the fact that their movements are viewed with such distrust is a question apart. The East-China railway is a valuable asset, valuable both politically and financially. It may well be the corpus vite of some diplomatic chicanery, and under any circumstances the manner of disposing of it must be one of the most difficult problems inviting solution by the peace conference. To destroy the line would be uncivilized; to leave it as a potential bone of future contention would be impolitic; to place it in Japanese hands would be particularly distasteful to Russia; to restore it gratis to China would be quixotic from Japan's point of view.

The Kokumin Shinbun has a telegram from Peking saying that Russia has sent a diamond bracelet to the Dalai Lama in Kulong, and that Captain Korsakoff with a body of troops it about to enter Lhasa. Again occasion is furnished to admire the restless energy of Russia. Her ambition is insatiable. Nothing can check its vitality. Defeated in one direction, she stretches out her hand in another just as though a direful past had not just been placed on her record. It is hard to believe, however, in Captain Korsakoff and his Lhasa entry, while as for the diamond armlet, it may be only a recognition of the Dalai Lama's hospitality to M. Pokotiloff during the latter's stay at Kulong. Incidentally it may be observed that M. Pokotiloff has taken the first step towards fame—he has succeeded in getting himself much spoken of.

It is stated by a Chinese officer who recently arrived in Shanghai from the North that, with the assumption of their new uniforms, hat and leather boots—which are almost entirely on Western models—by the officers and men of the Chihli Army Corps, under Viceroy Yuan Shih-k'ai, over one-third of them have already cut off their queues, "for convenience sake," while others more conservative have merely cut off half their queues, and wound the remainder of their hair into a top knot, to enable them to "look properly" with their new military hats.

The Legation ladies in Peking were entertained at the Summer Palace on the 23rd ult. They were escorted by the Peking Police.

On Mr. Rockhill's representations, the Throne has ordered that all matters connected with Chinese Exclusion are to be left to the Peking Government, and the people are not to interfere with them in any way.

There were still about four plague cases a day in Hongkong.

According to the China Mail, the O.S.S. Calchas is taking all the tea from Foochow this year.

A Chengtu dispatch reports that a brigade of Szechuan troops, under General Ma, and accompanied by two Civil Commissioners, Taotais Chao and Ts'ien, to reorganise the region after "pacification," left Tachienlu for Patang, Tibet, on the 20th ultimo. The expedition has been sent to avenge the murder by Patang Tibetans of H. E. Feng Ch'uan, late Assistant Resident of Tibet, who had gone last April to Patang to investigate the murder of a Chinese officer and a few soldiers by the lamas of a monastery called Fainingsze last January.

The Directors of the Shanghai Gas Company, Limited, have declared an interim dividend for the half-year ended 30th June last, at the rate of 7 per cent., or Tls. 3.50 per share, on the paid-up capital of the company, payable, on the 20th inst.

Vah Kah-der, the notorious head of a gang of thieves and robbers, who is greatly "wanted" by the police in Shanghai as well as by the authorities in Nanking and Soochow, is reported to be still in South Tungchou (near Naanking), where he is said to have gathered quite an army of robbers and salt smugglers, all of whom have been well armed through the means at Vah Kah-der's disposal. Owing to the constantly increasing size of this man's supporters, the Nanking officials are getting quite anxious, as it is feared he may at any time join the Kolao Hui society men, should they begin to make trouble in the Yangtze cities this summer. A special reward of $2,000 has therefore been offered to whomsoever will bring Vah Kah-der dead or alive to Nanking and as an additional reward a military rank is also promised to the successful captor. A certain military officer recently volunteered the job of capturing Vah Kah-der if the reward be doubled.

A careful analysis, says the N.-C. Daily News, has been made of ten-cash pieces from various provincial mints, and it is found that the proportion of copper in those which have the appearance of copper is very large, some of them consisting of almost pure metal. In the brass pieces, also, there is in many cases as much as 70 per cent of copper. Meanwhile, we learn that so far from assisting in the establishment of a uniform currency for China, Viceroy Yuan Shih-kai has prohibited the introduction into Chihli of ten-cash pieces from any other province, as this importation interferes with the valuable public works he is carrying out by means of the large profits earned by his own mint.

A private telegraphic dispatch from Peking, printed in the North-China Daily News, states that in view of the dissatisfaction in Peking against Viceroy Chou Fu's régime in Nanking, the friends and supporters of three Manchou high provincial officials are busily engaged in intriguing at Court to obtain the Liangkang Viceroyalty for their respective nominees. These three candidates are Sung Fan, Viceroy-designate of the Min-ché provinces; En Shou, ex-Governor of the quondam K'ang-huai province and father-in-law of Prince Tsai Chên, the son of Prince Ching; and Tuan Fang, Governor of Hunan, Acting Viceroy of Hukuang in 1903 and for a short time Acting Viceroy of Liangkang in 1904. As far as chances go, it is unfortunate for the Liangkang that the man best fitted in every way, by reason of his ability, energy, and honesty, namely, H.E. Tuan Fang, has the worst chances of the three, as owing to his being by no means a wealthy man, he has few friends and supporters in Peking. The man with the best chance, should Chou Fu really have his resignation accepted by the Throne, is En Shou, on account of his close relationship with the most powerful prince at Court, namely, Prince Ching.

"THE TIMES" ON THE NAVAL VICTORY.

The Times of the 2nd of July has the following comments on the naval victory in the Sea of Japan:—

The further details of Togo's great victory that continue to arrive cannot add anything to the impressiveness of the result, to which they add confirmation which was hardly necessary. "The Russian fleet is practically annihilated" was the first message of the great Admiral, and all that subsequent information can do is to eliminate the qualifying adverb. It was the aim of the Japanese not merely to defeat the Russian fleet, but to destroy it, and what they determined to do they have done, and done, as Togo's battle signal bade them do, to "their utmost." It may be a long time before we learn authoritatively and fully how the thing was done, but the stupendous feat for the present holds the imagination so powerfully as almost to stifle curiosity. There is, however, one thing upon which this is the time to insist, with the great which this is the time to insist, with the great fact standing alone before the world. Whatever the methods, whatever the means employed, we have to account for the collision of two great fleets, so equal in material strength that the issue was thought doubtful by many careful statisticians, ending in the total destruction of one of them and in the immunity of the other from damage greater than might well be incurred in a mere skirmish. The fishing boats on the Dogger Bank were hardly more helpless before the Russian guns than the Russian fleet has proved in the hands of Admiral Togo. The final explanation is not in ships or in guns or in seamanship or in tactics. It is to be sought in moral character, in lofty ideals, in resistless enthusiasm, and in a universally diffused sense of duty and of patriotism. Without complete confidence in the moral qualities of those to whom Togo addressed a final message almost identical with that of our own Nelson, he could never have dared to divide his forces in order to surround the Russian fleet. Without the most complete response on the part of those under his command, the attempt must have led to disaster. With anything like parity of moral qualities among his adversaries he could not have ventured upon tactics so ambitious and so daring. But he measured, as the Japanese commanders on land have always measured, the moral and intellectual gifts of his opponents no less than their material resources. The man who sees can judge the errors of the blind, but the blind have no means of estimating the capacity of him who sees. The possessor of high moral qualities can measure the results of their absence in his adversary, but the adversary has no clue to the operation of qualities he does not own. The Tsushima victory is the outcome of Bushido, of the training of the Japanese people in the great fundamental principles of human conduct. That training is not a veneer which can be put on for a given purpose. It is a thing which must begin with the cradle and which must be universal in a nation which hopes to come through the last ordeal as the Japanese have done. Which thing may well give this nation pause, and set it considering whether there are not greater ideals than buying in the cheapest market and obtaining the greatest average return upon capital. We publish to-day a letter from the commander of a Japanese torpedo-boat which, contrasted with the malicious or apathetic spirit of the Russian sailors, goes further to explain the annihilation of the Russian fleet than all the treatises that experts can write upon the relative merits of torpedoes and great guns.

The letter alluded to above is as follows:—

A Japanese gentleman sends us the following translation of a letter received by him a week ago from a friend in command of a first class torpedo-boat in Admiral Togo's fleet:—

Dear O,—A thousand apologies for my lengthy silence: We have been and are still busy, busy preparing a royal reception for the guests from the Baltic. When we of Surimlan (Torpedo-Corps) meet ashore, we discuss and often wonder if after all the Russians will come or will they fail us. Do they know that we are ready? To north-west lies the harbour of Masampo, to south that of Sascho, while Moji is on our east, and here we are waiting, waiting and waiting for the enemy. Will he never come?

If you do not hear from me when a meeting has taken place, take this as my farewell. I do not expect to see you again in this life, except perhaps in your dreams. When my boat goes down, I shall go too and a Russian ship with us.

It takes her weight in shells to sink a torpedo-boat—its marvellous how they, the shells, do not hit.

I have seen, not one, but many torpedo actions, and I know. With six compartments in the boat we ought to be able to close in within 20 yards of the target before she is sunk. If we hit, we shall go down with the Russians; if we are hit the Russians shall come with us, for the last man alive will steer the spare torpedo in the water. What is life but a dream of a summer's night? Can one choose more glorious an exit than to die fighting for one's own country and for the Emperor who is a ruler and leader to the nation's heart? Does not many a worthy man end his life's chapter obscure for want of opportunity? Then let us uphold the honour and the duty of being Japanese. By going down with them we shall, in a measure, pay the debt we owe for the slaughter of those poor innocent peasants. They too are fighting for their country, so shall Bushi honour flash. There are more torpedo-boats and torpedo-boat destroyers than the number of ships in the whole fleet of Admiral Rozhdestvensky, and if each of them destroys or disables one of the enemy's vessels, it ought to do.

Father Togo, now grey-haired, walks quietly to and fro on the bridge of the Mikasa, and keeps silence, so all will go well. Do you remember the story when he went up to Tokyo for the first time since the commencement of this war? Some public school boys were determined to unharness the horses off his carriage, at the instigation of the Asahi, I believe, and themselves draw it up to the gate of the Imperial Palace. Well, Father Togo got wind of this, and so he sent his chief-of-staff in the carriage, while he was seen, but not recognized, to be quietly walking towards Nijubashi, with his little daughter's hand in his. Will he play another trick upon the poor unsuspecting Russians when they come? I bid you again farewell. Work, work, and work, for the coming Japan depends on you young fellows.

I remain your ever humble brother,

T. N.

MISS MARIANNE WALSH'S CONTRIBUTION.

Mention was recently made in these columns of a very handsome donation by Miss Marianne Walsh, sister of the late Messrs. T. and J. G. Walsh, to the fund for the relief of families of Japanese subjects killed in the war. The money was handed over by Baron Iwasaki to the Ladies Patriotic Society, and its receipt has been acknowledged by the President of the Society, Princess Iwakura, in a letter of which the following is a copy:—

Tokyo, Japan, July 2nd, 1905.

Dear Miss MARIANNE WALSH,—Your generous contribution of the sum of 4,467.72 yen to the widows and orphans of Japanese marines and soldiers who have died in the present Russo-Japan War has been received by the "Aikoku Fujin Kai" (Ladies Patriotic Association) through Baron Iwasaki. H. I. H. Princess Kan-in, Patroness of the Association, highly appreciates your sympathetic contribution, and you are awarded, according to regulation, the "Medal for Special Merit" with a certificate of eulogy which will reach you under a separate cover. As regards the distribution of the money forwarded from you, the Association will endeavour to employ it to the greatest advantage in supporting as well as consoling the families of deceased soldiers or sailors, so as to realize what would have been the desire of your late brothers and sister and also to make your own philanthropic intention most effective.

"Ameichi" lives in the memory of the Japanese as the name of a great business firm once existing in Yokohama; as an establishment typical of the United States of America; and as the creation of those true friends to Japan, the Walsh brothers, who contributed not a little to this country's commercial development and were always foremost in works of benevolence as well as enterprise. The munificent donation you have now made on behalf of Japanese soldiers and sailors who have laid down their lives for their fatherland seems to find a natural place in the record of your illustrious family, and will long be held in grateful recollection.

Yours truly,

PRINCESS HISAKO IWAKURA,
President,
Aikoku Fujin Kai.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

The Shimbi Shoin have issued two more sets of pictorial post cards. One, Series No. 12, represents Japanese "ladies in summer"; the other, Series No. 6, is from pictures by Hoitsu of the Korin School. Both sets are really very beautiful: well drawn, delicately coloured and showing many of the graces of the true Japanese art spirit. The cards hitherto issued by this firm (52 Nihon-machi, Shitaya, Tokyo) would make a pretty album and will certainly have considerable value by and bye.

The Perry memorial fund, which has for object the succouring of families of men killed in the war, incidental to celebrating the 50th anniversary of Commodore Perry's coming, has amounted to a sum of 103,000 yen. The committee of the Fund decided to hand the money to the Minister of the Imperial Household with a request that the Emperor would indicate the manner of employing the fund, and this step was taken on the 5th.

The results of the court martial now sitting in Russia with reference to Port Arthur will probably be very interesting. As yet little has been said on the subject in European journals, but the Novoye Vremya of May 21st, as quoted by the Jiji Shinbun, alleges that the court has discovered a colossal financial defalcation in which Admiral Alexieff and General Smirnof are both implicated. The broad fact is that whereas a sum of 18 million roubles had been sent by the Government to Port Arthur for the purpose of completing the fortifications and provisioning the place, the fortifications were not completed, provisions were not laid in, and when the siege commenced the treasury was empty. These facts are said to have been ascertained from Stoessel's evidence and from the documents submitted by him. It ultimately became necessary to have recourse to the field-fortification fund in order to pay for labour and materials to consummate the permanent works. Should this charge be substantiated Admiral Alexieff and General Smirnof will be placed in a difficult position.

A sergeant-major, Akeyoshi, whose fate had been unknown, has just written from Harbin where he is held a prisoner by the Russians. Now for the first time in an interval of over three months he is allowed to communicate with his family in Japan. In the matter of food and clothing he appears to be very well treated, but what conceivable excuse can be found for this veto upon communication? It presents a glaring contrast with the methods of the Japanese who lose not a moment in making known the names of Russian prisoners, and who provide every facility for these men to write to their friends. Sergeant-Major Akeyoshi says that in the same room with him there are two wounded Japanese officers, a first and a second lieutenant. They are strictly forbidden to speak to one another, and as their Russian guards have no knowledge of the Japanese language these unfortunate men are condemned to perpetual silence. The story is scarcely credible. Prisoners of war are not criminals as this Russian method of treatment would seem to suggest.

It is noticeable that frequent references are made by one newspaper after another to the Government's recent action in punishing journals which published details as to the projected launch of torpedo-craft in the dockyards of this country. The incident promises to become quite a King Charles' head, and indeed for our own part we are still unable to fathom the motive of the authorities in this matter. But it is also observable that the critics fail to notice or avoid noticing an important feature, namely, that the Government had explicitly forbidden the publication of this particular item. It was by the official veto that we ourselves were prevented from giving publicity to the intelligence. We had in fact actually written and set up a paragraph embodying the intelligence when the official interdict reached us. Presumably it reached the offending journals also, and thus what they were punished for was not a want of difficult discretion but direct disregard of an official injunction. There is all the difference in the world.

The Doshi Rengo-kai a body constituted with various classes of people, politicians, business-men, journalists and others, but it can not be called an association of high-water mark. It held a meeting on the 7th instant and passed a resolution couched in general terms, the gist being that the crown of success in war depends upon the nature of the peace concluded, and that unless the Japanese plenipotentiaries can obtain what is clearly indicated in the Imperial Rescript and what the nation has distinctly shown itself desirous of getting, Japan is entirely prepared to continue the war. That is a useful resolution, and its framers are to be congratulated on avoiding particulars which must either err on the side of frankness or embarrass by their extravagance.

An event well worthy of note is the establishment of a Russian journal in Osaka. It is called Japan and Russia and No. 1, which is before us, shows that it is issued by a Mr. Tsuji. It is on the whole a very creditable production, plentifully illustrated, though many of the pictures are familiar, such for example as the portrait of Admiral Togo, the photograph of his flagship the Mikasa, and the group consisting of General Kuropatkin and his staff, with a number of Japanese officers taken at the Hama-Goten in 1903. But there is a good view of Admiral Rojestvensky on the bridge of the Kniaz Suvaroff, and there are photographs of two famous wrestlers and of Fujiyama which should interest the large Russian constituency in this country to which it is intended to appeal.

The Local Manager of the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation has received a telegram from his Head Office in Hongkong to the effect that, subject to audit, the Bank dividend for the half year ending the 30th June, 1905, will probably be £1.15/-; added to silver reserve $5 lacs; carried forward to next half year, $17 lacs.

It is to be hoped that the proprietors of the Outlook will arrange for re-publishing in book form the series of articles on Port Arthur now appearing in the columns of the magazine from the pen of Mr. George Kennan. We should not have failed to reproduce them in this journal had our space limits been sufficiently elastic, and the readers of the Japan Times must be grateful to that journal for giving them an early opportunity of perusing what is, in our opinion, incomparably the best account yet compiled of that ever-memorable siege. In the fragmentary form of serial publication the account loses much of its interest, and every student of the times must desire to have in his library the narrative of an eye-witness gifted with such powers of observation and such facilities of description as Mr. Kennan possesses.

It has been announced that a radical change is to be at once effected in the uniforms of the Japanese army. In the first place the universal colour is to be khaki (chakatsushoku). In the second there is to be no distinction of corps. Cavalry infantry, artillery, engineers, land transport—all will wear the same costumes. It will be absolutely impossible to distinguish one from the other by means of their costume. In the third place, officers and soldiers will be dressed exactly alike with the one exception of shoulder straps, and these last will be distinguished mainly by the number of stars. We do not gather distinctly whether the quality of the stuff for officers' uniforms will be superior to that used by the men, but apparently there is to be no difference. This sweeping change is another evidence of the conviction held by Japanese military men that simplicity and uniformity are essentials of army organization.

The Kanegafuchi Cotton Spinning Co will hold a general meeting on July 17th in the Bankers' Club, Tokyo, to submit to the shareholders the accounts of the first half year. The interim dividend is said by Japanese papers to be at the rate of 15 per cent per annum.

THE UGUISU.

The uguisu singeth gaily
In the greening maple near;
(Sweet the wind blows)
Glad and glad is his heart
For the waking of the year.
(Sweet the wind blows)
"Come, Dearie, come, let us
Sing and sing together;
Sweet to live, and sweet to love,
This balmy April weather.
All the woods are gay with music
Of the birds of every feather.
Sweet the wind blows."
"It is time we were a-building,
For the summer cometh soon.
Or ever you're aware we'll be
Beneath the rains of June,
While you're singing to the sun
And while you're singing to the moon.
Sweet the wind blows."
The uguisu whistles blithely
On the blossomed bough a-sway;
(Sweet the wind blows)
His heart is all on music
With the glory of the May.
(Sweet the wind blows)
"Come Dearie mine, let us
Carol merrily.
Sweet and sweet is the scent
Of the mountain cherry-tree.
All the earth is full of joy
As my heart is full of thee.
Sweet the wind blows."
"Our eggs must be well mothered
Within our little nest.
'Tis good to feel them safe and warm
Beneath my mother breast;
While you're singing to the east
And while you're singing to the west.
Sweet the wind blows."
The uguisu carols soft and soft
Amid the shadows cool,
(Sweet the wind blows)
Where the maples murmur lullabys
Above the sleeping pool.
(Sweet the wind blows)
"Come, Dearie mine, Dearie
Mine, your heart attune
To the silver stream his song.
To the summer gale his rune.
Good and good is the world
In the happy days of June.
Sweet the wind blows."
"My Downies must be fed
However fair the world may seem;
Tho the sky is all aglow
And tho the earth is all adream;
While you're singing to the wind
And while you're singing to the stream.
Sweet the wind blows."
The uguisu singeth still
In the dingle and the dell,
(Sweet the wind blows)
Where the sasa grass is waving
And the mountain roses smell.
(Sweet the wind blows)
"Come, Dearie mine, ere the Summer days be done
With the glory of the moon
And with the glory of the sun;
While the hills are gown'd in gold
Which the fair susuki spun.
Sweet the wind blows."
"My joy is in my heart,
'n my heart my song shall be,
While my downy darlings twitter
In the swinging maple tree;
While you whistle to the hills
And while you whistle to the sea.
Sweet the wind blows."

On July 10th, the Emperor despatched to the King of England a telegram expressing his profound thanks for the warm welcome which Prince and Princess Arisugawa have enjoyed there. The King wired an appreciative reply.

THE SILK TRADE.

THE BOOKSHELF.

The Awakening of Japan, by OKAKURA, Century Company, New York—Yokohama, Mariya.

How many books of varying degrees of interest are continually being written about Japan! Authors of various nationalities contribute to a literature not only vast, but of the greatest value, for the larger part represents with sincerity the experience and research of those whose gifts have been equal to the task they have undertaken. Nevertheless, however scholarly these works may be, filled with sympathetic insight and free from prejudice and foregone conclusion, there remains always this fact to be considered, that they are the products of those born in another land, of another race, the inheritors of traditions, a culture, and a religion foreign to the land of which they write. "The Awakening of Japan" by Okakura Kakuzo, author also of "Ideals of the East" stands on a different plane and deserves earnest consideration not only for its great intrinsic merit, but because it presents in perfect and idiomatic English—in a style of unusual vigour and beauty—thoughts and ideas which are the evidences of an inspiration, a philosophy, and a patriotism eminently Japanese and Oriental. We find here numerous allusions, a point of view, an expression which would be impossible to any one but a Japanese, and a Japanese scholar who has had full and unusual access to great works of art, history, and modes of thought not only of his own land, but also of China, India, and the Occident. We are shown how the incalculable influence of Confucius and his commentators, the penetrating power of Indian religious thought, centuries of stern martial training combined with the refinement of an exquisite aesthetic civilization, the inspiration of a beautiful unconquered country with its unbroken line of sovereigns, the advantages and disadvantages of the social organization under the Tokugawas, finally the assimilation, which still continues, of all that is held best and most helpful in Western lands and religion have formed the powerful causes which have moulded Japanese History, and that national character to which the attention of the whole world is being drawn at present. In the first chapter of the book the author points out how in spite of the vast sources of information at the command of the West, many misconceptions are still entertained concerning the Japanese, not only by the ignorant and unthinking masses, but also by the comparatively well-informed, who fail to recognize the inner significance of Japan's revival, and the real goal of her aspirations.

Many have marvelled at the facility with which western sciences, industries, Constitutional Government, and the organization for carrying on a great war have been introduced into this country, but they forget that the strength of the movement which brought Japan to her present position is due not less to the innate virility which has enabled her to assimilate the teachings of a foreign civilization, than to her capability of adopting its methods. With a race as with the individual it is not the accumulation of extraneous knowledge, but the realization of the self within that constitutes true progress.

It was the fate of India and China to succumb to or become partially paralyzed by the power of foreign invaders, and oppressive dynasties, but Japan who was equal to the task of repelling the Mongol, and checking foreign aggression, became isolated; her sole point of contact, the port of Nagasaki. She was governed by a succession of military regencies a consideration of whose methods exemplified in the Tokugawas forms the subject of a deeply interesting chapter. We are told how the mechanism of the Tokugawa rule afforded the spectacle of a society perfectly isolated, and self-complete, which acting and re-acting upon itself produced worlds within worlds, each with its separate life and ideals, and its own distinct expressions in Art and Literature.

In the following chapter upon Buddhism and Confucianism, it is very interesting to note that Buddhism, in spite of its great number of devout adherents, its temples and monasteries, never became organized in such a way as to impose its influence on the State. An individual of great gifts or holiness of character might wield power over a Sovereign and his Court, but this was only temporary and personal; politics were kept separate from religion, which was looked upon as a world of freedom men of action desired to enter that they might find the higher life of the Spirit, and be released from social trammels and conventions. In "The Voice from Within" the author traces the development of those separate schools of thought which united to form the real cause of the regeneration of Japan. The first was the Kogaku, or School of Classic Learning, and was a protest against the exclusive study of Shintoki's Commentaries on Confucius, and resulted in establishing an attitude of bold and original inquiry. This was followed by the school of Oyomei, that great Chinese general and scholar, who held that all knowledge was useless unless expressed in action, a doctrine of peculiar charm to the Japanese mind, whose genius is that of action as opposed to introspection and speculation. The lethargy which bound the nation was finally shaken off by the efforts of the Historical School which taught for whom to act. Its efforts found a beginning in genealogies intended to redound to the sole glory of the Tokugawas and these deepened and culminated in the works of Motoori and Harumi who, by their masterly studies of Ancient Poetry and History, opened up new vistas of thought. The study of archaeology was greatly encouraged, rare manuscripts and encyclopedias of art were collected, the treasures of old monasteries were investigated and recorded—and the era of renaissance began in Japan. This acquisition of historical knowledge resulted in the revival of Shintoism, and Shintoism led back to the idea of supreme devotion, and obedience to be rendered to the person of the Mikado. This spirit swept on till it reached the heart of the samurai. Stories of bygone patriotism were revived, pilgrimages made to the forgotten tombs of Emperors—and the samurai, "the living sword," wielded by this great historic spirit was now ready to leave the scabbard where he had been long imprisoned by the Tokugawa rule. The succeeding chapters treat in turn of the coming of Commodore Perry, the opposing and various forces which were at work during the period of the Restoration, the peculiar power which the women of that period exerted upon politics. There is full appreciation of that which is best in the Occident, and a tribute to that beautiful spirit of profound respect and idealisation which Christianity inculcates towards women, but in the chapter entitled the White Disaster there is a stern and powerful, though just arraignment of the selfish and ruthless powers of the West, whose extended commercial interests and material greatness have almost crushed out spirituality, and have imposed over and over again a cruel tyranny upon the weaker nations of the World. But there is no "Yellow Peril"—Japan stands for Peace—not for War. The lives she has given so freely, she has offered from a sense of duty and loyalty, not from blind fanaticism, or for a love of fighting. She is moved by an invincible purpose strengthened by righteousness—and she gauges and values as few nations can the preciousness of the blood which counts it the highest honour to be shed for its Emperor and its country.

The book is a living book, filled with passages of warm poetic beauty, of great unity and artistic achievement. The realization of the self within is its key-note, and when we lay the book down we appreciate indeed that it is to this self-realization that Japan of the present day owes her greatness. She is no ephemeral flower, but the blossom of a tree centuries old. Weapons of modern warfare, scientific discoveries, time and labour-saving of inventions are useless, and trivial, without the will, and character, and genius that makes them serve. It is not her political position, but a long slow process of evolution which has fitted Japan to take her place amongst the Great Heirs of the ages. She is no parvenu exalted by fortune, but a Princess entering upon her inheritance.

YACHTING.

The Yokohama Yacht Club was again favoured with very fine weather for the sailing races on Saturday. A good southerly breeze enabled the various courses to be completed in short time, the last boat to get home crossing the finishing line before half-past five.

The Cruising Class started at 1.30., and their course was a new one; first round the Quarantine ship to the Widow buoy, back round the Quarantine ship, round the red buoy off Tachibana, from thence out to the buoy off Mandarin Bluff, and home to the finish. Wanderer did not start. Asagao and Nina were smartest across the line on gun fire, and Surprise had a slight advantage from Kathleen. Spinnakers were set to port for the run down wind to the Harbour Entrance, where Nina led from Asagao, Surprise and Kathleen in the order given. They had a close reach to the Quarantine ship, and Nina got away a little from Asagao. Going about, they all stood inshore towards Mandarin Bluff, and Asagao, standing in further before tacking, was able to pass Nina to windward off Honmoku. The sea off Treaty point was choppy with the weather-going tide, and Nina took the lead again, rounding the Widow buoy ahead of Asagao. At this mark Surprise was about 15 minutes behind Asagao, and Kathleen about 20 minutes. Nina and Asagao gybed at the buoy, and Nina carried her spinnaker to starboard on the run to the Quarantine ship. Asagao gybed again, set her spinnaker to port, and the last two did not gybe as they could see from the leaders that it was not necessary. Nina took in her spinnaker some distance from the Quarantine ship, and gybed, and at the mark had only gained a little over a minute from Asagao. They had a broad reach to the buoy off Tachibana, where there was a steamer lying, with the usual tail of cargo boats and sampans. In beating up to the Mandarin Bluff mark, the wind was very fluky, varying as much as three points at times, and coming in squalls off the Bluff. Nina did not stand in so far as Asagao, and at the buoy the latter had caught up on Nina by over two minutes. Neither Nina nor Asagao carried spinnakers back to the Harbour Entrance, although Surprise, coming up later, seemed to carry hers to advantage. Nina lost some time on entering the harbour by the Minnesota, which was turning to leave, as the wash from the big steamer's propellers caught the yacht, and spun her right round. Once clear of that, Nina stood over towards the pier, and Asagao worked up along the breakwater and when they came together again close to the finish, Asagao was ahead, crossing a few seconds in front of Nina. It was a close race between these two right round the course, but Nina seemed to be hindered in windward work rather than helped by her jibtopsail and gaff-topsail, both setting badly. Surprise did fairly well, but Kathleen was right out of it.

Four Larks started to race for the "Gladys" Cup, presented. No. 12 came in first, but was disqualified on her own protest for a breach of the rules, and No. 5 takes the "Gladys" Cup; No. 11 taking second prize given by the Club.

THE BOUGOUIN CASE.

The Bougouin trial occupied the whole of the 8th instant and concluded at 8 p.m. Judgment was delivered on the 10th. The trial was conducted with closed doors so far as the general public were concerned, though a representative of the French Legation was present. It must be assumed that the evidence was of such a nature as to forbid publicity in the interests of the State.

SENTENCE.

The following is a translation of the sentence given on July 10th in the Tokyo District Court by Judge Inamura and Judge Associates D. Fukagawa and K. Oka:—

ALEXANDER ETIENNE BOUGOUIN, 54 years old, Captain of the Army (retired) of the French Republic; agent of commercial and industrial business; now residing at No. 6, Akashi-cho, Tsukiji, Kyobashi-ku, Tokyo.

HIROSHI MAKI, 45 years old, an employee for commercial business, born at No. 66, Inaoka, Yokosuka, Miura district, Kanagawa prefecture, now residing at No. 21-8, Shiba park, Shiba-ku, Tokyo.

This Court, having examined the foregoing men, who are charged with the infringement of the Law for the Preservation of Military Secrets, gives the following sentence in the presence of Public Procurators T. Anju and Y. Ochiai.

GIST OF SENTENCE.

Alexander Etienne Bougouin is sentenced to ten years' ju-choeki (major confinement or confinement with hard labour);

Hiroshi Maki to eight years' kei-choeki (minor confinement, or confinement without labour).

The articles seized as evidence are to be returned to the owners concerned.

REASONS.

One of the accused, Bougouin, was once employed by the Japanese Government as an instructor of the army. Later he was appointed military attaché of the French Legation in Japan. After having been released from that duty, he returned home. In 1893, he arrived in Japan again and since then has been carrying on business as an agent for commercial and industrial businesses at home. From about August, 1904, to about May 5th in the following year, he was still residing at the present place and continuing business. During this period—at the time when Japan and Russia were engaged in hostilities—he spied upon (tanchi-shi) the Japanese military secrets with the object of divulging them to other persons. This crime is very grave.

1.—About Nov. 21st, 1903, he spied the departure of—Division, and wired the report by cipher through Strange, who is living in his house, to a Frenchman named Keschar (?) in Shanghai, in order to have it transferred by the latter to the Petit Parisien of Paris; about Nov. 30th in the same year, he also spied that—landed at—, and he sent this news to the same newspaper by letter.

2.—About Jan. 16th, 1905, he spied that—, having started on Jan. 1st, proceeded in a northern direction by train, and he also reported it to the same journal.

3.—About Feb. 10th, 1905, he spied that the whole of—arrived on Jan. 26th at Liaoyang,—was marching at the end of January in a northern direction, and—at last arrived at—; he communicated the news on Jan. 26th by letter to Captain de Labry of Paris. The letter was sent through the official letter box (Ko-shin-bako) of the French Legation.

4.—About August, 1904, he spied the organization of the artillery of—belonging to the investing army at Port Arthur, as well as the kind and number of guns employed by them, and he also sent this news on Jan. 19th, 1905, to Captain de Labry by the foregoing means.

5.—About Feb. 10th, 1905, he spied that—was newly organized and that the force consisted of—reserve regiment and—reserve regiment organized in Tokyo, and these regiments were leaving for the front,—reserve regiment organized in Sendai had left Yokohama on Jan. 28th by the steamer Tamba Maru, and—reserve regiment organized in Nagoya which left Taketoyo about Jan. 28th by steamer. He also sent these secrets to Captain de Labry by the same means.

6.—About April 15th 1905, he spied that—was organized in Hiroshima and on the same day, he reported it to the same officer by the same means.

Also, about April 26th, 1905, he spied that thirty Japanese transports passed—on April 19th, and he sent this news to M. Keschar of Shanghai by letter to be transferred by telegram to Captain de Labry. About May 5th, 1905, he spied that the Japanese transports shipped in—and that—left for—. He again communicated the news to the man in Shanghai, etc.

Another of the accused, Hiroshi Maki, employee of Bougouin for commercial business, left Tokyo in February, 1905, for Nagoya on business of his employer. While staying in that city, he received instructions from Bougouin to investigate military secrets corresponding with the foregoing fifth clause. Maki consequently reported to Bougouin that—regiment was organized in the first decade of February and left, embarking at Taketoyo. Thus he assisted Bougouin in committing the crime.

Upon the above grounds, the decision is sustained against Bougouin as follows:

A.—The foregoing details are disclosed by (1) the accused's own statement, (2) by the documents seized from him—the 27th page of a copy-book, Exhibit 861-32, proves the first part of the foregoing No. 1 clause, and the 36th page of the same copy-book proves the last part of the same clause; 75th page of the same copy-book establishes No. 2 clause; the 35th and 57th pages of another copy-book of Exhibit No. 861-7 correspond with No. 3 clause; the 52nd page of the same book proves No. 5 clause; the 171st page of the same copy-book proves the first part of No. 6 clause; the 197th page, the middle part of the same clause, and 226th page the last part; and the letters of Exhibit No. 861-35 check No. 4 clause.

B.—Now it had to be found whether the reports given by the accused could be considered military secrets according to this Law. According to the Law for the Preservation of Military Secrets, if military secrets are disclosed, the interests of the country may be endangered and consequently this country keeps such affairs secret. This reason is operative in peace time as well as in war time. The question as to which kind of military affairs should be regarded as in the nature of secret belongs to the Government authorities concerned, who render a decision on the real facts at the time in question. With regard to the report made by the accused, (1) Mr. K. Shimidzu, one of the military censors, held that the communications were military secrets. (2) No. 1 Clause.—At the time of the departure of—Division, the employment of—Divisions at home was a most important part of military strategy, and if it were disclosed to the enemy the result might have endangered Japanese military interests. The last part of the clause shows the place and date of the landing of the Japanese, and their further movements. These all belong to the category of military secrets in hostile times. (3) Referring to Clauses No. 2 and 3, the northward movement of—and—Divisions and the places shows the utilities of the surrender of Port Arthur. The accused disclosed this news before the battle of Mukden so that such information must be dangerous to Japanese military interests. (4) The news collated in Clause No. 4, with regard to—detachments are also secrets at any time. The organization of such forces is not limited only to war time. (5) In Clauses Nos. 5 and 6 the accused disclosed the organization of—force with the time and places of its departure as well as the ways of transporting the troops and the place of destination. Such things are regarded always as matters for secrecy by belligerents. Therefore, these reports of the accused must be considered military secrets. The accused, however, contended that a portion of his reports had been known to the public, and another part had been published by the newspapers, and that when his news reached Paris, the time considered necessary by the military authorities for them to be regarded as secrets would have elapsed. Such contention can not be accepted as a ground for excuse. Sometimes a portion of the military movements are known to the public, and is carelessly published by newspapers, but such fragmentary news never enter into formal details. When the letters of the accused reached Paris, the result of his crime seems to have been minimized as the time of urgency may have passed away, but the accused can not escape from the responsibility of having spied upon Japanese military secrets and passed them on to Paris. The question of guilt does not arise when the result is known but at the time when the deed is committed. (3) The accused further held that he had heard the news from other persons; he had personally witnessed the facts, he had read them in the newspapers, or had obtained information from Maki; and that he had never spied himself into the secrets and inferred them as facts.

C.—The accused, however, is himself regarded to have spied into military secrets on the ground that (a) referring to the 67th page of copy-book, Exhibit No. 861-31, he sent a letter to General Horeaux in which he says that he is under difficulties in obtaining right reports with regard to Japanese military secrets, and that he is one of the best acquainted with such knowledge; (b) in one of the letters to Captain de Labry, 4th page of copy-book, Exhibit No. 861-7, the accused says that there are difficulties in finding out the secrets; (c) according to the statement made by Maki, the accused gave instructions to this Japanese to make a report to him about military secrets while he was in Nagoya; (d) as the accused stated himself in the Court, he asked several persons for military secrets, and he read the newspapers. Thus, collecting the fragments, he drew his own inference and stated the fact formally.

D.—The accused further contended that he had not thought his reports were military secrets as he obtained them from newspapers, etc., which facts were known to the public, and some parts of them were arrived at by his own inference. (a) The accused, however, says in a letter to General Horeaux, 67th page of copy-book of Exhibit 861-31, that the censor of military reports is very strict, so that he must send his reports to Shanghai there to be transferred by telegram, and that communication in that way alone was safe. (b) Referring to 14th page of the same copy-book, he says in a letter to the proprietor of the Petit Parisien that he will send his reports to Shanghai by letter where they will be wired. Thus he could escape the Japanese Censor. (c) In a letter to Keschar, of Shanghai, 397th page of the same copy book, the accused arranged a cipher with reference to the departure of—Division. (d) The accused also arranged a cipher in a letter to Keschar, 27th page of copy-book, Exhibit No. 861-32, for intimating the departure of—Division, and thus he is found to have later informed Keschar of the fact by code-words which escaped the censor. (e) In the letters to Captain de Labry, 60th and other pages of copy-book, Exhibit No. 861-7, the accused says that he experienced extraordinary difficulties in discovering the secrets and that the Japanese public also maintained secrecy as to what belonged to military affairs. (f) The accused says in the letters to Capt. de Labry, 77th and other pages of the same copy-book, that he would devote his whole energy to attending to the instructions of the officer in France for obtaining the secrets and that telegrams to be transferred at Shanghai would be limited to Japanese fighting plans and the army organization; further such news as the secret connected with the Yashima and Takasago. By these letters it is well seen that the accused intended to disclose the secrets even of Japanese plans and military organizations. The accused who was once engaged in military service, ought to know that all of his reports were connected with these secrets. Therefore, he is regarded to have made the reports wilfully.

E.—The accused having spied the secrets gave them at least to one journal and his acquaintances in France. His report was made especially to France and the results are considered to have been most dangerous. Consequently there are no extenuating circumstances in his case.

F.—With regard to the dates of his spying the secrets, the accused (1) stated August, 1904, for No. 4 clause. With regard to the other clauses accused does not give dates, but it is well-known that she was acquainted with the secrets when he posted or wired the news. (2) The accused collected several fragments of news in his dwelling and drew an inference from them. G.—The accused continuously committed the crime. He is to be dealt with by the law as committing a crime though his conduct extended over several dates.

The accusation against Maki is as follows:

A.—The accused received instructions from Bougouin in February, 1905, while in Nagoya on commercial business that he should give detailed reports with regard to military movements. (1) As the accused stated, he reported by letter to Bougouin that—regiment was organized at the beginning of February and left, embarking at Taketoyo, for the front; (2) Bougouin stated in the Court that he ordered the Japanese to give the foregoing report and the latter endorsed it; (3) According to the statement of R. Fukuhara, given in the preliminary examination, the accused sent letters twice to Bougouin in the first decade of February which contain the reports with regard to the date of the departure of the troops, etc., and these communications were translated into French by another employee named Yamaguchi.

B.—The departure of—regiment from Nagoya is regarded as a military secret. Maki with the purpose of informing an other person spied it.

C.—As to the question whether he intended to assist Bougouin, who was engaged in disclosing Japanese military movements, it is known that (1) the accused confessed that Bougouin was endeavouring to collect materials with regard to the movements, though he contended that Bougouin was attempting to compile a history of the war; (2) in the accused's diary, Exhibit 861-26—March 17th, in Nagoya,—the accused described that 2,000 soldiers of—regiment were to leave on 17th and 18th. The report, which is regarded as a proposed plan for the future could not be taken as materials for history; (3) Bougouin is said to have informed the Department of War that he was a correspondent of the Petit Parisien. Thus the accused ought to have attended to finding materials for a newspaper and not for a history; (4) Exhibit 861-68, a man asked Bougouin through the accused about the construction of a searchlight; (5) the accused investigated the searchlight at Kure, and contended that he inspected it on his employers' business, anticipating that he might be given an order by the authorities.

Bearing in mind that Bougouin was attending to military matters, the journey of the accused to several places can not be admitted as being for commercial business. He ought rather to say he was engaged to spy out military secrets. From the evidence, the Court recognize the accused was employed by Bougouin to assist him in his crime. As a subject of the Empire, his crime is very grave.

Thus Bougouin is to be punished under the first clause of Art. 1 of the Law for the Preservation of Military Secrets. Maki, being his accomplice, is to be dealt with under the same law, the first clause of Art. 109 of the Code of Penalties being invoked to reduce by a grade. They are accordingly sentenced as set out above.

The documents, etc., produced in the Court are to be returned to the owners concerned in accordance with Art. 302 of the Code of Penal Procedure.

CRICKET.

MARRIED v. SINGLE.

That the hot weather has set in to stay was very evident on Saturday, and the players in the Married v. Single match at the Y. C. & A. C. ground were very glad of the westerly breeze which tempered the too ardent rays of the sun. The Married team comprised thirteen players, under the captaincy of the veteran Dr. Wheeler. The Bachelors were content with a dozen players but they managed to bring off a draw considerably in their favour, the Married total being 158, and the Single 113 for five wickets, when stumps were drawn.

The Married men started in to bat, having won the toss, and a miss at slip in the first over gave a life to Moon which proved expensive. He lost his partner, Emerson, in the second over, Strome holding him at point—8-1-3. Maitland now partnered Moon but did not stay long, being bowled by McClure when the score had reached 15—15-2-2. Upon W. D. S. Edwards going in runs came quickly, his 15 comprising two 4's, three 2's and one single; but then E. W. Kilby cut short his career by holding him in the slips—37-3-15. The vacancy was filled by Dr. Wheeler, who opened with a single, after which he drove the leather to the boundary for 4 and thereby gained much applause. The two medicos made things lively, Dr. Moon getting three boundaries in succession. Another life was vouchsafed him about this time, Hudson missing him at wicket, and he retaliated by knocking up two more boundaries. A change of bowlers was now effected, Foster relieving McClure. The result spelt disaster for Dr. Wheeler, for he was caught in the slips by Piggott off Foster's first delivery—67-4-10. A splendid stand was made on E. B. S. Edwards joining Moon, the partnership not being broken until the score reached 103, when Moon, slipping on the matting, was run out—103-5-47. Moon had made the top score of the match, his total including eight 5's, one 3, and two 2's. The next 55 runs—out of which Barclay made a useful 22—took about an hour to compile, during which time many changes were made in the bowling, while several misses in the field contributed to prolong the life of the tail. The innings closed in quick order after Holmes had been bowled by H. W. Kilby—158-10-6; Thwaites being given out l.b.w., and Ford clean bowled by H. W. Kilby leaving McClure with his duck still unbroken. Score:—

YOKOHAMA v. TOKYO.

The return match between the Y. C. & A. C., and Tokyo was played on Tuesday afternoon. The members of the visiting team were entertained at tiffin by the local team at 12.30, and play was commenced about 1.45. The weather was then fine, but showers of light rain fell later on. The Tokyo Captain won the toss and elected to bat.

Hume and Hutchison opened the Tokyo innings to the bowling of Mollison and Moon. The first over from the latter produced a single from Hutchison, who in the next over, from Mollison, was bowled first ball. One for 1 run. Thomas took Hutchison's place and runs came only slowly, three or four overs following before 10 went up. After another over Hume's wicket fell to Moon, after the former had added 2 to the total of 13 for two wickets. Salmond followed, but was bowled by Mollison after scoring 6. Three for 20. Capt. Leader was next man in, and after a couple of singles made a very pretty cut for 3 off Mollison. In Moon's next over Leader played a ball into Brady's hands at slip and it was held. Four for 29. Leader having added 7 to the total. Barclay followed, but was bowled by Moon before he had scored. Five for 35. Thomas having added 3 and three byes having been scored since the fall of the last wicket. Piggott was next man. Thomas now began to hit rather more freely, driving one to the boundary and sent another boundary to the rails in one over from Mollison, but a couple of maiden overs followed. Piggott then added a fine drive for three but in the following over was bowled by Kilby who had relieved Mollison. Piggott had added 7. Six wickets for 57. Rice followed, and Thomas was bowled by Kilby in the same over, after having added a useful 22. Seven for 58. Yamasaki joined Rice, but the latter's wicket fell to Moon in the next over, after making a single, 60 for 8 wickets. White followed but was caught by Emerson off Moon's first ball to him. Matsukata joined Yamasaki, but the newcomer did not seem so much at home at the wicket as his compatriot, though he has the reputation of being a good baseball hitter. In the next over his wicket fell to E. W. Kilby, the innings closing for 61.

Dr. Emerson and E. W. Kilby opened the Yokohama innings to the bowling of Col. Hume and Capt. Hutchison. The first over only produced a single, but in the next, from Hutchison, Emerson scored 3 and Kilby a 4 and a 2, and 10 went up. Another couple of overs and 20 was posted. Meanwhile the rain came down pretty sharply for a few minutes but did not interfere with the game, and runs continued to come freely, 30 and 40 following on the telegraph. Then Kilby's cricket fell to Hutchison, after he had put together a useful 24. One for 42. Mollison took Kilby's place and the 50 went up a few minutes later, while the rain again started to come down, fine but thick. With the score at 58, Emerson's bails were disturbed by Col. Hume, after he had added 25 to the total. Dr. Moon followed. A leg drive for 2 by Mollison brought up the 60. The rain had now held up again and boundaries, twos and threes followed one another rapidly, though Piggott had relieved Col. Hume at the Pavilion end, and a little later Capt. Leader took the former's place, Piggott relieving Hutchison at the other end.

Dr. Moon was then caught by Hutchison off Leader for 10. Three for 109. E. B. S. Edwards followed in. Rice now took Piggott's place at the north end, but Mollison made four boundaries and a 2, and two byes off his first over, and Hume was then put on in Rice's place. Runs, however, continued to come apace and 140 went up at 4.45. Thomas was then tried on at the Pavilion end, and in his first over caught and bowled Mollison, who had made the capital score of 77, which included 14 fours. Four for 154. E. W. Maitland was next man in, and almost directly after, at 5 p.m. the innings was declared closed and Tokyo followed on for their second innings.

Tokyo opened their second innings with Leader and Salmond, Kilby and Emerson bowling. Leader was taken by Strome in Kilby's first over and Hutchison, who followed, was bowled first ball by Kilby. Two wickets for 1. Col. Hume followed and was also taken first ball by Kilby, who thus achieved the hat trick. Piggott was next man. Salmond now began to hit pretty freely but with the score at 13 Piggott was bowled by Kilby. Four for 13. Thomas followed on and directly after Salmond was caught by Kilby off Emerson, and Rice who followed was bowled by Kilby for 0. Yamasaka was next man and defended his wicket well from a maiden over from Emerson. In next over Kilby caught and bowled Thomas for 2. Seven for 17. Barclay joined Yamasaka, but in his second over from Emerson was taken by Strome at point. Eight for 22. Matsukata followed, but after the two had added a few singles and byes, was bowled by Kilby for 1. Nine wickets for 27. A. F. White was next, and last man in, but was bowled by Kilby's next ball in the same over, the total score being 27.

INTER-TOWN TENNIS.

The singles in the lawn tennis match arranged between representatives of Tokyo and Yokohama came off in the capital, on the courts of the Tokyo Tennis Club, on Saturday. The weather was very hot and the players suffered somewhat from the heat. As in the doubles played the previous day, Tokyo had it all their own way, winning every game save where Mollison had the best of Rice, who retired after the fourth set owing to a touch of the sun which had manifestly affected his play throughout. The result of the afternoon's tournament was as follows:—

Smith vs. Chapman: won by Chapman. Games, 6-2, 10-8, 6-1.
Mollison vs. Rice: won by Mollison. Games, 4-6, 6-3, 1-6, 9-7, Rice retired after 4th sett.
Stephens vs. Leader: won by Leader. Games, 6-1, 6-1, 6-4.
Read vs. Yamasaki: won by Yamasaki. Games, 6-4, 6-3, 3-6, 9-7.
Salinger vs. Matsukata: won by Matsukata. Games, 5-7, 6-3, 6-4, 6-3.

The lawn tennis doubles between teams representing Yokohama and Tokyo were played at the Bluff Gardens, on Friday, through the courtesy of the Ladies Lawn Tennis and Croquet Club. Fine weather favoured the events and there was a good attendance of spectators. The result of the play was altogether against Yokohama, the games ending thus:

Yamazaki and Kawasaki beat K. Wilson and P. Jenks—3-1.
Rice and Leader beat E. W. Maitland and M. F. Stephens—3-0.
Asabuki and Matsukata beat N. G. Maitland and A. W. Read—3-1.
Barclay and Chapman beat J. M. Mollison and K. van R. Smith—3-2.

The final in the Tennis Doubles was played off at Mirume on Monday afternoon, R. G. Crane and G. Stephens (owe 30) defeating C. J. Lucas and R. A. Whitmore (owe 15): 6-4, 6-4, 2-6, 2-6, 8-6. The play throughout was slow, remarks the Kobe Herald, probably owing to the great heat being against fast play, and the form shown was much below the average of the players engaged.

HOW TO REACH KARUIZAWA.

The following information placed at our disposal by Mr. Clarence Griffin will prove of value at this time:—

YOKOHAMA-KARUIZAWA TIME-TABLE.

YOKOHAMA	SHINAGAWA	AKABANE	TAKASAKI	KARUIZAWA
Leave	Arr.	Leave	Arr.	Leave
6.10	6.56	7.00	8.00	8.41
8.10	8.59	9.12	10.46	11.54
12.00	12.49	1.06	2.06	2.44

There is an early morning train leaving Ueno (Tokyo) at 6.00 a.m. which reaches Takasaki at 8.35 and Karuizawa at 11.35. This is suitable for Tokyo residents, or Yokohama travellers who go to Tokyo over night. There is also an evening train leaving Ueno at 7.15 p.m. for Takasaki, the journey can be continued next morning by the 6.00 a.m. train, reaching Karuizawa at 8.30 a.m.

KARUIZAWA-YOKOHAMA TIME-TABLE.

KARUIZAWA	TAKASAKI	AKABANE	SHINAGAWA	YOKOHAMA
Leave	Arr.	Leave	Arr.	Leave
5.50	8.30	8.55	12.30	12.47
8.50	11.30	11.50	2.31	2.43

(NOTE.—The first and last of these trains entail changing at Tabata, while the second requires alighting at Akabane. Why it should be so is an inexplicable enigma,—so don't worry about it.)
There is also a train leaving Karuizawa at 2.50, which reaches Ueno at 9.00 p.m. There is no Akabane-Shinagawa connection, but travellers to Yokohama can cross Tokyo either by tram or jirishisa, catching the 10 o'clock train for Kanagawa, or the 11 p.m. for Yokohama. Even if one is returning to Yokohama by the train leaving Karuizawa at 8.50 a.m. it forms a pleasant break to book to Ueno, and cross the city to Shimbashi. One has fully two hours for the trip, and most of this time can better be spent in the refreshment rooms of Shimbashi station, rather than in dreary waiting at Akabane and Shinagawa.—(Verb Sap.)

THE LAW COURTS.

INFRINGEMENT OF COPY-RIGHT.

H. Okatani (71), who was under trial in the Tokyo District Court on a charge of infringing the Publications Law, was sentenced on July 6th to a fine of a hundred yen in accordance with articles 37 and 43 of the law. He was prosecuted by Mr. H. Yamakawa, President of the Imperial University, on the ground that he encroached on the copy-right granted to the history, Kwocho kennei-shi, compiled by that institution.

THE TSUKIJI AFFAIR: SENTENCE.

On Monday, judgment was delivered in the case of Captain Alexander Etienne Bouguin and his employee, Hiroshi Maki, by Judge Imamura of the Tokyo District Court. The Court found Captain Bouguin guilty and sentenced him to ten years' confinement with hard labour and Maki to eight years' confinement without labour.

The Court further ordered that the letters and other documents produced during the trial be returned to the owners concerned.

SASEBO PRIZE COURT.

According to the Kokumin, the Russian hospital ship Orel, which was captured in the battle of the Japan Sea, has been condemned by the Sasebo Prize Court to be confiscated. The grounds for confiscation are:—(1) She took on board the crew of the British steamer Oldhamia and intended to carry them as captives in Vladivostok; (2) when she was off the southern coast of Africa, she was ordered to provide electric batteries for the use of torpedoes; and (3) she was attending to a service of communications between the main squadron and the special-service ships. Thus she participated in hostile operations and can not enjoy the privileges granted to hospital vessels.

A SAILOR SENTENCED.

Mahomed Omala (27) a Turkish subject, ex-sailor of a Dutch steamer, has been sentenced in the Yokohama Court to one month's imprisonment with hard labour. He was charged with having assaulted Mr. John Ortiz (61) a merchant, No. 137, Yamashitacho, Yokohama, on June 30th in the latter's house and inflicted injury on a finger of the left hand. Consequently Mr. Ortiz became ill and was incapacitated from work for five days.

THE "IKHONA" OUTRAGE.

Mr. Arthur Hitchings, chief officer of the British India S. N. Company's steamer Ikhona, gave the Singapore Free Press the following account of the sinking of his ship by the Russian converted cruiser Terek:—

On March 13 the Ikhona proceeded to Japan and returned to Rangoon on load rice for Yokohama. She arrived at Rangoon on May 7 and sailed again on the 18th calling at Singapore on the 24th. She passed Ballintang on June 1st and at dawn on the morning of the 5th a vessel was sighted hull down on the starboard beam. The strange vessel rapidly overhauled the Ikhona and at 7 o'clock hoisted the Russian colours and fired a shot across the Ikhona's bows as a signal for her to heave-to.

The merchantmen was at once stopped and those on her recognised the Russian as one of the German converted cruisers. A boat was lowered from her and at 7.15 a.m. a Russian officer came aboard and asked to see the ship's papers. These were produced and after a conversation Captain Stone of the Ikhona went aboard the Russian.

At 1.10 p.m. Captain Stone was brought back and the Russians gave orders for the whole crew to prepare to leave the Ikhona, as they had found she was carrying contraband of war in the shape of rice, and they intended sinking her. The officers and crew got all their effects on deck whilst the Russians collected all the provisions on the Ikhona and transferred them to their own vessel. At 4 o'clock the crew were ordered into the Russian boats alongside the Ikhona and taken to the cruiser which they had learned was the Terek. The Russians then made preparations for sinking the ship and at 5.20 p.m. exploded a charge of dynamite in her stoke-hold, but this, though it wrecked her badly amidships, did not sink her. They then stood off from her and bombarded her with guns for a considerable time, making decidedly poor shooting. At dusk the firing ceased and at 11.45 the same night the Ikhona, which had been gradually settling down, gave a wallowing roll and disappeared by the head.

The next day the cruiser got under way and up till the 19th steered North-east and South-west alternately. On this date the Perluk was sighted and the crew of the Ikhona were transferred to her.

NIPPON RACE CLUB.

The Executive Committee of the Nippon Club have recently made some changes on account of Mr. V. Blad's resignation, as it is possible that this gentleman will not be back in time for the Autumn Meeting. Mr. D. Marshall has been elected Chairman and Mr. F. H. Bugbird fills the vacancy on the Committee.

The 25 Subscription Australian Horses are on board the steamer Trinan, due to arrive here early in August.

Work on a tan training track is to be commenced immediately, which it is hoped will be ready for use during the Autumn training.

TRAGEDY ON THE "PRINZ WALDEMAR" AT KOBE.

Ten persons in all have been arrested in connection with the death of a Japanese girl, whose body was found on Sunday morning in an almost naked condition on the deck of the German mail steamer Prinz Waldemar at Kobe. It appears that fourteen girls, for the most part about seventeen years of age, were conveyed in a lighter to the steamer by a man named Yoshida Suehashi and stowed away in one of the ship's boats which was then covered by a heavy tarpaulin. The girls, it seems, were supplied with plenty of food. Nakahara Tsuru, whose death is now occupying the attention of the police, is believed to have been murdered by garotting, several bones in the neck being broken. The theory of the police is that she was killed in the boat by two Lascars, who were concerned in stowing the women away, and that they then tied a weight to the body and threw it out, intending that it should reach the sea. It fell on the deck, however, where it was afterwards found. The Lascars are among the arrests and it is believed the man Yoshida is also in the hands of the police.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

A Sapporo telegram says that on July 12th, the temperature was 90 degrees Fahrenheit in the shade.

Mr. K. Takahashi, Vice-President of the Bank of Japan, who is now in London, will leave at the beginning of August for home.

The Chirco and Miyako have been prosecuted on a charge of having published, on July 11th, a report with regard to military secrets.

The Mitsu Bishi's floating dock arrived on July 12th at Wada point near Kobe, in tow of the steamer Fukuoka Maru, from Nagasaki.

Mr. John D. Rockefeller, head of the Standard Oil Companies, has given ten million dollars gold to advance the cause of education in America.

M. Pokotiloff, Russian Minister to Peking, who is appointed a peace plenipotentiary, arrived on July 12th at Shanghai on his way to Washington via Japan.

A conference was held on July 12th in the Military Staff Office. Prince Kan-in, Marquis Yamagata, Count Katsura, General Terauchi, etc. were present.

The death is announced of Mr. Iwaya, a well-known Chinese scholar, Grand Attendant of the Phoenix Hall in the Palace. Previous to his death, the Emperor promoted him to Junior third Rank and decorated him with the Second Class of the Sacred Treasure.

Tokyo papers of July 12th contradict the report that Captain Bougouin has appealed. They believe that the accused will not appeal against his sentence.

Seven Russians belonging to the medical service have been released at Kanazawa. They will leave on July 14th for Kobe where they will embark for home.

Two hundred bags of new rice have been brought from Kelung to Kobe. The quality is reported to be better than last crop. The price ranged between yen 4.10 to yen 4.15.

Colonel Ohara, Chief of Staff of a division, will leave Himeji on July 13th for the front. Major Fukushima left Ujina on the previous day for China. About 330 invalids have arrived at Ujina from Manchuria.

A Chinese journal reports that on June 16th, the Russians arrested four Chinese officials of the Kirin government and confiscated their properties. The Chinamen are said to have refused to comply with the request of the Russians. The paper adds that the Russians declared them military spies employed by Japan.

It has been discovered that the official estimate with regard to the U.S. cotton crop this year, which was issued on July 3rd, is not correct having been arranged by an official supervisor in favour of some speculators. The real fact is that the cotton crop is exceedingly behind the estimate. The stock throughout the country is put at 321,922 bales.

Mr. Uchida, Japanese Consul-General at New York, wired on July 11th to the Foreign Office that a telegram has been received in that city to the effect that the crop of raw silk in China is smaller than that of last year, and the estimate of the crop is 44,000 bales and 7,000 bales in Shanghai and Canton respectively. The price of European silk is advancing. Having been shadowed by the rise in prices in Yokohama, the market in New York advanced last week to $4.5 to $4.15. Subsequently quotations fell to $4.2 1/2 to $4.05. The weaving factories are buying up silk raised last year and there is no business in new product owing to the high prices.

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SPECIAL SERVICE.)

ITALIAN QUEEN DOWAGER TO VISIT JAPAN.

London, July 6.
The Queen Dowager of Italy is preparing to visit Japan.

THE ARISUGAWAS LEAVING ENGLAND.

Prince and Princess Arisugawa are leaving England on July 11th homeward bound, on the Norddeutscher Lloyd steamer Preussen.

The Prince and Princess returned to London yesterday after a visit to Doncaster.

London, July 7.
At a small luncheon party given to-day by Lord Lansdowne in honour of Prince and Princess Arisugawa, the guests included Lord Roberts, Viscount Hayashi, and Mr. Austin Chamberlain.

London, July 8.
Captain Kaburaki, Naval Attaché to the Japanese Legation at London, entertained Prince and Princess Arisugawa at a picturesque dinner at the Savoy Hotel, the courtyard of which was transformed into a miniature Japanese landscape. The guests, sixty in number, were chiefly naval, including Admiral Sir John Fisher, first Lord of the Admiralty.

London, July 9.
Prince and Princess Arisugawa on the 6th attended the state ball given by the King and Queen at Buckingham Palace. A guard of honour with the Foot Guards band was posted in the quadrangle.

Prince and Princess Arisugawa visited the Wallace collection of pictures, but otherwise spent the day quietly.

London, July 11.
Prince and Princess Arisugawa proceeded to Portsmouth, where they are the guests of the Commander-in-Chief till the 11th. They then embark on the Preussen, bound for Yokohama.

They drove in a Royal carriage to Victoria station, being lustily cheered there and on the way thither.

The Duke of Connaught, Lord Lansdowne, Admiral Sir John Fisher, the Legation staff and members of the Japanese Colony saw them off at the station, and Viscount Hayashi accompanied them to Portsmouth.

London, June 12.
Prince and Princess Arisugawa have visited Nelson's flagship, the Victory, and the Vernon Torpedo School where they witnessed a display of torpedo and submarine work.

The departure of Prince and Princess Arisugawa from Southampton was an imposing naval spectacle. The N. D. L. steamer Preussen, flying the Japanese Imperial flag, left at one o'clock in the afternoon. A royal salute was fired and the steamer was escorted to sea by six destroyers flying the Japanese naval flag.

Reuter received from Prince Arisugawa, aboard the Preussen, a message for Great Britain from Japan emphasizing the heartiness of the welcome accorded him and the Princess in England, which, he said, cannot but increase the happy relations of the two peoples and the Royal and Imperial Courts. The feeling which united the two nations was not merely the outcome of a formal alliance, to whatever degree the alliance may attain, but springs from the hearts of both peoples.

MOTORING.

London, July 6.
The Frenchman, Thery, winner of the race on April 19th, won the Gordon Bennett motor race over the Auvergne course. Two Italians were second and third. The Englishman was outclassed.

THE MUTINOUS BATTLESHIP.

Later.
The mutineers on the Kniaz Potemkin summoned the authorities of Theodosia (Crimea) on board and demanded from them 500 tons of coal, provisions and tobacco within 24 hours, otherwise the town would be bombarded. They also requested the Mayor to distribute among the inhabitants copies of a proclamation, demanding the cessation of the war, the convocation of the Zemstvoes, and summoning the people to join the revolution.

The inhabitants are panic stricken and are fleeing the city. The Municipality has decided to deliver the provisions, but has refused the coal, because there is none in the city.

London, July 9.
It is rumoured at Odessa that the mutinous battleship Kniaz Potemkin has been blown up at Theodosia.

The report that the Kniaz Potemkin had been blown up proves baseless. The officials at Theodosia went on board and found a committee of seven in command of the ship and her crew of 760. The latest report is that she has put to sea after a British collier.

A later telegram says that the Black Sea Squadron, having been remanned, has arrived at Novorossiisk on its way south with orders to capture or destroy the Potemkin, which is probably making for Batoum where the revolutionary movement is strong. About 150 of the crew of the Prout (?) were imprisoned on July in the fortress of Sevastopol.

Later.

The Kniaz Potemkin has surrendered to the Roumanian authorities.

London, July 10.

Two Russian warships have gone to take charge of the Kniaz Potemkin at Kustenji.

JAPAN'S NEW FOREIGN LOAN.

London, July 7.

Great Britain, America, and Germany each take ten millions sterling of the new Japanese loan, which is to be issued at 90, bears 4½ per cent. interest, and runs for twenty years.

NEW U.S. SECRETARY OF STATE.

Mr. Elihu Root, formerly Secretary of War, succeeds the late Mr. John Hay as United States Secretary of State.

INTER-UNIVERSITY CRICKET.

London, July 9.

Cambridge beat Oxford by 40 runs.

SAGHALIEN.

London, July 10.

The Japanese landed a force on the island of Saghalien on the 7th of July. The Russians, after a slight resistance, retired northward.

MOROCCO.

It is announced that a Franco-German agreement has been reached regarding Morocco. It is stated in Paris that Germany recognises the exceptional position of France in Morocco on account of her Algerian frontier.

THE FORBIDDEN SPEECH.

London, July 11.

The lecture of the French Socialist Deputy, M. Jaurès, upon the international duties of Socialists with reference to war, which the German Government had forbidden him to deliver, is published textually in Berlin by the Socialist organ, Vorwaerts. Its tone is moderate and most friendly to Germany. It is also notable for a warm reference to the Anglo-French entente, declaring:—"We will resist to the last breath any attempt to entangle us in action hostile to Great Britain."

THE PLACE OF MEETING.

Later.

The peace plenipotentiaries meet at Portsmouth, New Hampshire.

BRITISH NATIONAL DEFENCE.

In the course of the debate on national defence in the House of Lords, Mr. Balfour's statement on May 10th was severely criticised. Lord Roberts said the lessons of the South African War had already been forgotten. He had no hesitation in saying the army was absolutely unfitted and unprepared for war now as then. The nation must choose between conscription and universal training.

BRITISH FLEET AT BREST.

The British Fleet arrived at Brest yesterday. There was a remarkable demonstration of welcome by immense crowds both ashore and afloat.

CHINA AND THE NEGOTIATIONS.

It is reported from Washington that President Roosevelt has submitted to the belligerents China's request for participation in the peace conference. It is unknown whether replies were received, but it can be stated that Russia is favourable while Japan is unfavourable to the request, which it is unlikely President Roosevelt will press.

REDISTRIBUTION IN THE UNITED KINGDOM.

Mr. Balfour has given notice of a motion proposing a scheme of redistribution on a population basis, giving England 17 more members (of the House of Commons) of which London will get 5, the suburbs of London 6, and Wales 1 more. Scotland will get 4 more, and Ireland 22 less.

THE JAPANESE LOAN.

The Japanese Loan has been issued.

THE MOROCCO AGREEMENT.

London, July 12.

The French papers are satisfied with the Morocco agreement, declaring that it terminates the most serious crisis that has arisen within the past 35 years; but they do not attempt to blink the fact that France has made heavy concessions.

NORWAY AND HER KING.

Prince Charles of Denmark (husband of Princess Maud, daughter of the King of England) has been proposed as King of Norway.

THE JAPANESE LOAN.

London, July 13.

The German section of the Japanese Loan was largely over-subscribed.

BOMBS AT TIFLIS.

Four persons have been separately arrested at Tiflis possessing altogether 119 bombs.

COLLIERY CATASTROPHE.

Thirty-nine miners have been hopelessly entombed by a fire in a colliery at Dortmund (Westphalia.)

ACCIDENT ON A BATTLESHIP.

Later.

Two men were killed and seven injured by the bursting of a steampipe on the battleship Implacable at Gibraltar.

PRINCESS OF WALES HAS A SON.

The Princess of Wales has had a son.

THE FESTIVITIES AT BREST.

The festivities at Brest are going on in an extremely cordial manner.

A NEW MAHDI.

Reuter learns that a new Mahdi has appeared in the coast district to the east of Berbera.

(Received at the Military Head Quarters a.m. 10th.)

JAPANESE LAND ON SAGHALIEN.

The Karafuto Army (Saghalien) occupied Korsakoff early on the 8th instant without encountering any great resistance. The enemy, having burned the town, retreated to a position near Sorofuka (about 7½ miles north of Korsakoff) and again essayed some resistance, but at 11 a.m. he was driven out by our pursuing force and retired towards Vladimirofka. In the fight on this day we captured two 12-cent. Canets and two 12 pounders with ammunition. We had no casualties.

(Received at the Naval Head Quarters from Admiral Kataoka, commanding the North Fleet.)

July 7th, p.m. The Squadron operated according to plan and at 1 p.m. to-day the military landing party, without encountering any resistance from the enemy, took possession of the appointed landing places, whereupon a part of the Army landed. The weather is clear and there is no wind.

July 7th, 3.45 p.m. According to the report of a destroyer Korsakoff harbour is gradually burning. A fort which fired on the destroyer is now altogether silent. Our military force reached Tsushima Cape (originally Enzuma Cape) at 4 p.m.

(Received on the forenoon of the 9th.)

The North Fleet, as pre-arranged, set out for Karafuto (Saghalien) at 9 a.m. on the 5th instant escorting the military transports. From the morning there was a slight fog with showers and on the 6th the fog sometimes thickened so as to obscure the prospect, but it was not continuous, and the Fleet was able to keep its order of advance. At 6 a.m. on the 7th the appointed rendezvous was reached, and advance being suspended for a time, steps were at once taken to clear the sea of obstructions. The transports were then gradually taken into the cleared area, while at the same time steam-launches were lowered to render assistance in carrying ashore the impedimenta of the troops. Guard-ships were also sent to appointed places to keep watch.

Vice-Admiral Dewa, his squadron having already performed its duties of clearing the sea and assisting the landing, reports as follows:—"At 6 a.m. we reached the appointed landing-place and at once commenced clearing operations. At the same time a destroyer squadron was sent to reconnoitre the landing place. It saw no fortifications on the neighbouring shore. There were only 3 guards visible. The sea was suitable for landing from boats. Captain Hirose's clearing squadron, in spite of considerable difficulty caused by a strong tide, proceeded very rapidly with its work, and at 8.40 a.m. reached a point 5 leagues from the landing place. A portion of the Fleet, together with the transports, were now taken into the cleared area, and united landing parties (naval) were put ashore, which occupied the objective places without encountering any resistance. Thereafter a body of troops were landed and the naval parties handed over the positions to them, completing their duties without mishap and returning on board. But suddenly the forts on the hills south of Korsakoff opened on our clearing squadron, which, together with the guard-ship Akushi, had to carry on its operations under the enemy's cannonade. It succeeded, however, in clearing all the indicated area.

The Fleet had no casualties. Early on the 8th a wireless telegram was received saying that the Army had occupied Korsakoff, and that the Flag of the Rising Sun was floating over the place.

I (Kataoka) deem it an honour to have thus completed a part of any task, in spite of the obstruction which I had apprehended from the weather.

(Received at the Naval Head Quarters on the 9th inst.)

THE TODO-SHIMA STORY A MYTH

Captain Nakao, who was sent to make inquiries at Todo-shima, reports that there is nothing strange there.

(From this it would seem that the Todo-shima story was a myth.—Ed. J.M.)

(Received at the Naval Head Quarters on the 10th inst. from Admiral Kataoka.)

At 3 a.m. on the 8th instant, in order to cooperate with the military operations against Korsakoff, 3 war-ships and 2 destroyers were sent to Tsushima (Enzuma Promontory), but the place fell into the hands of our troops without firing a shot. At 2 p.m. the same day the destroyer squadron entered far into Chitose (Rohosei) Bay, and on steaming to a point off Sorofuka, the enemy opened heavily on the ships with field guns. We replied at once and finally silenced his guns.

(Received at the Imperial Naval Head Quarters on the forenoon of the 11th from Vice-Admiral Kataoka, commanding the North Fleet.)

ANOTHER LANDING ON SAGHALIEN.

On the 10th instant, for the purpose of occupying Kondo Cape (originally Notoro on the west of Aniwa Bay) two cruisers carrying troops, and 4 torpedo-boats, left Korsakoff and steered for that place. Captain M. Togo, who was in command of the ships, reports that on the arrival of the squadron it fired several shots by way of intimidation, after which the troops landed and occupied the promontory without loss, hoisting the Japanese flag. The light-house and its annexes were all safe and the lighting apparatus, having been tested, was found in good order. Four prisoners were taken.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

THE "POTEMKIN."

According to a report of Wolff's Agency, the battle-ship Potemkin and a torpedo-boat accompanying her entered Constantza on the 8th, and in obedience to the demand of the Roumanian Government the crews surrendered. The ships were handed over to the local officials and the Roumanian flag was run up. The crews landed, and having been divided into parties, were sent to various places under escort.

A Roumanian News Agency says that the Potemkin surrendered to the Roumanian Authorities because the latter promised to treat them merely as deserters. They are not now receiving any harsh treatment in Roumania.

(Perhaps not. But they must be given up to Russia and then their troubles will begin.—Ed. J.M.)

FRANCE AND GERMANY.

The Nord-Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung says that France and Germany have come to an agreement about the Morocco conference. The French Premier and the German Ambassador in Paris have drawn up a draft of an announcement to be made by the two Governments. It is stated that France will formally announce her adherence to the conference.

General Riapunoff, Commander-in-chief in Saghalien, reports under date of the 7th instant: "At 9 a.m. on the 7th instant the enemy's Squadron approached Shipivan which is 20 versts south-east of Korsakoff, and opened fire on the shore. At 2 p.m. his ships drew up to Meruf, midway between Shipivan and Korsakoff, and, his torpedo-boats opening a cannonade, his troops began to disembark from 15 boats. At 3 p.m. 15 of his torpedo-boats approached Korsakoff. Our forts opened on them. They cannonaded the forts but our fire was too much for them and they were obliged to retire. The officer commanding our detachment, after a most obstinate resistance, blew up the coast-guns and ordered the burning of all the official properties. He then withdrew his forces northward. During the cannonade 4 of the inhabitants were killed and one marine disappeared.

According to a telegram from Goshinzun, the Japanese fleet consisted of 2 battle-ships, 7 cruisers, 3 gun-boats and 36 torpedo-boats with a number of transports.

(Is it conceivable that the Russian Government receives such reports? The Japanese fleet of torpedo-boats are driven off and then the victorious Russians proceed to blow up their guns and burn their properties.—Ed. J.M.)

CHANGES OF NOMENCLATURE.

It is announced that the following changes of place names are made:—

Notozo Cape becomes... Kondo Cape.
Shiretoke Cape Juro Cape.
Aniwa Bay East Fushimi Bay.
Enzuma Cape Tsushima.
Rohosei Bay Chitose Bay.

MOROCCO.

Paris, July 12.

In the French Chamber of Deputies M. Loubet announced that France accepted the Morocco conference as Germany recognized previous arrangements and French rights and interests. The declaration was received with unanimous applause.

PRINCE AND PRINCESS ARISUGAWA.

At 10 a.m. on the 11th inst. Prince Arisugawa embarked in the Royal Yacht and left Portsmouth. The ships in the harbour were all dressed, and a salute was fired, the crews manning the yards. The Royal Yacht was escorted by 6 torpedo-boats. The Prince proceeded to the North German S.S. Preussen which put to sea at 12 o'clock.

(RECEIVED BY THE "ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

THE "POTEMKIN."

London, July 9.

The Potemkin and the torpedo-boat that accompanied her are now flying the Roumanian flag. The Roumanian authorities have agreed that the crews may go where they please within Roumanian dominions and that they shall receive, while abroad, the treatment of deserters. But they were not allowed to take away any money or valuables from the ships.

(RECEIVED BY THE "HOCHI SHIMBUN.")

SAGHALIEN AND PEACE.

London, July 11.

The Tsar is wholly opposed to the appointment of M. de Witte as peace plenipotentiary.

The Russian newspapers contend that Saghalien is as valuable as Alaska.

BAD COMPLEXIONS

Dry Thin and Falling Hair and Red Rough Hands Prevented by

CUTICURA SOAP

MILLIONS use CUTICURA SOAP, assisted by CUTICURA OINTMENT, for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and soothing red, rough, and sore hands, for baby rashes, itchings, and chafings, in the form of baths for annoying irritations and inflammations, or too free or offensive perspiration, in the form of washes, for ulcerative weaknesses, and for many sanative, antiseptic, cleansing purposes which readily suggest themselves to women, especially mothers, and for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. CUTICURA SOAP combines delicate emollient properties derived from CUTICURA OINTMENT, the great skin-cure, with the purest of cleansing ingredients and the most refreshing of flower odours. No other medicated soap can be compared with it for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, scalp, hair, and hands. No other foreign or domestic toilet soap, however expensive, is to be compared with it for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. Thus it combines in ONE SOAP ALL ONE PRICE, the best skin and complexion soap, and the best toilet and baby soap in the world.

COMPLETE EXTERNAL AND INTERNAL TREATMENT FOR EVERY HUMOUR,

Consisting of CUTICURA SOAP, to cleanse the skin of crusts and scales, and soften the thickened cuticle; CUTICURA OINTMENT, to instantly allay itching, inflammation, and irritation, and soothe and heal; and CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS, to cool and cleanse the blood. A SINGLE SET is often sufficient to cure torturing, disgusting humours, eczema, rashes, and irritations, with loss of hair, when all else fails. Sold throughout the world. Australian Depot: B. Towns & Co., Sydney. British Depot: 27-28, Charterhouse Sq., London. French Depot: 1 Rue de la Paix, Paris. FOTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CO., Sole Props., Boston, U.S.A.

CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS (Chocolate Coated) are a new, tasteless, odorless, economical substitute for the celebrated Liquid CUTICURA RESOLVENT, as well as for all other blood purifiers and humours cures. Put up in screw-cap pocket vials, containing 10 doses. CUTICURA PILLS are alterative, antiseptic, tonic, and digestive, and beyond question the purest, sweetest, most successful and economical blood and skin purifiers, humours cures, and tonic-digestives, yet compounded.

A CASE of cholera was reported on July 16th in Yamaguchi. The patient is a woman.

ONE case of cholera was reported on July 13th and another on July 14th in Saitama prefecture.

FIRES broke out on the morning of July 18th in Wakamatsu-cho, Fukuoka, destroying fifty buildings.

TWENTY Japanese refugees from Russia, who embarked at Hamburg, will arrive at Nagasaki within a few days.

PRINCESSES FUMI and YASU, daughters of the Emperor, will leave Tokyo about July 25th for Hakone. They will stay there during the summer season.

A FREIGHT train was derailed on July 13th at Achisu station, near Yamaguchi. One person was killed and another injured.

THE net profit of the Tokyo Gas Works for the first half year was yen 469,412 57. The interim dividend was at 7 1/2 per cent.

A LANDSLIP has occurred at Shimo-owa, Nagano prefecture, the result being that about 90 km of the Shin-etsu Railway was damaged.

ON July 15th, a thunder-storm was experienced in Maebashi, Takasaki and surrounding districts. Some houses were destroyed by lightning.

SIX dead Russians were washed ashore on July 13th at Noto Peninsula. They were from the Navarin, sunk in the battle of the Japan Sea.

RUSSIAN agents, says the Shanghai correspondent of the Hochi, are preparing to smuggle military stores to Vladivostok by three steamers.

BARON TAKESONO has been arrested in Tokyo on a charge of having forged an official document. His father was a Court noble before the Restoration.

FIVE Russian prisoners have escaped from Fukuoka. They were arrested, however, on the night of July 17th of Munekata not far from Fukuoka.

THE Department of Communications give notice that the Fog Siren at the Kinkazan Light-house is temporarily stopped in order to be repaired.

SOME promoters intend to establish a dock at Moji with a capital of twelve million yen. They have applied to the Department of Home Affairs for a charter.

MR. MIN-YONG-YEE and 27 other Koreans who have been ordered to investigate Japanese commercial affairs, arrived on July 18th at Moji. They left by train for Tokyo.

THE death is announced of Mr. N. Hojo, chief clerk of the Court of Cassation, Tokyo. He was perhaps better known as a poet than as an official. He held the Sixth Junior Rank.

GENERAL FALK, who surrendered at Port Arthur, and is now in Nagoya, has applied to the authorities to be released on the deposit of a sum of money. The application was refused.

ON the evening of July 16th, a thunder-storm was experienced in Osaka and the surrounding districts with the result that many buildings were damaged and four Russian prisoners at Hamaoka were killed by the lightning.

THE captured Russian steamer Kotik has been renamed Hokuryo Maru. This ship was captured on February 10th at Yokohama by the gunboat Amagi. She was owned by the Kamchatka Commercial and Industrial Company.

ACCORDING to the Official Gazette, naturalization papers were issued on July 19th to Mr. George Hodgkinson, residing in the village of Tenboji near Osaka, by Viscount Yoshikawa, Minister of State for Home Affairs.

H. NAKAMURA, an honorary secretary of the Yokohama Gynyu-kwai, which society aims to relieve the families of poor soldiers who are at the front, has been arrested and removed to the Yokohama District Court. The society's office at Sumiyoshi-cho, Gochoe, has been searched. The charge is not definitely reported as the case is still under preliminary examination. It is alleged that he embezzled money subscribed by the public towards the purposes of the society.

MR. MATSUO, President of the Bank of Japan, Baron Shibusawa and other leading bankers of Tokyo held a conference on July 18th. The Nichi Nichi believes that the meeting was in connection with the Government proposal to raise a new domestic loan.

THE graduation ceremonies of the Waseda College took place on July 15th. Count Okuma and Dr. Hatoyama delivered the orations of the occasion, after which the President—Dr. Hatoyama—presented certificates to 496 graduates. Countess Okuma distributed prizes to the winners.

H. YAWATARI, a baker in Aioi-cho, Yokohama, and his son were arrested on July 17th by the Isezaki-cho police. It is alleged that they tapped a branch pipe of the Gas Works and used the gas to light their factory. Their consumption of gas is estimated at between yen 35 and 50 per month.

It is reported by a telegram received at the Foreign Office from the Japanese Minister in Italy that owing to the heavy rains, the sericultural industry in that country is backward and the quality of the new silk is inferior. The price, however, is slightly higher than that of last year.

THE Jiji and thirteen other Tokyo journals were sentenced on July 13 in the Tokyo District Court to pay a fine of yen 20 each for having published a report in connection with the arrest of Soye, the younger sister of the late well-known poet, Nomi-chi, and her husband who are still undergoing preliminary examination.

ACCORDING to the Nagasaki Press, the Great Northern Steamship Company, through its local agents, has presented yen 300 to the families of each of the five women drowned by the recent accident in Nagasaki harbour, when a coal lighter was upset by the Minnesota. The Company has also presented yen 200 to each of the two persons seriously injured and yen 100 to each of the ten persons slightly injured.

THE Hundredth Bank held a general meeting on July 16th. The accounts for the first half-year were submitted to the shareholders. The net income in the period was yen 170,114.35. Of this sum, yen 30,000 was set apart as reserve; yen 90,000 allotted to the shareholders as interim dividend; yen 13,700 distributed among the employees as bonus, and the remainder carried forward to the next account.

MRS. RICHARDSON, a British volunteer nurse, who has been acting in Japanese military hospitals for about a year past, left Tokyo on July 14th by the 4 20 p.m. train for Yokohama. She was received at the Yokohama railway station by Governor Suifu and leading merchants, and entertained the same evening at the Grand Hotel. Having stayed over night in the Oriental Palace Hotel, she left on the following day by the Tartar for home via America.

It appears that the chief member of the gang engaged at Kobe in the business of exporting Japanese women is a man named Nihashi Ichizo, aged 29, who was in youth a cabin boy on a foreign steamer and has since been convicted of having carried on the traffic in women. In the case now under investigation it is asserted that the girl complained of being ill and insisted on being taken ashore and that Nihashi, finding it impossible to dissuade her and fearing lest she should attract attention or influence her companions strangled her. Nihashi has been arrested in Hyogo.

THE OCCUPATION OF SAGHALIEN.

Saturday, July 15.

From the place, 20 versts south-east of Korsakoff, where the landing was effected on the afternoon of the 7th the troops could look down on the town. What they saw was an evident disposition on the part of the garrison and the inhabitants alike to escape as fast as possible. There was no semblance of resolute resistance. The garrison numbered about 3,000 of all arms. A previous report stated that the engagement between the torpedo-craft and the forts lasted 5 hours, but the latest reports indicate a duration of only one hour. The guns in the forts had all been taken from the Novik—the wreck of which vessel lay near Cape Tsushima (Enzuma)—, but they were poorly mounted. This fact, namely, that no other ordnance had been provided for the defence of such an important place speaks volumes as to the incompetence of the Russians. They certainly had ample time to prepare for the advent of the Japanese, and unless they firmly believed in the success of the Baltic Fleet their unpreparedness is unaccountable. The burning of the town, or of some part of it at any rate, was their own doing. They set fire to the barracks and stores when they commenced to retreat, and the flames, reaching the magazine, produced an explosion which is described as having been very terrible. Korsakoff had 3,000 houses and some 10,000 inhabitants. It was fired in 20 places and as a strong north-east wind was blowing the flames proved uncontrollable, so that the work of destruction continued for 2½ days. The inhabitants fled at first, but seeing from the treatment extended by the Japanese to those remaining that no reason for fear existed, they soon returned and are now making the best of the situation.

The Asahi Shimbun says that the Russians did not make any lengthy halt at Soroiyoska or Vladimirofka, but pushed on to Gowkinourdskeye, which is 70 versts north of Korsakoff, and is a village of 140 to 150 houses with post and telegraph stations. Here the Russians apparently intend to make a stand.

Sunday, July 16.

The Kokumin Shimbun gives the losses of the Japanese troops in the fighting from the 10th to the 12th when the Russians were driven from Vladimirofka and Daline. The figures are 7 killed and 60 wounded. Our contemporary also notes the size of the places hitherto occupied. Thus Vladimirofka has 233 buildings and 136 inhabitants; and Daline 256 buildings and 326 inhabitants. Mauka, to which the Russians have retired, has 54 houses and 53 inhabitants according to this authority, but the Asahi says that Mauka is the best harbour on the south-west coast, and that as it is an important fishing centre with many boats always at hand, the Russians who retired thither may escape by sea to Alexandrofsky or along the coast elsewhere. According to this journal the enemy's force at Daline broke into two, and while one part retired west to Mauka, the other went north to Gaunkinouraskoi. At all events the whole southern part of the island may now be said to be in Japanese hands.

The latest accounts indicate that the town of Korsakoff was completely destroyed by the conflagration which the Russians started. They sprinkled buildings with kerosene oil and then bombarded the streets with Maxim guns. Fire broke out at 2 p.m. on the 7th and burned until the morning of the 10th. The people fled to the hills at the first evidence of the Japanese arrival, but being without means of subsistence they had to throw themselves ultimately on the mercy of the invaders. Work was immediately commenced upon huts for their accommodation. It is stated that even during the short interval of their flight, the women suffered much brutality at the hands of the retreating Russian soldiers. The native population welcomed the Japanese. The latter are said to have experienced considerable difficulty when landing owing, first, to the depth of the loose sand at the landing place, and, secondly, to the thick woods that had to be traversed.

Tuesday, July 18.

The officer commanding the Saghalien expeditionary force has issued a proclamation promising protection to all who submit quietly. He recounts the acts of Russia which compelled an appeal to the sword, and he declares that heaven assists the right, as is shown by the destruction of the Russian fleet and the repeated defeats of her army. This proclamation is said to have produced an excellent effect. The people, assured that Japanese arms are used only against the troops of their enemy and not against peaceful inhabitants, are returning to their houses and resuming their occupations. But Korsakoff town must be a very desolate scene. The civil officials of the place have asked and obtained Japanese permission to return to Russia. They number 30, including the Governor.

Wednesday, July 19.

It appears that when the Japanese troops landed in Saghalien all the youths among the inhabitants fled to the hills, leaving the old people and the children to receive the invaders. The pure Ainu population received the new comers gladly and rendered every assistance as drawers of water and carriers of impedimenta. But the able-bodied Russian residents and even some of the Ainu youths disappeared, and did not return until the mood of the Japanese troops had been clearly demonstrated. It then turned out that all these people had been armed and enrolled as volunteers, but having no taste for fighting they took to the woods in the hour of crisis. If that be a fair indication of the quality of the volunteers in general, they will not prove very useful for the defence of the island.

The Jiji Shimpō's correspondence says that although the Novik is considerably injured there is nothing to prevent her being raised, and that measures will speedily be taken.

Major Nishikubo was killed in the attack on Dalny in Saghalien. He had been wounded in the battle of Liaoyang but had recovered completely. The fatal bullet found him as he was heading a charge against the Russian position on the edge of the forest northward of Dalny. Major Nishikubo was the possessor of an Italian decoration and a career of great promise seemed to lie before him.

In the Asahi Shimbun we find very clear references to the future course of the campaign in Saghalien, and in the Nichi Nichi Shimbun there are inferences based on Admiral Kanimura's visits to America Bay and Olga Bay. It appears to us that our contemporaries are both somewhat indifferent to the behests of the censor when they publish such forecasts and we therefore refrain from re-producing their remarks. But as to America Bay and Olga Bay the visits of Admiral Kanimura's ships to these places are a perfectly natural and even necessary measure in connexion with the invasion of Saghalien.

America Bay and Olga Bay are good harbours on the coast of the Maritime Province. It is quite within the range of probabilities that if the Russians in Vladivostock were actuated by an access of really competent enterprise, they should use these places as naval bases for sending torpedo-craft against the Japanese in Aniwa Bay, and thus Admiral Kanimura is compelled to adopt preventive measures.

Telegrams from London to the Asahi Shimbun and to the Nichi Nichi Shimbun say that according to the St. Petersburg correspondent of The Times Japan's action in invading Saghalien after the peace plenipotentiaries have actually been despatched is condemned in Russia and is regarded as impairing the prospects of peace. Of course it is condemned; condemned since Russia finds it very inconvenient. But the condemnation has not one particle of reason. No armistice has been agreed to. In fact, had Japan granted an armistice pending the conclusion of peace, the world knows very well that peace would have "pended" and that the discussion of terms would have continued just as long as Russian preparations to renew the war were incomplete. An armistice having then been eschewed in form, why on earth should it be observed in fact? Why should Japan refuse to cease fighting and then immediately cease fighting? Truly it does seem that the Russians are constitutionally incapable of taking a fair view of any matter where their own interests are closely affected. Were they in Japan's place they would not dream of doing what they now blame her for not doing. There is not a shred of assurance that Russia intends sincerely to make peace. On the contrary, many points in her behaviour plainly suggest that she has no such intention. Doubtless it would suit her admirably to find Japan behaving with suicidal folly, but in that she will, we trust, be disappointed.

London says that Witte has not plenipotentiary authority and that the Tsar is to be consulted about everything. If that be true the conference will not even reach the stage of discussing terms, for the preliminary duty of comparing credentials will disclose Mr. Witte's incompetence. But is it true? How can London possess such information, and how can it be imagined that the Russian Government would send a bogus plenipotentiary, knowing well that the insufficiency of his powers must wreck the conference on the threshold?

Thursday, July 20.

It is stated that the Russians taken prisoners in Saghalien number over 200, but in this total are included several non-combatants who will be released on arrival at Awamori.

The climate of Saghalien ought to be at its best now, but it happens, probably owing to the development of a centre of atmospheric depression, that very bad climatic conditions prevail at present—high winds, tempestuous seas, heavy fogs and a temperature so low at night that the troops have to wear over-coats on guard.

The Jiji Shimpō says that the Russian troops which retreated to Mauka after the engagement at Dalny (or Darine) can not escape north and must soon choose between surrender and starvation. But it was originally stated that Mauka has a harbour frequented by fishing boats, and possibly the Russians may choose that means of getting away. It would be a perilous venture, certainly, considering that the command of the sea is entirely in Japanese hands, yet many of the garrison would doubtless prefer the risk to becoming prisoners.

MANCHURIA.

Saturday, July 15.

The rainy season has set in unusually soon in Manchuria. It generally begins at the close of July and lasts until about the 10th of August, after which the weather becomes autumnal. But there are signs that it has already commenced this year. We may assume, therefore, that no military movements of any importance are likely to take place for the present.

A telegram to the Fiji Shinpo says that Mischenko's Cossacks, who seem to be subsisting by plunder in Mongolia, recently made an abortive effort to accomplish a turning movement on a large scale. They crossed the river Yanghsimu at a point some 13 miles west of Changwutaimun, and their ultimate object was to reach Hsinmintun. But owing to the vigilance of the Japanese vedettes and the opposition offered by the Hunghtsz they failed to accomplish anything. This news is sent from Yingkow.

A reconnaissance in force made, apparently, on the 12th instant on the extreme right of the Japanese lines, is said (Hochi Shinbun) to have shown that the Russians have retreated to Hailungching in that quarter, and that the Japanese front is entirely free. It would be interesting if this report could be collated with that of General Linevitch, transmitted by Reuter (vide telegraphic news) on the 8th instant, but the local indications given by the Russian General can not be identified.

The railway bridges between Kaiyuan and Changtu have been at length repaired, and traffic was opened on the 5th instant. It would seem that the Russians did the work of destruction very thoroughly in this quarter. In passing we may remark that the sums spent by the Japanese on railway repairs must have been very considerable since the war broke out, and as all these outlays were a consequence of destruction caused by the Russians, the fact will have to be taken into account when the fate of the railway is determined at the peace conference.

The statement is confirmed that the rainy season has commenced in Manchuria. Deluges began to fall on the 8th; the face of the country was soon converted into a lake, and the railway embankments were injured in two places.

It is stated (Hochi Shinbun's telegrams) that Chinese acting in the pay of Russians threw poison into wells at Kaiyuan and its vicinity. The outrage was discovered by the Japanese, who immediately took steps to clean out the wells and cover them. This dastardly method of warfare, an old device in China, is said to have been prompted from Shanghai, but we do not discern whether the perpetrators came from Shanghai or were only instigated from thence. Everyone will be reluctant to suppose that General Dessino can be in any way connected with such devices. Perhaps there are still operating in the model settlement some agents of the Russian Government who, like M. Pablov, are prepared to discard their character of agent so soon as any inconvenience accompanies its retention.

Monday, July 17.

An officer who has just returned from Manchuria reports an encounter on the 29th and 30th of June which has received no conspicuous notice in official reports. It occurred at Nanpakiatz, which is about 23 miles north of Hsingking. The Russians had for some time been conducting reconnaissances on a larger or smaller scale, and the Japanese vedettes reported, on the 29th of June, that a considerable force had been put in motion. It proved to be a body comprising some 8 battalions of infantry, and several determined collisions took place before the Russians were driven back on the morning of the 30th. This officer (quoted by the Kokumin Shinbun) alleges that the Russians left 200 bodies on the field, and that their casualties were very heavy, as indeed they must have been if the ordinary ratio held for wounded and killed. The Japanese had 2 killed, 20 wounded and 1 corporal missing. We infer that the Russians made a vehement effort to dislodge the Japanese from a strong position. No other kind of engagement would account for such a signal disparity of casualties.

Many Chinese appear to be acting as Russian spies. We read of the execution of six at Yingling (near Hsinking) and the arrest of others, including an officer.

In the Asahi Shinbun two letters are published which are said to have been sent from the Russian lines to the Japanese. The first was in reply to a Japanese letter announcing the Japan-Sea victory. The Russian epistle merely acknowledged the receipt of the news but expressed doubts as to the accuracy of a statement which appeared too wholesale to be true. The second letter was received at Nanshanchintz. It said that the fact of Rojestvensky's defeat was now known. The army, however, did not attach much importance to the doings of the navy. After nearly two years in the field the Russian soldiers were determined to win a victory. Their wives and their children constantly wrote to them from home urging a determined struggle, and if success did not crown their arms, these wives and children would themselves take the field. Russia had plenty of men and plenty of money. If proof of the latter fact were needed, they had only to consider the 40 millions of roubles recently subscribed by the city of Moscow for the relief of the soldiers' families. "We hoped to find you at Nanshanchintz," the letter went on to say, "where we should have given you a Russian welcome in the shape of a shower of bullets. Nevertheless after this war Japan and Russia will be the best of friends. Look at France. She was once ranged in battle against Russia and now nothing could exceed the amity of the two countries' relations. It will surely be so with Russia and Japan."

Fresh eulogies are written about General Nogi. They appear in the Hochi's correspondence. He is described as an example of dignity without hauteur and benevolence without laxity. The austere manner of his life is never varied. He is perpetually in the saddle visiting the lines and outposts, and while enforcing the strictest discipline he never fails to show perfect courtesy towards all under his command, and to give unstinted praise where praise is due. One of his principles is to exclude everything ribald or offensive from the amusements of the men. There are in the ranks many professionals as koshakushi, hanashika, joruri-katari, yakusha, ukare-bushi and so on. The General is very willing that these should organize yengei-kai for the recreation of the men, and he not infrequently attends himself. But at the first symptom of anything vulgar or indelicate, he at once rises and goes away. He is said to be adored by all under his command, and to be regarded as a true type of the Japanese samurai.

Thursday, July 20.

Yingkow reports that rain is continuous in Manchuria. The rivers have risen considerably and the roads are a sea of mud.

It is usual, says the Asahi, for the rains to make their appearance in southern Manchuria first, and in the north subsequently. That routine is observed by the weather this season also, and southern Manchuria may therefore be said to be now entering the wet season. There will, of course, be a cessation of all military movements during the continuance of the rains.

The Nichi Nichi says that the Russians have been working most strenuously in Manchuria to improve existing means of communication and to construct new roads or branch railways. Utilizing every vehicle for the transport of troops, they have not only succeeded in filling up the gaps caused by the battle of Mukden, but have also greatly augmented their forces, so that they have now something like 450,000 men of all arms in the fighting line, and if to these be added the reserves at the rear, a total of some 700,000 is reached. Our contemporary does not state its authority for these calculations, which seems to us rather exaggerated.

In partial confirmation of the above we find in the Hochi Shinbun a paragraph to the effect that the Tsar has no intention whatever of concluding peace. His Majesty has issued orders for the mobilization of four new corps d'armee, and has instructed General Linevitch that no effort shall be spared to supply him with troops and material ample for a finally victorious struggle. The despatch of M. de Witte as peace plenipotentiary is therefore a mere ruse, to which Japan must not pay any serious attention.

But one can not refrain from asking, what is the object of such a ruse? Were an armistice agreed to pending the conclusion of the negotiations, then the Russians would gain a substantial advantage in being able to recruit their armies. But there is no armistice, and the peace negotiations do not in any way affect the situation in the field.

A JAPANESE SOLDIER'S APPRECIATION.

A letter from a Japanese soldier at the front has been shown to us. From it we translate the following passages:—"What is the use of considering the Russians to be civilised if they do not see the advisability of restoring peace but prefer to continue a war which they have not the least hope of winning? If they do not agree to our peace proposals we must only conclude that they take pleasure in perpetrating all sorts of cruelty and brutality against the Chinese until we rescue the latter from their hands. Truly they do commit deeds that one can scarcely credit. Naturally when we occupy a town where Russians have been we must discount the statements of the inhabitants, but no allowance made on that score will explain away their constant assertion—'The Russians are not human beings: they are devils.' With my own eyes I have many times witnessed the traces of their doings and found them quite indescribable. The unfortunate Chinese! They have their houses pulled down; their fields turned into a stable; their food and clothing carried away; their wives and daughters outraged, often killed and not infrequently tied to a tree in a state of nudity. If the husband or brother resist, he is despatched forthwith." It is only fair to note that this letter comes from a part of the field where the Russian troops are chiefly represented by Cossacks. But is that in any sense an excuse? Can a civilized Power avoid the responsibility of employing savages merely by pleading that they are savages.

THE PEACE CONFERENCE.

Monday, July 17.

A Chinese correspondent writes:—"After the Franco-Prussian War Prince Bismarck said:—'We ought to do all we can to weaken the bad feeling which has been called out through our growth to the position of a really great Power by honourable and peaceful use of our influence, and so convince the world that a German hegemony in Europe is more useful and less partizan and also less harmful for the freedom of others than that of France, Russia or England. It has always been my ideal aim, after we had established our unity, to win the confidence not only of the smaller European States but also of the Great Powers, and to convince them that German policy will be just and peaceful.' The words of the great German Chancellor should be well kept in mind by Japanese statesmen and the Japanese people at the present juncture. Any one who is a real friend of the Japanese should advise them to be moderate in their demands. What the Japanese nation should ask and seek for in the coming peace negotiations is not only a state of things which will make for permanent peace but a state of things which will make for permanent unarmed peace in the Far East. War is cruel and horrible, but to me it seems that armed peace which eats silently into the vitals of the people is still more cruel and horrible. 'The bread of the needy is their life; he that depriveth them thereof is a man of blood.' The question for Japanese statesmen to consider now is whether they can crush the Russians in such a way that the latter will go on their knees and humbly say they will never do it again. In fact it is for Japanese and British statesmen to consider whether even the Anglo-Japanese alliance with its physical force alone can keep the world in awe. If not, then I think it is time that British and Japanese statesmen should have recourse now to moral force—to real statesmanship. In the coming peace negotiations I think that China should be represented, for unless the questions at issue on the Chinese side are permanently settled there will be no peace in the Far East."

Unfortunately these words do not constitute anything more than a picturesque preface. Our correspondent says nothing whatever as to the method of achieving that millenium object, unarmed peace. All the nations of all the world long for it, but all the wit of all the nations of all the world have hitherto failed totally to discover a means of attaining it. How is it to be done? What is the use of dangling the sweet bait before the public if it must always remain beyond the reach of their lips. We see only one way of achieving unarmed peace, and that is by the realization of the poet's vision, the federation of the world. An Anglo-German-French-Japanese-Russian-Chinese-Italian-Austrian-American offensive and defensive alliance would secure the blessing of unarmed peace, but short of that everything would be futile. China has set the world a civilized example; she has virtually laid aside arms and relegated war to its proper place at the very bottom of all rational arguments. But how has it fared with China? If she has set an example have not its results been deterrent? As to her representation at the peace conference, we are entirely persuaded that she can secure far more satisfactory solutions of all problems which concern her by direct consultation with Japan than by representation at a Russo-Japanese discussion.

The Novoye Vremya says that M. Witte is not authorized to agree to the payment of any indemnity or to the cession of any territory. Russia's desire is to continue the war and if possible to extend its limits.

How far such utterances are genuine, how far they should be interpreted merely as a weapon wielded in the interests of easy terms, one can not possibly determine. In St. Petersburg the current talk is said to be that Witte's instructions are of a very vague character. He is merely ordered to conclude a peace convention on the best possible terms for Russia. The inference is that the Tsar has not yet reconciled himself to make any substantial concession. But evidently M. Witte's instructions may be read in a very different sense. They may be read to mean "do the best you can but make peace at any rate." Now on the eve of the meeting of the conference we must be prepared to find that Russia's friends neglect no device for depicting her as unconquered and unconquerable. Perhaps they are going a little too far. For if Russia is not prepared to cede either territory or indemnity, with what idea does she intend to talk peace? She is practically driven out of Manchuria, since access to the sea-coast is no longer possible for her, and her own territories are invaded. What is she going to do if she will not buy peace? The writings in the Novoye Vremya have not been marked by much tact throughout this struggle.

A telegram from San Francisco says that seven advisers have been attached to M. Witte's staff. It has been curious to observe Russia's perplexity in composing this peace commission and her vacillation.

Viscount Watanabe Kunitake, formerly Minister of State for Finance in the Ito Cabinet, which he wrecked, publishes in the Hochi Shimbun an appreciation or rather a depreciation, of M. Witte. He describes the Russian statesman as by no means up to the level of his reputation, and he alleges that Witte is not at all a leader of the peace party, but should be described rather as an advocate of timely war. It is true that he did not want to fight in 1904, but it is equally true that he would be ready to fight whenever Russia was ready. It was merely with him a question of times and seasons. He does not now go to Washington to conclude a permanent peace. He goes merely to secure breathing time for his country. Even Witte's financial abilities are minimized by the Japanese ex-minister. He thinks the Russian a very defective administrator. But here Viscount Watanabe is only getting even. His own policy when he served as a member of the Ito Cabinet was a policy of shrinkage. He would have abandoned all enterprises that added anything to the nation's liabilities, and he saw a menace of speedy bankruptcy in any other course. Witte, on the contrary, has always been for carrying out productive or useful enterprises even though their cost augments the national debt. When Viscount Watanabe made his Occidental tour after his resignation of office, he visited St. Petersburg and was there taken directly to task by M. Witte, who twitted him with advocating a timid policy such as never makes empires. The Viscount is getting in his knife in turn. He incidentally attacks Marquis Ito and Count Matsukata, who are no longer counted among his friends at home. Viscount Watanabe has the courage of his opinions and we can not but admire his frankness of speech though his views are hard to endorse. It need scarcely be said that the Japanese press welcomes the appointment of M. Witte as peace plenipotentiary. All the leading journals regard the appointment as an evidence that Russia is really disposed to make peace, but they add a reservation, namely, that evidently the struggle between the war party and the peace party is not yet at an end, and that it is impossible to foresee what change Russian policy may undergo at any moment.

Tuesday, July 18.

It will have been observed that the Japanese press has not been disposed to build any hopes on the appointment of M. Witte as peace plenipotentiary. The general view taken by Tokyo journals has been that Witte does not represent any peace party in the sense of Russia abandoning her aggressive tendencies and that he will be essentially indisposed to make concessions. We find that the Kokumin, generally tardy in expressing an opinion on such subjects, takes a similar view. The difference it sees between Witte and others is simply that the former favours aggression without war, whereas the latter regard war as an essential aid to aggression. After all, it is to Witte that the East China Railway owes its inception and it was out of Witte's policy that the Manchurian question grew. No Russian statesman will be more anxious to cling to the fruits of aggression or less inclined to concede anything which cripples Russia's aggressive potentialities. Witte's appointment, according to the Kokumin, must be regarded not as an evidence of the supremacy of the peace party, but as an indication of the internal disputes by which Russia is torn. First Nelidoff was nominated, then Muraviev and now Witte.

THE TYPHOON.

There was a violent typhoon on the 19th instant. It seems to have struck its heaviest blow at Hiroshima, but it was felt severely in all the regions south of Kyoto and Osaka. Much loss is reported in Japanese-built shipping, and considerable damage was done to embankments, but we do not hear of any loss of life, though as 120 junks are reported missing there may yet be a heavy tale of casualties. It is remarkable that this storm should have taken place on the last day of the rainy season: the doyo commenced on the 20th. According to official reports the gale has passed over Hokkaido and will probably not be heard of again in southern seas.

The following telegrams have been received:—

FUKUOKA.—Owing to the heavy rains, cultivated fields were severely damaged. Many houses in places along the Chikuna river were all flooded.

MOJII.—Twenty-eight lighters with coal were sunk in the strait on the night of July 18th.

UJINA.—Many buildings collapsed and about seventy lighters and boats were destroyed. Some persons were killed.

KURE.—Two steam launches belonging to a warship, and two other vessels were sunk. Six lighters were damaged.

YAMAGUCHI.—Owing to the storm, a section between Kudamatsu and Shimada on the Sanyo Railway was damaged. Traffic was suspended and was not resumed on the morning of July 19th.

HAMADA.—About a hundred fishing boats were destroyed off the port and many fishermen are missing.

Besides the foregoing messages, telegrams from Saseho, Matsue, Gifu, &c., have been received all of which report similar damages. An official telegram adds that the telegraphic lines in Kyushu sustained damage and consequently communications with the island and Formosa were delayed.

CHINA.

Monday, July 17.

Telegrams to the Asahi Shimbun from Peking represent the leading Chinese statesmen as having come to the conclusion that as Manchuria has never been ceded to a foreign Power nor ever taken by a foreign Power, it still remains indubitably part of China's dominions, and she has only to treat it as such. Memorials to the Throne are said to advocate this view, and an Imperial Edict is not unlikely to be issued on the subject. It appears not improbable, however, that there is some exaggeration about China's procedure. One can scarcely suppose that her practical officials could adopt the view assigned to them above, namely, that Manchuria has never been taken by a foreign Power. Certainly it has never been openly seized, but it has been actually occupied by foreign troops, and it is now in their occupation. Facts are stubborn things. The Chinese can not be blind to them, nor is it easy to conceive that they should show more perturbation about Japan's hypothetical insincerity than they did about Russia's actual aggression. There appears, too, to be good reason for doubting whether China made the diplomatic intimation recently attributed to her, namely that she would not recognise any obligation to abide by the results of the peace conference so far as concerns Manchuria. It is said that no such intimation has reached Japan. From one source it is stated that this business had its origin in a telegram from the Chinese Representative in St. Petersburg to Peking, and the plain inference is that the trouble is all of Russian brewing. The Nichi Nichi has a telegram from Peking to the effect that the Chinese Government will send a high official to consult with Japan. That seems the most sensible course, though on the whole it is probably superfluous.

Peking has followed Tokyo's example. In the Japanese capital we have had "Seven Professors" who may be said to have led the jingoes, and now in the Chinese capital Five Pundits have arisen as the authors of a memorial advocating some strange things. Their main purpose is to secure the recovery of Manchuria without any outlay whatever on China's part, and their projected methods of accomplishing that end may be inferred from one of the six steps recommended by them, namely, that the forces of the Powers now stationed at Shanhaikwan should be moved to Talien and Port Arthur. It is plain that these gentlemen, whatever be their scientific abilities, have strange ideas about practical politics.

Another telegram from Peking says that with the solitary exception of the Governor of Che-kiang, all the Viceroys and Governors have expressed the opinion that if the Chinese Government insisted on being represented at the conference, the result would be merely to put into the hands of the Powers a weapon destructive to China.

Several of the leading Japanese journals discuss this question. The Fiji Shimpō dwells on the extraordinary ingratitude of China's conduct. She has not spent a cent on the war or sacrificed a life. She left Manchuria's fate entirely to be decided by other Powers and now when a State which she has every reason to trust, which has fought her battles and which has given her many pledges, is about to enter the conference chamber, she falls into a state of trepidation and makes all kinds of unpractical demands. Not less remarkable is her inconsistency, since while stirring up this commotion about Manchuria, which has virtually been recovered for her by Japanese prowess, she is silent and seemingly indifferent about Mongolia where the preliminaries of Russian active aggression are palpable to all eyes. A second Manchurian question menaces her plainly in Mongolia, a question which she has to solve without the assistance of any Power like Japan to fight her battles, and which means the encroachment of Russia into a region bordering the metropolitan province of the Middle Kingdom. China, nevertheless, remains supine, and fixes her eyes solely on Manchuria, though in truth when Manchuria was in genuine peril she showed herself just as perfunctory towards it as she now shows herself towards Mongolia.

The Asahi calls China a veritable puppet. She can be moved in any direction by any one that pulls the strings. Where are the evidences of her sovereignty in Manchuria? She made no attempt to assert that sovereignty when Russia threatened to annex the Three Provinces and was in actual military occupation of them. On the contrary, she allowed things to drift so helplessly that Japan at last had to step in and drive Russia out. In the face of these facts certain prominent Chinese now cry out that Manchuria belongs to China, that she has never relinquished her proprietary rights and that there is no occasion to restore to her what is already her property. From a practical point of view it might as well be claimed that the Eighteen Provinces of China Proper belong to the Min and not to the present Manchu Dynasty. If China does not want to have Manchuria restored to her, Japan need not press her to take it back. That is simple enough. But the plain truth is that Japan has fought to recover Manchuria for China, and the latter's action in the face of that fact is inexplicable.

Even the Kokumin writes very strongly. It says that China has to choose between two courses: either to preserve her independence by relying on Japan or to see herself dismembered. What is the origin of this war? Did not the conflict originate precisely in China's inability to assert her sovereignty in Manchuria? Japan stepped into the breach to defend that sovereignty; China stood absolutely neutral during the terrible conflict that ensued, and now, at the close of the fight, she wants to leap suddenly from the position of a passive neutral to that of an active arbiter. Was such a thing ever heard of among reasoning people? The Imperial Proclamation of War explicitly stated that the purpose of the contest was to preserve Manchuria as China's dominion and to open it to the trade of the world. Japan has never wavered in the pursuit of that object and she is not going to waver now. But China must trust her. It is not anywhere recognised that a Power has the right to demand benevolence. We can not clamour for a free gift without consideration. China is merely allowing herself to be made Russia's puppet, and if she persists in such a policy she will merely obstruct the conclusion of peace and place herself in a hopeless position as regards the future.

It is stated that Mr. Tan Fang, Governor of Hunan, will be sent by the Chinese Government a special envoy to Japan in connexion with the question of Manchuria.

Tuesday, July 18.

The procedure of the Chinese Government continues to attract much attention. On the 16th instant an Imperial Edict was issued appointing a commission of administrative investigation. The members are Prince Tsai Tse, Tan Fang, Governor of Hunan, Hsu Hsihchang, temporary Cabinet Minister, and Tsai Hungszu, Vice-Minister of Finance. The Edict directs these officials to proceed to the Orient and the Occident for the purpose of examining legal systems with a view to strengthening the empire. Ostensibly this move is connected with administrative reforms, but there is a belief that the real purpose of the mission is to prepare the way for summoning an international convention to discuss the terms of the Russo-Japanese agreement which is soon to be made in New Hampshire. From that point of view the broad terminology of the Edict—"Orient and Occident"—becomes narrowed to Japan, Russia and the United States. One account says that Prince Tsai and Messrs. Tan and Hsu are to come to Japan, and that another Prince Tsai—Tsai Cheng who recently visited Japan—and Messrs. Ku Hung-ki and Chang Peh-hi will probably go to America, but their nomination is still uncertain. Prince Tsai Tse is 29 years of age and stands high in the esteem of the Empress Dowager. Tan Fang, Governor of Hunan, is one of the Viceroy Chang Chih-tung's political followers, and Hsu Hsihchang is of Viceroy Yuan's persuasion. They will first visit Japan and will subsequently go westward. Their appointment is said to have been a matter of very grave consideration at Court and it is evident that the duties entrusted to them are seriously regarded. The latest news suggests that the other group of dignitaries, headed by Prince Tsai Cheng, will not materialize, for the present at all events. The Kokumin's Peking correspondent says definitely that although these officials are despatched nominally to report upon representative systems of government, their real purpose is to sound the intentions of Japan and Russia with regard to Manchuria, and the Nichi Nichi Shimbun devotes a leading article to the subject, in which this incident is regarded as a sign that the hopelessness of Chinese reform is more evident than ever. China has been listening to the tocsin of progress for the last ten years, but she remains as apathetic as ever. It is idle to expect that she will of her own accord follow the example of Japan. All the conditions that made for reform in this country are wanting in the Middle Kingdom. Japan had a central point, a Throne which the whole nation venerated. She had also a group of clever and patriotic leaders who to high intelligence added the prestige of hereditary headship. She had also a people who did not think solely of themselves as individuals but thought rather of their country as a whole. In China this last and most essential element is conspicuous by its absence. Moreover, her sovereignty, instead of being a rallying point, occupies in the eyes of the nation the same place that the Tokugawa occupied in Japan's eyes thirty-eight years ago. And finally, although here and there a truly enlightened Chinese statesman exists, there is no sign of any band of high-minded, patriotic and able men competent to lead their country into the right path. It might have been supposed that recent events would have fully opened China's eyes to the necessity of fully trusting Japan and accepting her counsels for purposes of reform. There are no appearances that such is the case. The Peking statesmen must know well that they proved wholly incompetent to protect Manchuria; that they left it to be trampled on by Russia, and that without Japan's intervention it would be to-day a Russian possession, or something very like a Russian possession. Yet now that they have seen what Japan can do they seem as little convinced as ever, and are preparing to re-open questions which at length there is a prospect of settling permanently. Altogether the Nichi Nichi writes in a very pessimistic tone. It finds no change in China's foreign policy ever since the days of the Sung dynasty in mediæval times. With wearisome continuity of political faith China has practised the device of endeavouring to set one country against another and then fishing on her own account in the turbid waters.

All this is of the greatest interest, for the relations that would arise between Japan and China in the immediate sequel of the present war have been a source of earnest and even alarmed conjecture to many occidental publicists. The Nichi Nichi's article is by Mr. Yokoi Tokiwo, a man of great eminence, but we must assume that it has the endorsement of the still greater statesman whose views the Nichi Nichi now reflects. In the Nippon we find the same subject discussed, but in a Nipponese tone; that is to say with trenchant and striking words. The gist of the Nippon's argument is that if you want to gain a true insight into Chinese character, you must observe the conduct of the jinrikisha drawers in Hongkong and Singapore. Whatever you give them they are certain to hold out their hands for more. Generally the answer they get is a slap in the face, which they take quite docilely. But sometimes on rare occasions a traveller, deluded by their importunity, gives them a little more, and for the sake of that off-chance they accept the much commoner risk of a sore head. Exactly analogous is their statesmen's foreign policy. They will "try it on" ad infinitum, hoping to get something, but not much surprised or greatly disheartened if the result be a buffet. Russia knows them well. Sometimes she bribes them to encourage this sanguine mood. At other times she slaps their faces as she did when she took Liaotung. Such people are not to be taken seriously. They do not take themselves seriously. Their policy is merely one fortuitous essay. They judge that human nature, being a very various quantity, may sometimes be found yielding. If not, if it prove obdurate, well maskee; another time things will be more propitious. The Japanese Government should know now how to treat the Chinese; should recognise clearly that the present occasion is one not for giving a douceur but for administering a buffet.

It may be here mentioned that Lu, Governor of Kiangsi, and Tang, Governor of Hupeh, have memorialized the Throne in the sense that the Chinese Representative in Washington be instructed to watch the course of the negotiations very closely; and the Chinese Representative in Tokyo to approach the Japanese Government frankly with a view to a settlement. The objects of China should be to get a time fixed for the withdrawal of Japan's troops from Manchuria, meanwhile preparing to station there a strong army of her own which would secure the district against all aggression. The East China Railway, according to this memorial, should become Japan's property.

The Chinese gun-boat Kiang Yuen, built at the Kawasaki Dock in Kobe, has safely reached Shanghai, and is said to have caused admiring comment that in the midst of a great conflict Japan should be able to build war-ships for other countries.

Wednesday, July 19.

The text of the Edict issued by the Emperor of China on the 16th inst. runs thus:—"The reform of China's administration has taken general shape but has not yet become operative, inasmuch as the officials have not fully and radically investigated the matter. Therefore Tsai Tse, Tsai Huntsz, Hsu Shih-chang and Tan Fang, with their staffs, will divide and proceed to the countries of the Orient and the Occident for the purpose of examining into all administrative business and adopting the good. Other officials will be subsequently despatched, and it will be their duty to complete all investigations and to select what is worthy."

It is not easy to detect in the language of this document anything of the arrière pensée which some publicists have read into it, namely, that it is merely a cloak for hiding some designs with regard to the Manchurian question, in other words, that these so-called investigators of administrative systems are really delegates whose aim it will be to enlist the sympathies and cooperation of foreign governments in the cause of Manchuria. In Japanese official circles no such sinister interpretation is credited, we believe. Moreover an influential Chinese is quoted as alleging, with all sincerity, that the mission is nothing more than the Edict represents it to be, namely, a commission to enquire into the state of affairs in foreign countries. The composition of the embassy, he says, is quite sufficient to show this. Another prominent Chinese statesman explains that the project of such an embassy was mooted last year; that it has been under consideration ever since; that it has now at length materialized, and that its sole purpose is to educate Chinese officials. For that reason the following of the envoys will include a number of members of the Board of Archives who are opposed to the idea of reform. This is only the first embassy. Others will follow every year so as to enable the empire's leading statesmen to observe with their own eyes the conditions existing in foreign countries. After all this is one of the most prominent and most effective methods adopted by the Japanese themselves to cure the conservatism of men who stood in the way of progress. In no case did a visit to the Occident and an opportunity of seeing foreign institutions and customs fail to convert the most obdurate of the conservatives, and if China adopts the same plan now she pays the Japanese the compliment of following their example.

Thursday, July 20.

The Japanese press seems to have been decidedly premature in its inferences as to the functions of the Chinese embassy recently appointed by Imperial Edict. We no longer read suspicions that China is endeavouring to circumvent Japan in the matter of Manchuria. The embassy is now regarded as really what it professes to be, namely, a commission of inquiry having for object to examine into constitutional government as it exists in the Occident and to observe its actual working. The statement now made is that the Empress Dowager's advisers have convinced Her Majesty of the necessity of introducing constitutional government into China, their arguments having been powerfully backed by the object-lessons of the present war. They have pointed out that without popular representation the Japanese nation never could have won the signal successes which have attended its arms in the conflict with Russia and never could have submitted to the sacrifices entailed by the combat. An evidence that Her Majesty was convinced appeared in the recent treatment of youths who had studied in Japan.

Hitherto little notice had been taken of these lads. Their cold reception in their own country when they returned from their studies and the reluctance of the authorities to appoint them to any good positions, were not calculated to encourage them. But now there has been a marked difference. No less than fourteen of the returned students had high degrees conferred on them and were nominated to various honourable positions. They were subsequently entertained,—we may observe en passant—by the Japanese Representative in Peking. Of course the immediate result of this, as the Government must well have foreseen, has been to materially increase the number of applicants for study abroad. This, however, is only an incident of the great resolve which is now said to have been taken in the matter of constitutional government. If China has really determined to make such a sweeping innovation the effect upon her destiny must be far-reaching. Count Okuma, we observe, still retains serious doubts as to Chinese intention, and, speaking in the columns of the Fiji Shimpō, repeats in effect the language recently used by Mr. Yokoi in the Nichi Nichi Shimbun. The Count finds China remarkably insensible to the feeling of gratitude, and arrives at the conclusion that unless the far-seeing officials in her local Government succeed in impressing their ideas on the Throne, the partition of the Empire is only a matter of time. But we interpret these pessimistic views as having reference rather to China's previous attempts to obtain representation on the peace conference and her protests against accepting any arrangement from which she herself is excluded, than to the embassy which is under immediate consideration. Mr. Wu Ting-fang is said to be wholly responsible for China's movements in connexion with the conference, whereas many leading officials are directly connected with the idea of sending the embassy and it may truly prove the turning point in Chinese history. Some of our Tokyo contemporaries compare the embassy with Prince Iwakura's mission in early Meiji days, and it must be admitted that the points of resemblance are very numerous.

The Waiwupu appears to be doing its best to oppose the Russian demand for a concession to build a railway from Urga to Kalgan.

The N.-C. Daily News contains a warm eulogy of the late Mr. A. G. Ward, organist of the Shanghai Cathedral. He succumbed to typhoid fever and sunstroke at the early age of 35.

The report of the Hongkong Electric Co., Ltd., for the year ending the 30th of April last shows a divisible balance of $109,200, the paid-up capital being $450,000. It is proposed to pay a dividend of 10 per cent., to write off $62,049 from plant, and carry forward the balance, $2,151.

The North China Daily News understands that the recent visit of Senior Consul Knappe to Viceroy Chou Fu, at Nanking, regarding the extension of a road to the hills, through the district of Tsingpuhsien, when, it is also reported, that the former laid a complaint concerning the alleged obstructiveness of Yuan Taotai of Shanghai, has not been as successful as might be desired by the foreign community. In fact, it is stated in mandarin circles that Viceroy Chou Fu has issued instructions to the officials of the districts through which the proposed extension is to run that they are expected to give strict injunctions to the inhabitants under them that no one shall be allowed secretly to sell, for the sake of filthy lucre, land to interested parties "in order to avoid causes leading to undesired complications." This is understood by many to be the answer of Viceroy Chou Fu to the Senior Consul's visit to Nanking. Probably Viceroy Chou Fu feels his position in Nanking to be so insecure by reason of the many charges made against him by his enemies, that his Excellency does not wish to do anything which may lead to fresh charges against his good name. His Excellency, however, has at least one strong backer behind him, namely, the powerful senior Viceroy of the Empire, Viceroy Yuan Shih-k'ai, and we think that it will take much more than has so far been attempted by his enemies in Peking and the Liangkang successfully to oust him from the Viceroyal yamen at Nanking. Furthermore, Prince Ching is far from unfriendly to Chou Fu.

An ex-Manchu Brigadier-General of Mukden, named Chiu Ch'ang, now living in retirement in his native city of Kirin, has given two thousand mow of land and a number of houses on his property to the Government, for the use of the proposed Government College where the youth of Kirin may learn modern arts and sciences. This patriotic gift has been made by General Chiu Ch'ang owing to lack of funds in the Kirin Provincial Treasury to build a College, in obedience to the Imperial decree commanding the establishment of schools and colleges of modern sciences and arts throughout the Empire, after the example of Japan.

The work of lengthening and deepening the dock at the Kiangnan Arsenal will be completed in about six weeks; and it is proposed to construct another dock six hundred feet in length, which will take in any steamer that can cross the Woosung Bar.

Father Pozzoni, a most amiable man, without an enemy in the world, who has been working indefatigably for twenty years among the Chinese in the New Territory, has been appointed R. C. Bishop of Hongkong, in succession to the late Bishop Piazzoli.

Prince Ching, supported by Viceroy Yuan and Tieh Liang, having proposed that all Chinese military officers should wear foreign-style uniforms and have their hair cut short, the Empress Dowager declared that no such innovation should be allowed in her lifetime, and cut Prince Ching five years' salary for his presumption.

A private letter from Peking, says our senior Shanghai contemporary, states that after the Empress Dowager had scolded Prince Ching and commanded that his Highness's salary be stopped for five years for recommending that permission be given to officers and soldiers of the newly-organised Imperial Army to cut their queues, so as to enable them to don with comfort "and elegance" their new semi-foreign uniforms, her Majesty ordered her favourite eunuch Li Lienying to be called. On his coming before the Presence, her Majesty gave a preliminary sigh and said—"Fancy! Even Yik'uang (Prince Ching) seems to have joined the ranks of those fellows and bedraggled himself in the same mire. He has also asked for national representation. Well, a parliament is really a good thing, but it is fitted for foreign countries and not for China. But his recommendation about cutting off the queue—the Prince has been reckless to the point of madness in daring even to hint such a thing to us. Now consider the thing calmly and soberly. Do you really think that a nation's weakness, or strength, actually lies in such a thing as possessing a queue, or vice versa?" Of course, as in all things (which has been the source of the foundation of his wealth and unique influence over the Empress Dowager) Li Lienying, agreed in toto with her Majesty's views, which apparently was the source of much soothing satisfaction to the royal mind which had received a rude shock by hearing such revolutionary views, and that from the lips of the Prince upon whom she generally leans for advice. This occurred some two weeks ago, but it seems that needs must when the devil drives, and her Majesty has in the meantime been brought around somewhat, for by an Imperial decree one of the chief advocates of cutting the queue in the army, his Excellency Tieh Liang, has been promoted (instead of being degraded) to the rank of President of the Board of War, a post which will give him power to make still greater changes in the army when the time arrives.

The Chinese students at Foochow College gave their American principal "a warm time recently," heckling him until he undertook to forward a protest against the American Exclusion Act. Consul Gracey tried to argue that the Great Wall of China was an "exclusion act," but the boys pointed out that there was no resemblance.

The situation in Canton is growing more serious, and the worst element is coming to the front. The position of affairs is being sadly misrepresented, and an attempt is evidently being made by some demagogues to stir up a bitter feeling against the United States; according to the Canton correspondent of the Hongkong Telegraph. For two days the streets have been placarded with large yellow placards printed in prominent characters, calling upon the people to unite in refusing to deal in American goods. The heading reads, "Let us with one heart boycott American goods." These placards are supposed to be put out at the instance of the "Tsai Shap Yi Hong," which is a guild more nearly like the "Canton Chamber of Commerce" than any other guild or combination of guilds. Some enterprising merchants are taking advantage of the situation to make quick sales of goods, and large quantities of cheap stuff is being foisted on the ignorant public.

THE "INDUSTRIE"

Judgement has been delivered by the Saselro Prize Court in the case of the German steamer Industrie. She has been declared prize of war and the reasons assigned are at once novel and interesting. It appears that the steamer had originally been the property of a German subject at Tsingtao (Kiaochow) whose name seems to be Eugene Brock—as nearly as we can guess from its transliterated form—and that her occupation had been towing ships and succumbing distress at sea. She was then chartered by Mr. R. R. Macdermid (?), an American citizen, proprietor of the Chefoo Daily News, to act as a despatch-boat, the charter price being 1,500 taels monthly. A German named A. Bannier (?) was placed in charge of her at a salary of $400 monthly. On the 19th of February she left Shanghai and under Bannier's command undertook the duty of reconnoitering the Japanese fleet and reporting the results to the Russian Government through Macdermid. Leaving the Sables on the 3rd of February, she steamed to a point 40 nautical miles south of Tsushima and thence returned to Shanghai on the 15th of March. Again on the 23rd of that month she left Shanghai and reconnoitered the islands off the Korean coast as far as Quelpart, which she reached on the 27th. Then she pushed on to the neighbourhood of Kadok Island, and 5 miles east of it discovered a rendezvous of the Japanese fleet. She made a full examination of the place, and then steered for Fusan, whence she intended to communicate the intelligence by telegraph to Macdermid. On the way, however, she was stopped and taken in charge by the Kasuga at 3 p.m. on the 27th of March, the alleged press-boat being then 2 nautical miles south of Kadok Island. When her case came before the Prize Court, the representative of her owner made a plea of five counts, but they were overruled and confiscation was ordered. One plea was that the Chefoo Daily News is not under the protection of the Russian Government, but it is notorious that such a small journal could not possibly afford to go to the expense of chartering a press-boat. Moreover, the tone of the paper has been uniformly friendly to Russia and hostile to Japan throughout the war. Mr. Bannier, too, in his examination, admitted that the journal might be subsidized by Russia, and further stated that the results of the steamer's trips were conveyed to the Russian Consul in Shanghai who, he (the witness) believed, transmitted them to the Russian Government. The master of the steamer, whose name appears to be Eugene, also gave similar evidence. Thus the Prize Court came to the inevitable conclusion that the Chefoo Daily News, under the pretence of being the property of a neutral, is really subsidized by the Russian Government; that the steamer, nominally chartered by the newspaper, was in fact chartered by Russia, and that her business was to spy out the naval bases of the Japanese and any other secret matters which, if revealed to Russia, might benefit the latter to Japan's detriment. The steamer was therefore declared a legitimate prize of war. It appears to have been a perfectly clear case, and the owners of the Industrie must have had full cognisance of the truth. The Japanese might have tried the German as a spy, but they chose the wiser course of liberating him with all the vessel's crew.

THE POLITICAL PARTIES AND THE GOVERNMENT.

By desire of the Prime Minister, representatives of the two great political parties waited on the former on Thursday. It appeared that Count Katsura's object was to explain the circumstances of the fourth foreign loan. We gather from His Excellency's statements that the Government would have consulted the political leaders prior to concluding the transaction had not foreign capitalists responded with so much alacrity to Japan's approaches that no time remained for consultation. Count Katsura averred, however, that after the conclusion of the peace conference, whatever the nature of its conclusion, a special session of the Diet would be summoned, and its post-facto approval of this measure would be sought, among other things. Incidentally questions were put by the political leaders as to whether China had asked to be admitted to the conference and whether Russia had sought an armistice. The Premier answered both questions in the affirmative, but said that Japan had definitely refused to accede to either proposition. His Excellency was also asked about Japan's policy in Korea, which, in the opinion of his questioner—presumably Mr. Oishi Masami—lacked thoroughness and resolution. To this Count Katsura answered that the nation might be quite confident; the Cabinet had resolved to take sufficient measures. Concerning the Anglo-Japanese alliance, however, the Premier declined to say anything for the moment.

In our issue of the 17th instant we represented the Prime Minister as having stated to a deputation of the political parties that Russia had sought an armistice and that Japan had definitely refused to accede. This has since been corrected. It appears that the Premier made no reference to Russia having asked for an armistice. His Excellency merely said that the Japanese Government did not entertain any intention of an armistice.

PORT ARTHUR.

The Angara, now called the Anegawa, has arrived at Kure from Port Arthur, having been successfully raised. She is a splendid steamer of 11,700 tons and 18 knots speed. She has accommodation for 130 first-class passengers and as the Russians used her for hospital purposes, she is fitted with 700 iron beds. Her machinery is quite uninjured, and the only hurt she received while above water was caused by a 12-inch shell which struck her on the port side. Her repairs will be easy, and when they are completed she will take her place among the Government's transports. One result of this war will be to add some very fine steamers to the Japanese mercantile marine.

The Hochi Shimbun reports that the salvage operations at Port Arthur are proceeding satisfactorily. The floating of the Bayan and the Peresviet was recently announced, and it is now said that the Pobieda, the Poltava and the Pallada will soon emerge. The sequence of operations is, first to remove all heavy objects from the ship, especially her armament; secondly, to stop her leaks outside; thirdly, to effect repairs inside, and fourthly to pump her out. The three first operations have been completed in the cases of the Pobieda (battle-ship, 19,950 tons, sister of the Sevastopol) and the Pallada (protected cruiser, 6,630 tons, sister of the Aurora). The Retvisan has only had her weights removed.

It now turns out that the Varyag has not yet been floated. She has only been brought on an even keel.

It is expected that the Bayan will reach Japan in the beginning of next month. The Iwami's (Orel) repairs have been completed at Maizuru and she is expected to leave that place on the 21st. We read also that the Iki (Nikolai I) reached Kure on the 15th, whence she was to be sent in a few days to Yokosuka, there to be inspected by the Emperor, and subsequently thrown open to public view. She has been temporarily repaired, and will be thoroughly over-hauled after having lain a few days in Yokosuka.

The Kasado Maru (Kazan) and the Anegawa Maru (Angara) are at Kure, where their final repairs will soon be completed. These two vessels were raised at Port Arthur.

Captain Sakamoto—formerly of the Yashima—gives some details of the raising of the Bayan. Originally the cruiser was supposed to be too much injured for salvage purposes. Only one vessel's plight was worse, namely, the Pallada (protected cruiser, 6,730 tons). But closer examination by the experts of Captain Sakamoto's party led to a more hopeful view, and on his undertaking to raise her within a month, permission was given. Operations commenced on May 25th and the refloating took place on June 24th. Captain Sakamoto says that his men worked magnificently. Only a keen patriotic desire to add a strong unit to their country's fighting force could have inspired such industry by day and by night. The Bayan is of the Isimo type. She is a little smaller than the latter, being only 7,800 tons against the Isimo's 9,800, and she is less heavily armed, having only two 8-inch and eight 6-inch against the Isimo's eight 8-inch and fourteen 6-inch. But she is a splendid cruiser and will be a notable addition to the Japanese fleet. Unfortunately the Port Arthur dock is not yet serviceable. Its gates were smashed and are still undergoing repairs. The Bayan will therefore have to come to Japan, and she must be towed as her machinery is injured. The Peresviet (battle-ship, 12,674 tons), on the contrary, will be able to steam to Japan without assistance: she is found to be very little hurt. Captain Sakamoto expects that the Poltava (battle-ship, 10,950 tons) will be raised about the 20th or by the end of the month, and he says that the Retvisan and the Pobieda will come to the surface at the end of August or the beginning of September. The Pallada is the most injured of all, but she can be saved. The duty of raising her has been entrusted to Captain Sakamoto, and he expects to get to work very shortly. With regard to the gun-boats and torpedo-destroyers, the guns and machinery will be taken out of them, but there is no hope of saving any of the ships. The dock will soon be repaired, and the Amur, which lies inside it, will then be taken in hand. The Amur is a torpedo-transport of 2,500 tons, a sister-ship of the Yenisei which sank in Dalny Bay. The clearing away of mines has proceeded satisfactorily. Steamers of four or five thousand tons can now enter the harbour safely, and maritime communication with Dalny is restored.

CAPTAIN BOUGOUIN AND MR. MAKI
PARDONED.

Monday, July 17.

There appears to be no doubt that the Imperial clemency is to be extended to Captain Bougouin. His pardon may have been signed before these words are in print. The offence charged against him is one which the law could not overlook but so soon as the law is fully vindicated, the Emperor is represented as feeling that the occasion is one demanding leniency. Captain Bougouin served Japan well in former years and secured the hearty friendship of many Japanese high officials. He was granted a Japanese order. Moreover, he occupied an important position in the Legation of a country with which Japan is on the friendliest terms, and he is an ex-officer of the French Army. All these considerations incline His Majesty to the gracious act of pardon. It is an act which does honour to a Sovereign whose whole reign has been marked by true wisdom, and it will be sincerely appreciated by foreigners of every nationality. Captain Bougouin will of course lose his Japanese Order and be required to leave Japan, a sad termination to his long career in a country where he had won innumerable friends. But we are compelled to say that everything connected with the story of his life in Japan should have tended to restrain him from committing the offence of which he has been proved guilty. In Mr. Maki's case there are no considerations suggesting mercy. But as he acted in a purely subordinate capacity, the clemency shown to his principal will naturally be extended to him.

Later.

The five days' grace allowed by the law for purposes of appeal expired on the night of the 15th in the case of Captain Bougouin and his employee Mr. Maki. The latter was accordingly conducted to the Ichigawa Jail, but Captain Bougouin remained at large. On Sunday, the 16th, at 1 p.m. Captain Bougouin having been summoned to the Tokyo Local Court, the Public Prosecutor, Mr. Okumura, announced that in obedience to an Imperial Order the sentence of major imprisonment pronounced on Captain Bougouin was remitted, and further he was relieved from police surveillance.

Nothing seems to have been said with regard to leaving Japan.

This pardon bore the signature of the Prime Minister.

An identically worded pardon—"minor"—being substituted for "major"—was delivered to Mr. Maki Hiroshi at the Ichigaya Prison.

Tuesday, July 18.

Japanese journals say that the Minister of France will take steps to prevent Captain Bougouin continuing to reside in Japan, but we imagine that Captain Bougouin himself will not have any wish to remain in this country. It is a sad ending to a career which has been one of strenuous industry if not of brilliant success.

Wednesday, July 19.

The Fiji Shimpo has interviewed a member of the French Legation as to the question whether the Legation would require Captain Bougouin to leave Japan. Our contemporary's account of the reply received is, in effect, that the Legation disavows any official concern with the matter, and regards Captain Bougouin merely as a French merchant with whose affairs the Legation has nothing to do. That is a very natural attitude for the Legation to take, but it does not help to elucidate the incident of the official despatch-box. If Captain Bougouin is a mere merchant in the eyes of the Legation, how did it happen that he was allowed to send his letters by the despatch box? We have already explained that this feature of the affair becomes quite simple when Captain Bougouin's former position of Military Attaché is considered, and we are therefore inclined to doubt whether the member of the Legation staff interviewed by the Fiji Shimpo had authority for his statement.

Captain Bougouin on July 17th returned the Fourth Class decoration of the Rising Sun and the Third Class of the Sacred Treasure at the Public Prosecutors' Office of the Tokyo District Court through Mr. F. Strange. At the same time, Mr. Strange received on behalf of Capt. Bougouin the letters, etc., produced in the Court during the latter's trial.

KOREA.

A large body of Russian troops is said to have marched southward from Vladivostok towards the Tumen, but whether this force intends to cross the river into Korea or to halt at Novokievskoe, on the coast of Possiet Bay, is uncertain. The latter is thought more probable. In either case the intention would be to oppose a Japanese advance along the coast road towards Vladivostok. The only positions now held by the Russians south of the Tumen are at Pulyong and Mushan.

The Korean Government has given orders for dispensing with the services of the foreign advisers of its Legations in Berlin, Washington and Paris. This is understood to be a step in the policy of dispensing with foreign legations.

The Korean loan of two million yen has been very successful. The subscriptions above par amounted to 475,400 yen, and those at par to 7,954,000 yen, making a total of 8,429,400 yen.

Mr. Li Il-sik, notorious for his connexion with the Kim Ok-kyun assassination, a connexion which obtained high office for Li, is to be impeached. Some months ago he abused his official authority, it is said, by giving no less than 21 concessions to Mr. Oshikawa Masayoshi, a gentleman who has associated himself intimately and prominently with Christianity and who is now in Korea on educational work. The concession involved certain royalties to the Household Department, but they appear to have been open to much censure on the whole, and in any case it is precisely to guard against this wholesale granting of concessions on the authority of individual officials that competent advisers have been furnished for Korea and a convention has been concluded providing that all concessions must be passed through fixed channels. The Korean Cabinet has accordingly decided that Li Il Sik's action is contrary to the State's policy and that he deserves punishment. There is happily an influence, occult but still efficient, which places ultimate success beyond the reach of assassins and thieves.

It appears to be pretty generally considered that the Russians will not offer any serious resistance on the south of the Tumen. Vice-Admiral Kataoka's visit to Unkwi Bay is held to prove this. When the Russians evacuated, or were driven from Susong, their most southerly point in Korea, they retreated by two roads, one running inland to Hoilyong and one along the coast to Kyonghyong which is on Unkwi Bay, in the immediate vicinity of the mouth of the Tumen. Admiral Kataoka's visit to Unkwi on the 17th inst. disclosed the fact that there are virtually no Russian forces in that vicinity. The inference is that none are massed southward of the Tumen, and even that no extensive preparations have been made to dispute the passage of the river. There may be defences in Possiet Bay, but undoubtedly the want of ships must greatly compromise the enemy's operations in this region.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

According to Russian official reports the number of Japanese prisoners at the close of June was 619. But letters received from the men themselves show that there are 150 others, and Russia has since then sent in the names of 300 more, so that the total now seems to stand at 1,069.

The Jiji Shimpō says that Mr. Taft and his party are expected to arrive in Yokohama on the 24th or 25th. The party will number sixty-one, including many ladies. The Shiba Detached Palace and some other places will be used for the accommodation of the distinguished visitors.

The Emperor of Russia has sent a sum of 500,000 roubles to be distributed among the prisoners taken at Port Arthur. It will not represent much when divided among so many, yet it is a goodly sum. His Majesty seems disposed to adopt towards the Port Arthur surrender a mien very different from that adopted by him towards the Nebogatoff surrender. These are nice distinctions.

It will be remembered that of the nine destroyers which accompanied the Baltic Fleet, all were accounted for except one which was reported "missing." Apparently this boat succeeded in reaching Vladivostok on the 30th of June. Her name is not given but if she be the missing boat she is the Beaupré. The destroyer which had previously made Vladivostok was the Bravi. The account given by the crew of the Beaupré is perplexing as to dates, but the facts are clear enough. She had taken off 175 of the crew of the Ossliabya—it will be remembered that the Ossliabya's people were supposed to have been all lost with one exception—when she was struck by a 6-inch shell which killed 9 of her crew, wounded 5, cut off her foremast and smashed two steam-pipes, so that she ceased to be able to move at a higher speed than 11 knots. Being thus precluded from manœuvring with the fleet, she determined to steam up the Japanese coast, as the best chance of escaping. En route she sighted a squadron of Japanese vessels, and in order to elude them she cut away her remaining mast and painted her funnels white. This device succeeded, but subsequently her machinery broke down and her speed was reduced to 5 knots. Moreover being short of coal she had to burn everything combustible. Finally, after many hardships, she reached Vladivostok on the 30th of June.

Perhaps in connexion with King Edward's conferring of high orders on Count Katsura and Baron Komura, though not avowedly for that reason, talk of the alliance is again heard in the columns of the Tokyo press. The Nippon undertakes to describe the sentiments of the two great political parties. The Progressists, it says, have definitely declared themselves in favour of extending the scope of the alliance to central Asia. Their policy is clear. The Seiyun-ka have not yet adopted an equally unequivocal attitude. But it is well understood that they too are in favour of extension. Among them there are a few who do not feel quite certain that Japan would be a proportionate gainer by the proposed change, but even these doubters refrain from anything like distinct opposition. The Jiji Shimpō has a leading article on the subject. It recalls the important part acted by itself in bringing the subject to the attention of the British nation, and it repeats its forcible arguments in favour of an arrangement which, instead of merely serving to keep the lists for two combatants, would obviate the necessity of having any lists at all. The Jiji does not allege that Prince Arisugawa had any political mission to England, but it thinks that his visit increased the prospects of an extended alliance, and that the English people are now definitely in favour of such a measure.

The Nikko Bijitsukwan, which has been long in embryo, was opened on the 20th instant. A picture of the building was distributed together with the card of invitation for the ceremony, and we gather that the edifice is of an attractive, solid and roomy description. If the treasures of the Nikko Mausolea are contributed to furnish this Museum it will be one of the most interesting displays in Japan. Very few foreigners, probably not a dozen, know what exquisite and unique works of art are still preserved in the strong rooms of the Nikko Shrines. It is said to be intended that all these should be set out in the Museum, and if so the display will be without doubt the finest in Japan.

The following promotions are gazetted:—

To be Lieut.-Gen. Major-Gen. Yamanaka Shingi.
" " " " " Nakamura Kaku.
(The latter is the officer who led the assault on Sungshushan and was wounded in the foot.—Ed. J.M.)
To be Major-General Colonel... Hara Yoshinari.
" " " " " Ota Sadakata.
" " " " " Yamada Chuseaburo.
" " " " " Hongo Fusataro.

There is announced the publication of a volume which ought to prove very attractive.

It is entitled "Japanese Types, being sketches with Pen and Brush, by Miss M. A. Schwabe and Mrs. E. S. Patton." The pictures, 30 in number, are by the former lady and the descriptive letter-press is by the latter. We have seen the frontispiece only, but it gives quite sufficient earnest of excellence. The book will appear in October. Messrs. Kelly and Walsh are the publishers and the price for those that send in their names now will be only 3 yen.

The Official Gazette announces that Mr. Odagiri, hitherto Japanese Consul-General in Shanghai, has been relieved of office at his own request. Mr. Odagiri has a long and distinguished record. No suggestion of his abandoning office had been heard, and the incident is difficult to understand. We can not read it as precluding a transfer.

Mr. Taft and his party are expected to arrive in Yokohama by the Manchuria on the 25th instant. Great preparations appear to be making for their reception. The Tokyo Municipality is taking special steps, as are the Ladies Patriotic Society, the American Society, the Business Men and others.

OJI ORPHANAGE FUND.

Since the yen 1,490, already announced, the following subscriptions to the Oji Orphanage Fund have been received and are gratefully acknowledged by the Committee:—

Further subscriptions are earnestly requested and may be sent to Mrs. Huntington Wilson, Treasurer, at the American Legation, or to any of the other ladies of the Committee, who are Viscountess Nagaoka, Viscountess Okabe, Baroness Hanabusa, Mrs. Chinda, Mrs. Yamawaki, Mrs. Kusaka, and Miss Tsuda.

THE PRIZES OF WAR.

Baron Yamamoto, Minister for the Navy, announces that the captured ship Nagatan has been renamed Nagai Maru and assigned to the Kure Naval Station. The Supreme Prize Court, Tokyo, has dismissed the appeals of the captured ship Mukden and of the shippers of her cargo against a decision given by the Sasebo Prize Court. The confiscation of the hull and cargo is thus confirmed.

The Supreme Prize Court, Tokyo, has dismissed an appeal lodged by the owner of the German steamer Veteran against a decision given by the Sasebo Prize Court confiscating the hull. Confiscation is therefore confirmed.

The owner of the Norwegian steamer Henry Balkow, as to which the Yokosuka Prize Court gave a decision on June 28th confiscating the hull, lodged an appeal on July 17th in the Supreme Prize Court, Tokyo.

THE BOUGOUIN CASE.

IT is impossible that anyone reading the evidence produced in the case of Captain BOUGOUIN can question his liability under the law for the Preservation of Military Secrets. There may be differences of opinion as to the quality of his guilt and as to the degree of punishment deserved, but there can not be any difference of opinion as to the fact of his culpability. Fifteen disclosures were proved against him. All related to the movements or organization of troops. Three of these items of intelligence were sent to the newspaper Petit Parisien, but in every instance devices for eluding the Japanese censorate were employed. The first communication was made by cipher telegram to a person in Shanghai, who wired it thence direct to Paris. It has to be observed with regard to cipher telegrams that in order to pass the official censor whose duty it is to prevent the publication of military secrets, every message sent from Japan in cipher intended to elude the censor must be contrived so that its ostensible translation shall not convey to the censor the meaning it is intended to convey to the recipient. It must, in short, be a cipher within a cipher, and the employment of such a vehicle for conveying intelligence is in itself an indisputable proof of intention to deceive. Two other items of news were sent to the same journal, but in these cases the ordinary facilities of the post were employed. It is of course a wrong act to send to a foreign journal from Japan any intelligence which the sender knows to be a military secret. But there always enters into this phase of a correspondent's work the consideration that the reasons for secrecy will probably have ceased to exist before the intelligence can appear in print. As the items of news sent by Captain BOUGOUIN to the Petit Parisien are not clearly stated in the Court's judgment, we can not judge how far this kind of discretion might properly be exercised with regard to them, but it is right that he should have the benefit of the doubt, and thus the journalistic section of the charges may be dismissed except in so far as a deceptive cipher was employed. But the other charges can not be so lightly treated. It appears that four letters containing secret intelligence as to military organization and military movements were sent to a French officer in Paris, the letters being in every instance put into the despatch box of the Legation of France in Tokyo, by which means they of course escaped all scrutiny. Four other items of secret intelligence were sent by letter to an agent in Shanghai, who forwarded them thence by telegram, this method being employed in order to evade the censorate in Japan. Captain BOUGOUIN's letter-book, seized by the police, was submitted for the prosecution. It showed definitely that Captain BOUGOUIN had been deliberately engaged collecting military intelligence which he well knew to be secret; that he had experienced great difficulties in collecting it; that he had been much baffled by the reticence of the Japanese; that he claimed to have exceptional access to such knowledge; that he was in communication with a French general officer as well as with the Captain DE LABRY and that he professed to be devoting much energy to carrying out the instructions of these officers. The question at once arises, for what purpose did Captain DE LABRY and General HOREAUX (?) require this information? It would be very agreeable to be able to think that Captain BOUGOUIN's efforts were directed solely to objects connected with historical compilation. But nothing of the kind can be supposed. Materials for history are not transmitted by telegram nor does their transmission demand recourse to secret means of conveyance. French officers may indignantly repudiate the idea that they would communicate secrets thus obtained to their Russian allies. We are persuaded that the great majority of them would take that view and act upon it, but there are exceptions to every rule, and from the point of view of a Japanese tribunal the exceptions must be presumed to have offered themselves on this occasion. The public will be only too anxious to give to Captain BOUGOUIN the benefit of every possible doubt. He was a man universally liked and esteemed. Many people must be disposed to contend, even now, that if—as would not have been unnatural—his sympathies were strongly enlisted on Russia's side, and if—as is equally natural—he obeyed the principle of "all is fair in war," then he may have deemed it a privilege, if not a duty, to contribute by every means in his power to the success of Russia's arms. Reverse the cases. Let any one who is essentially pro-Japanese conceive himself the possessor of a Russian military secret, would he lose his self-respect or think that he deserved to forfeit the respect of his friends if he conveyed that secret to the Japanese? Nothing is known of any question of pecuniary reward. We are bound to rule that out of the case altogether. Having done that and having reviewed all the circumstances, it is possible for outsiders to take a very lenient view of Captain BOUGOUIN's case. But can the Japanese take such a view? Can a Japanese law-court take it? Would an English law-court take it in the case of a foreigner who, living in London while Great Britain was engaged in a struggle for her existence with an over-sea enemy, set himself similarly to pry out and report English military secrets? The law is explicit and its administrators have done their duty in vindicating it.

A very unfortunate feature of the affair is that four of these letters containing military secrets were sent to Paris in the despatch-box of the French Legation. Of course it must be assumed that only a small fraction of the whole correspondence came before the court. The period covered is 8½ months and during that interval only a few communications are dealt with. The four letters sent through the French Legation extend from January 19th to April 15th. How many more went by the same route it is impossible to say. At any rate there is clear proof that during three months Captain BOUGOUIN had access to the Legation's despatch-box for forwarding his letters. Naturally this has provoked comment in Japan, but the simplest explanation seems to be that as a former attaché of the Legation Captain BOUGOUIN continued to enjoy the privilege of occasionally using the despatch-box. Unless that view be accepted we are obliged to adopt one of two hypotheses, each equally untenable, namely, either that Captain BOUGOUIN's letters found access to the despatch-box under false pretences, or that the Minister wittingly assisted him to elude the Japanese censorate. No one can accept either of these suppositions.

THE JAPANESE IN KOREA.

WE invite the attention of the Japanese authorities to a letter in our correspondence columns over the signature of "One Who Has Seen." In doing so, however, we must be permitted to point out that our correspondent's reference to our own statements is somewhat misleading. We did not "refuse to accept as true" the story told in the Korea Review. Neither, as "One Who Has Seen" appears to suggest, did we attempt to deny that the conduct of many Japanese in Korea is open to censure. In order to make our position quite clear we venture to reproduce what we said on this subject:—

There are, however, two specific charges which deserve special notice, since they relate to current conditions and are advanced with evident sincerity. One is a charge too often repeated to be dismissed as baseless; the charge that many acts of roughness and violence are committed by Japanese subjects in Korea against the persons of natives. Frequently has attention been called to this lamentable state of affairs, which assuredly the Japanese authorities should be able to correct. We frankly admit that Occidental intercourse with what the West is pleased to call "inferior races" has been marked and is still marked by similar exhibitions of brute force and that its history includes examples of cruelty so shocking to be almost incredible. We also take leave to doubt the entire integrity of a tale related by the Korea Review's essayist, namely, that merely because a Korean inadvertently stepped upon a forbidden path, three or four Japanese rushed upon him, knocked him down and beat him into unconsciousness. And we further take leave to query an appended allegation that "this sort of thing is going on all over the country." But it seems to be beyond question that low-class Japanese in Korea behave in a manner quite inconsistent with Japanese character, as we know it in Japan, and in a manner very much opposed to their own country's best interests.

It will be seen that we characterized the general charge of roughness as "too often repeated to be dismissed as baseless," but, at the same time, we "took leave to doubt the entire integrity" of a particular tale related by the essayist in the Korea Review. Not, of course, that we doubted for an instant the accuracy of the writer's recital, but we did doubt and do still doubt whether he had heard the whole story or seen all the incidents. On the other hand, it is obviously a matter of altogether secondary importance whether a certain accusation is exaggerated or a particular description exhaustive. The main, the important, fact seems to be estab-shed beyond query, namely—and here again we quote the words used by us in the article to which our correspondent takes exception—that “low-class Japanese in Korea behave in a manner quite inconsistent with Japanese character as we know it in Japan, and in a manner very much opposed to their own country's best interests.” The thing must be taken as proved and the trouble is that it is nothing new. Ten years ago when Count INOUE visited Seoul and devoted his remarkable resources of mind to unravel the tangled skein of Korean-Japanese politics, he openly declared that one of the obstacles to success was the violent behaviour of the Japanese roughs visiting the Peninsula. Evidently, therefore, the mischief has been working for a long time, and if we now begin to hear of it more frequently than we did in former times, it is because no adequate steps have been taken to correct the abuse. How is that to be accounted for? The Japanese authorities are not incompetent to preserve order and the Japanese people are not naturally disorderly. In Formosa similar complaints were heard for a time, but the strong arm of the law very soon asserted itself. In Manchuria, during the period of Japanese occupation in 1894-5, nothing but good was heard of the Japanese, whether travellers or settlers. Their behaviour deserved to be described as admirable, and the administration of their officials merited high praise. The difference in the case of Korea is evidently to be traced to the fact that in many districts the Japanese leave the guardianship of the public peace wholly to Koreans, and the Koreans shrink from attempting to assert their laws where Japanese are concerned. But that is only an explanation: it is not a justification. There should be some means of restraining these acts of violence. If the Japanese Authorities hesitate to exercise in Korea jurisdiction sufficient for the purpose, then they ought to enact some severely discriminatory rules which would prevent the emigration of lawless adventurers. It is very hard to believe, however, that jurisdiction can not be exercised with perfect propriety and without wounding Korean susceptibilities. The average Korean, we must assume, would be only too glad to condone any trivial encroachments upon his country's sovereignty provided that they protected his person against outrage. Without dwelling on the moral aspect of the question, which is too obvious to need comment, may we not point out the expediency of mitigating a state of affairs not only prejudicial to Japan's reputation but also certain to win for her the hatred of the Koreans? Supineness or incompetence, whichever be responsible—and Japan's record forbids us to assume the latter—every friend of this country and every one desirous of seeing the Far-Eastern problem satisfactorily solved, must wish that the matter were taken up in an earnest spirit and that really efficacious means were adopted to check an abuse which is doing Japan serious harm.

We desire, however, to make a reservation in the interests of justice. Attention must be paid to evidence on both sides. It is well known that some months ago the Government of a European Power having large interests in Korea called upon a resident of the country, a man eminently qualified for the task, to prepare a report on this very subject of ill-treatment of Koreans by Japanese subjects. Evidence was widely sought for the purposes of the report, and out of a number of cases submitted in support of the charge against the Japanese, only one could bear the test of close scrutiny, two had to be labelled doubtful and all the rest would not support examination. The compiler of the report had therefore to record his conviction that the often-heard tales were at least gross exaggerations in many instances. We may recall, too, the recent case of the Korean whose severe punishment by the Japanese military authorities evoked much sympathy in consequence of a rumour that his whole offence had consisted in throwing a stone at a railway, whereas it turned out that what he had really done was to bombard a passing train with rocks which severely injured two of the passengers. It is evidently unsafe to place implicit reliance in stories circulated by irresponsible folks. That there are abuses seems undeniable, but that they occur on the wholesale scale alleged by some writers is evidently incredible.

MONTHLY SUMMARY OF JAPANESE CURRENT LITERATURE.

The Kyōikukai is a magazine that habitually calls attention to various shortcomings and defects in the world of education. In a recent number it deals with the subject of public libraries in Japan in the following manner. The increase of libraries in this country is lamentably slow. Including those established by the central Government, those established by municipalities and those established by private individuals, there are only 86 in the whole country. Considering what has been done in this line in Europe and America, this is a very low figure. Various causes are assigned for the lack of enterprise in providing the public with suitable literature. Among them the following deserve most consideration: (1) It is said that already education swallows up more than half of the local taxes collected, that the taxes are steadily growing and that tax-payers can not bear heavier burdens than they now carry. (2) It is affirmed that the demand for reading matter among the general public is not such as to warrant large extra expenditure on the establishment of libraries. If there were a greater demand there would be a greater supply. Our public cannot be said to be a reading public. This last reason seems to us, says the Kyōikukai, to be the chief reason. Reading is not a pleasure to ordinary Japanese, but a trouble. Look at the mass of the students in our schools, they only read as a preparation for examination. When that is over they feel that a big burden has been removed from the mind and for weeks and even months they do not open a book. One sees very few Japanese reading in the train as foreigners habitually do, though now and again one witnesses an attempt at creating a good impression on fellow-passengers by the production of a foreign book or newspaper by persons who are unable to understand such literature without a dictionary. (3) Another cause of the want of success in establishing reading rooms is the lack of a social spirit in our people such as is witnessed in Western countries.

We have not yet got rid of the notions which feudalism produced in our minds. There is an innate love of isolation among us (Kare wa kare nari! ware wa ware nari. Ware wa uaga konomu tokoro ni shitagatte kado suru nomi.) To assemble for reading or amusement is not to the liking of most of us. (4) But the taste for reading can be cultivated by degrees and it is one of the duties of educationists to seek to develop it. Most of our libraries have been formed for the convenience of specialists and are not supplied with an adequate amount of popular literature. Technical books being very expensive, these libraries have cost a lot of money without being made attractive to the general public. The people benefited by them are a limited few.

Graduates of Normal Schools who take to teaching usually pass through four stages of feeling, says the Kyōikukai. (1) They graduate full of hope, with fine ideals before them, ardent to commence imparting their ideals to others. But no sooner do they begin to teach than they are depressed by the conditions that surround them, by the poor results achieved. (2) Then, impressed by the importance of the function they have assumed and realizing the need of great care and attention to details, they apply themselves to the task of teaching with renewed vigour. (3) This leads to success of a most gratifying kind. A portion of the lost optimism returns to them. They feel that teaching is their proper function. (4) Then comes the one great test of their lives. Are they proof against corruption—against that insidious bacteria that destroys so many comparatively poor men? If they are they may look forward to a life of usefulness.

We read in the Kyōiku Kōhō of various organizations throughout the country for collecting and disbursing money to enable the children whose fathers or other relations have gone to the war to pay their school fees. The Imperial Education Society alone has collected nearly a thousand yen for this purpose.

The Kyōiku Kōhō continues from month to month to report in Romaji the meetings of the Romaji Sōdankai. The movement seems to hang fire. Very few prominent men attend the meetings and the members of the Association do not appear to have made up their minds as to what measures should be adopted for extending the use of the Roman letters for writing Japanese. Mr. Sawayanagi Masatarō is perhaps the most influential member of the Association, but he does not seem to be able to command much support among Mombushō officials on this subject. At the June meeting, a report of which we have not yet seen, a discussion on the objects of the Association and the methods it should adopt was to take place. But the whole affair, compared to the Romeijikai of 20 years ago, seems to us to be very insignificant.

The Kyōiku Kōhō publishes in successive numbers a full report of a speech delivered to the Kyōiku Club by Mr. Tejima Sei-ichi on Education in America. Mr. Tejima spent some months in America last year in connection with the St. Louis Exhibition, and he seems to have utilized the opportunity for investigating the state of education in that country. Mr. Tejima, being one of the leading advocates of business and industrial education in this country, American methods have great interest for him. He thinks that, though Japan's success in the war is largely due to the general education received by the soldiers, in time of peace Japan will find that she is far behind countries like America in the possession of a number of technically trained workers. American education, Mr. Tejima says, is undergoing constant changes to meet the wants of the age. One of the great difficulties America has to contend with is the yearly immigration of Europeans who know no English. Mr. Tejima says that these amount to some 800,000 or 900,000 per year. They are without patriotism and until they have been assimilated to American ways are a constant source of danger to the State. The Directors of National Schools have to deal with the children of these foreigners, teach them English and make them respect the national flag. . . . Mr. T.

says that perhaps partly owing to her success in the war, Japan's exhibits received very favourable notice at the St. Louis Exhibition and the Japanese authorities are highly gratified with the results of their careful management of the whole business.

In the pages of the Shigakkai (Historical World) commenting on recent histories of education published in Japan, Mr. Yokoyama Kendō says that they deal too exclusively with methods of teaching, with school systems, with theories on education and with the lives of school masters, and do not discuss that most important of all questions the changes in education which are rendered necessary by the new positions occupied by States vis-à-vis other States. This in Japan to-day is the most urgent of educational questions. Many writers in this country do nothing but dwell on the good educational results of past ages and do not seem to realize the fact that the education of the Meiji era is carried on on new lines and that in every civilised country at the present time education is perpetually changing as a result of State and Social requirements—requirements that are quite recent in origin. In Japan there is too much attention paid to mere scholarship, to learning that serves no purpose in after-life. The educationist deals too much with an imaginary world and hence fails to train minds in the art of perceiving what are the prevailing tendencies of this age and does not impress upon them the necessity of suiting themselves to their environments.

In the July Taiyō Mr. Toyabe Shiutei makes the views expounded by the famous 7 professors the text of an article on Far Eastern policy. As regards the title "Seven Professors," Mr. Toyabe thinks it unsuitable, as sometimes there are 8 or 9 that write, sometimes only 6, and sometimes only 4 or 5. Mr. Toyabe calls them Hakase-gumi, the "Professor Association." He thinks that credit is due to them for calling the attention of the nation to grave dangers at a time when Russian aggression and what it meant had received little notice in this country. The founding of the Kokumin Dōmeikai by the late Prince Konoe and other measures taken, were to a large extent the result of the agitation set on foot by these professors, says Mr. Toyabe. Their appeal to public opinion met with a warm response. Among trained politicians, however, their views did not carry much weight. They wrote as mere specialists. Political connection they have next to none. Professor Tomizu teaches Roman Law, Professor Tomii, Civil Law, Professor Kanai, Economy, Professor Okada, Penal Law; Professors Takahashi, Nakamura and Terao, International Law. But they figured as ardent patriots and Imperialists and hence were successful to a certain extent. They have always taken the view that Korea and China must be kept open for Japan, and more than this Japan must take the lead in those countries in a marked manner. Count Okuma, while advocating Japan's protection of Korea, has leaned to the view that in China Japan should be content to stand on an equal footing with great Western Powers. But the allied Professors are for going beyond this. Among them Professor Tomizu certainly has the credit of foreseeing the course of recent political events very clearly no less than four years ago. It was in March, 1901, that he delivered a remarkable speech in the Waseda University Hall, in which he declared that war with Russia would prove unavoidable. His speech gave great offence at the time. But through thick and thin he held on to his opinions. He declared that Japan must not only take Korea, but Manchuria too; for with Russia firmly established in Manchuria, Korea would prove untenable. (Yūe ni Nihon wa Man-Kan futatsu nagara kore wo osamete, Nihon no seiryoku no shita ni okazarubekarazu. Kore Rokoku to kaisen suru no yamu wo yesaru yuen nari.) Now putting all pretence and all political subterfuges and claptrap aside, let us ask, says Mr. Toyabe, for what Japan is fighting to-day? It certainly is not with the object of merely restoring the ante-bellum status quo. Undoubtedly she is impelled by the imperialistic spirit and feels the necessity of enlarging her borders. With all the forward nations there is the feeling, "We are destined to expand and govern other nations." Read what Rosebery and Chamberlain have written about the destiny of the Anglo-Saxons. The Anglo-Saxon race, says Mr. Chamberlain, "is infallibly destined to be the predominant force in the history and civilisation of the world." Chauvinist writers in France, Germany, Russia and America give utterance to the same sentiments. Victor Hugo said that the French may be called "The Saviours of the World" and the German Emperor that "the favour of Heaven is ever with the German race" while Pobedonosteff says that "the all-powerful Slavs have as a race inherited all the glories and all the triumphs of past generations." Whatever may have been the pretexts, it is a fact that the territory of all the great Powers has gone on increasing. Expansion with most of them means the appropriation of territory. Is it surprising that men like Professor Tomizu should perceive that Japan to save herself from effacement must awake to the consciousness that she too has a mission and a destiny? She cannot be content with half measures while other nations are adopting whole ones. The nation is gradually beginning to realize this. . . . Politicians in this country as elsewhere, while approving of Imperialism, shrink from the notion of territorial expansion and object even to use the term in speaking of the objects of the war. But the real state of opinion in the West is this, that there is no objection to any country's enlarging its borders and increasing its prestige so long as it promotes the highest interests of mankind, furthers civilisation and acts fairly to competing Powers. The allied professors laid stress on this fact and hence have cleared many cobwebs from the brains of politicians.

Seeing that the allied professors have certainly given special attention to the whole of the Far Eastern question, continues Mr. Toyabe, it may be well to set down here in full their proposed terms of peace. I. Peace negotiations should be held in Japan and nowhere else. II. Until the signing of provisional terms of peace there should be no armistice. The granting of an armistice should be made dependent on Russia's agreeing to the following conditions. (1) The paying of an indemnity of 300 million yen. (2) The cession of the following territory: Saghalien,* Kamchatka and all the sea coast near Okhotsk (that is the whole of the Sea of Okhotsk and its littoral), the Liaoting Peninsula, that is, all the rights granted to Russia by China over that territory; the recognition of Japan's right to settle with China the future of Manchuria. (3) The cession of the East-China Railway and the land on which it is built. The handing over to Japan of all ships of war and transports which have taken shelter in neutral ports east of Singapore. The handing over of all mines, buildings, etc., possessed by Russia in Manchuria. III. The following limitations on Russian power in the Far East. (1) She shall keep no fleet in the Sea of Japan or the Pacific Ocean. (2) The number of garrison troops stationed East of Lake Baikal shall be limited. (3) Without Japan's consent Russia shall not have the right to obtain any profits from Chinese territory (Shinkoku no tochi ni kwan suru riyeiki wo ubekarasaru koto). (4) Korea shall be left entirely in Japanese hands. Mr. Toyabe considers many of these conditions unreasonable and unnecessarily galling to Russia. The Professors, however, being no diplomats, much weight need not be attached to their opinion as to suitable terms of peace.

Mr. Shimada Saburō writes much in various magazines respecting the changes which the war is bringing about and the future career of the nation. To this month's Taiyō he has contributed an article on "Post-bellum Policy" in which he contends that one of the results of the war will be a considerable extension of the franchise. Two marked effects of the war are quite sure to be witnessed. (1) A new kind of self-consciousness in the nation. (2) A strong sense of equality among the various classes. (1) The war has been made a success by the readiness of every individual in the nation to sacrifice his personal interests on the altar of his country. In times of peace the proportion of soldiers to civilians is comparatively small. But this war has called forth at the very least 700,000 men. So that we may say that after the war among every 70 men in the country one will have been a soldier. Now of course these troops are all aware that they have achieved great things for the country, and when they go back to their former vocations at the close of the war they will be different men to what they were. They will feel, and their friends will feel, that the part they have played confers on them a new rank, a title to greater consideration than they have hitherto enjoyed. They will gradually get to feel that the men who sacrifice their lives for the country in time of war should have a voice in the control of affairs in time of peace. This is what took place in England at the conclusion of the war with France in 1815, resulting in an enlargement of the franchise in 1832, provided for in Lord John Russell's famous Reform Bill. This Bill was passed to satisfy a new kind of self-consciousness in the English people. The same thing will take place here. (2) Since in the Army and Navy very strict discipline is enforced, military life would seem to conduce to the emphasizing of class distinctions. But in reality the contrary is the case. In time of war officers and men in so many particulars share and share alike that differences in rank tend to be obliterated to a considerable extent. No officer can venture on indulging in luxuries when his troops are enduring hardship. Successful generalship implies a large amount of renunciation of privileges and comforts on the part of generals and other officers. And so war proves to be an equalizer among the men engaged in it—tends to demonstrate that rank and moral superiority are different things, tends to show that the men who in different capacities have hobbled in camp in war with propriety treat each other as equals in time of peace.*

But, continues Mr. Shimada, there are other serious consequences of the war that demand consideration and forethought on the part of the authorities. The rise the country has taken will mean heavier expenditure and hence a large increase in taxation. Market prices will all go up as they did in 1896, and so it will happen that the inequality in the lot of the rich and the poor will be felt more intensely than it has ever been felt in this country. The state of things that led to the Chartist movement in England in 1830, to the great increase of socialism in Germany in the seventies will be witnessed here and will have to be met in some satisfactory manner by our statesmen. One way of quieting the masses of the dissatisfied will be to give them more political power, to get them to take an interest in the progress of the nation and to allow them to help to control its expenditure. This would break down class distinctions and class legislation. For the above reasons it seems to me, concludes Mr. Shimada, that the enlargement of the franchise after the war will prove to be a measure of primary importance.

Commenting in the Taiyō on the part played by President Roosevelt in furthering negotiations for peace, Mr. R. Koidzuka says that prior to his communicating with Japan the President undoubtedly sounded Russia as to the conditions on which she would be prepared to sue for peace and that she agreed to the conditions proposed by the President. What these conditions were nobody outside the Government knows, but it may reasonably be inferred that they included the withdrawal of Russian troops from Manchuria, the cession of certain territory and the paying of an indemnity. Mr. Koidzuka then proceeds to lay down and discuss the following six conditions of peace. (1) That in the pending Conference Japan's proper attitude shall be recognized to be that of a victorious Power to a defeated Power. (2) That no Third Power shall be allowed to have a voice in the settlement. (3) That the maintenance of the integrity of China shall be satisfactorily provided for. (4) That provision be made for the handing over of territory and rights now held by Russia. (5) That upon Russia devolves the duty of refunding to Japan her outlay on the war. (6) That proper arrangements be made for the disposal of the railways and other property of Russia in the Far East. Mr. T. Hayakawa follows with an article much on the same lines as that of Mr. Kōizuka. Only Mr. Hayakawa lays more stress on including the future position of Korea among the conditions of peace. The allied Professors and Count Okuma's party hold that Korea being actually under Japan's protection, nothing need be said about her at the Washington Conference. But Mr. Hayakawa is of a different opinion. He points out that other Powers are concerned in the future status of Korea and that before long it will devolve on Japan to define her exact relations to the peninsular kingdom. This she can do with greater ease if she includes Korea and her position among the stipulations for peace. On the amount of the indemnity it is reasonable to demand there is a wide difference of opinion, the writers ranging between 200 and 500 million yen.

Mr. Y. Itō writes as a specialist in the Taiyō on the rapid development of Statistics in Japan in recent years. Several Departments now publish elaborate tables of home and foreign statistics. Besides the tables periodically issued by the Cabinet, there is the report of the Finance Department, with an English translation, which contains a full account of foreign commerce, and there are the reports of the Department of Agriculture and Commerce and of the Department of Education. Our statisticians, says Mr. Itō, have been in the habit of attending the International Conference of Statisticians since 1899 and they have learnt much by consultation with experts from other countries. To the Berlin Conference, held two years ago, Japan sent three representatives.

Mr. K. Kawasaki contributes to the Taiyō an interesting article on "The Naturalization Rights of Japanese Residents in America." He goes into the whole of the painful history of race prejudice and race persecution in America, laying much stress, naturally, on the inferiority of the types of manhood that pour into the States from Europe—inferiority that does not disqualify them from enjoying all the rights of citizens. The anti-Chinese legislation has in many cases affected Japanese, who have been included in it. The question of the precise naturalization legal rights possessed by the Japanese in America, Mr. Kawasaki thinks, has still to be determined. He is of opinion that the matter should be decided one way or the other either by bringing on a test case in a high court of judicature or by diplomatic negotiation between the two countries. The first course, he thinks, would be attended by numerous difficulties, as the case would have to be begun in the lower courts and work up to the Court of Appeal. Obstruction and defeat would be almost sure. Hence there is nothing for it but the lodging of an appeal for fair treatment by the Japanese Government. It is too much to expect that Japan should go on submitting to gross injustice at the hands of a country that professes great friendliness to her. While admitting the riff-raff of Europe to her shores, while conferring political and municipal favours on low-class Poles, Portuguese, Slavs, Italians and unlettered, rowdy Irishmen, America shuts out the quiet, orderly enlightened citizens of Japan. Surely the time has now come for demanding deferential treatment from America. If she refuses to be moved, then retaliation against American citizens here is the only remedy, says Mr. Kawasaki.

A very useful and much needed work bearing on Sanitation in Schools has been published by Dr. Segawa, called Gakkō Eisei, for sale at the Kinkōdō at 50 sen a copy. This book deals with ventilation, infectious and contagious diseases, unhealthy and injurious habits of school boys and school girls, the construction of school buildings, drainage, class rooms, etc.

The cheap rate at which books are translated into Japanese and published often astonishes us. We observe that Mr. Meredith Townsend's "Asia and Europe" has been translated by Mr. K. Takahashi, Educational Adviser to the Court of Korea, under the title of Asi no shirai, (The Future of Asia) and sells at 70 sen a copy. The views expressed by Mr. Townsend bearing on the treatment of Asiatics by Europeans in the past will no doubt find many sympathizers in this country.

"Farming in Korea" is the title of a book of some 130 pages published by the Kinkōdō. The author is Mr. K. Kojima, Director of the Oita Prefecture Agricultural School. Professor Honda of the Imperial University contributes a preface to this work, in which he says that there are to Japanese few subjects more urgent than Korean agriculture. Japan's relations to that country are becoming closer every day and the openings for Japanese farmers in the peninsula are very numerous. Mr. Kojima gives in this book the results of personal investigation and study. The price is 40 sen per copy.

The Tōhō Zasshi, published in Shanghai, has now reached its 17th number. It is reported to be far ahead of other Chinese magazines. It is a useful medium of communication between the two countries.

"Port Arthur War Stories" is the title of an account of the siege of the fort, recently published by the Kinkōdō. Most of the material appeared originally in the Asahi Shimbun. The enthusiasm over the war is so great all over the country that such books as this, we are informed, find a ready sale.

Dr. Murakami has issued Part III of his voluminous work entitled Bukkyō Tōsū Ron. It is a much larger and more minute treatise than the two previous volumes, discussing the character of Shaka and the reasons for the great success achieved by his followers in various countries.

It was not for a moment to be expected that so erratic and anti-conventional a writer of English poetry as Mr. Noguchi Yonejirō should approve of the labours of Messrs. Chamberlain and Lloyd and Baron Suematsu in the line of poetry translation. An article on this subject appears in the July number of the Chūō Kōron. Mr. Noguchi, in the first place, contends that the English language is not well adapted for reproducing the delicate shades of thought, the recondite allusions, and hints conveyed by the Japanese original to an educated Japanese. The grammatical rules of English are very strict (Mr. Noguchi in his writings habitually ignores them) and, however great the necessity, may not be transgressed by scholarly translators. The English language is like European costume, says Mr. Noguchi. It is cut to a fixed shape. The Japanese language, on the other hand, has all the looseness and freedom of Japanese dress. Neither of the three scholars who have attempted to render into English the recently published Imperial poems have succeeded in reproducing the charm of the original, according to Mr. Noguchi. Enlargement amounting to paraphrase such as Mr. Lloyd and Baron Suematsu have both indulged in at times is, Mr. Noguchi thinks, quite unallowable. Bald as the original sounds when rendered into literal English, Mr. Noguchi is for strictly adhering to this method of translation. The poem called Yomo no Umi (The Four Seas) he translates: "In the ages, I deem, the Universe,—the 'four Seas' are to be in brotherhood, why the waves and winds do thus race." Mr. Noguchi quotes, usually with disapproval, from Baron Suematsu's translation as well as from the readings of Professor Wadagaki and Mr. Lloyd. He says that though in most cases Mr. Lloyd gives the meaning, his translations amount to a full paraphrase. Baron Suematsu Mr. Noguchi thinks to be essentially wanting in poetic imagination. The gist of Mr. Noguchi's criticism is that the translators have perhaps achieved as much success as was possible, but that does not amount to much owing to the wide difference in the genius of the English and the Japanese tongues.

REVIEW.

VERTICAL COPY BOOKS, Written by EDW. GAUNTLETT, F.I.P.S., F.M.C., S.T. 5 Volumes, Tokyo, Sansendo.

Mr. Gauntlett has added to his former series of Copy Books another excellently written, and equally well reproduced, series of 120 lessons in vertical handwriting. The free arm movement of the Japanese penman, and his inborn taste for calligraphy, make him a good writer if he has good models, but, for some reason, Japanese students do not write so well as they did a decade ago. Imitation of individual peculiarities of foreigners with whose writing they have been acquainted is responsible for many fads, such as a kind of prolonged t, or an eccentric f, without the lower loop, for ly. Any striking eccentricity will find many imitators, and it would be well if the striking simplicity and regularity of the vertical script were to find as many imitators. Perhaps this is too much to hope for in view of the admiration for a script difficult to read—an admiration which it is the duty of the teacher of penmanship to educate out of his pupils. It is possible that the comparative novelty of the vertical system may prove a strong element of attraction. A disinclination to always do the same thing in the same way may be largely responsible for various forms in which our old friends the hiragana are liable to appear, and for the vagaries of the grass-hand form of Chinese script.

A more permanent element of attraction, and a more logical one, may be found in the fact that it is a vertical system like the Chinese, and the Japanese, script and print, and like English print. It is hard indeed to decline neither to the right hand nor to the left hand; but it is perhaps easier to do so than to always decline just the same amount. Descenders are proverbially easy. The writing of a Japanese student is apt to vary in the angle of inclination from almost fallen down letters, through the vertical, into back-hand script. It is easy to say every letter should be inclined at such and such an angle—an angle that the present writer has himself forgotten in theory, and to which he does not adhere in practice—but it is very difficult to obtain a conformity to any such invisible standard. On the other hand, if the teacher can say, "make the letters stand upright," he gives a simple rule; and man's instinctive respect for the straight as opposed to the crooked supplies him with a standard.

As to the books themselves, they begin with straight lines and are followed by the pot-books of our youth. The second volume contains the capitals concerning which one who is old-fashioned finds "S" and "L," and "A" and "C" too much alike. By making the capital "A" like the printed capital the latter resemblance could be avoided; and to begin the crooked "S" with a horizontal line, like that in "L," seems unnecessary. However these are doubtless parts of a carefully wrought-out system.

Some suggestions to the teacher, such as the experience of the writer of the series could doubtless give would be of use.

As to the sentences and notes in the last two volumes, some of which are very good, and some of which are—well, just the opposite; the reviewer hopes he will be forgiven for saying that they seem to have been drawn out with pot-hooks from some limbo of old copy books. The reviewer has in his early days toiled over such sentences in the way of impositions; he has not forgotten them, but he cannot say that he admires the sentiments the more from having them introduced to him in such a way.

Teachers of foreign children, or their parents, who desire their pupils to learn this style of writing could not find better copy books abroad. Moreover this series has the additional advantage of being very cheap—only eight sen a volume.

Mr. Ling Yee Yuen, a well-known trader of Formosa, is reported to have died on July 18th in Amoy.

SHOULD AMERICA HAVE BEEN CALLED COLUMBIA?

(WRITTEN FOR THE "JAPAN MAIL")

It is interesting, not to say profitable, sometimes to take up for consideration an old historical topic with which we have been more or less familiar since childhood, and examine it in the light of modern knowledge; for history is a science that has adopted very different methods of late years from those which were considered sufficient a few decades ago.

Ever since a few years after Christopher Columbus and Americus Vesputius (as his name was latinized from what was probably the Italian Amerigo Vesputi) were gathered to their fathers, it was the habit of historians to charge the latter with having been a party to a fraud whereby his name was given to the Western Hemisphere, instead of that of the first trans-Atlantic voyager, Columbus; and it was not until well on towards the middle of the nineteenth century that the first naming of America was shown to have occurred in no such way as had been supposed. Indeed, it is probably true that a great many people to-day believe that the continent which bears the name of America, is, as it were, sailing under false colours. The trouble originally arose and has been perpetuated by what has been pithily called "our bondage to the modern map;" it being an extremely difficult thing for any of us to set aside absolutely the knowledge of history and geography as we know them to-day, and put ourselves, even approximately, into the position of the discoverers of the fifteenth and early sixteenth centuries. Until we can, however, do this, in a measure at least, it is not likely that we can properly understand the fact that Columbus never knew he had discovered anything at all; and that the name of America was not in anywise bestowed by the christening act of Vesputius. The writer knows of many teachers of history who still insist that "if the discoverer of America had received the honour due him, the name on the maps would be Columbia." The mistake is even perpetuated in one of the patriotic songs of the United States, which declares that "Columbia's the gem of the ocean!" It arose from assuming that Columbus thought he had indeed discovered a new world; but, as a matter of fact, he never had any such idea. He started from Palos with the firm conviction that, by sailing about 2,500 miles nearly due west, he would come to the land of Cipangu, the Japan where we are now living, and when he reached the small islands that he first discovered, he was sorely puzzled, both at finding them at all and not finding the characteristics which he had fixed in his mind as pertaining to the lands of Cipangu, as he had gathered from his reading of Marco Polo. When he went farther, and reached the large island which we know as Cuba, he was convinced that he had come to Asia at last, and later, when he really got to what we know as the continent, he thought himself on the borders of Cathay but in a very different land from what he had imagined. Columbus died in the firm conviction that he had found a direct way from Europe to Asia; he never had the faintest conception that he had discovered a New World.

How was it then that the name of America was given to the New World, and that, so far as we are able to determine, Columbus' immediate descendants raised no objection to what they would have been justified in considering a theft of honours, had they really believed his and Vesputius' discoveries were the same? For it was a very long time after the death of both Columbus and Vesputius, that it was contended that the first voyage described by the latter must have been merely a clumsy and fictitious duplicate of the second, and that he invented it and thrust it back from 1499 to 1497 in order that he might be accredited with the "discovery of a continent" one year in advance of his friend Columbus.

Columbus, it must be remembered, set sail from Palos on Friday, August 3rd, 1492, having distinctly in mind as his objective point, the northern end of Cipangu (Japan). Upon Toscanelli's map, which he carried with him, the great island of Cipangu extends from 5° to 28° north latitude. Between Europe and that island, in the Atlantic ocean, there is no continent laid down on the map. Therefore Columbus began his voyage, not of discovery, if we use the word in its exact sense, but of establishing the position of a great island which was admitted by nearly all cartographers to be somewhere off the continent of Asia, and between that continent and Europe. By running down to the Canaries and thence, from Ferro, laying his course due west he was confident that he would reach Japan. Eventually he made, undoubtedly, one of the Bahamas, and visited several of them; then he stood to the southwest until he came to Cuba, or the continent of Asia, as he thought. Now that he had, as he firmly believed, established the correctness of his contentions, he turned eastward until he came to the end of Cuba, to which point he gave the name Cape Alpha and Omega, as being the extremity of Asia,—Omega from the Portuguese point of view, Alpha from his own. Then he crossed to the island of Hayti, to which he gave the name of Hispaniola, or "Spanish Land," and took possession of it in the name of the King of Spain. It is a tempting speculation to ask what sort of a reception the Shogun Yoshiki, and the Japanese lords and samurai would have given him and his little fleet, had they really got here and attempted to "take possession" of this country, for he believed it to be the golden land of Cipangu. From this island he steered for home, and arrived in the harbour of Palos on the 15th of March, 1495. On his second voyage he sailed from Cadiz, September 25th, 1495, still without the faintest suspicion on his own part or anyone else's of what he had done. When we speak of America as discovered in 1492, we do not mean that the moment Columbus landed on two or three small islands of the West Indies, a full outline map of the western hemisphere sprang into existence—like Pallas from the forehead of Zeus—in the minds of European men. Again Columbus stopped at the Canaries, thence steering a little to the south of west, he came to Dominica; after this he kept along the Antilles, discovered Puerto Rico, revisited Hayti and Cuba, and skirted the south shore of the latter to a point west of the Isle of Pines, which he called Cape of Good Hope, and then, retracing his steps, went south of Jamaica and Hayti, and on back to Spain, where he arrived June 11th, 1497. It will be noticed that, as yet, Columbus had not reached the mainland of the continent of America.

Let us now see what Vesputius was doing. On May 10, 1497, an expedition sailed from Cadiz under the especial auspices of King Ferdinand, with Vicente Yanez Pinzon for its chief commander, and Americus Vesputius as one of its pilots. This fleet made a fairly straight course across the Atlantic, north of the Canaries, and to the southward of the Antilles, discovered by Columbus, and made the land in, according to Vesputius, lat. 16° N. and long. 75° W. from the meridian of the Grand Canary. If we suppose this land to have been Cape Honduras, the latitude (about which Vesputius is least likely to be mistaken) is exactly right: his distance by dead reckoning is somewhat too small, for he called it 1,000 leagues from the Canaries, but this was probably because he failed to allow for the acceleration due to the westerly current in the Caribbean Sea; and his longitude is scarcely 5° in excess, a very moderate error in those days, even when near the equator. The consensus of opinion expressed by critics is that from Honduras Vesputius (that is Pinzon and Solis in 1497-98) skirted the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, rounded Florida, and went up the coast of North America as far as Chesapeake Bay, whence, touching at the Bermudas, he made for Cadiz, where he arrived again on the 15th of October, 1498.

On Columbus's third voyage he undoubtedly made the mouths of the Orinoco, visited the Pearl Coast of South America, and made Hayti: on his fourth, he visited Honduras, Nicaragua, Veragua, and a little of South America. Now, while Vesputius seems to have had a glimmering that he had actually discovered a New World, and his actions during his second, third, and fourth voyages tend to confirm this impression, Columbus still believed, even after his fourth voyage, that the northern parts of the strange coasts he had visited were in Asia, although there began to dawn on his mind a suspicion that the southern part might belong to something that had not been accounted for by any of the old cartographers with whose maps he was familiar. He understood that the earth is a round body, but he saw no necessity for its being strictly spherical or spheroidal. He now suggested that it was probably shaped like a pear, rather a blunt and corpulent pear, nearly spherical in its lower part, but with a short, stubby apex in the equatorial region, somewhere beyond the point reached on his third voyage. He fancied he had been sailing up a gentle slope from the burning, glassy sea where his ships had been becalmed, to this strange and beautiful coast where he found the climate enchanting. If he were to follow up the mighty river just now revealed, the Orinoco, it might lead him to the summit of this apex of the world, the place where the terrestrial paradise, the Garden of the Lord, planted eastward in Eden, was in all probability located. The strange conception of the earth, as it obtained at the end of Columbus' and Vesputius' life, is shown on a wonderful Map of the World, published by Johann Ruysch, August 13, 1508. On this the islands of the West Indies, as they were known, are depicted; west of this is a large island, which represents the discoveries of the Spanish ships: south, is a huge mass called Terra Sanctæ Crucis, or Mundus Novus: north, the Florida peninsula merges into Greenland, and both are outlying parts of Cathay.

On his third voyage Vesputius rounded Cape San Roque, and followed the coast of South America towards the south, until he came to Cape Santa Maria; then he bore away to the south east, until he came to the South Georgia islands, from whence he shaped his course for home, convinced that the mainland (of South America) went on indefinitely to the southwest to the southern pole.

We are now prepared to consider how the name of America came to be given to the New World. First, Americus called the regions visited by him, beyond the equator, a "New World," because they were unknown to the ancients. Second, a Dominican friar, Giovanni Giocondo, of Verona, translated from Italian into Latin a letter which Vesputius had written to his friend Soderini, giving a chatty account of his voyages, and he, Giocondo, took the striking phrase, Mundus Novus, as a title to that translation, which he published at a time when the writer was absent from Europe, and probably without his knowledge, for Vesputius was preparing his own official record, which he called Quattro Giorni. Third, the name Mundus Novus got placed upon several maps about that time as an equivalent for Terra Sanctæ Crucis, or what we call Brazil. Fourth, the suggestion was made that Mundus Novus was the Fourth Part of the Earth, and might properly be called America, after its discoverer. Fifth, the name America thus got placed upon several maps as an equivalent for what we call South America, yet still signified only a part of the dry land beyond the Atlantic to which Columbus had led the way. But it was Waldseemüller who, 1607, speaks of the western world in this way:—"But now these parts have been more extensively explored and another fourth part has been discovered by Americus (as will appear in what follows): wherefore I do not see what is rightly to hinder us from calling it Amerigo or America; that is the land of Americus, after the discoverer, Americus, a man of sagacious mind, since both Europe and Asia have got their names from women. Its situation and the manners and customs of its people will be clearly understood from the twice two voyages of Americus which follow." But for these words, perhaps, the western hemisphere might have come to be known as Atlantis, or Hesperides, or Santa Cruz, or New India, or possibly Columbia: although there was not much likelihood of its getting named after Columbus, because long before the distinct and separate existence of the western hemisphere was so much as suspected, the names had taken root, and before then it would not have occurred to anybody to name it after Columbus, for the sufficient reason that it had two good names already: viz., Asia and The Indies. It was not until 1541 that Gerard Kaufman, better known by his latinized name, Mercator, gave the name of America to that whole western world, which was then known to be something entirely separate from Asia, and as he was born 1612, the year Vesputius died, it must be admitted that Americus Vesputius was guiltless of having done anything to give his name to a hemisphere, or that he did anything to justify the charge of having stolen honour from his friend Christopher Columbus, and we now know, better than we ever did before, that Columbus and Vesputius were always on terms of good-fellowship whenever their lines crossed.

YACHTING.

The race for the 39 raters on Saturday involved with the prevailing southerly wind an open run out of the harbour, a fairly close reach to the Kawasaki Buoy, a beat down to the Widow Buoy, a run back and a reach with a final tack for home. Chief interest in the event lay in the fact that Capt. Weston's new Kingfisher was again to essay herself against the other members of the class after having been baulked in her opening race by taking the reef at the end of the breakwater. The damage sustained by the new yacht at that time was slight, and though on this occasion the wind was moderate—nearly fresh at times—hopes were entertained that she would have an opportunity of proving her mettle. That opportunity did not arrive however.

The new Kingfisher, it may be premised, is a very powerful yacht which should show up well in any kind of fresh to strong weather. But for racing purposes she is emphatically under-canvased. Her owner designed her to be primarily a cruising craft, and a cruiser she must remain until her sail plan is altered. In the matter of dimensions she has 13 feet beam, is 59 feet over all and 36 feet on the water line, the major part of her overhang being apparently aft. Her draft is 7 feet and she carries in a keel 10 feet long, 18 inches thick and 24 inches deep $7\frac{1}{2}$ tons of lead. The bird which decked the stem of the old Kingfisher flaunts itself upon her bows, and the canvas that drove the old boat is now bent on her successor. The new yacht is steered by means of the old Kingfisher's wheel in a commodious cockpit whence by an alley way with a stateroom on either hand (eight feet in length) access is given to the cabin or saloon in the waist of the vessel 9 feet in length and practically the width of the yacht, where, as in the staterooms, etc., below, head room is afforded to the extent of 6 feet, without the aid of the skylights. A powerful vessel, as we have said, the new ship should be a splendid cruiser. She is structurally far above the limits of her class: her frames are four inch and her scantling inch and quarter, and even with the heavy keel her free-board distinguishes her from all other yachts in the harbour. Whether her owner will continue to sail her under the old Kingfisher's mainsail of eight hundred and odd feet is a moot point. As to her internal arrangements it may be added that she has lavatory and kitchen provisions—including a capital bath heating apparatus and a miniature cooking range—such as can hardly be expected save on the most modern yachts of her dimensions. Kingfisher, whatever her success may be under her racing flag, will without doubt afford her owner many an enjoyable hour on cruise.

A moderate southerly breeze enabled the three big yachts to move about in lively enough fashion until the starting gun went when, Mary and Kingfisher being to leeward of the line, Maid Marion was enabled to get a small advantage by crossing to windward about half-way between the two marks. Mary was over next, Kingfisher crossing between the latter and the Commodore's yacht—the mark. All set jibtopsails at once and Mary immediately ly drew out ahead, but so little that her lead at the harbour entrance was only 15 seconds from Maid Marion, Kingfisher being 17 seconds astern of the latter. When sheets were trimmed in for the Kawasaki Buoy it became apparent that the wind which promised fairly well at the outset, had fallen too light for the new boat. Both her opponents spun out a lead upon her rapidly, and it was not till half the distance had been covered that, assisted by a brisk breeze which swept a few white caps up the bay, she could hold the Maid, from which Mary in the freshening weather was fast slipping away. The wind had latterly eastered somewhat and when Mary got round 3 minutes and 21 seconds ahead of Maid Marion she was enabled to lie well up towards Honmoku. Kingfisher did not round the buoy but, shortening sail, went off on a short cruise. As usual Maid Marion's jibtopsail seemed to do more harm than good, spilling the wind quite effectually into her gaff topsail. For the rest perhaps the times will be sufficient, Mary being far ahead of her only remaining opponent at the Widow Buoy:

	h.m.s.
Mary	5.03.08
Maid Marion	5.16.58

Mary thus won the first prize, presented, Maid Marion the second.

The race for 21 raters not entered in the Mosquito Yacht Club race was a rather interesting contest. Aimee was first out of the harbour, Witch close up, then Edna and Valkyrien close together. On the beat down to the Mandarin Bluff Edna was first, followed by Aimee, Witch and Valkyrien. They ran up to and rounded the Quarantine Lightship in the same order but reaching to the Tachibana Buoy Edna and Aimee had a luffing match which enabled Witch to take the lead, Aimee only rounding second. On the beat back to the Mandarin Bluff Edna lost considerably by standing in too far and at this mark the order was: Aimee first, Witch and Edna close together, the former in the inside berth. Aimee held her lead home, crossing first, a close fight between Witch and Edna resulting in favour of the latter by about a length. Times:

	Finish	Corrected
	h.m.s.	Club Time.
Witch	4.30.30	4.26.35
Aimee	4.28.39	4.28.39
Edna	4.30.04	4.30.04
Valkyrien	4.36.34	4.36.34

Witch, therefore, on her allowance wins the Aimee Cup, Aimee taking second prize.

The Larks also had a race which resulted as follows:

	h.m.s.
1	4.34.38
4	4.29.18
5	4.30.02
11	4.27.30
12	4.27.30

No. 13 therefore gained the first prize.

The Mosquito Yacht Club yachts also raced with the following result:—

	Finish
	h.m.s.
Pelo	4.38.13
Winsome	4.39.54
Elsa	4.42.32

BASEBALL.

The baseball game on Saturday between the Y. C. and A. C. and the Yokohama Commercial School opened with some good play, petered out somewhat in the middle, and smartened up again towards the close. The heat was terrific, with a hot wind, and players were called upon for big drafts on their stock of endurance. Y.C. and A.C. took the lead from the start, Weed and McChesney both getting home in the first inning. In the next inning the home nine got three more runs, Mollison, Stornebrink and Weed all passing the plate; the third innings saw another notch placed to their credit. The Commercial School had two runs to their credit when the second innings closed, but after that they were held down tight till the seventh, when three men getting their bases on balls, Yamada ambled home. They made one more in the eighth innings. The home side made several good hits in the course of play, but the smart fielding of their opponents, combined with slow base running (excusable in such heat) prevented them rolling up such a score as might have been expected. Thorn took over the catching from Weed in the fifth inning. Line up:—

Y. C. & A. C.	Y. C. S.
Correa	P. Oishi.
Weed and Thorne	C. Matsuzawa.
McChesney	1st. Kunimi.
Merriman	2nd. Yonebayashi.
Mollison	3rd. Okawara.
Blake	S.S. Yano.
Thompson	L.F. Matsumura.
Cowan	C.F. Hirooka.
Stornebrink	R.F. Yamada.

FOURTEENTH OF JULY.

The French National Holiday was duly celebrated on Friday by the French residents, in sympathy with whom many foreign business houses in the settlement and residences on the Bluff—especially British in both cases—hung out flags. The offices of the Messageries Maritimes at No. 9 were profusely but tastefully decorated with flags and lanterns, the effect in the evening being particularly striking. The centre of the day's proceedings in Yokohama was the Oriental Palace Hotel, the sea front of which was elaborately adorned with lanterns and flags. Arrangements were made for a special tiffin and dinner, for both of which seats were hardly obtainable on Friday. In the evening the weather continued fine and the dance that followed dinner was most enjoyable. The music supplied by the fine band of the Toyama Gakko was excellent. The following selections were rendered during the day:—

Tiffin.

- 1.—Marche de Sambre et Meuse.....Ratshl
- 2.—Une Alerte au Bivouac, Ouverture.....Clodomit
- 3.—Fantaisie Sur Mignon.....Ambroise Thomas
- 4.—L'Ardita Valse
- 5.—La Fille de Madame Angot.....Lecocq
- 6.—Fantaisie sur Faust
- 7.—Marche du Temps Passé

Dinner.

- 1.—Marche Lorraine.....Canne
- 2.—Ouverture de Guillaume Tell
- 3.—Grande Fantaisie sur Tannhäuser.....Wagner
- 4.—Valse Bleue
- 5.—Caucou and Cricri Polka
- 6.—Les Mousquetaires au Courent
- 7.—Le Chant du Départ, Marche

THE LAW COURTS.

ALLEGED FORGERY OF A SEAL.

Mr. Robert Amtour, a German, who was recently arrested on suspicion of having destroyed an official seal, and who has been undergoing preliminary examination in the Tokyo District Court, was acquitted on July 15th on the ground that the evidence against him was insufficient.

SHIPPING CASE.

Mr. K. Makino, owner of the Ryoyo Maru which recently collided with the French steamer Breis Isel (4,930 tons, whose agents in Japan are the American Trading Company) in Moji Strait and sank, lodged a claim on July 18th in the Kobe District Court against the American agents and seized the French ship, which is now at Kobe.

According to the petition of the plaintiff, the Breis Isel struck the stern of the Ryoyo Maru while the latter was under way and inflicted severe damage to her hull. As the result, the Japanese ship sank together with cargo. The collision was attributed to the negligence of the French vessel. The Japanese ship was valued at yen 140,000 and her cargo yen 200,000.

A telegram from Osaka says that some marine insurance companies concerned in the Ryoyo and her cargo held a conference on July 19th in Kobe in order to participate in the case as intervenors and to maintain the petition of the plaintiff.

THE RUSSO-CHINESE BANK
v. YUANTZE SONG.

A case lodged by the Russo-Chinese Bank in the Tokyo District Court claiming yen 230,000 against its ex-Comptroller, Yuantze Song, and the defendant counter-claiming yen 600,000 is reported to have been settled out of the Court.

BRITANNIA TO JAPAN.

Over and over the broad earth's breast,
Over and over the main,
From the Isles of the East to the Isles of the West
There is welded a golden chain.
Over the hundred years gone by Voices are borne on the sea:
"Ye have warred our war, ye have cried our cry, Ye have conquered, even as we."
Tyranny darkened our Western light
('Twas a hundred years ago),
When our fathers sailed for the fateful fight,
And struck the all-saving blow.
Tyranny grasps at your island throne,
Darkens your realm of the Sun;
But your signal to-day has been Nelson's own,
And his word on your warships won.
Ye have learned our lore of the glorious seas,
Ye have proved it pure and true;
But your faithful vigil, your scorn of ease—
God grant that we learn them of you!
Over and over the broad earth's breast,
Over and over the main,
From the Isles of the East to the Isles of the West
There is welded a soul-wrought chain.

SHIPPING ACCIDENTS.

Owing to dense fog, the steamer Ryoyo Maru (2,808 tons) with six thousand cases of fish oil and general cargo, collided on the morning of July 14th in Moji Strait with a French steamer which was leaving for Newcastle. The Japanese ship sustained severe damage amidships and sank. The crew, 53 in all, were saved. She was on her way from Otaru, Hokkaido, to Onomichi in Bingo province. The French ship also sustained damage to her bow.

A telegram from Wakanaï, Hokkaido, reports that an explosion has occurred among the cargo of the steamer Teshio Maru which is sunk off the port and on which salvage operations are being carried on. Five men were injured and one was killed.

At 3.30 a.m. on July 13th, the America Maru collided with the Bankoku Maru (2,339 tons) off Ulsan, Korea. The latter sustained severe damage to her bow but arrived at Mutsure island. The America Maru was slightly damaged. The Bankoku Maru was on her way from Fusan to Otaru.

AMERICAN TOPICS.

The first case of laying on the lash for wife-beating in Oregon is acknowledged by the press to be a move in the right direction. The brute showed that the punishment hurt, and it is doubtful whether he will give his cowardly instincts full play another time. A certain class of criminals, like wife-beaters—brutal tramps who terrorize women and children, petty thieves and those who are cruel to animals—can only be reached by punishment which inflicts severe bodily pain. It would reduce such offenses 50 per cent. were a whipping post provided in every jail throughout the land, remarks the San Francisco Chronicle.

William W. Karr, accountant of the Smithsonian Institution and disbursing agent for the Government bureaus under it, has been arrested on the charge of embezzlement, which, according to his own confession, aggregates $46,000. His stealings, he confessed have been going on for the past fifteen years. Karr is 50 years old. He went to Washington from Memphis and has been identified with the Smithsonian Institution since 1880. The embezzlement was accomplished by making use of cheques sent to the Smithsonian Institution in payment of miscellaneous transactions.

The prospects of the Lewis and Clark Exposition at Portland, Oregon, are said to be growing brighter. The attendance, which fell away badly after the opening day, is now increasing and the weather is fine. The fair is practically complete, and from all accounts it is a noteworthy show, especially of the life and resources of the Pacific Northwest, of which the average Eastern tourist knows very little. The Government has been liberal, and the display made by the various departments is noteworthy. All observers agree that no fair ever held in America has had so beautiful a natural site as this on the banks of the Willamette river, with green fields and forests surrounding it, and with a background of snow-capped mountain peaks.

Mr. Henry James took a fling at American newspapers and public schools while talking to Bryn Mawr College girls at their commencement on June 8. He placed newspapers and schools in the class of what he considers evil influence on English speech, helping to keep it "untidy and slovenly." President Thomas introduced Mr. James to the girls, saying they were to "hear from his own lips what is thought of our matchless English by one of the greatest masters of written English." Mr. James surely told them what he thought of it. "There are millions of homes in America," he said, "in which the people call themselves educated, and yet they talk about 'vaniller eyescream,' that 'feller,' Portor Ricor, 'dorgs,' and use similar slovenly expressions."

While the Canadian Government cruiser Vigilant was patrolling Lake Erie, off Pelee island, on June 7th and in the neighborhood of the international boundary, it sighted the fishing tug Grace M. of Lorraine, O., which is alleged to have been in Canadian waters. The Vigilant immediately gave chase and showed signals to stop and surrender. The tug taking no notice, Captain Dunn of the Vigilant fired a shot across the bow of the Grace M. She kept on and made a dash for American waters. The cruiser fired again, but the tug refused to stop. Before she finally gave in Captain Dunn fired five shots at the American vessel. Coming to close quarters, the Grace M. made further attempts to escape being captured, but when within hailing distance of the Government cruiser she turned around to yield and the two vessels came together. The tug turned turtle and sank. Five of the crew, Captain Galbraith, Engineer W. Ruelson, William Anderson, Joseph Poppell and Martin Olesen all sank with the tug, and two, Martin Olesen and William Anderson, apparently remained in the boat, as their bodies did not return to surface. The other three men were rescued by boats from the Vigilant.

On account of the present situation in the Far East the United States Naval War College and the General Board of the Navy have recommended that another battle-ship be added to the American Asiatic fleet, and an order to that effect probably will be issued soon. The General Board believes that, as a matter of policy, the American naval force in the East should be strengthened to maintain the dignity of the United States and to more closely approach the present dominant power of Japan. The joint Army and Navy Board, which directs the expending of all appropriations for insular defenses has decided to spend practically every dollar of the available fund, amounting to nearly $1,000,000, in strengthening the defenses in the Philippines. It is stated, however, that there is no significance in this decision. The fortification of the Philippines has been urged for years by the Army and Navy strategists and now that they have the money to spend they say they propose to spend it where they have long thought it was most needed.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Colonel T. Nishikubo and Ensign Y. Imamura were killed in the fighting on Saghalien.

The Tokyo Electric Light Co. and the Fukagawa Electric Light Co. have decided to amalgamate and to carry on business under the name of the former firm.

An official telegram from Kumamoto reports that on the morning of July 18th, fire broke out at Kubota, in the district of Kikuchi, destroying four hundred buildings.

A case of bubonic plague was reported on July 19th in Kure-cho, Fukagawa, Tokyo. The patient is a youth named H. Nishimura, an employee of H. Kojima, a rice merchant.

Bishop M. C. Harris, of the Methodist Episcopal Church for Japan and Korea, has returned from a visit to Manchuria and Korea, and will stay during the year at the Aoyama residence.

It is reported by Tokyo papers that 18,190 bags of flour on board the captured ship Henry Balkow were delivered on July 19th by the Yokosuka Prize Court to the Department of the Navy.

A Shimonoseki telegram reports that a passenger on the Osaka Shosen Kaisha's steamer Hijo Maru has been attacked by plague. He died on July 17th in the Shimonoseki Hospital whither he was removed on the arrival of the vessel.

An Aomori telegram says that a British gentleman was arrested on July 16th on a charge of having photographed parts of the harbour. Having confiscated the negatives, the Aomori police released him. The gentleman is reported by the Kokumin to be an engineer employed at the Kosaka mine.

According to official investigations at the end of June, the number of Russian prisoners in Japan is as follows:—

Generals and Admirals	10
Staff officers	91
Petty officers	1,156
Non-Commissioned officers	9,149
Men	55,665

66,071

Japanese prisoners in Russia are as follows:—

Officers	15
Non-Commissioned officers	20
Men	286
Medical officials, etc.	11
Merchant sailors of merchantmen, etc....	288

620

Besides these figures, 137 other Japanese are believed to be detained in Russia.

THE SINKING OF THE "PRINSESSE MARIE."

The Singapore Free Press prints the following account of the last voyage of the ill-fated Danish steamer Prinseesse Marie:—

The Prinseesse Marie left Singapore on June 17th for Yokohama and Kobe with a cargo of provisions and manufactured iron from Copenhagen and Antwerp. The voyage was uneventful till the afternoon of the 22nd when a large steamer was sighted bearing down on the Prinseesse Marie from the eastward. As the stranger drew near she hoisted the Russian colours and fired a shot across the merchantman's bows as a signal for her to heave-to. The warship, for such the vessel proved to be, swept up to within a very short distance of the Prinseesse Marie, and one of the ship's officers who understands Russian read the name Terek on her bows. This, according to the Russian statement was in 13° 57' N. lat and 113° 15' E. long.

THE USUAL PROCEDURE.

The cruiser signalled that she was sending a boat, and soon an armed cutter put off from her and pulled to the Prinseesse Marie. Two officers came aboard and demanded the ship's papers, which Captain Ingemann at once produced, as well as a certificate from the Danish and Japanese Consuls at Antwerp and the Dutch Stadt certifying that the steamer carried no contraband. These the Russian officers looked through and then ordered the hatches to be removed, so that they might verify the manifest for themselves. This was at once done and after they had examined the holds the officers held a long conversation together. The chief officer of the Prinseesse Marie overheard part of this consultation and heard the Russians express the opinion that the cargo was non-seizable. Finally they asked Captain Ingemann to accompany them on board their vessel, as they wished to lay the matter before their commander. On arrival on the Terek a hasty Court of Enquiry was convened in the chart room, the court comprising the Commander of the cruiser and all his officers. The Prinseesse Marie's papers were examined and Captain Ingemann, who was present, was questioned closely on minor details.

CONTRABAND OR NOT?

Then the Russian officers held a long argument as to whether the Prinseesse Marie's cargo was contraband or not. The Russian commander and the majority of his officers appeared to be of opinion that the ship's cargo did not make her liable to seizure, but on this opinion being expressed a boyish looking lieutenant who had taken a prominent part in the discussion lost his temper, and thumping his fist on the table declared that the ship should not be released. Finally he became so enraged that he shook his fist in his commander's face and declared in an insulting manner that if the Prinseesse Marie was released he would bring the matter before the Russian Government and have the commander punished.

A VACILLATING COMMANDER.

On this the Russian commander, who was an old man, said he would enquire into the matter again. During the fresh enquiry the young lieutenant, whose name Captain Ingemann afterwards learned was Andrews, was most persistent that the vessel should not be released. After a heated argument he brought the majority of his brother officers round to his views by saying that even if the cargo was not contraband and Russia had to pay a large sum in compensation, this was better than allowing such a valuable cargo to fall into Japanese hands.

STILL NOT SURE.

The Russian officers then appeared reluctant to sink the steamer and discussed the feasibility of putting a prize crew on board her and navigating her to the Baltic. This the commander would not hear of, saying he could not allow his ship's crew to be so greatly weakened as the sending away of a prize crew would necessitate. The Prinseesse Marie was stopped at 5 o'clock in the evening and Captain Ingemann had been taken to the Terek at 6 o'clock when the enquiry opened, but it was to p.m. before the decision was come to that the steamer was to be sunk. Captain Ingemann protested against this but without avail. He therefore asked the Court to give him a signed statement of the action they intended to take with regard to his vessel. This the Russians readily did, and then showed the captain a berth where he could turn in till morning.

THE "PRINSESSE MARIE" BLOWN UP.

Captain Ingemann was awakened at day-break the next day, 22nd, and both ships which had been cruising slowly eastward were again hove to. The Russians then lowered all their boats and with Captain Ingemann in the first went aboard the Prinseesse Marie. In all nearly one hundred Russians boarded the ship. Captain Ingemann was told to tell his crew to prepare to go on board the cruiser. Whilst the Danes were getting their sea chests on deck the Russians spread themselves over the ship and BEGAN TO LOOT HER.

They went into the saloons and cabin and each man helped himself to just what he fancied, and what they did not want they wantonly destroyed. They broached a case of beer, of which there was plenty in the ship's holds, and partook of it in such quantities that a number soon got quite drunk. When one case was finished another was got out of the hold and opened without any remonstrance from the Russian officers.

WANTON DESTRUCTION.

The worst intoxicated men appeared to take a fiendish delight in smashing everything they saw. In the saloon they broke all the crockery and even tore up the linoleum matting in shreds, whilst the cabins they wrecked entirely, smashing the mirrors and other toilet gear to atoms. Captain Ingemann was cut to the heart to see his beautiful new ship wrecked by a party of madmen.

WRECKING THE ENGINES.

In the engine room the Danish engineers had a similar experience. The Russians helped themselves to all the moveable fittings of the engines and then smashed at them with hammers. The steamer had a fine dynamo in her engine room and the chief engineer swore in his beard when he saw the damage wrought to it and the other machinery, though he knew the ship was to be sunk.

LIQUOR AND PROVISIONS REMOVED.

Meanwhile the more sober part of the crew got the Prinseesse Marie's steam winches going and slung all the provisions and liquor they could get easy access to into their boats and those of the Prinseesse Marie, which they had lowered, for transference to the Terek. They removed a large quantity of beer, wines, and tinned provisions, also a number of bags of sugar. At 2 p.m. they knocked off their work of plunder, and preparations were made to sink the Prinseesse Marie. Captain Ingemann and his crew were taken to the Terek and all the Russians with the exception of one boat's crew left the doomed steamer. To these the final act of destruction had been left. Apparently undesirous of expending ammunition in sinking the steamer the Russians placed two mines aboard her—one under the boilers and the other in No 1 hold in such a position that it would blow a hole in the steamer's side and at the same time destroy the water-tight bulkhead.

SENT TO THE BOTTOM.

Wires connecting with the charges were then brought up on deck and over the side into the boat, which pulled away from the ship. When about one hundred yards away the connection was made and two muffled explosions came from the Prinseesse Marie. She shook from stem to stern but no visible damage could be seen. Despite this, however, the vessel had received vital injuries, as could be seen from the rapid manner in which she began to settle down. The water appeared to be pouring into her from the holes made by the dynamite, and from her sea-cocks which the Russians, to make perfectly sure of sinking her had opened before they took their departure. Rapidly the ship got deeper and deeper in the water and eighteen minutes after the explosion of the mines she went down by the head.

SOUTHWARD HO.

On board the Terek the officers and crew of the Prinseesse Marie were kindly treated, the officers sharing the accommodation of the Russian officers. For the first four or five days they were not told where they were being taken or what was going to be done with them, but from the stars Captain Ingemann was able to tell that the Terek was being steered southwards. After some time from scraps of conversation they learned that the Terek was bound for Batavia to obtain coal, as the supply in her bunkers was running perilously low.

INCIDENTS ON THE "TEREK."

The conduct of the lieutenant to his commander had astonished the Danes, but they met with far greater surprises in the matter of Russian discipline. The Russians drank all day, and many a night were all so much the worse for liquor that the ship was left solely in the command of a petty officer and no proper look-out kept. On one occasion two officers who were the worse for liquor indulged in a "scrapping" match and had to be separated by their crew, the stolid Danes looking on aghast.

SCURVY RAMPANT.

Owing to the length of time they had been at sea scurvy had broken out on the Terek and although she carried a crew of three hundred, half of them were victims of this disease. Owing to this no attempt was made to clean the interior of the ship, whilst outside she looked like a tramp collier which had not been inside a dock for years.

On the 29th the Terek arrived at Batavia and on the Dutch Port Officer coming aboard the crew of the Prinseesse Marie were handed over. The Dutch authorities were most kind to them and at once put them in communication with their Consul who wired to Singapore with the result that arrangements were made for them to come to Singapore by the La Seyne.

A REASON FOR INTERNMENT.

When told that the Terek had been interned at Batavia the officers of the Prinseesse Marie said this was probably because they could not get any coal. Although the Russians obtained permission to take in 1,000 odd tons of coal, the coal coolies, after working for a few hours, at coaling the vessel, refused to work for some reason or other, it is thought because they were ill-treated.

HOME TO DENMARK.

From the La Seyne the crew of the Prinseesse Marie went on board the East Asiatic Company's steamer Siam, which left for Copenhagen yesterday afternoon.

It should be mentioned that the fine vessel so wantonly damaged and sunk by the Russians, on her last trip from Shanghai carried home 800 distressed and wounded refugees. The commander of the Terek probably did not know this, but the knowledge of what they had done and what they got in return did not mollify the outraged Danish officers.

RELUCTANT RUSSIANS.

There were at Batavia two Russian officers and a number of Russian sailors ashore. When the Rion had orders to leave within the specified time, these were ashore, and the vessel signalled for them. Apparently the seductions of town-life proved irresistible, for they neglected the signal and stayed on land of plenty.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE REAL CONDITIONS IN KOREA

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In your last issue of the Japan Mail you criticised an article that appeared in the Korea Review. You questioned the truth of the statement the author made in regard to the way Japanese subjects treat the Korean. The incident cited was a Korean who was beaten at a road leading from some railroad station. You refused to accept this as true, or as representing the way the Japanese have and are treating the Koreans.

It is a pity that without being in Korea and without investigating for truth or falsehood you say this cannot be true and does not represent the state of affairs here, when you will believe the author of the article on any other subject. You should accept the statement of others till you have investigated for yourself, and then not go only to Japanese ports like Fusan or Mokpo, but get out into the interior among the Koreans. The Japanese emigrants who are coming to Korea by hundreds on every ship are largely coolies and adventurers, and are as yet in the interior, subject to no law but might. This, however, does not lessen the responsibility of the Japanese Government, for she need not allow her subjects to come until they can be governed; they will not obey Korean laws and there is no Japanese law here.

No one can be in Korea long where the Japanese are who can not vouch for many instances similar to the one you discredited in your editorial. You did not believe it because such conduct is so unreasonable, and yet those of us who see are forced to believe.

I employed a Japanese contractor to do some mason work. He beat the Korean coolies over the head with anything he could get hold of till I was compelled to send him away. Why? Because he spoke Japanese and did not know Korean, the coolies spoke Korean and did not know or pretend to know Japanese therefore it was hard to give orders. It was no one's fault except his own that he did not know the Korean language, therefore he should have shown what he wanted instead of beating.

I was called professionally to see a Korean who was shot and killed by a Japanese in railroad construction. Why was he shot? Because the man became angry at the Korean for doing something in the work of grading that the Japanese "boss" did not like. Just what it was I could not find out, but it was while they were all busy at their work. The Korean was unarmed and offered no resistance.

I got off the train at a certain station. Many Japanese and Koreans also got off. We were walking away when like a flash a Japanese knocked over a feeble old Korean gentleman, who seemed to be 60 years old. Two other young Japanese joined in and the three men slogged and kicked and beat the old man with a horse whip till he lay prostrate and almost unconscious. This was done within a dozen yards of two Japanese soldiers dressed in their uniforms with their guns and bayonets in their hands, and they said not one word but looked on in perfect complaisance. What was the cause of the trouble? I could not exactly say, seemingly no cause. Whether it was the old man jostled against the Japanese, or whether the horse the old man was about to mount jumped against one of them I could not say. This much I know that I was within a few feet, that the men were strangers, and that no words passed between them. If I remember a statement made in your paper some time since correctly, Japan has declared that parts of Korea occupied by Japanese enterprise such as the railroad are under martial law, at least her policy is such that she court-martials Koreans for misdemeanors. Now if this part of Korea is under martial law why does she not instruct her soldiers to keep the peace against her own subjects as well as against the Koreans? If Japan is represented here in the interior by any class officially, it is her soldiers, and why do they not act as Japanese police as well as Korean?

My cook, a man 30 years old, was back of the house on private ground, on a hill above where a Japanese house was burning in the city below. Two American friends were standing by him watching the fire, which was about 25 yards off, on a ledge of rock about 60 feet below; between was an open space and very steep. The crowd and the firemen were all below. The Korean was not talking. A group of Japanese came climbing up the rock, went direct to the Korean, gave him a blow that sent him staggering backward and went on. Mean! Devilish!

I might cite case after case, and my experience is no exception to the rule. I suppose you will say, however, impossible; you cannot believe it. You are in a position, if you will publish the unvarnished facts, to do the Japanese as well as the Koreans a great deal of good. The Koreans have their faults but they are no more numerous than the faults of other peoples.

Yours, etc.,

ONE WHO HAS SEEN.

THE RENAMING OF SAGHALIEN.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I gather from The Japan Mail and elsewhere that the place-names on the Island of Saghalien are to be changed from the old native nomenclature to one of purely Japanese manufacture, e.g. Aniva Bay is to be called henceforth "Higashi-Fushimi Bay;" Enzuma Cape is to be "Tsushima Cape," and so on. It seems to be a great pity for many reasons that the old names should thus ruthlessly be made to disappear from off the face of the earth and with them the previous ethno-geographical history of early races and nations. Before, then, the very island itself has its aboriginal cognomen taken away and another given it (for one does not see why with such recklessness it should not be), I would like to place on record that the name Saghalien is pure Ainu,—viz., Sahalin, or in full, Sahalin Moshiri. The meaning of the name is "the land of the wave-like," or "undulating plains." I should imagine that the island of Saghalien is something like the "South-Downs" of Sussex, England: i.e. low hills with flat places on them.

Yours faithfully,

JOHN BATCHELOR.

AN EXPLANATION.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In the interests of fairplay towards a defenceless widow, may I ask you to publish the following in the next issue of your journal?

On the 4th July, a declaration in the German language was offered by a lady to your paper as an advertisement. Through some inadvertence, the matter was published in your correspondence columns together with an English translation. The advertisement had been proffered in the German language because it was intended to reach only the German community. Its object was to dispel possible misunderstandings, due to the publication, by third parties, of facts concerning the lady's adopted child. The necessity for such a declaration arose from the fact that "adoption" is a prominent feature in the codes and social life of Germany.

When, however, this declaration intended as an advertisement, was published in your correspondence columns together with an English version, the door was opened to the criticisms of your subscribers of other nationalities, with whom "adoption" is not an institution and who could not, therefore, be acquainted with the niceties attaching to that institution in German eyes. As a consequence, a letter signed "T. C." appeared in one of the recent issues of your paper. While the letter may have been composed with the best of intentions, it was evidently written without a knowledge of the facts or of the German laws concerning "adoption." So far as present purposes are concerned, these may be stated (with a vital exception referred to below) as follows:

No German woman under 45-52 years of age (the age differing between these figures in the different states of Germany) can legally adopt a child, unless it is her own illegitimate child. In the latter case, she may legalize it after marriage, provided that her husband, being the father, consents to the adoption. There is, however, an exception to this law,—an exception not very widely known, namely: In the Kingdom of Saxony, where after a certain period of residence and having become a subject of Saxony, it is possible to seek the King's permission for adoption. Provided the characters of the adopting parents are clear, permission is granted without waiting for the age required by other German States, and this facility is sometimes utilized by people desirous of taking and bringing up another person's child as their own, as was actually the fact in the case now in question.

It should be perfectly clear from the above that whenever the average German learns of a child adopted by a couple in the earlier years of their married life, he is apt to conclude that it is an illegitimate child of one of the members to the marriage. The declaration submitted to your office, as an advertisement, was intended to refute this natural inference, derived from the fact disclosed to the public against the wishes of the adoptive mother, that the child hitherto known as her own was only an adopted child, an inference casting a stain not only upon the living but upon the dead.

As to the motives which prompted the disclosure just referred to, it is quite unnecessary for me to refer, but as it has exposed a helpless woman to malicious slander and her motives to misrepresentation, I feel it a duty to send this letter.

Enclosing my card, I remain, Dear Sir,

Yours faithfully,

T AIRPLAY.

A FINAL WORD.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—The last letter of your correspondent, "The Writer of the Article," is perfectly delicious. In a former letter I likened him to a Don Quixote tilting against theological windmills, but exciting pity instead of humour in the performance. But in this last letter he has supplied the missing humour. For a man, who has taken columns and columns of your paper during the years past to express to us his religious views, to feel the necessity of gravely reciting to us the number of theological examinations he took when a student in England in order to prove to us his knowledge of the Christian religion, is enough to add to the gaiety of the nations even in the midst of the dog days!

Of course, from the beginning of the controversy I have known perfectly who your correspondent is. And I have known considerable of his history, though I confess I did not know that the examinations he took in theology were exactly eleven in number. I have even had the genuine pleasure of meeting him personally, though he perhaps does not remember me. I confess that I found him in personal intercourse far more gentlemanly and refined in his manner of expression than he has shown himself to be in newspaper controversy.

Seriously speaking, your correspondent should know that a man might pass forty-nine examinations and spend a hundred years in the study of theology in schools and books, and yet have no real comprehension of the sweep of the Christian religion. It is that lack of real comprehension that your correspondent betrays in all his articles on Christianity. He has no intellectual as well as no personal grip on the fundamental meaning of the Christian religion.

Your other correspondent, "A Man in the Street," sets before us a disconcerting picture of the conflicting beliefs of the Christian Church. But it is a very superficial picture. Aside from the Unitarian people, who are an exceedingly small class of people numerically, all the different branches of the Christian Church, Greek, Roman, and Protestant, are one in the great beliefs of the Christian religion. They all alike believe in the Trine God; they all alike believe in the creation of the world and God's constant care of the world; they all alike believe in the childhood and brotherhood of the human race; they all alike believe in the divine moral law and in the probationary character of this life and in the sin of all men against God; they all alike believe in prayer; they all alike believe that the Bible is God's special revelation to men; they all alike believe that the Son of God came into the world and lived a human life and died for the sins of the world and rose again from the dead; they all alike believe in the life after death and in after death separation between goodness and badness. In a thousand and one beliefs they differ. But, compared to these great things in which they all agree, the differences are utterly insignificant. Christian peoples differ in their beliefs in regard to forms of Church government and in the degree of importance due to rites and ceremonies, and in the counteraction of the divine and human will in salvation, and in the details of the future life and in many other things. But we have only to compare these differences in belief with the great Christian doctrines which they all hold alike to see that fundamentally the Christian Church is "one in hope and doctrine." Why does your correspondent throw dust by seeking to magnify the differences in belief? The agreements are far greater in their importance.

Then your correspondent devotes himself to what he chooses to call my belief in eternal punishment. But one sentence shows that he has no comprehension of what I stated to be the Christian belief in eternal punishment. He says, "Does he not think after, say two or three million years of punishment, the poor wretch might be given another chance?" By that sentence he shows that he thinks that Christian people believe that eternal punishment is an utterly arbitrary thing on the part of God. Does he imagine that we believe that the God who made us and loves us would leave one of us for a moment in hell if it were possible for him to take us out? Does he imagine that we believe that the God who came himself to die for us would refuse arbitrarily to give one of us another chance for happiness? If your correspondent would think through the make-up of a free moral personality his difficulty to understand would be solved. In the very nature and law of free moral personality there is wrapped up the possibility of the free moral agent fixing himself forever in the direction of moral badness. When a free man by his own deliberate and persistent choice of selfishness fixes himself in the direction of badness and loses thereby all motives even in the other direction, then it is foolishness to ask why God would not give him another chance. If a man loses his arm, then by the law of the human body he can never have the "chance" for another. And when a man has lost his motives for righteous endeavour, by the law of the human soul he can never have another "chance."

But we are not to "sit twiddling our thumbs throughout the ages." As an old teacher of mine expressed it, there is one necessity and two possibilities before every human being. The necessity is that every one of us shall serve God in this his universe forever and ever. The possibilities are that we may serve him forever in the joy of our own free choice, or that we shall serve him as the winds and the waves serve him from sheer necessity of law. These two possibilities are heaven and hell, and between them is a great gulf fixed that no man can cross. For a man who has ever been a free personality, with the wonderful power of choice in his blood, to lose all his motives toward the choice of righteousness, and to be sunk down into the forced service of things, and with the memory of his former splendour—that is the torture and the punishment that your correspondent asks me to explain. Jesus Christ called it "eternal fire" and "the worm that dieth not" and "weeping and gnashing of teeth," and I hardly think that his words can be improved upon.

Yours respectfully,
A. D. B.
Fukuoka, July 10th, 1905.

LAFCADIO HEARN AS A PROPHET.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR.—The following was written in 1895 by the late Lafcadio Hearn, and appears in his "Kokoro" page 107 (it refers to the return of soldiers from the war with China):

"I said to Manyem: 'This evening they will be in Osaka and Nagoya. They will hear the bugles calling; and they will think of comrades who never can return.'"

"The old man answered, with simple earnestness: 'Perhaps by Western people it is thought that the dead never return. But we cannot so think. There are no Japanese dead who do not return. There are none who do not know the way. From China and from Chosen, and out of the bitter sea, all our dead have come back,—all! They are with us now. In every dusk they gather to hear the bugles that called them home. And they will hear them also in that day when the armies of the Son of Heaven shall be summoned against Russia.'"

How truly this has been fulfilled! Recent events show that Hearn was a close observer and clearly saw what Russia, in spite of the number of secret service spies she maintained in Japan at great expense, failed utterly to see.

Yours, etc.,

NATIONAL CONVENTION OF THE W.C.T.U. IN JAPAN.

The Thirteenth Annual Meeting of the Japanese Woman's Christian Temperance Union has been in progress in the Chapel of the Girls' Mission School at 212 Bluff. At the opening session on Wednesday afternoon, seventy members and delegates were present, and in the evening Mayor Ichihara and other friends extended a welcome to the gathered representatives from societies in all parts of the country. Members of the Yokohama Churches, Y.M.C.A., Y.W.C.A., and local temperance societies and schools were likewise on hand to greet them.

The National Corresponding Secretary reported on Thursday morning, a total membership of 2,577, showing an increase of 660 over that of the previous year. The Treasurer's report noted receipts to the amount of yen 3,201.27 and expenses at yen 2,475.87.

The work in Japan is distributed over the following eighteen departments, each of which is superintended by a Japanese lady. (1) Scientific Temperance Instruction. (2) Sabbath Observance. (3) Temperance Literature. (4) Mothers' Meetings. (5) Hygiene. (6) Soldiers and Sailors. (7) Evangelistic. (8) Rescue Work and Purity. (9) Anti-Narcotics. (10) Mercy. (11) Sunday School. (12) Unfermented Sacramental Wine. (13) Heredity. (14) Flower Mission. (15) Medal Contests. (16) Legislation and Petition. (17) Social Meetings. (18) Parliamentary Usage.

Miss Kara Smart, World's Representative, reported that 391,850 leaflets and 1,200 books had been published or reprinted during the past twelve months, and that apart from the sums mentioned above, she had given special financial aid to various departments, amounting to yen 572.73.

The Convention continued its sessions until midday on Saturday. A Special Public Meeting was held on Friday evening, in Shiloh Church, commencing at 7 o'clock, in the course of which, an address, in English, was given by Miss Belle Kearney of Mississippi. This lady has worked for fifteen years in the interests of the W. C. T. U. in all parts of the United States, and is now completing a world-wide trip of observation and organizing. Miss Kearney is also a writer, and has a thorough knowledge of what will interest her audience.

CHURCHES OF CHRIST CONVENTION.

The Annual Convention of the Japan Mission of Churches of Christ met in Karuizawa on July 7th. The Convention continued through July 7th, with a recess for the Glorious Fourth. The main time was taken up with business. Plans for enlargement of all departments of work were considered. At present the main part of the work is in the distinctive evangelistic field, twenty-two out of twenty-four missionaries being in that work. A Bible School, in which are two missionaries and two Japanese teachers is in a flourishing condition, with a night school auxiliary. A Girls' School is to be opened in Tokyo in October. This meets a long felt want and will increase the number of missionaries in educational work. More attention will also be given to the preparation and publication of Christian literature.

The Mission is planning to open several new stations during the next three years, at the end of which time the 25th anniversary of the Mission in Japan will be celebrated. A committee was appointed to collect material for a silver anniversary report.

During the sessions of the Convention Mr. R. D. McCoy of the Sei Gakuin, Tokyo, read a scholarly paper on "The Ideas of God, New and Old." Mr. W. H. Erskine, of Akita, read an interesting paper on "The Haldanean Movement."

Mr. R. L. Pruett, of Tokyo, presided over the Convention in an admirable way. New officers elected were C. S. Weaver, Oaken, President; R. D. McCoy, Tokyo, Vice-President, and M. B. Madden, Sendai, Secretary.

An English paper to be called "The Japan Harbinger" is to be published from September. May it be a harbinger of good things concerning the progress of righteousness in Japan!

Dr. J. H. Garrison, Editor of the Christian Evangelist, St. Louis, Mo., Dr. H. O. Breeden, Pastor of the Central Church of Christ, of Des Moines, Iowa, and Dr. John L. Brandt, Pastor of the First Church of Christ, St. Louis, Mo., expect to visit Japan this year. An extensive evangelistic campaign is being planned in order to make good use of the services of these eloquent and consecrated men.

The reports of the year show an increase in the number of accessions to the churches and a very encouraging increase in the amount given for the work. The Missionaries are all in good health; there is splendid harmony among all workers, and the future prospects are bright and hopeful.

M. B. MADDEN,
Secretary.

Karuizawa, July 10th, 1905.

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SPECIAL SERVICE.)

THE ENTENTE CORDIALE.

London, July 14.

The Paris Municipal Council has accepted the invitation of the London Municipal Council to visit London in October next.

COUNT MURAVIEFF RESIGNS.

Count Muravieff has resigned the appointment of peace plenipotentiary, ostensibly on account of ill-health.

NO ARMISTICE.

Later.

Russia has been given distinctly to understand that there can be no question of an armistice until the bases of peace have been accepted.

RUSSIA'S PLENIPOTENTIARIES.

It is officially announced at St. Petersburg that M. de Witte succeeds Count Muravieff as Chief Plenipotentiary.

THE ACCIDENT ON A BRITISH BATTLESHIP.

Four more deaths have occurred, owing to the accident on the British battleship Implacable.

GREAT BRITAIN AND FRANCE.

The festivities and good feeling at Brest have induced the French newspapers to discuss the possibility of developing the entente into an alliance. The papers point out that a naval combination between the two Powers would be irresistible.

BRITISH HONOURS FOR JAPANESE STATESMEN.

London, July 15.

The Grand Cross of the Bath has been conferred on Count Katsura, Japanese Premier, and the Grand Cross of St. Michael and St. George on Baron Komura, Minister of State for Foreign Affairs.

THE CHANNEL FLEET AT BREST.

Vice-Admiral W. H. May, M.V.O., (who has succeeded Vice-Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, K.C.B., in the command of the Channel Fleet) with other naval officers, was a prominent figure at the great review at Longchamps on the occasion of the French National Holiday. Sir Francis Bertie, G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., K.C.B., British Ambassador in Paris, was present.

Admiral May, President Loubet and British residents of Brest attended a review of marines and bluejackets. There was much international enthusiasm.

BRITISH ARMY AFFAIRS.

Later.

Mr. Arnold Forster, Secretary of State for War, speaking in connection with the Army Estimates, referred to Lord Roberts' speech (telegraphed on June 11). He said the strong dictum of Lord Roberts required some modification and examination. There had been rapid and great improvement in the personnel and organization of every branch of the Army since 1903, though there would be great difficulty in finding drafts for India during the next two years. He was confident we were now on the road towards a satisfactory solution of the Indian drafting question, which was the great and unique problem of the Army.

THE "CALEDONIEN" AGROUND.

London, July 16.

The M.M. steamer Caledonien, bound from the Far East to Marseilles, grounded badly near Zeila (off the coast of Somaliland). The British warship Perseus pulled her off and towed her to Jibouti.

MR. TAKAHIRA.

Mr. Takahira yesterday visited President Roosevelt at Oyster Bay in connection with the details of the peace conference. He expressed gratification at the appointment of Mr. de Witte, who is an able man and who would lend confidence and weight to the conclusions of the conference.

M. DE WITTE'S APPOINTMENT.

London, July 17.

Japan is reported to be gratified with the appointment of M. de Witte, who quits St. Petersburg on Wednesday (July 19th) and proceeds to America via Cherbourg.

COSSACKS MUTINY.

A company of Cossacks became mutinous near Lodz. They were surrounded and disarmed. This is the first time that Cossacks have shown disaffection.

THE MOROCCO CONFERENCE.

Great Britain and Spain will join in the Morocco Conference provided the programme is communicated to them in advance.

THE RAINY SEASON IN MANCHURIA.

The rainy season has set in in Manchuria and prevents movements on a large scale.

REPRESSIVE MEASURES IN RUSSIA.

Reuter's correspondent at Odessa reports that the authorities are acting severely in order to suppress the peasant disturbances in the province of Kherson. In the district of Paruting 1060 arrests were made. The prisoners were terribly beaten by Cossacks. Two succumbed. The drastic measures were apparently effective.

SAGHALIEN.

London, July 18.

The complete rout of the Russian

Dalinc, with a loss of eighty prisoners and five guns, ensures the complete occupation of Southern Saghalien.

The Japanese had 70 killed and wounded, the Russians sixteen.

POLAR EXPLORATION.

The Peary North Pole Exploration party has sailed from New York on the specially constructed steamer Roosevelt. They carry two years' supplies and will attempt to reach the Pole via Smith's Sound.

THE REDISTRIBUTION BILL.

London, July 18.

Mr. Balfour has withdrawn the Redistribution resolution and will proceed with the bill next session.

OPERATIONS ON THE KOREAN COAST.

General Linevitch telegraphs that Japanese torpedoers have entered Olga Bay.

FRENCH HONOURS TO BRITISH OFFICERS.

Vice-Admiral W. H. May, M.V.O., has been appointed Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour. Lieut. the Hon O. B. Bridgeman has been appointed Commander, and all the officers commanding the British ships at Brest have been appointed Officers of the Legion of Honour.

NOT THE "CALEDONIEN."

A Reuter's telegram from Aden states that it was the M. M. steamer Annam and not the Caledonien that stranded at Zaila.

KING'S TRIBUTE TO FRENCH DEAD.

King Edward sent a magnificent wreath to the funeral of the victims of the casualty to the French sub-marine, which was raised yesterday.

THE ENTENTE CORDIALE.

London, July 20.

The British fleet has left Brest.

SAGHALIEN.

General Linevitch reports that the Japanese on the 14th inst. were bombarding Naebuchi, on the S.W. coast of Saghalien.

[NOTE.—This is a mistake, the place is situated on the S. E. coast of Karafuto.—Ed. J. M.]

THE REDISTRIBUTION SCHEME.

The withdrawal of the Redistribution scheme was due to the decision of the Speaker who held that the complex proposals contained in Mr. Balfour's resolution must be taken separately and not voted on as a single resolution. This would greatly have protracted the debate.

M. DE WITTE INTERVIEWED.

Later.

M. de Witte has been interviewed. He says that the Tsar desires peace but that he (M. de Witte) fears that the Japanese terms will be such as to preclude agreement. In that case Russia is prepared to fight for years.

DINNER TO MR. TAKAHASHI.

The Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation has given a dinner in London in honour of Mr. Takahashi, Vice-President of the Bank of Japan. In the course of his speech Mr. Takahashi expressed his appreciation of the firm financial support given to Japan at a critical period.

BRITISH POLITICS.

At a Unionist meeting, Mr. Balfour justified his action with regard to the redistribution proposals. He earnestly exhorted his party to continue their loyal support of the Government.

The meeting passed a vote of confidence in Mr. Balfour.

SAGHALIEN.

(Received at the Military Head Quarters, p.m. 14th.)

Our forces which landed on Karafuto (Saghalien) pursued and drove out the enemy from Vladimirofska and Brijine (about 3 miles west of Vladimirofska) on the 10th inst. and occupied both places.

The main body of the enemy retired to a thick forest on the north-west of Daline (some 5 miles west of Vladimirofska) where they offered an obstinate resistance in a position previously prepared and armed with a number of field-guns and machine-guns. Our troops attacked vigorously on the 11th, and at dawn on the 12th drove the enemy in the direction of Mauka, throwing him into confusion.

The enemy's casualties are not yet clearly known, but they must have numbered fully 150 or 160, including officers.

[From this account it would appear that the main road along the east coast is not open for the retreat of the Russians.—Ed. J. M.]

(Received at the Imperial Military Head-Quarters.)

(Resume of the progress of the military operations of the Army of Occupation in South Karafuto).

At noon on the 7th instant the landing commenced near here, and thereafter our infantry and cavalry occupied the highlands of Saunapati on the north of Meira. The same night an officer's reconnaissance pushed on as far as the south of Korsakoff, and at 2 p.m. on the same day the enemy began to burn the whole of the town.

Early on the 8th we occupied Korsakoff without encountering any serious resistance. The enemy retreated in the direction of Soroyafuka, in the neighbourhood of which place he essayed a fresh resistance, but at 11 a.m. our troops drove him out and took possession of the place, the enemy retreating finally to his base at Vladimirofska.

On the 9th we sent out an officer's reconnaissance which pursued the enemy and pushed as far as Ristoetinaya.

On the same day a detachment of our infantry embarked on war-ships and left Korsakoff with the object of occupying Notoro Cape.

On the 10th we pushed northward steadily pursuing the enemy. That evening we drove him from Vladimirofska and Brijine and occupied both those places.

On the 11th driving back the enemy from Darine, we opened our attack at 2 p.m. against his main body who were holding a position on the edge of a forest westward of that place. The enemy resisted with the utmost obstinacy.

At dawn on the 12th our attack was vehemently resumed, and the enemy was driven in disorder towards Maceka.

Thus the whole of southern Karafuto came into our possession.

The prisoners and spoils taken by us in this fight were:—Lieutenant Maximin, of the Navy, and over 80 men; 4 field-guns and one machine-gun; a quantity of ammunition and several store-houses.

In addition to the above the enemy must have lost 150 or 160 in killed and wounded. Our casualties were 70, including officers.

THE "IZUMRUD."

Rear-Admiral Yamada, who commands the North Squadron sent to reconnoitre the coast of the Maritime Province reports that the Russian cruiser Izumrud is ashore on the north side of Orekoba promontory at the southern entrance of St. Vladimir Bay. Her head points W.S.W.; she has a list of about 20°; her masts are all broken; the fore-part of her hull retains its form, but everything above water in the after part has been blown into fragments by the force of the explosion. Of her armament four 12-cent guns remain and two torpedo-tubes, but they are covered with rust and their essential parts have been removed. For the rest, not one portable object has been left, from which fact the degree of her injuries may be inferred. I consider that she can not possibly be raised and utilized.

[Received at the Imperial Naval Head Quarters.]

NEWS FROM UNKWI BAY.

According to a report received from Admiral Kaminura, commanding the squadron operating in the north, a flotilla of our destroyers, on the 17th instant, was fired on by some 200 of the enemy's troops in Unkwi Bay (south of Possiet Bay). We immediately replied and silenced them. Then observing various bodies of the enemy's cavalry flying at several points, we opened on them. At Sochlhong also 5 or 6 troopers were seen on the high-road, but when they observed our destroyers approaching they fled in trepidation. The Chihaya cannonaded a post of communications and a look-out of the enemy's on the highland north of Yeka promontory which is on the west of Najinpho.

[Received at the Imperial Naval Head Quarters.]

THE MYSTERY OF THE "OLD-HAMIA."

Vice-Admiral Dewa telegraphs as follows:—"At 1 p.m. on the 17th instant our troops captured at Saunapati on the east of Tsushima Promontory a boat which arrived having on board Sub-lieutenant Treyburg and 13 men of the Kuzas Suvaroff. On investigation it was found that these had been ordered to navigate to Vladivostock the British steamer Oldhamia, which had been taken by the Russian Squadron on the south of Formosa, her crew having all been transferred to the war-ship. On the 19th of May these men started in the Oldhamia and passing round on the south of Oshima (off Satsuma), were about to traverse the Etorufu Strait when, in consequence of a dense fog, the steamer ran on a rock on the east coast of Etorufu on the 2nd of June. They finally set her on fire and the men, landing, lived under tents. On the 17th of that month an officer and 11 men set out by boat to Korsakoff to seek aid, but as nothing was thereafter heard of them, a party of the remainder left by boat on the 5th of July and were captured as above described. They say that there are still 2 officers and 14 men at Etorufu and that they have food for a month and a half.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

M. DE WITTE.

In consequence of Count Muravieff's ill-health M. de Witte has been appointed Peace Plenipotentiary in his place. M. de Witte will leave Cherbourg on the 25th instant and is expected to reach New York on the 1st of August.

ASSASSINATION OF COUNT SHUVALOFF.

The St. Petersburg Telegraph Agency reports that on the 11th instant Count Shuvaloff, Chief of Police at Moscow, was assassinated with a pistol. Four shots were fired and the assassin was immediately arrested, but his identity is not yet established. The physicians affirm that the bullets were poisoned.

ADMIRAL BIRILEFF.

Wolff's agency has a telegram from St. Petersburg to the effect that Vice-Admiral Birileff is to succeed Vice-Admiral Avellan at the Naval Department, virtually in the position of Minister.

AMERICAN WHEAT.

A report issued by the American Agricultural Department says that the wheat crop this year will be exceptionally fine, and that the other crops will all be better than last year's.

THE "KNAZ POTEMKIN."

It is stated that the Knaiz Potemkin has been handed over to Russia by Roumania, and that the Black-Sea Fleet sent to receive her arrived with her at Sevastopol on the 12th.

IN MANCHURIA.

General Linevitch reports under date of the 10th inst.:—"On the 9th two companies of the enemy's infantry approached our outpost at Siniaotsz in the Hailungching region. Our outpost being re-inforced ambushed the enemy and compelled him to retreat."

"I (Linevitch) have received a report that our ammunition at Korsakoff was exhausted and that our troops abandoned the position. We blew up the guns and burned the stores. Further, our force holding the forts constructed near Soroigafuka were bombarded by Japanese torpedo boats and retreated northward."

MOROCCO.

The Nord Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung say that the main points of the Franco-German agreement are (1) That the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Morocco shall be preserved; (2) economical freedom; (3) reform of the police and of finance, in accordance with the decisions of the international conference; (4) recognition of France's special position as Morocco's neighbour; (5) withdrawal of France's objection to a conference; (6) immediately on the opening of the conference France and Germany agree to send their ambassadors from Fez to Tangier, and the Governments of the two countries shall give combined advice to the Sultan of Morocco with respect to the details of the discussion at the conference.

The above are the main points of a diplomatic note signed on the 8th instant in Paris by the Minister of Foreign Affairs and the German Ambassador.

MANCHURIA.

Reuter, under date of the 11th instant, transmits a report from General Linevitch:—"Hailungching district, 8th inst.: our troops on the left bank of the Hami River were fired on by the enemy's guns but before our artillery replied he retired along the south bank. In spite of the difficulties of the ground our troops advanced along the Hami as far as a road had been made, and then changing front, retired to the north, keeping up a fire on the enemy. We had no losses."

[What this curiously inconsequential manoeuvre signifies it is hard to decipher. Probably, as experience has proved to be often the case, the Russian General's report has been published in part only.—Ed. J. M.]

GERMANY AND JAPAN.

The Kohlnische Zeitung says:—"We believe that Japan must be fully satisfied with the rapid settlement of her new loan and with a result so excellent as to be quite without precedent in German financial history. This success of Japan is attributed to the sympathy shown towards the newly-arsen Power in the Far East, which has such a great future before it. Germany has throughout this war observed strict neutrality and never diverged from it. We hope that Japan on her side will show a friendly attention towards German industries."

PEST.

The Japanese Consul at Newchwang, under date of the 17th July, says that Kwantung and Swatow are declared infected districts and that ships coming from thence will be subjected to medical inspection.

PEACE PROSPECTS.

Referring to deWitte's appointment as peace plenipotentiary, the principal Berlin papers say that it is a good omen for the restoration of peace. There is reason to expect that if he exerts his strength a successful result will be attained. The Tsar seems to appreciate that there is no longer any reason to be ruled by the clique which betrayed him into commencing this unfortunate war.

The Novoye Vremya says:—"Can any humiliating terms of peace be proposed to such a statesman as de Witte? Japan must recognise that any proceeding of that kind would involve the continuance of the war at all sacrifices. de Witte is regarded by the world as an advocate of peace, but he certainly will not consent to the humiliation of paying an indemnity or surrendering territory. Japan doubtless wishes for the speedy restoration of peace, for she knows that she can not find any way of making another such success as the battle of Mukden. According to present conditions a cessation of the fight would be in every respect advantageous to Japan, but at the same time it would be perpetually disadvantageous for Russia."

RUSSIAN REINFORCEMENTS.

An Imperial Edict published in the Russian Official Gazette of the 25th of May orders the organization of a new Third Field Balloon Battalion of East Siberia.

An Imperial Edict published in the Russian Official Gazette of May 27th directs that non-commissioned officers who have served with the Colours for a year or upwards during the present war and who possess the legal-standard education, may be employed as candidates for commissions, without examination, at the discretion of their commanding officers.

PLOT AGAINST THE CZAR.

London, July 16.

A plot has been discovered at St. Petersburg to assassinate the Tsar, the Grand Duke Vladimir and the Grand Duke Alexis. A number of palace officials are concerned in it.

A secret manufactory of bombs has been discovered.

The Tsar was to have gone to Moscow, but his visit has been abandoned.

ANOTHER ASSASSINATION.

Telegrams from Riga say that the Reform Party has assassinated the Head of the Customs.

(RECEIVED BY THE "ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

JAPANESE NAVAL ACTIVITY.

Shanghai, July 17.

A Russian report from Harbin dated the 16th instant says that two Japanese destroyers entered America Bay, and that a number of war-ships entered Olga Bay.

(This is the expedition that examined the wreck of the Ismerud.—Ed. J. M.)

SAGHALIEN.

At Papovi, 40 miles north of Vladimirofka, a Japanese force of infantry, cavalry and artillery took possession of a Russian encampment, and a portion of them attacking Dalny, captured it.

(This "Dalny" is evidently the "Darine" of the Japanese reports.—Ed. J. M.)

MANCHURIA.

All is quiet in Manchuria. In North Korea the Japanese are said to have enlisted bandits as auxiliaries.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

MR. KIM, Korean Minister of Finance, arrived in Tokyo on July 22nd.

A DEAD Russian has been washed ashore at Kutsushima, off Maidzuru.

COMMODORE DICKEN, R.N., of Hongkong has been made a Rear-Admiral.

MAJOR-GENERAL SENE, Commander of the troops in China, arrived on July 23rd at Ujina.

It is officially reported that Prince and Princess Arisugawa arrived at Naples on July 19th.

THE Empress, now at Hayama, who was slightly indisposed, is reported to have recovered.

DURING the week ended July 8th, 21 cases of plague were reported in Hongkong; all were fatal.

A SEVERE shock of earthquake was felt at 5.30 p.m. on July 23rd in the district of Takata, Niigata prefecture.

DURING last year, 15,118 homeless people were supported by the local government offices and yen 212,599 were spent on them.

It is reported by telegram from Morioka that a coolie murdered T. Fujimura, an accountant employed at the Tsunatori Mine, by stabbing him in the heart with a short sword. The culprit was arrested at the scene.

A CASE of cholera is reported at the village of Terashima, South Katsika, near Tokyo. The patient is a girl of 12 years.

TWO of the Russian prisoners detained at Kanazawa have applied to the Minister of State for Home Affairs for naturalization papers.

EARLY on the morning of July 25th, fire broke out at Yonaisawa, in Akita prefecture, destroying thirty-one buildings. A woman was killed.

MR. SHOZO TANAKA, a leading Progressist, representative for Tochigi prefecture, has been arrested at the village of Yanaka on a charge of assault.

MR. NAGASHI KUJO, the sixth son of Prince Kujo, has been adopted by Baron T. Midzutanigawa and will marry Miss Yasu, the eldest daughter of the Baron.

THE net profits of the Tokyo Fire Insurance Co. for the first half-year was yen 572,231.85. The interim dividend was declared at 6 per cent. (or 12 per cent. per annum).

SIR CLAUDE MACDONALD paid a visit on July 25th to Count Katsura, the Premier, at the latter's official residence. Japanese journals say they held a conference for several hours.

DURING the storm of July 19th, the steamer First Kobo Maru, with a thousand bags of foreign rice, was wrecked off Kurashiki, Aki province, on her way from Kobe to Shimonoseki.

ON July 21st, 312 invalids were brought from the front via Hiroshima to Tokyo and on the following day 186 were to arrive at Shimbashi from Hiroshima by the 12.35 p.m. train.

THE remains of Major Nishikubo, Ensign Inamura and 18 others who were killed in the recent battle of Korsakoff were brought on July 24th to Aomori with about a hundred invalids.

COLONEL HIRAI, one of the Aides-de-Camp to the Emperor, left Moji on July 24th for the front. Colonel Takenaka returned the same day, arriving at Ujina by the Rosetta Maru, on account of illness.

THREE Russian officers among the prisoners from Saghalien have been removed from Aomori to Hiroaki. They are permitted to live in Hiroaki together with their wives with whom they surrendered to the Japanese.

MR. NAKAJIMA, formerly proprietor of the Juten-fuko in Peking, will issue a daily paper at Yingkow. The first issue will be published on July 26th. The paper will be printed in English, Korean and Japanese characters.

MR. M. ODAGIRI, formerly Consul-General at Shanghai, has joined the Yokohama Specie Bank. It is reported by the Jiji that he was recently appointed manager of the branch in Peking and he will shortly leave for his post.

IN an almost perfect state of preservation, and easily recognisable, the dead body of a guide, named Nagi, a native of Aosta, Italy, who fell into a crevasse in 1877, near the summit of Monte Rosa, has been recovered from the ice.

MRS. CHIYO HIRANUMA, wife of Mr. Kuhei Hiranuma, a well known merchant of Yokohama, was killed at 7.40 p.m. on July 19th by a train at the Hiranuma station while she was distributing presents from the Shohai Gikwai's Ladies Department to invalids who had returned from the front. It is reported that one of the lady's sleeves was caught by a metal fastening of a carriage when the train began to move. She fell on the line from the platform and was run over. The funeral will take place to-day, July 22nd, at 4 p.m. from the Kyusei temple.

Mrs. S. HAYASHI, Japanese Consul at Bombay, wired on July 24th to the Foreign Office that during the last week speculative transactions in cotton took place and fluctuations occurred in prices. Generally, prices advanced. The stock is 350,000 bales.

It is reported by telegram from Kagoshima that Mr. Nakanishi, an assistant Judge of the Kagoshima Local Court, and two others were arrested on the night of July 19th on suspicion of having obtained a bribe from one of the parties in a certain case.

It is reported by telegram from Seoul that a Korean was arrested by the Japanese gendarmes in Anju and shot on July 20th. The Asahi says that the Korean was employed by the Russians to supply them with reports with regard to military movements and that he received yen 1,200.

TWENTY-NINE Japanese including five women who were captured last year by a Russian warship in the neighbourhood of Hokkaido, and who were subsequently released in St. Petersburg, arrived on July 1st at Shanghai by the Prins Heinrich from Hamburg. They left by the same steamer for Nagasaki.

GENERAL Cheong, who has been appointed Governor of Mukden, arrived at Yingkow on July 24th. The same evening he was entertained by the Commander of the Commissariat, and the following morning he left by the East-China Railway. His staff consisted of about a hundred officials and military officers.

THE Nichi Nichi says that the Department of Finance will issue, on July 28th, exchequer-bills amounting to twenty-five million yen bearing interest of sen 2 per yen 100 per day. The loan will be redeemed within ninety days. With this loan, the Government intends to redeem the exchequer issue of April 28th.

THE Kokumin has a telegram from Shanghai that in connexion with the recent decision of the Chinese traders to boycott American goods, dealers are allowed to sell stocks of American products, but not to make future contracts. Native pupils attending American schools are allowed to continue their studies.

THE equipment of a steamer which has been constructed at the Kawasaki Shipbuilding Yard, Kobe, under the instructions of the Siamese Government, having been completed, she will shortly leave for Bangkok. She will be used by the Siamese Crown Prince as a yacht. The vessel is 132½ feet in length, 11 feet in width, and of 10 knots speed.

At 9 a.m., on Sunday, a dead body, apparently that of a coolie, about 35 years old, was washed ashore off the bank in front of No. 6, Yamashita-cho, Yokohama. As it was not identified, the body was removed to the City Office by the Harbour police. The coroner has given an opinion that the coolie committed suicide by drowning the previous night.

MR. O. WATANABE, Mayor of Sasebo, recently paid a visit to Admiral Rojestvensky to enquire after his health. According to the mayor, says the Jiji, the injuries to the Admiral's head are almost healed, but he still keeps on the bandage. The wound in the thigh is still in a bad condition so that he can not get off the bed. His general condition, however, is improving and he is always reading. His only complaint was against the present hot weather.

MANCHURIA.

Friday, July 21.

Reports continue to arrive of the prevalence of cholera in the Russian army. It is stated that the disease made its appearance some four years ago in Kaiyuen, and that as the Chinese had no idea of adopting hygienic precautions, the virus has never been stamped out. Every summer it re-asserts itself and its area of mischief extends. The Russians appear to have suffered owing to want of a proper sanitary system. At many of their advanced positions the disease is raging, especially at Itang-chou. It is to be hoped that the epidemic will not find its way into the Japanese army also. All accounts indicate that the health of the troops is excellent, but cholera often defies the best precautions.

A letter from Manchuria dated the 4th instant suggests that the military events recurring there deserve more description than they receive in the official reports. Thus on the 1st of July the latter announced in the briefest possible terms that a body of some 1,500 Russians with 18 guns had made a night attack near Kangping, and had been repulsed after a fight lasting some hours, the Japanese casualties amounting to some 90 and the enemy losing about 400. From the letter above alluded to this affair seems to have been very hot. The Japanese force on which the brunt of the Russian attack originally fell, was obliged to retire, but being subsequently reinforced, it advanced again, and at dawn on the 2nd the Russians were finally repulsed. This essay on the enemy's part can not have been intended as more than a reconnaissance in force. No mention of it was publicly made in Russian official reports. Even Shanghai kept silence. We may remark en passant that the war lost something of its piquancy when the Floung factory ceased to be productive.

Saturday, July 22.

The public is again informed as to the dispositions of the Russian forces in Manchuria, but we have heard so much already upon this point that very brief reference will now suffice. The gist of the matter is that the enemy's lines extend from Fenghua to Itungchou and from the latter to Hailung-ching, and that Linevitch has his headquarters at Kungchuling. In these lines the Russians are said to have some 300,000. They are also fortifying a position on the Sungari, but the references to this are vague and unintelligible.

It is stated that there is a powerful force of Hunghutsz at Huashihling on the road from Kaiyuen to Itungchou. The presence of these free-lances at such a place constitutes a great inconvenience for the Russians inasmuch as it severs their line of communications, but the Hunghutsz are very difficult to deal with since, at the first symptom of resolute attack by a superior force, they disperse and take refuge among the hills, assuming the garb of peaceful citizens.

The Russians are reported to be very ill supplied with the necessaries of life as well as with clothing. Many are living on nothing but millet, and many are still wearing their winter costumes in midsummer heat. Their spirits are consequently much depressed, and it is alleged that Linevitch's attempts to assume the offensive are altogether frustrated by this last cause. In fact the reports convey an impression that there is disaffection in the army. This would not be surprising. Mutinous behaviour has been frequent enough in the Russian fleet since the war broke out. The world now learns from Rojestvensky's report to the Tsar that there was a mutiny in the Baltic Fleet at Madagascar and another off Formosa, and that the crews of the Admiral Seniavine and the Admiral Apraxin actually refused to fight during the battle. These were two of the ships which surrendered with Nebogattoff. If such is the state of the navy what reason is there for thinking that the army has escaped disaffection; the army which has now borne all the fatigues and hardships of an eighteen months' campaign unrelieved from first to last by any ray of victory.

Last year the rainy season in Manchuria lasted for only a fortnight so that the climate may be said to have been exceptionally favourable for campaigning. It is anticipated that the conditions will be different this year and that operations will have to be suspended for a considerable time.

Sunday, July 23.

An officer who has just returned from the front says that the Russians have some 30,000 men massed in the neighbourhood of Hailungching, and that they have 7-cent. field pieces in the ratio of one to every 200 infantry. Their lines are 12½ miles distant from the Japanese and no collisions take place. (Kokumin Shinbun.)

The Fiji says that the enemy in the vicinity of Yingepienmun, after a long period of quiescence, moved out a body of infantry and cavalry, numbering some 2,000, on the 24th instant, and advanced towards Mahanshan, which lies between northern and southern Shanshintsz. An outpost of 300 Japanese came into contact with the advanced guard of this force and inflicted some injury on it, whereupon a hasty retreat was made. The Russians seemed not to have any heart for fighting. Their conduct suggested rather that they simply obeyed their officers in a wholly spiritless way. By this time, indeed, it must be a serious question with the Russian officers how far they can place any reliance on their men. In spite, however, of these frequent allusions to the dispirited state of the Russians, it will be observed that there are no reports of surrenders on any considerable scale. Of course from the moment that the news of peace negotiations reached the Army men would be very unlikely to deliver themselves into Japanese hands.

Monday, July 24.

Reports continue that the Russians in Manchuria are much dispirited and show no disposition to assume the offensive. In the Hochi Shinbun we find an account of a skirmish on a somewhat extended scale which took place on the 28th of last month between a battalion of Japanese infantry which had occupied Nanshanchintsz on the 22nd—as described in official reports—and 300 Russian troopers. The latter were routed with heavy loss, and the remnant of them retired to Hailungching, where 30,000 Russians are said to be massed.

The fact is that ever since the Japanese suspended their advance along the lines from Mukden towards Harbin, the Russians have devoted their whole energies to recruiting their shattered strength, and with the exception of occasional skirmishes on the Japanese right where Madoriloff commands the enemy's outposts, and on the left where Mischenko's cavalry is posted, there is nothing in the nature of real fighting. It is not difficult to divine the Japanese plan of campaign though to discuss it is forbidden, but it is exceedingly perplexing to fathom the designs of the Russians.

They have a powerful army in esse; that is certain. But of what use is an army unless it be utilized? They will never recover what they have lost merely by lying inactive in northern Manchuria. Yet for five months now they have essayed nothing on a serious scale. It would seem that they intend to remain for ever on the defensive. That is a manifest acknowledgement of weakness.

An officer speaking in the columns of the Hochi, describes the annihilation of a Japanese reconnoitering party consisting of eleven men, including Sub-lieutenant Kanazawa. At Lutaukau this little detachment fell in with a body of 150 Russians, and after a desperate struggle in which 1 was killed and 4 were wounded, the remaining 6 seem to have been made prisoners.

The Fiji Shinpo quotes the opinion of an officer who thinks that when the rainy season ceases the Russians will assume the offensive. His principal reason for so thinking appears to be that Linevitch is absolutely bound to restore the spirit of his men by some resolute movement. He can not continue to keep the troops inactive month after month. That would be all very well with a victorious army, but with a defeated army it is fatal, and moreover such strategy is inconsistent with the disposition of Linevitch himself. Next month, therefore, should witness something signal. But this officer takes no account of the diplomatic side of the problem. While peace negotiations are pending it is of the utmost value to Russia to have an intact army in the field. Of still greater value to her would be a striking victory, but unless she feels quite confident of success she is not likely to risk the disaster of another signal defeat just when the peace plenipotentiaries are sitting in New Hampshire. Linevitch has therefore an immense responsibility. He knows that a victory would be incalculably profitable to his country at this juncture and he knows that a defeat would be correspondingly disastrous. The Tsar will be guided by his advice. What form will it take?

It will be remembered that some time ago certain wells in the Japanese lines were reported as having been poisoned by Chinese acting in the pay of Russians. We read now in a Moji telegram received by the Hochi Shinbun that the poisoners were a man, his wife and their daughter, a girl of 16. They fled to Antung but were followed thither, arrested and put to death. It is a shocking method of carrying on warfare, this poisoning of wells. If proof be forthcoming that such a device was really prompted and paid for by the Russians, they have disgraced themselves. We can not believe, however, that any officer in a high position would have sanctioned such barbarity.

In connexion with Antung it may be mentioned that a tremendous storm of rain swept over the place on the 13th and 14th instant, tearing away embankments, partially wrecking buildings and causing some deaths. The water rose to a height of 3 feet above the floor of the railway station in Yamato-machi. From this last name we learn incidentally that there is now a Japanese settlement in Antung and that the railway station is in its immediate vicinity.

Wednesday, July 26.

A Japanese officer who has just returned from the front is quoted (Yomiuri) as saying that Linevitch is evidently bent upon saying something extensive against the Japanese left. He is treating Mongolia as though it were Russian territory. Not only are forced requisitions made there constantly for provisions and fodder, but considerable numbers of officers and men have been sent into the region and are there making all preparations for a large turning movement against General Nogi's Army. The idea of Linevitch, should a general engagement occur, is to throw a big force forward so as to envelop the Japanese left, using Mongolia at a base for that purpose. He hopes thus to recover the railway and to cut the Japanese communications in a fatal manner. All Russia's talk about the neutrality of Mongolia and the necessity of preserving it was mere bluff intended to cover these doings which were already planned at that time.

London and St. Petersburg continue to speak of the Japanese having taken Omoso, which would place them in a most important position on the Russian left rear. We have already pointed out that if Hunchun, on the left bank of the Yalu, were in Japanese possession, the above movement in the direction of Omoso—a distance of 115 miles—would be easily understood. But the truth is that the Japanese manage to wrap their operations in such secrecy as to defy distant scrutiny, and even were it permissible to publish conjectures they might turn out to be quite worthless.

The Asahi says that Hunchun is an important Russian outpost; that a thousand men are posted there; that it is in telegraphic communication with Kihin, and that the Russians have greatly improved the road between the two places.

INDENITY.

The Asahi makes a calculation of the just amount of the indemnity that Russia ought to pay. These are the items: spent during the first year 500 million yen; spent during the second year, according to the original estimate, 800 million yen; just raised abroad to supplement the estimates for the second year, 300 millions; to be still raised in the country on account of the second year, 200 millions; making a total of 1,800 millions. But that is not all. There are further the expenses of bringing back the troops from beyond the sea. About one year was required to accomplish that in the China-Japan war, which was an affair incomparably smaller than the present campaign. There are now about a million Japanese soldiers abroad and it is plain that heavy outlays and much time must be incurred in getting them home. That expenditure may be put at 500 millions. Then again there are succours to the families of deceased soldiers, and there is the capital required for a pension fund and for rewards. If these latter outlays be assessed at ten millions yearly there must be a capital fund of 200 millions which, at 5 per cent., would produce the required amount. Adding all these figures together we get a grand total of 2,500 millions. Then there is the sacrifice of the producing power of the troops engaged in the field. Estimating this at 150 yen per head for a million men, the Asahi gets another sum of 150 millions, which it doubles on account of the 2 years devoted to the war. Finally our contemporary considers what it calls the direct and indirect losses suffered by trade and industry as well as the cost of repairing the inroads made upon the country's fighting strength. It does not attempt to assess these last figures, but it concludes that they will bring the total to 3,000 million yen. The Asahi disavows any idea like that entertained by Bismarck when he imposed on France an indemnity of 200 millions sterling, namely, the idea of crippling the other side financially. It protests that Japan wants merely her actual expenses and it believes that Mr. Witte will appreciate the reasonableness of that view.

It appears to us regrettable that a leading Japanese journal should educate its public to entertain ambitions which can scarcely be satisfied. A very cursory examination of the Asahi's figures discloses great inaccuracies of calculation. In the first place the sum of 770 millions of yen estimated for purposes of war expenses during the current year was intended to cover the period up to March 31st 1906. Hence if peace be concluded by the end of September there will remain six full months of the fiscal year, and during the course of 6 months it should be quite possible to carry home all the troops and to disband them. Moreover from the moment that peace is concluded the military outlays will be largely reduced, and from that point of view the amount originally assessed by the Government for this year, namely, 770 million yen, ought to prove quite sufficient since it will be required to meet the full outlays for half a year only and the reduced outlays for the other half. It is therefore probable that the 300 millions just raised abroad would remain in hand, and that no occasion to float any further domestic loan would arise. If these hypotheses be correct, and they seem reasonable, then the outlays made from the beginning of the war until the date of the return of the troops may be put at 1340 millions of yen—namely, 570 for the first year and 770 for the second—and we may rule out the Asahi's 500 millions for bringing back the armies and 500 millions on account of the new foreign loan and the projected domestic loan. At any rate if we set down a sum of 1500 millions as recouping all these direct expenditures, we can not be far from the mark. Then comes the question of pensions, rewards and reliefs. The Asahi puts this at a permanent charge of 10 million yen annually. The amount seems excessive. Forty thousand families at 100 yen each annually would make only 4 millions and if we add one half of that amount on account of pensions, making an aggregate of 6 millions, we shall probably have a fairly approximate figure. Now there are 70,000 Russian prisoners in Japan and for the maintenance of these Russia will naturally be prepared to pay. That would not be in the nature of an indemnity nor would it involve any humiliation. Suppose that a lump sum of 2000 yen be charged for each prisoner, then we obtain an aggregate of 140 million yen which would yield just 6 million at 5 per cent., and would constitute the required fund for pensions, reliefs and rewards. Turning now to our contemporary's estimate of the producing power of the troops which have been taken away from their avocations at home, we note two apparent defects in the Asahi's calculation. In the first place, if there are a million soldiers beyond the seas now, there certainly were not anything like that number last year; and in the second place a very considerable part of them would have been serving with the colours under any circumstances, war or no war, so that it is obviously an erroneous hypothesis to accuse the war of drawing a million of men away from the producing classes. And is not the average productive capacity over-assessed at 150 yen per head? How many youths between the age of 20 and 23 produce articles worth 12½ yen monthly? However, we are here in a field of conjecture. The certain ground to take is that against these negative losses and against indirect losses generally Japan may fairly set the enormous gains she has reaped by this war. They are incalculable are those gains. She has leaped at one bound to a leading place in the world's esteem, and the access of prosperity and material development that will ensue will surely be very large. This immense increment of reputation and prestige as well as its consequent material advantages may fairly be set against the indirect and unsubstantial losses to which our contemporary refers.

It should not be necessary to explain that in writing thus we have no desire to minimize Japan's just claims. Our object is merely to prevent the growth of expectations such as are certain to be disappointed and such as would surely be called extravagant by the world were they embodied in the demands of Japan's plenipotentiaries.

PORT ARTHUR.

At 3 p.m. on the 21st the battle-ship Poltava was floated. This vessel is a sister-ship of the Petrovsk. Her displacement is 10,950 tons; she was completed in 1894; her speed is 17 knots, and her armament consists of four 12-inch and twelve 6-inch guns. The ships floated at Port Arthur are now the Bayan, the Peresviet and the Poltava. In his report of 18th December last Admiral Togo said that the Poltava was resting on the bottom on an even keel at a point 200 metres north of Tiger's Tail and that her after-deck was covered at high tide. There now remain only the Pobieda and the Retvian to be floated as to battle-ships, and the Pallada as to cruisers. But the question remains, can these ships be rendered thoroughly serviceable.

With regard to 21 steamers and other craft sunk outside Port Arthur, tenders were recently called for and the results are shown below, but there is a provision that all arms or weapons of war found in the vessels must not be regarded as the property of the tenderer without special official permission.

Ships.	Price.	Successful Tenderer.
Hokoku Maru	Yen.
Enko (?)	11,752	Anjo Junshiro.
Jinsen Maru
Asagawa Maru	5,000	Morita Kihieji.
Skirachi (?)
2 Steam Dredgers
Chiyo Maru	14,035	Ishii Sentaro.
Sagami Maru
Edward Barry
Sakura Maru
Mirka	22,000	Hayashi Kenkichi.
Yuhiko Maru
Oluru Maru
Mikoto Maru
Hurbin
Fukui Maru
Edo Maru	30,663	Takao Yosuke.
Aikoku Maru
Hailar
Totomi Maru

Of the above, thirteen belong to the category of steamers sunk for blocking purposes. There are four others in this class but no mention of them appears in the official list. It will be observed that the list includes 21 craft in all and that they are sold for a total figure of 73,440 yen, the average price being 3,500 yen approximately. If any of them can be raised and utilized the enterprising tenderers will be well paid, but there can not be much hope, for in addition to the dynamite used for sinking them they were further shattered by Russian attempts to clear them away.

THE FIGHTING IN SAGHALIEN.

Friday, July 21.

The Yorozu Choho, alone among Tokyo journals, reports the capture of Mauka, whether the Russians retreated after their defeat at Dalny (or Daline). Our contemporary makes quite an interesting story about the hopeless strategical position in which the Russians found themselves, being cut off by the Japanese fleet from using the main highway along the east coast, and being therefore virtually forced into a cul de sac. All this may happen or may even have already happened, but we must await better authority before attaching credence to the story.

Other papers speak of the great difficulties of campaigning in Saghalien where, with the exception of a few spaces and of the district traversed by the high road, the whole country is covered with dense forests, admirably suited for purposes of ambush and well nigh impossible to reconnoitre. It is stated that the Russian force holding Korsakoff did not exceed 400 regulars with a thousand volunteers and some men from the Novik, but to dispose finally of even this small number is no easy matter in such a country.

Naibuchi, which the Japanese bombarded on the 14th inst. according to Russian accounts, is a town (or village) situated at the point where the road running north from Korsakoff strikes the eastern sea-coast. The capture of this place would be a natural measure. When all is said that may be said on account of the difficulties of the country, the fact seems to remain that the Russian forces, if driven from their positions along the coast, can not attempt any protracted resistance by retiring into the forests, for the simple reason that provisions would be unobtainable.

Saturday, July 22.

The Asahi says that the Japanese have captured Naibuchi, which place they were said to have bombarded on the 14th instant, according to Russian reports. It will be remembered that after the fight at Dalny (or Daline) a part of the Russian force escaped to Mauka and a part went north. The latter seems to have taken up a new position at Naibuchi, and is stated to have offered some resistance to the Japanese capture. Naibuchi is 80 versts north of Korsakoff.

Colonel Alexiefsky, who has surrendered, is represented as the officer in command of the Korsakoff garrison. His surrender is thought likely to be followed by that of the remaining forces under his orders.

Attention is called to a point which has already been noticed with much interest by military men, namely, that the Japanese preparations were so complete as to enable them to move inland immediately on landing, and that they marched 50 miles in the first three days. Generally troops after landing in a hostile country require several days to make preparations before they commence their advance, but the Japanese, landing at noon on the 7th, reached Vladimirovsky on the 10th. It was an instance of excellent organization.

An officer who has just returned from the front describes the forests in Saghalien as something unimaginable. For hundreds of years they have been uninhabited by the axe. Multitudes of Eso-matsu (locally known as Todo-matsu) grow to a diameter of from 4 to 5 feet, their branches actually trailing upon the ground, and the intervals between them are filled with smaller timber so thickly that an animal cannot possibly pass and it is with no small difficulty that a man can force his way through. It was in such a forest, or on its borders, that the Russians had their chief defensive position west of Dalny, and the advantages of the ground enabled them to make a stubborn fight though they seem to have been greatly outnumbered. They are said (Jiji Shimpō's account) to have mustered only 500 with 6 field-pieces and 3 machine-guns and the fight took place in heavy rain. The Japanese had three battalions in action. One moved against the right of the Russian position, two against the left. The artillery of the assailants opened the fight by discharging about a thousand projectiles against the enemy's entrenchments, but it is evident that this heavy cannonade did not cripple his powers of defence, for when the assailants made their first charge at 1.40 a.m. on the 12th they seem to have found the parapets still intact. They captured the outer lines with this rush, but when they advanced against the inner position, Major Nishikubo who commanded the assault, Sub-Lieutenant Imamura and 40 men out of 50 composing the van were shot down. The account goes to show that the method of direct attack was not continued, and that the works were forced by a flank operation at 8.40 a.m., when a Japanese battalion reached the left of the Russian position and being there joined by another battalion, poured in such a heavy fire that the defences became untenable. A second charge was then made. It resulted in driving out the enemy and capturing 4 field-pieces and 1 machine-gun together with their ammunition. The Russians took refuge in a dense forest, and being pursued, a sharp fight subsequently took place between about 200 of them and a company of Japanese infantry under the command of a lieutenant. On this occasion the enemy was dislodged and driven back in disorder, and 2 more field-guns with their ammunition were captured. Four days later (16th) Colonel Alexiefsky and 200 of his command came into the Japanese lines and surrendered.

It is reported that the surrenders continue and have now reached 600. The officers will be sent to Awomori and the men to Narashino.

Sunday, July 23.

A telegram from Awomori says that 570 Russian prisoners from Saghalien have reached the former place. Doubtless these include several civilian officials who will be released immediately. On the other hand 20 Japanese wounded and 280 sick were to reach Awomori on the 23rd or 24th.

It is stated that the Russian forces at Alexandrovsky number from 2 to 3 battalions and that there are an equal number at Rykowski, which lies inland immediately east of Alexandrovsky. But no very serious resistance is expected at either place.

Tuesday, July 25.

Vague allusions are made by leading Japanese journals to the progress of the campaign in Saghalien, but they suggest nothing new. The broad fact is that the coasts of the island are commanded by the Japanese fleet, and that consequently there can be no effective concentration of the scattered and not numerous Russian forces. It is nevertheless expected that the Russians in the northern part will offer resistance more stubborn than that experienced by the invaders in the south. Not the island of Saghalien alone is in question but also the Russian settlements on the opposite coast of the mainland, as Alexandrovski and Nikolaievsk, as well as the embouchure of the Amur. The possession of this last would be a strong card for Japan in the pending negotiations.

On the 24th instant the first batch of prisoners from Saghalien reached Awomori. There were 160 non-combatants, who will doubtless be released according to precedent, and 480 combatants. On the Japanese side 191 sick and wounded were to arrive the same night.

It is alleged that the Japanese are taking immediate steps to lay a submarine cable to Saghalien. At present the island is in telegraphic connexion with the mainland at Alexandrovsk (on the shore of the Maritime Province and to be distinguished from Alexandrovsk on the opposite shore of Saghalien), but of course there is no cable to Hokkaido. The Japanese telegraph system extends as far as Soya, so that a cable to the lighthouse on Kondo Cape (Notoro) would only be some 40 versts long. The Japanese who throughout this war have shown their full appreciation of the value of quick communications are not likely to await the final decision as to Saghalien's fate before laying a cable.

Wednesday, July 26.

The Asahi Shimbun alleges that the Russians in the south of Saghalien now consist of merely guerilla bands numbering 30 or 40 each, which prowl among the forests and emerge thence to attack any small party of Japanese that they can discover, especially if the manoeuvre promises to supply the assailants with provisions. The only organized resistance is on the part of a force of some 200 who are in the neighbourhood of Chipsani Bay, eastward of Korsakoff. These men have still some artillery and maintain a semblance of military purpose, but it is not thought that they will long hold out.

There seems to be some sickness among the Japanese troops. Three hundred are said to have been struck down by what we gather to be miasma and also by kakke. This miasma is peculiar to Saghalien. It produces much swelling of the glands, but if taken promptly it is easily curable and seldom ends fatally. Several cases have already been cured.

Vladimirovka is to be called "Harukimachi," after Major-General Haruki, whose troops captured the place.

The Governor of Korsakoff, with civil officials, medical men and others, 163 in all, including about 27 women and 35 children, arrived in Yokohama from Saghalien via Aomori, a little before noon on Wednesday. Under escort of gendarmes, they were temporarily assembled at the Hall of the Prefectural Assembly and there they were delivered to the French Consul. Some subsequently removed to the Oriental Palace Hotel and others to several Japanese hotels in Honcho-dori. By the next French Mail steamer they leave for Russia.

Thursday, July 27.

It is estimated that the Russians have something like nine thousand men assembled in the lines at Alexandrovka, Rykovska and Dui, with 25 guns. These troops include volunteers and also some blue-jackets from the Novik. Alexandrovka is a town of 500 houses with 3,000 inhabitants. It is an excellently built place, with many fine edifices, and has a railway. The port is bad, however, and during 5 months in the year the approaches are frozen. From Alexandrovka to Rykovska the distance is 48 miles and the two places are connected by a carriage road. Rykofska has 400 houses and 2,000 inhabitants, independently of the troops and the criminals, of which last there are a large number. We have no particulars as to Dui, but it is smaller than either Korsakoff, Alexandrofska or Rykofska, which are the three principal towns in the island.

We have it on the authority of Russian reports that on the 23rd instant Admiral Kataoka visited the vicinity of Alexandrofska and bombarded Dui as well as the mouth of the Alkova River. The Russian report further says that the shore batteries at Dui proved useless against the ships. That may mean that the range at which the vessels came into action was too long for the fort guns, but there is also another hypothesis. An expert who accompanied the Korsakoff expedition is quoted by the Yomuri as saying that although the Russians had excellent small arms of the latest pattern, their artillery was of an obsolete type, namely, 3-inch guns firing spherical projectiles. But they had machine-guns also, so that among the 25 pieces in possession of the defenders of Alexandrofska there may be a tolerably formidable park. At any rate the assault upon Alexandrofska ought to have been a much more serious and costly operation than was that upon Korsakoff, but the place seems to have been easily captured.

We read in the Asahi that although the town of Korsakoff was destroyed by the conflagration which the Russians produced, many houses in the neighbourhood remained intact, so that the invaders are not inconvenienced by want of shelter.

A very interesting example of Russian methods of reporting is furnished by comparing General Liapnoff's bulletin, published on the 26th instant in Tokyo with the latest Japanese official report. The former runs thus:—

According to a Reuter's telegram of the 23rd, General Liapnoff reports that at 8.30 a.m. on the morning of the 23rd several Japanese war-ships appeared on the horizon of the Gulf of Tartary near Alexandrofska. Two of them advanced north and the rest bombarded Dui from the bay. Our forts were powerless. At 11 a.m. several large ships appeared in the south, and at noon two torpedo-boats approached the mouth of Alkoff River, 7 miles north of Alexandrofska and fired on the shore. The cruisers and 4 torpedo-boats at Dui then left.

It will be observed that Liapnoff says not one word about the Japanese landing or about the capture of Alexandrofska. The finale of the operations, according to him, was that the Japanese cruisers and torpedo-boats then left Dui. This is a case of what the Japanese call huga tento. Instead of saying that the Japanese ships left Dui Liapnoff should have said "we fled from Alexandrofska." Linevitch's report of the doings near Hailungching on the 20th instant was equally remarkable. But, after all, the latter document is typical. The public is by this time accustomed to Russian accounts which say, in effect, "we were victorious and then—we ran away."

THE PEACE CONFERENCE.

Friday, July 21.

Various reports continue to be circulated about China's attitude towards the peace conference. They suggest that she is still struggling to obtain representation. It will be observed that Reuter explicitly and confidently reports Russia's reply to China's notice as to non-compliance with any conditions arranged independently of her. The St. Petersburg Government is said, according to this authority, to have answered that, the war being between Russia and Japan, the peace negotiations must be confined to those two Powers, but that Russia, being on friendly terms with China, recognises the latter's interests in certain questions which will be discussed. Now what are we to think of all this? Did China make any such announcement or give any such notice? The original report said that she had addressed to all the Powers a note eschewing responsibility to observe any conditions negotiated without her concurrence. But no such note has ever reached Japan, so far as we understand, and the omission of Japan would have been more unfriendly even than the want of confidence shown by the whole proceeding. Besides to address any note of the kind to all the Powers would be a deliberate attempt to invite the whole world's intervention, if not its actual presence in the conference chamber. China is quite capable of such a policy. It would be in strict accord with the principle that has always moulded her attitude towards foreign States, and to blame her for it would be extravagant. But she must know perfectly well that England and the United States would unquestionably decline to accede to her programme, and that the inevitable result for herself would be the fate of the mischievous busy-body. Thus so long as no such note reaches Japan, we must decline to credit its reality. St. Petersburg, we can well imagine, has actively inspired such a mood on China's part. Count Okuma put the matter in a nutshell when he said that Russia's game is to sell her unavoidable benevolence to the Middle Kingdom. She has to evacuate Manchuria. She has been forced to evacuate it. And now she wants to make in China's eyes a merit of the evacuation. The curious thing is that side by side with all this the public is informed of China's genuine desire for reform and her complete confidence in Japan. Probably the explanation is that her councils are divided.

From the numerous telegrams reaching Tokyo with reference to Mr. Witte's statements, it is evident that Russia's Plenipotentiary has commenced his negotiations long before reaching New Hampshire. His declarations as to the probable severity of Japan's terms and the probable failure of the conference in consequence are addressed, plainly, to Japan, and will be understood in that sense by the latter. We do not regard these statements as indicating any fresh ground for uneasiness. On the contrary, we read them as showing that M. Witte has a mission more substantial than merely to ascertain the cost of the olive-branch. He is a shrewd man and he knows what he is about. One can not, however, fully appreciate the wisdom of his rumoured disavowals of plenipotentiary authority. He must be well aware that the first preliminary will be mutual examination of their credentials by the delegates, and that if the commission of either side be found insufficient, the conference can not proceed. That would introduce a new feature; it would be a deliberate insult to President Roosevelt. Therefore if Mr. Witte has been protesting against the idea that he is fully empowered, he has acted very unwisely. The fault is probably on the side of rumour.

Saturday, July 22.

Peking denies the accuracy of Reuter's message to the effect that in reply to China's application for representation at the conference, Russia objected that the war was between herself and Japan only, but added that matters relating to China's interests would be recognised as such by Russia in consideration of the friendly relations existing between the two empires. Peking's version is that the Russian Government promised to consult independently with Mr. Hu, Chinese Minister in St. Petersburg, with regard to all matters that concern the Middle Kingdom.

M. Pokotiloff was interviewed by a representative of some newspaper during the brief period of his stay in Yokohama. The Kokumin Shimbu quotes the interview but does not claim the representative as its own. M. Pokotiloff behaved with perfect courtesy, but every attempt to engage him in conversation resulted in the proverbial impossibility of trying to catch a cat-fish with the convex surface of a gourd. He replied without giving answers and spoke without conveying information. Wise man!

The Minnesota made her voyage to Port Townsend in 12 days 23 hours. It was a record passage. It need scarcely be said that the Japanese Plenipotentiary met with great civility. President Hill placed a special State car at his disposal, and arrangements to suit his convenience were made all along the line, though, unless we are much mistaken, Baron Komura utilized these exceptional facilities not at all.

Thursday, July 27.

Telegrams indicate that Mr. Witte is expected to reach New York on the 2nd of August, and that the Plenipotentiaries will arrive at Portsmouth on the 5th of that month. Washington wires that Russia has an idea of taking over the whole of Japan's national debt instead of paying an indemnity direct. We presume that this would mean the additions made to the debt in connexion with the war. These additions total 1,300 million yen, in round numbers. Such a method of dealing with the indemnity question would be complicated and difficult to put into force. We confess that we are unable to see what satisfactory arrangements could be made for the gradual payment of interest and principal by a foreign country in the case of a Japanese domestic loan. Obviously were such a function entrusted to Russia, she would acquire a powerful lever to compel Japan's compliance with her wishes throughout the period covered by the transaction. We suspect that Washington is talking in its hat. If the scheme took the form of discharging Japan's domestic debt at once and transferring her foreign debt to Russia, there might be some practical sense in it, but the probability is that if the national-debt question has been mentioned at all it is merely as a basis for calculating the amount of the indemnity.

Baron Komura's journey from Tokyo to New York was accomplished in 17 days, an unprecedentedly rapid trip. It is to be hoped that this is a happy omen.

Apropos the indemnity, M. Witte is again reported to have said that if Japan's demands be excessive, Russia will raise a foreign loan and continue the war. These utterances of the Russian statesman are natural enough, but are they either useful or tactful? What constitutes "excess" in such a case? The plainly just basis of calculation is the sum actually expended by the victor, and we are much mistaken if Japan demands more than that. The moment that basis is abandoned the whole calculation becomes arbitrary, and Russia's ideas might be found as wide as the poles apart from Japanese.

AFFAIRS IN N.-W. KOREA.

Saturday, July 22.

A few days ago when a Japanese Squadron entered Unkwi Bay, the Russians on the Tumen, seeing that their communications with the rear were threatened, retired hastily. But accounts subsequently received and published by the Kokumin Shinbun, and the Nichi Nichi Shinbun, suggest that these troops of the enemy have been reinforced and that a determined stand is contemplated at the Tumen. Meanwhile the Japanese are said to be pushing northward towards the river but the country presents many obstacles to an advancing force, some districts being without roads at all and others exceedingly ill furnished in that respect.

Monday, July 24.

A correspondent of the Nichi Nichi writing from Fusan says that the Russian retreat to Hoilyong, after the fight at Susong, was inspired by the fact that the defences on the Tumen are not yet completed. It is consequently of prime importance to hold the Japanese for a time on the south of the river, and with that object some of the troops from the left bank have been moved over to the right, so that at Hoilyong there are now some 6,000 or 7,000. Strenuous efforts are being made to construct shelter trenches, palisades and other obstacles along the river, and the building of bridges is being rigorously pushed forward in spite of the floods which the heavy rains have brought down. North-eastern Korea is now in the midst of the wet season and not only are brooklets swollen to the dimensions of rushing torrents, but roads, where they exist, are knee-deep in mud. Transport work is thus exceedingly difficult, and the movements of troops on any large scale are temporarily suspended.

Tuesday, July 25.

On the body of an officer recently killed in north-eastern Korea and buried by the Japanese were found documents suggesting that an invasion of that district formed an important feature of Russian military plans at one time. These documents speak of the ease with which troops could be landed at Goshkevitch Bay, Korniloff Gulf, Shibucha Bay, Pallada anchorage and various other places along the north-eastern shore of Korea from Yuensan to the mouth of the Tumen. The water at these points is described as deep right up to the shore and the landing facilities are said to be good. Altogether from the language of the documents it appears plain that a powerful diversion in this direction was contemplated for a time. It will be remembered that there was talk of something of the kind last year. Its echoes reached Japan via London and Paris, and when Linevitch assumed the command rumours began to circulate that he had planned an offensive movement to metamorphosize the character of the campaign and relieve the pressure in the direction of Harbin. The matter was alluded to more than once in these columns, and notice was taken of the fact that command of the sea would be essential to such a scheme since the communications of the invading army could otherwise be at the mercy of the Japanese. We spoke thus on the hypothesis that the Russians would march across the Tumen, and would not attempt any landings along the coast, but from these documents it is apparent that their programme was to carry their troops to Vladivostok by train and thence by transports to the places mentioned above. For the success of such a plan the command of the sea would have been more than ever essential, and doubtless it was because that desideratum could not be obtained that Linevitch had to desist. An interesting correlated question, however, is whether the troops he massed southward of the Tumen were connected with the invasion project or whether they were intended mainly to cover the approaches to Vladivostok. Probably the latter.

It is observable that Admiral Kamimura recently visited several of the bays and gulfs mentioned in the above documents, namely, Linden Point (Syula in Korean nomenclature), Anna Bay (Geka), Korniloff Gulf, Ongi Bay (Unkui) and Goshkevitch Bay (Chosan). The Russians suggest in their report that the Japanese torpedo-craft were driven away, but inasmuch as there were no means of inflicting any injury on them, such a tale must be regarded as a Pflouge or an Ogorodinkoff.

Wednesday, July 26.

The unfamiliar names in official reports from north-eastern Korea render it very difficult for ordinary readers to form any intelligent conception of the movements described. This is especially true of the report published yesterday morning, and a word of explanation may therefore be useful. Speaking broadly, the north-eastern boundary of Korea, that is to say, the Tumen River, has the shape of a triangle with a rounded apex, the base being on the south and the apex on the north. Along the right (or southern) bank of the river runs a road which, near the mouth of the river at Chosan, meets another road coming northward along the sea-coast. From Susong on this latter (sea-coast) road yet another road branches inland and joins the Tumen road at Hoilyong which lies at the western extremity of the base of the triangle, Chosan being at the eastern extremity.

In this triangle the Japanese are advancing and the telegram of the 25th shows that they occupied on the 24th instant a line extending from Sochhong on the sea-coast as far as Phungsan which is on the right bank of the Tumen a little south of Hoilyong. What is important about this news is that it indicates the arrival of the Japanese troops on the bank of the river without encountering any serious resistance, and the inference is that they can cross at Phungsan or Hoilyong and turn the enemy's defenses lower down the stream. But without some knowledge of the nature of the country on the left bank from Hoilyong downwards, it is of course impossible to tell whether such a turning operation is feasible. Want of roads is a serious obstacle to the movements of large bodies of troops in north-eastern Korea. The country where the Japanese are now maneuvering is mountainous and almost trackless. The difficulties of advancing through it must be immense.

San Francisco and Washington wire that thirty thousand Japanese troops are in motion in north-eastern Korea and that a battle of some magnitude has occurred at the Tumen River. This is evidently a somewhat premature report.

The Hochi Shinbun predicts that Kyonghyong will soon be a point of great interest. It lies near Unkwi Bay very close to the southern bank of the Tumen. Our contemporary states that from it Possiet Bay, its buildings and defences can be viewed with the naked eye, and that consequently Kyonghyong stands in the same relation to Possiet Bay as 203-Metre hill did to Port Arthur. The Hochi believes that important news will very soon be heard from this quarter of the field and that Japanese troops will in a few days be on Russian soil.

From the same source we learn that the Russians re-inforced their Tumen army by a whole division on the 7th of July. The reinforcements were carried over-sea from Vladivostok, and must just have escaped the visit paid by Admiral Kamimura's Squadron to Unkwi Bay and its adjacent waters. There was already a division on the Tumen with its outposts at Pulyong (vide the map published from this office last June) and this force being now doubled, the Russians should be able to put fully twenty thousand men into the field. We are not permitted to offer any suggestion as to the Japanese strength, but we note that the Russians are credited with intending to assume the offensive at an early date, an enterprise which will certainly fail if they really undertake it.

Thursday, July 27.

When Admiral Kamimura's ships approached Unkwi Bay on the 17th instant, some 200 Russian cavalry were observed on shore. These opened fire with rifles on the vessels, an extraordinary performance the utility of which ought to have been appreciated by the Russians. The Japanese—we are quoting from correspondence in the Asahi—having approached to a convenient range, which was of course too far for rifle-fire to be effective, opened on the cavalry and made excellent practice. Men and horses were seen to fall, and the Russians adopted the wiser policy of fleeing. This affair, naturally, was in the nature of a reconnaissance only.

The Chihaya and some torpedo-craft entered Najin Bay (shown as Lajin Bay on some maps) and destroyed some Russian buildings. Lajin Bay is a little south of Unkwi. A party of men was then landed, without encountering any opposition. They found that the road had been much improved by the Russians and that it was now well suited for the passage of troops and artillery. They also found that the Russian forces massed along the lower waters of the Tumen numbered some 21,000 and had 70 guns.

It will have been observed by careful readers of the reports that the Japanese advance which resulted in driving the Russians from their outposts at Pukochin and Pulyong, and finally in the occupation of a line extending from Sochhong on the coast to Sin-Phungsan on the Tumen—which here runs nearly parallel to the coast—took place between the 20th and the 24th and was consequently preceded by the operations of Kamimura's ships in Unkwi Bay and its neighbourhood. The line occupied by the Japanese has a length of 38 miles. In other words, their front extends that distance. It is therefore obvious that they must be in very considerable force, and as Linevitch has evidently massed a large body on the Tumen to oppose the passage of the river, Japanese journals are probably right in saying that we are on the eve of witnessing an engagement of not smaller dimensions than that on the Yalu. Kyongheung on the Tumen will occupy in this plan of campaign much the same position as Wijn held in the Yalu campaign. There is a difference in the two operations, however: namely, that whereas the Russians offered no very serious resistance southward of the Yalu, they seem disposed to dispute stoutly the advance of the Japanese towards the southern bank of the Tumen. This, however, is only an inference.

The great importance of holding the Tumen consists in three facts, speaking from the Russian point of view. The first is that the river covers the approaches to Vladivostok; the second, that the Japanese, after they reach the northern bank, will be in a position to threaten the railway; and the third, that the Tumen covers the roads to Omoso and Kirin, and that so soon as the Japanese have crossed [it they will menace the left rear of Linevitch's main position in Manchuria. We must assume that the Russian General is fully alive to all these facts, which are indeed evident to the commonest intelligence, but whether he has a force sufficient to protect himself at all points is another question. So long as the rainy season prevents any general advance by the Japanese left in the Fakumun quarter, it may appear possible for Linevitch to withdraw a considerable force from that region and carry them by train to Vladivostok, whence they could be hurled against the Japanese army on the Tumen. That would be a bold and brilliant operation. But in the way of it stands the cardinal fact that if the Russian General weakens his own right, he exposes Harbin to a Japanese advance. It would be an attractive and in one sense a potent coup to administer to the Japanese in north-eastern Korea a severe reverse, but to accomplish that feat a large body of troops would have to be drawn from other parts of the field, and would have to be speedily returned to their old positions. Of course, the facilities offered by the railway are a powerful factor in Linevitch's favour should he adopt such strategy, but he knows the Japanese too well to imagine that his own forces could hope to emerge from a decisive fight with them in a wholly unshattered condition. Thus to return to their original positions the forces withdrawn for service on the Tumen would probably prove a very arduous business, and in the meantime the conclusion of the wet season would have opened the road for a Japanese advance on Harbin. When such advance takes place it will be all-important for Linevitch not only to be able to cover this basic point with heavy masses of men, but also to dispose them so that, in the event of defeat, a minimum number may find themselves eastward of Harbin. We can be quite confident that every one of these contingencies has been carefully considered by the Japanese commanders. The impression conveyed to outsiders by observing Marshal Oyama's procedure since the Battle of Mukden, is that he has quietly waited for the Russians to mass their forces along the Fenghua-Kirin line while other Japanese operations were in process of development farther east. He has thus utilized the "double objective." If the Russians weaken their Fenghua-Kirin line for the sake of clearing away the menace on their left rear, then they uncover their principal base, Harbin. If they allow the movement on their left rear to mature, then they expose Vladivostok to isolation. Linevitch may have sufficient forces to deal simultaneously with all these problems, but it is to be observed that the Japanese have now no less than six armies in the field, and experience does not suggest the probability of any one of these armies being found too weak for the task assigned to it.

According to a telegram received on July 25th in Tokyo, as the first installment of the new foreign loan, the Japanese authorities will receive $2,409,000 on Aug. 3rd in New York, £2,000,000 on Aug. 1st in London, and marks 3,578,000 on July 31st in Berlin.

THE SAGHALIEN FISHERIES.

An interesting article is published by the Keisai Zasshi on the subject of the Saghalien fisheries. We learn that in 1902 the Russian Government fixed the fishery area at 238 places. These, so far as is accurately known, are as follow:—

	No of Places.	Extent.	Yards.
Aniwa Bay.....	66	37,820 ken =	75,640
South Coast	82	28,550 " =	57,100
East Coast.....	86
Un-exploited	4	93,402 " =	186,804

Total 238 159,772 ken = 319,544 yards.

In this same year the number of fishing grounds leased to Japanese subjects was 107, representing 73,369 ken (146,738 yards) of coast, the average extent of each ground being thus 685 ken approximately. The herrings caught on each ground averaged 790 koku (1 koku = 5.13 bushels), and the total catch was 84,530 koku, which, since there were 226 nets at work, represented a take of over 374 koku per net. The renters of grounds totalled 52, so that a take of 1,626 koku stood to the credit of each. In the following year, 1903, the herring-take obtained from the Japanese catch totalled 90,013 koku, and as the grounds numbered 99 and the nets 192, the take averaged 990 koku for each ground, and 469 koku per net. Moreover the ground-renters were only 30, so that 3,000 koku stood to the credit of each. In addition to this there were taken quantities of salmon, cod, masu and edible sea-weed, which brought up the whole Japanese harvest for 1903 to 113,640 koku, representing a money value of 1,192,405 yen.

Turning to the yield obtained by Russian fishermen, we find that it was 117,133 koku in the same year, valued at 1,679,607 yen, so that the whole output of the Saghalien seas produced 2,872,012 yen. If the returns for the Hokkaido fisheries during 1902 be examined, it appears that the take of herrings in a district measuring 1,397,640 ken and employing 5,645 nets—or 247 ken per net—was 938,605 koku, showing 166 koku per net, whereas the Saghalien take in 1893 was 469 koku per net, being 2.8 times as large as the Hokkaido catch. There are moreover more than 60 unemployed grounds on the Saghalien coast, and there are almost an unreckonable number of grounds not yet opened. Moreover, the distance between nets in Saghalien is from 5 to 7 versts, and nearly 8 versts on the east coast, whereas the smallest distance in Hokkaido is 30 ken and the longest 120 ken, which, compared with Saghalien, shows that the number of nets used on the coasts of the latter might be multiplied by 35. If then the Saghalien waters be supposed to be as rich as those of Hokkaido, the take in the former should be easily ten times the take in the latter. Then there are the cod and whale fisheries in the Sea of Okhotsk, said to offer the best prospects of any in the world. They long ago attracted the attention of Europeans and Americans. Further there are great rookeries of seals in the vicinity of Robben Island (now called Kaihyō Island), and the flounder fisheries in the Mamiya Kaikyo (Gulf of Tartary) are full of promise. The sum of the matter is that there is room for very great development of the herring fishery on the Saghalien coasts, and that not only could a large increase of food-stuffs be obtained, but also the supply of fish fertilizers would be affected so as to enable Japan to dispense largely with the bean-cake imported from China, which fact would exercise no small economic influence. If, too, the experiments now making in the business of salting herrings be perfected, there is here another source of demand for Saghalien products. The Keisai adds tables showing the output of Russian and Japanese fisheries in Saghalien during the past 12 years:—

RUSSIAN AND JAPANESE FISH-CATCH.

Year.	Koku.
1892.....	37,751
1893.....	39,707
1894.....	31,885
1895.....	33,993
1896.....	63,667
1897.....	77,875
1898.....	75,947
1899.....	113,333
1900.....	128,329
1901.....	132,840
1902.....	155,170
1903.....	226,568

This shows a six-fold increase in the course of 12 years.

If the take per ground and per net be calculated, the results are:—

Year.	Total Take.	No of Grounds.	No of Nets.	Take per Ground.	Take per Net.
				Koku.	Koku.
1892.....	26,307	59	83	446	315
1893.....	28,804	64	80	450	323
1894.....	31,884	71	97	449	328
1895.....	33,992	84	111	404	306
1896.....	41,635	116	151	359	275
1897.....	59,476	158	213	376	279
1898.....	59,510	192	234	263	224
1899.....	77,602	222	244	349	317
1900.....	57,357	126	126	455	455
1901.....	68,669	117	238	586	288
1902.....	84,595	107	226	790	374
1903.....	113,639	97	192	1,147	591

It will be seen from the above that not only has the total yield increased very largely, but so also has the yield per ground and per net. There is every reason to think that if better attention were paid to these fisheries, they might become a valuable asset, and possibly the coal and timber resources of Saghalien may not be found ultimately as inaccessible as some travellers have stated.

JAPANESE REFUGEES.

The last batch of Japanese refugees, 29 in number, arrived at Nagasaki on the 23rd instant. Seven of them had belonged to the sealing schooner Domui Maru (69 tons) and 13 to the sailing vessel Kamo Maru (150 tons). The Domui Maru left Hakodate in March 1904, with a crew of 12. She met a heavy storm near the island of Sado, and her crew had to desert her. They embarked in 4 boats and reached Saghalien with great difficulty. There they were attacked by a party of 12 Russian soldiers and all received hurts. They were imprisoned, but 5 managed to escape. The remaining 7 were taken to Korsakoff, receiving only one meal a day. By the aid of Ainu interpreters they at length made it clear that they were non-combatants and after a detention of 41 days at Korsakoff they were sent to the continent. The Kamo Maru left Otaru last August with a cargo of fish manure. Near the west coast of Saghalien—it is not stated what brought her there—she was boarded by a party of Russians and seized. Her crew were sent to Nicholievsk and imprisoned there. They say that they were left three days without food. Then they were sent by junks up the Amur and, reaching Ushok, were detained there about half a year. Ultimately owing to the good offices of the American Consul they ceased to be treated as prisoners, and having been sent to the German frontier, were released. They speak in most grateful terms of the assistance given to them by the Japanese Consul at Bremen, Mr. Max Nosaler.

THE ANGLO-JAPANESE ALLIANCE.

Friday, July 21.

We read in the Nichi Nichi Shinbun that although the general opinion among the Shimpo-to members is in favour of extending the Anglo-Japanese alliance, a definite resolution will not be formulated until the 24th instant.

The Niroku Shinbun has a telegram from London to the effect that the negotiations for extending the alliance are believed to have progressed considerably and that occasion will be taken, it is expected, to announce the fact officially at an opportune moment of the Peace Conference. The market for Japanese securities has hardened greatly in consequence.

The Yoroku Choho publishes a wire in the sense that English public opinion is entirely in favour of the proposed extension, and that it will be effected before the conclusion of the Peace Conference.

Saturday, July 22.

The Hochi Shinbun and the Miyako Shinbun say that the outlines of the new Anglo-Japanese Alliance have been fixed but that some of the details are still unsettled. According to these journals the alliance is not "offensive and defensive;" it is purely defensive. That means, we presume, that if either country be attacked the other will come to its assistance. The scope of the alliance has been extended to India and Afghanistan, but both our contemporaries agree that Korea is not mentioned; inasmuch as it is regarded in the light of a Japanese dependency. The alliance, they say, will be published next month. We have no information ourselves, but we recall the fact that the first news of the first alliance was published by the Niroku Shinbun, so that it would not be safe to discredit the present intelligence merely because of its provenance.

The Chuo Shinbun has an article on the same subject. It considers that the time is not ripe for actually publishing the details of the new alliance, but the great importance of the question justifies discussion. Being an organ of the Seiyu-kai, or, to speak more correctly, the organ of a leading member of the Seiyu-kai, the Chuo's words have special interest. The gist of what it writes is that after this war Japan's territory and her political influence will receive such expansion as to call for a correspondingly elastic policy. She will become coterminous with Russia just as England is in effect, and she will have to consider any movement made by the Russians in Eastern Asia for the purpose of recovering their prestige. Such movements are not likely to be on the scene of the present campaign. They will be farther west, but they will none the less affect Japan in her enlarged role. Therefore everything indicates the extension of the alliance as a natural measure. The original covenant concerned Japan's vital interests much more closely than England's and if the arrangement is to continue, Japan must now reciprocate. With such an alliance as is now contemplated, an alliance which would summon to simultaneous activity the navy of England and the army of Japan, no outside Power could raise a finger. Russia might lay plans of revenge but their execution would be impossible. The Chuo goes on to point out that the new alliance would not be of a negative character like the old, nor would it be of a faint nature like the Dreihund. It would be a genuine contract pledging each of the signatories to come to the other's aid in case of war, and such a compact would assure the preservation of peace.

Thursday, July 27.

Count Okuma, speaking in the columns of the Chuo, does not think that a change of cabinet in England would affect the alliance question. In England the country's foreign politics are excluded from the arena of party disputes: that is one of the fine features of the English system. Moreover, England is a country ruled by public opinion, and public opinion has declared itself distinctly and unequivocally in favour of continuing and extending the alliance. Hitherto it must be admitted, Japan has been the chief gainer, but after this war an extended alliance would inure largely to England's benefit. In Japan there has not as yet been any united declaration of public opinion, but there is every indication of unanimous desire to extend the alliance, so that it shall be offensive and defensive; not offensive for any aggressive purposes, but simply offensive should self-defence demand that attitude. Public opinion then being unanimous in both countries, their Governments may be expected to give effect to it. Already, indeed, it may be assumed that an understanding exists, and that nothing remains except to comply with the usual formalities. Undoubtedly this fact can not fail to influence the result of the peace negotiations.

The Nichi Nichi writes on the same subject. The gist of its article is that although Japan would like to see the Unionists remain in power since they are actually engaged in negotiating the terms of the new alliance, she well understands that the Liberals are also in favour of it. It was a Liberal Government that agreed to the abolition of extraterritoriality and it was a Liberal Government that paved the way for the conclusion of the alliance. The Liberal leaders have also spoken unequivocally in its favour.

The Asahi Shinbun has a beautifully written article—beautifully written in a classical sense—which dwells upon the natural causes that have drawn the two nations together and speaks of those causes as abidingly operative. No definite statements have yet been made as to the lines of the extended alliance, but the public can already form a very shrewd guess. English statesmen have spoken with some frankness, but Japanese statesmen deem it wise still to keep their mouths closed, and the Japanese people are only allowed to discern "the bud emerging from the snow."

THE UNITED STATES REPRESENTATIVE.

Mr. Ed. Emerson (Jr.) has contributed to Public Opinion an interesting and appreciative article on the subject of the present Representative of the United States in Tokyo. Much of the article is taken up with information about Mr. Griscorn's career—information already familiar to the public. Concerning Mr. Griscorn's success as a diplomatist in Japan, and very genuine it has been, Mr. Emerson discourses accurately and appositely. We quote a few paragraphs:—

Minister Griscorn, despite his youth, or rather by reason of it, has succeeded, notwithstanding his comparatively brief residence in Tokyo, in coming up to the Japanese ideals of Americanism. Thus a Japanese official of the telegraph bureau in Tokyo confided to me once in a moment of pro-American enthusiasm that Minister Griscorn, during the six months preceding the outbreak of the Japanese-Russian war, dispatched nearly ten times as many cipher cable messages to Washington as Baron Rosen did during the same period to St. Petersburg. Minister Griscorn himself, shortly after the outbreak of hostilities, confessed to me that the actual state of war had brought him relief from work, since the critical state of affairs just preceding it had kept him and his staff of secretaries working at the legation night after night until the small hours of the morning.

From certain remarks passed by the correspondents of the Associated Press and Reuter's press bureau stationed at Tokyo, I gathered that Minister Griscorn had shown himself so active in responding to President Roosevelt's keen desires for the latest official information that he was regarded by them in the light of a formidable rival as a news-gatherer. Thus, as an instance of what might be expected from Minister Griscorn, one of them told me that the first official intimation of the rupture of diplomatic relations was received at the White House before the news reached London from St. Petersburg or Tokyo. In truth, the career of Lloyd Griscorn furnishes a striking instance of the value of youth in diplomacy. When he was charge d'affaires at Stamboul, they say, the Sultan's marked preference for him over all the old foreign diplomats that surrounded him was because of his ingenuousness of youth. Similarly, Marquis Ito, in Japan, is said to have remarked of Mr. Griscorn: "We like the American minister because he is so young. We, too, sometimes feel so young."

At the age of thirty-one Mr. Griscorn found himself commissioned as envoy to the court of the Mikado at the most momentous period in the history of modern Japan, there to cope with such older and more experienced colleagues in far eastern diplomacy as Sir Claude Macdonald, lately shifted from Peking, and Baron Rosen, who had witnessed the original rise and growth of young Japan.

How he acquitted himself of his task can be inferred in a measure from what has been said before. When I met Minister Griscorn again in Tokyo, having last run across him in Cebu, and before that during the trial of a celebrated case in the criminal courts of New York, I found him in the full exercise of his diplomatic talents, smoothing the way for some twenty or thirty American war correspondents and military attaches who were ordered to the front and were importuning him as well as the Japanese foreign office and military authorities with all sorts of possible and impossible requests. Some of the correspondents wanted Minister Griscorn to intercede for them with the military censor; others wanted him to arrange for newspaper interviews with Marquis Ito, with Marshal Yamagata, or even with the Mikado himself, while the military attaches wanted to be shifted from one headquarters staff to another, to be permitted to carry along extra luggage or led horses besides their mounts, with other like perplexing requests. All put whole dependence on the good offices of the American Minister. Through it all he preserved a cheerful equanimity of youth tempered by the acquired tact and unflinching courtesy of the trained diplomat. While regretting his inability to arrange special newspaper interviews with members of the government or of the imperial household, he saw to it that all necessary official courtesies were shown to them, or, inviting them to his own house to meet high military officers and princes of the blood, he promoted a pleasant social intercourse between the Japanese and foreign officers and the war correspondents, which, later, resulted in some firm friendships of the camp and field.

There are in the article just two points to which we feel disposed to take exception. One is a picture of the United States. Legislation in Japan. Mr. Emerson is not responsible for the attractive appearance which the photographer has imparted to the building, but we fear that the true character of the edifice may thus be concealed from the American people. Confidence is somewhat restored, however, by the apparition of a particularly ugly chimney with a long stove-pipe projecting from it which flanks the barrack-like building on the east. For the other point the writer of the article is distinctly responsible, since he must have evolved it wholly out of his own imagination. He speaks of "the striking diplomatic successes achieved by America's young envoy in Japan, where older and more experienced diplomats have failed so signally." To Mr. Griscorn's diplomatic successes we too bear unqualified witness, but if Mr. Emerson refers to Americans when he speaks of "older and more experienced diplomats who have failed so signally," we venture to record a most emphatic protest.

HON. W. TAFT AND MISS ROOSEVELT IN JAPAN.

Well in advance of her schedule time, the P. M. steamer Manchuria, having on board the party of the Hon. Wm. Taft, Secretary for War of the United States, Miss Alice Roosevelt, members of the Senate and the House of Representatives, etc., arrived in Yokohama on Tuesday. The Manchuria passed Tsurugi-saki at 4.30 a.m., and arrived at the quarantine station, off Yokohama harbour, at 7 a.m. By 8.30 a.m., the formalities of quarantine were concluded and the huge steamer proceeded towards the pier. Meanwhile steam-launches from the Harbour Office, containing H. E. Governor Sufu, Mayor Ichihara, Judge Watanabe, and high officials of the local government and the Imperial Household Department, went out to the quarantine station to welcome the distinguished visitors. As the launches approached the Manchuria, bombs and day fireworks were discharged: the latter displaying the crossed flags of Japan and America and many other devices. At the pier awaited the American Minister, the Hon. Lloyd Griscom and Mrs. Griscom, with the Legation staff; Mr. Consul-General Miller and the staff of the American Consulate-General at Yokohama; Baron and Baroness Sannomiya, Mr. and Mrs. S. Nagasaki, Mr. and Mrs. S. Terajima, representing the Imperial Household, and practically all the leaders of the American official social and business communities of Yokohama. At 8.45 a.m. Mr. Taft's party landed, and as Miss Roosevelt stepped on to the pier she was presented with a lovely bouquet by Miss Ichihara, daughter of the Mayor of Yokohama. Carriages were waiting at the hatoba and in these the party drove to the detached palace at Moto-benten, near the Railway-station. Here they rested awhile and then at 10 o'clock they left for Tokyo. On the platform Mayor Ichihara, on behalf of the citizens of Yokohama, presented Miss Roosevelt with a bouquet.

Needless to say the welcome accorded by Yokohama was very emphatic. Every street was decorated, and at the corner of the Post and Telegraph Office a great evergreen arch displayed the word "Welcome." In front of the railway station a huge crowd awaited the arrival of the party, and during their stay at the detached palace the city bands played selections, while many bansais were given.

The party consisted of eighty-one persons, including the following:—

Miss Alice Roosevelt; Colonel C. R. Edward, Superintendent of the Bureau of Colonial Islands' Affairs; Surgeon-Major G. L. Eddy; Captain J. K. Thompson, aide-de-camp to Hon. W. Taft; Major-General T. H. Bliss; Captain William Kelly, an attaché of the Military College; Mr. John F. Stevens, Engineer of the Bureau of Railway Affairs; Mr. S. W. Carpenter, confidential secretary to Hon. W. Taft; Mr. W. R. Pedigo, confidential secretary to the Superintendent of the Bureau of Colonial Islands' Affairs.

Seven Senators:—Mr. and Mrs. F. T. Du Bois (Idaho), Mr. M. J. Foster (Louisiana), Mr. Long (Kansas), Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Newlands (Nebraska), Mr. and Mrs. N. B. Scott (West Virginia), Mr. T. Paterson (Colorado), Mr. F. E. Warren (Wyoming).

Twenty-six Representatives:—Mr. H. A. Cooper (Wisconsin), Mr. C. Curtis (Kansas), Mr. and Mrs. D. A. de Armond (Missouri), Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Driscoll (New York), Mr. Gilbert (Indiana), Mr. T. Gilbert (Massachusetts), Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Grosvenor (Ohio), Mr. and Mrs. M. P. Hepburn (Iowa), Mr. and W. Hill (Connecticut), Mr. Howard (Georgia), Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Jones (Virginia), Mr. N. Longworth (Ohio), Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Laud (Michigan), Mr. D. E. McKinley (Illinois), Mr. T. Otjen (Wisconsin), Mr. and Mrs. H. Parsons (New York), Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Payne (New York), Mr. C. F. Scott (Kansas), Mr. S. Shirley (Kentucky), Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Smith (Illinois), and Mr. A. A. Wiley (Alabama).

Every Japanese journal of any importance has a leading article on the subject of the visit of Mr. Taft and his party. The unanimity of their utterances is remarkable, as is also the fact that almost without exception they publish photographs of Mr. Taft and Miss Roosevelt. The Nippon devotes a whole page to such pictures. They show all the members of the President's family. The Japanese have always regarded America with special affection and trust, and the incidents of the present war have helped to greatly deepen those impressions. A nation's gratitude naturally goes out to those that befriended it in its hour of storm and stress. The Fiji Shimpō's comments may be taken as representative of the expressions of the whole journalistic world. "Our relations and our friendship with the United States," writes the Fiji, "have always been of an exceptional nature. There is no occasion to dwell upon this fact. It is familiar to the world as well as to Japan. But we desire to say that the Japanese nation is profoundly thankful for the attitude of the Great Republic throughout this war. If Japan has been fortunate enough to win many victories on sea and on shore, it will be largely owing to American sympathy that she is enabled to reap the fruits of those successes. Mr. Taft comes to us as the representative of the American Government's sympathy. Miss Roosevelt comes as the representative of the Chief Magistrate's sympathy. The Senators and Members of Congress come as representatives of the American Parliament's sympathy. Other classes are similarly represented, so that we may fairly regard our visitors as the envoys of the whole American nation, and we shall welcome them accordingly." The Kokumin Shimbun declares that the relations between the United States and Japan may be described by the simple expression ikan nashi (unexceptionable). Words may be piled upon words but they can not climb higher than that fact. The visitors will be able to estimate Japan's sentiment by the nature of the welcome she gives them. It was America that knocked at Japan's closed doors half a century ago, and it is Japan that raises hands of congratulation and delight when she sees America extend her political influence to the Far East. In the memories of their intercourse the two countries can not discover a single point of bitterness, and the whole of Japan's people find no language to express their deeply thankful and appreciative sense of the attitude of their American friends throughout this war. The great questions of the future have their locus in the Far East and will be settled by America, England, Germany and Japan. We regard America as our leader along the path of enlightened progress." The Nichi Nichi Shimbun says that it has never seen such a spirit of welcome displayed by the Japanese nation. Something is traceable to respect for Mr. Taft's reputation, but in the main this feeling is inspired by Japan's deep affection for her great western neighbour. Apart from the record of former years which had already drawn the two nations into close friendship, the kindly and sympathetic conduct of America towards Japan throughout the present war, in spite of the special claims that Russia had upon American amity can not be too much applauded and will never be forgotten. The only thing to be regretted is that our guests can not remain with us longer. The Asahi writes that these are the most remarkable visitors Japan has ever had. She might have recognised Commodore Perry as a most welcome and most memorable guest, but her eyes were not then opened. To General Grant she extended a hearty welcome, but he came at an early moment of her modern career and his visit is now old, its chief abiding trace being the tree planted by him in Uyeno Park, to-day grown from a sapling to a lusty tree. America's attitude towards Japan throughout this war, has doubled the Japanese nation's feeling of grateful friendship and it may well be doubted whether two countries were ever bound together by closer links of genuine amity. Japan seizes this occasion to show her heart to her honorable guests. A long future of friendship in every branch of national progress lies before the two countries.

The utterances of these four leading papers are typical. All the rest follow the same lines.

The Hon. W. Taft is a bold, outspoken man with a reputation for plain speaking which has extended beyond the borders of the United States. He knows his own mind and is not afraid to give utterance to his thoughts, no matter what may be his surroundings. Thus we find him speaking in the following terms on the Chinese question at a big dinner given in his honour in San Francisco—San Francisco, the head and front of the "Yellow Man exclusion" agitation:—

"If I had not been interviewed and made to take so many different positions on the Chinese question, I would not think it important to re-state my position in the matter. I know Californians have a definite view and my view generally is this: We have reached a point in the life of our nation where we are to be treated by other nations as 'adult male,' where we expect from other nations some measure of courtesy and justice as we would mete out to them. I understand that all nations of the world know that we are not obliged to make this continent a dumping ground for their beggars and robbers and bad people generally, and therefore we may pause properly and still stand up and look them in the face.

"I also understand we have informed the Chinese nation that its coolie class does not amalgamate and become citizens and that therefore we exclude them. That has been understood by the Chinese government and recognized by us. But on the other hand we have refused entry to Chinese merchants and students whom it would be an advantage to this country to admit. We should keep with the Chinese nation the advantage that we by reason of the fact that it believes we are not land grabbers in the Orient and desire to do justice—a position of advantage given us to secure the immense Chinese trade awaiting development on the Pacific Coast.

"And shall we pursue the policy that will insult Chinese merchants and students and destroy our advantage with China in international affairs? I say no. And the State knows her own interests—not only the wealthy men, but the labouring men. The labouring men are the bone and sinew of the country, and every time you increase our trade by one hundred million, seventy-five millions are going to the labouring man. Is it possible for the interests of labour that we will find it necessary to fling insulting measures in the face of China?

"I hope I have made plain my view on the Chinese question.

"I am not criticizing the enforcement of the law. If by treaty or law it is necessary to insult, then those laws should be repealed.

Tokyo is en fite to welcome Mr. Taft and his friends. The streets are everywhere beflagged by day and illuminated by night and the stars and stripes lean towards the Rising Sun over innumerable thoroughfares. It is not within our experience that Tokyo ever previously offered such an ardent reception to any foreign visitors. Official preparations, indeed, have been on a corresponding scale more than once, but it is easy to see that the heart of the people themselves is in this business, and that the occasion is thus very clearly distinguished from any precedent.

A crowd of leading men of Tokyo met the party at Shinbashi and there were bands of music, triumphal arches and other insignia of greeting. General Viscount Sakuma advanced first to meet Mr. Taft, and Princess Iwakura greeted Miss Roosevelt, handing her at the same time a bouquet of white roses. Among these present at the station were the Minister of the Imperial Household, Admiral Viscount Ito, the Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs, Vice-Admiral Ijuin, Lieut.-Generals Iseji and Yabuki, the President of the House of Peers, the President of the Bank of Japan, the Governor and Mayor of Tokyo, Viscount Toda, &c. The crowds along the streets shouted most lusty bansais. Six of the party proceeded to the Shiba Detached Palace, twenty to the United States Legation, nine to the German Legation, some to the house of Mr. S. Matsukata and others to the Imperial Hotel. In the evening there was a banquet in the Shiba Detached Palace, Count Katsura and several members of the Cabinet being present. On the 26th fifty-four of the party were received in audience by the Emperor and had the honour of lunching with His Majesty. Ninety sat down to lunch including the Minister of the United States and Mrs. Griscom. The Homei-den was used for the occasion, a very unusual choice of halls. In the evening the Prime Minister entertained the party at a banquet in the Imperial Hotel. Prince Fushimi was among the guests. To-day there is to be a garden party at the United States Legation and in the evening the party will be entertained at the Maple Club in Japanese style by the bankers and merchants of Tokyo.

The Hon. Mr. Taft and his party were entertained at the Imperial Hotel on Wednesday evening by General Count Katsura, Minister President of State. Covers were laid for 165 persons, and among those present were Marquis Ito, Counts Inouye and Matsukata and the Ministers of State. Count Katsura gave his arm to Miss Roosevelt, on whose right sat Mr. Griscom, while facing them were Mr. Taft and Marquis Ito. Count Katsura proposed the health of President Roosevelt and Mr. Griscom that of the Emperor. Subsequently Count Katsura invited the convives to drink the health of the Hon. Mr. Taft. His Excellency said that for many years Japan had attracted tourists of whom it had been his good fortune to meet a large number, but he regarded those present this evening as the most remarkable assemblage of visitors Japan had ever had, and he was correspondingly conscious of the honour of meeting them. The welcome given to them by the Japanese nation had demonstrated this fact. There had been no such welcome since General Grant paid Japan the honour of a visit. The people of Japan desired to show their respect to President Roosevelt, who was not only the chosen head of one of the world's greatest nations, but also a true exponent of the best principles of civilization and humanity. Another reason for the warmth of Japan's welcome was that the sincerest friendship mutually animated the two nations. It was a friendship founded on history. America had opened Japan and had always treated her with the utmost fairness, alike in the matter of treaty revision and in every important question. Geographical considerations, too, indicated the countries should be close friends. He trusted that his guests would enjoy their visit to Japan.

Mr. Taft replied. He expressed his sense and the sense of his fellow-travellers of the honour done to them that evening. They had come in great numbers, but they had not come to test the hospitality of Japan.

Their object was to visit their country's nearest East-Asian possession. In Washington they had first learned from Mr. Takahira that they might expect a hearty welcome in Japan, and they could only reply that they hoped Japan would not regard them as a swarm of locusts come to devour the fruits of the land. But in truth their welcome had been something altogether beyond their expectations. Count Katsura had said that America had opened Japan. It seemed to him more correct to say that Japan had herself appreciated the advantages of progress, and that during the past 50 years she had made an advance unparalleled in the history of nations, an advance which had placed her in the very foremost rank of the world's leading Powers (Loud applause). The speaker owed much gratitude to Japan. While in the Philippines he had borrowed the monetary system of this country and had also modelled the sanitary system on Japanese lines. The fifty-year old friendship of America and Japan, a friendship which had never been dimmed by a cloud nor ever ceased to grow, would be stronger and more durable than ever in the future. (Loud cheers).

The party broke up at 11 p.m.

It is reported by Tokyo papers that the Emperor and Empress have presented silks, embroideries, screens, flower vases, etc., to Mr. Taft, Miss Alice Roosevelt, and other distinguished guests.

Prince and Princess Fushimi at noon on July 27th entertained the American notables at their residence.

To-day, July 28th, Mr. Taft and party will leave by the 9.50 train for Kyoto on their way to Manila.

Among the passengers who arrived at Yokohama on the Manchuria were two United States commercial agents—Messrs. R. F. Crist and H. R. Burrill—and the proprietor of the American Exporter,—Mr. W. I. Johnston, who is a member of Secretary Taft's party en route to the Philippines. The object of the visit of these three is to study independently trade conditions in the Far East and the opportunities for the sale of American goods in the Orient.

Seven or eight months will be devoted by Mr. Crist and Mr. Burrill to Japan, China, Korea and Formosa. They will report their conclusions and recommendations to Secretary Metcalf, who will transmit the reports to Congress, after which they will probably be published.

Mr. Johnston will visit the principal import merchants and other large purchasers of manufactured goods in Japan, China, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand, with a view to bringing together buyers in these countries and manufacturers in the United States.

Others in the party are Col. Church, editor of the Army and Navy Journal, and Mr. Lafayette Young, editor of the Des Moines (Ia.) Register.

CHINA AND THE UNITED STATES.

Telegrams say that there has been a great meeting of Chinese merchants in Amoy and that they have decided to taboo all American goods. Delivery will be taken of everything ordered up to the 2nd of the 4th month (old calendar), but nothing subsequent to that date will be purchased. Copies of this resolution have been forwarded throughout the whole empire. It is added that the manager of the Standard Oil Company's stores has received a threatening letter telling him to abandon his position, and that the employees of the U.S. Consulate were not allowed to attend the meeting at which the above resolution was passed. These details are given in telegrams from Amoy and Shanghai to the Jiji Shimpō and the Asahi Shimbun. Of course the action of the Chinese will be severely criticized, and those that find it not unnatural will be accused of having lost their virility of judgment owing to long contact with Oriental peoples. That kind of silly shibboleth has already been heard in connexion with this very affair. But some of us can actually look back to the time, and all of us can recall it historically, when the greatest crime that could be laid at the door of Oriental nations was exclusiveness, and when the gun-boat was deemed a proper weapon for breaking down such uncivilized isolation. As between the gun-boat and the boycott, the advantage, if any, is on the side of the latter so far as concerns enlightenment. This is essentially a case of what is sauce for the goose being sauce for the gander also. The Chinese have an unquestionable right to demand that if American citizens be granted free access to every part of China and permitted to carry on there any trade and occupation they please within the limits of morality and good order, the same measure of liberty shall be granted to Chinese subjects in the United States.

SAGHALIEN'S NAME.

With regard to the plea made by a correspondent against changing the name of "Saghalien" to "Karafuto-jima" there seems to be a misapprehension. We are not aware that any such change is announced. As a matter of fact this northern island has been called "Karafuto" by the Japanese from time immemorial. In the regions north of Japan the word hito (man) is always pronounced futo, and the term Karafuto means "people of China." The expression Kor (China) was used in ancient times to designate all foreigners, so that Karafuto had really the significance of "foreign people." Japanese cartographers may have known the name "Saghalien" but they never used it, so far as we are aware. The big northern island was nearly always designated "Karafuto," the appellation "Oku-Ezo" being also sometimes employed. These facts do not, however, dispose of the Rev. J. Batchelor's plea if we extend it to other places which are now undergoing an explicit change of nomenclature. It can not be justly said that there has been any alteration in the case of the island itself, but promontories and bays are being re-named in a manner that will add to the confusion already so perplexing. What with Japanese pronunciations of Manchurian place-names, Japanese re-castings of Formosan and Korean names, and now Japanese substitutions for Saghalien names, bewilderment grows daily greater. Japan is setting her mark on the face of the Far East with a vengeance.

KOREA.

Li Il-sik has been handed over to the Judicial Authorities for punishment. He is charged, as already stated, with granting concessions in his official capacity without following the routine prescribed by the convention. It appears that in addition to Mr. Oshikawa another Japanese, Mr. Iwamoto Zenji, was concerned. Both these gentlemen are eminent Christians. It is not suggested that the concessions themselves were in any respect culpable: the question is one merely of routine.

A telegram from Chicago received in Tokyo says the tea market is very quiet but there is hope for Japanese business in the future.

THE KAISER AND THE TSAR.

Whatever commotion may be caused in European political circles by the meeting of the Kaiser and the Tsar—a meeting said to have been brought about by the German Emperor—Japanese journals do not attach any great importance to it from the point of view of this country. The Fiji Shimpō thinks it possible that the Kaiser may take advantage of the meeting to urge upon the Tsar the importance of making peace in Russia's interests. That would be very commendable but Japan does not expect His Majesty to take any such step; and for the rest the meeting has no direct bearing upon the war in the Far East. The Fiji passes on to consider the Anglo-Japanese alliance, on which it places more reliance than ever. The leading Tokyo journal is much gratified to think that the Balfour Cabinet's resolve to remain in office was influenced by the question of pourparlers with Japan on the subject of the alliance and by the desire to see the peace negotiations brought to a successful issue. The fact speaks eloquently of the place Japan occupies in England's eyes.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun recalls the meeting that took place between the two Sovereigns at Wiesbaden in November 1903. They were said to have merely played a game of billiards together, but close observers declared that it was then, when the war-clouds were looming large upon the horizon, that the Kaiser gave to his brother monarch assurances which enabled the latter to denude the Baltic provinces of maritime protection and his western frontier of garrisons. Times have changed since then. The Kaiser is now understood to have united his efforts with those of the President of the United States to bring about peace. That is an open secret, and probably it will be safe to assume that this latest meeting, on the verge of the New-Hampshire negotiations, will have a beneficent influence on the question of the restoration of peace. The Kaiser now stands at the head of Continental Europe's Sovereigns. Each stage of Russia's discomfiture has raised Germany still higher on her pinnacle and she now occupies a position in Europe analogous to that held by her in the days of Charles the Fifth. She can scarcely attain higher ground, and it is very conceivable that she does not want to profit any more at Russia's expense since there is a point beyond which Russia's fall would be calamitous to certain outside interests. Therefore Japan need not feel alarmed about this meeting. Yet the human brain's developments are difficult to predict, and it will be well for Tokyo's statesmen to keep their eyes open.

The Kokunin Shimbun takes the view that if ordinary persons find it advisable to meet occasionally in a friendly manner, the privilege ought not to be denied to Sovereigns. It further thinks that the meeting may have the effect of restoring the Tsar's allegiance to common sense.

COLONEL BELL ON JAPAN.

Colonel Bell, during several years Consul for the United States in Sydney, recently visited Japan and during his stay of six months in this country took much pains to gain information about a nation in which he had previously displayed intelligent and liberal interest. Immediately on his return to Australia he was approached by a representative of the Daily Telegraph, to whom he made the following statements.

Tonching on the question of immigration, he said he never was one who believed that a dense population was necessary to the intellectual or social happiness of a nation. He frankly confessed a lack of faith in much of Australasia's labour legislation, yet when it came to the question of the character of the future citizenship, which meant the character of future society, of the methods and forms of future Governments, and of the character of the civilization to be endured by posterity, he said that, while Australia was possibly premature in her fears, it seemed to him that "If she is making a mistake in her rigid immigration laws, it is on the side of safety, as she may easily correct the error, and enlarge her list of invitations as the acquaintance or the wisdom born of experience may dictate or suggest."

Colonel Bell said that while such terms as "inferior" and "superior" races of people were no longer pardonable in discussing the relative qualities of the powers or possibilities of the Japanese and ourselves, still in the character, customs, manners, and faiths there were differences that, during the hoped-for extensive business relations both people might study with advantage, as he saw no evidence of a desire, and no necessity, at least for a long time, for extensive immigration by the Japanese. Australia could well afford to be temperate in her references to such a contingency. The Japanese as a nation were home-lovers, firmly wedded to their country and their gods, and while they had strong industrial and shopkeeping instincts, they desired most of all things to win an honourable place, and to develop the latent energies of the nation and the resources of their country. While they desired to trade and to be understood, they relied upon their worthiness for the future respect and recognition of the nation.

"Through business operations people become acquainted," said the Colonel, "and if each finds the other worthy, social barriers disappear." Though a few Japanese might chafe a little at the tone of the superfluous discussion, no people in the world were more willing to "hide their time," or to be judged, if understood, upon their merits. The conditions of "old Japan," he says, make stoics of these people, while the conditions in "new Japan" are making men of these stoics. The so-called "necessity" for the Japanese to find room for their "surplus population," he adds is greatly exaggerated. The arable area of the land can be materially increased, and especially can the great industries of silk and tea production be enormously extended, while the numerous waterfalls, the bountiful supply of coal, with the adeptness of labour, suggests Japan as a country of shops and factories. Then in Korea and in Formosa there is room for "millions more," while Manchuria will probably be the most inviting "distant field" for Japanese industry and enterprise.

Asked as to his opinion regarding the aggressive policy of the Japanese, should they continue victorious in the present war, Colonel Bell said: "That is a question upon which any impartial inquirer may form an intelligent opinion, and the fear of a policy of foreign aggression by Japan is the most childish phantom that ever disturbed a rational brain. First by tradition and by religion the commonest force in Japanese life is love of home and peace. Of course the outer world has been told of the Samurai, the tea-house, the Geisha girl, and the restless ambition of these strange people, but as a fact during 2500 years of authentic national existence tradition and history credit Japan with less wars than any other nation in the world, and during over 250 years antedating the visit of Commodore Perry, or during fully nine generations of men, peace had not once been broken. Further, the ablest statesmen of this age, the same persons who as young patriots helped the country through the revolution of '68, and led in the transformation scenes that have amazed the world by their unbroken success, now control the destinies of new Japan, and these men, ably aided by younger ones, are burning with zeal to secure for the Japanese nation an honoured position among the world's promoters of peace, of commerce, of education, and of social happiness."

"In almost six months of constant contact with educated Japanese," Colonel Bell says, "he never heard a doubt expressed regarding the probable result of the war." He never heard the necessity of fighting until success was achieved questioned, but he never saw a man who betrayed the least evidence of military ambition. He says that the teachers all assured him that even now, when war is in the very air, the dominant thought of the boys and young men is 'education' and then 'business.' Then, too he says the Japanese gratefully value the fact that in this contest they have the sympathy of the strongest and most progressive nations of the modern world, and they thoroughly understand that should they betray an ambition for military conquest or foreign aggression they would not only alienate their friends but that they would arouse a coalition against them that would hurriedly extinguish this beautiful fabric, that an admiring world now hopes may stand as an enduring monument not only to the ability of Japanese statesmen, but to the valour of the Japanese people. In the solution of pressing Eastern problems, he says Japan fully realises her cooperative relationship with the leading 'Western Powers,' but she just as fully realises how utterly impotent she would be with a coalition of such Powers against her."

"We must not forget," said Colonel Bell, "that the soul of the effete East must be reached through Japan. The Japanese are the most tolerant, the most receptive, and the most patient people on this globe. They are ready to consider every earnest suggestion, come from where it may. They will accept and assimilate everything that may seem useful to them, and these new ideas and notions, made palatable by not unfamiliar seasoning, will be communicated to and readily accepted by the unknown millions of Chinese and other Oriental peoples. The Japanese deserve to be understood. Through the grotesque pictures of superficial visitors, the world has seen little of Japan, but the frivolous fringe—the Geisha girl, the tea-house, and the wrestler—while, as a fact, I know of no people (and I have visited almost all countries) who live more industrious, more strenuous, more sober, or more earnest lives."

THE GERMAN NAVAL LEAGUE.

The Kaiser's rebuke to the German Naval League has brought the latter under the lens of public observation. We read this about it in The Literary Digest :—

This league is a vast association whose members are scattered throughout Germany. Its aim is to agitate for the increase of the navy and the extension of the Weltpolitik of the Kaiser. It consist of 668,000 members, including some of the highest military and naval officials in the country. At its last annual meeting, in Dresden, an agitation was begun for increased taxation and the filling out of a vast naval programme, including the building of three double squadrons of first-class battle-ships, and their complement of large and small cruisers. Since then the tactics of its leaders have been extravagantly Chauvinistic and aggressive, even Anglophobe in character. Hundreds of speeches have been delivered breathing defiance to Britain, hundreds of articles written in the same spirit have flooded the journals. Count von Reventlow, an active member of the league, has himself published over two hundred such articles within the past twelve months, while the public utterances of the President and Vice-President have been decidedly anti-British in tone. Meanwhile William II. has been hurrying from one coast of the Mediterranean to the other, and professes to have heard a great deal about the doings of the league while abroad. And then suddenly the bolt flies; the most prominent members of the league, General Menges and General Rein, are struck down out of the blue. They have resigned, for the Emperor tells them, by a peremptory telegram, that unless they cease their agitation he shall consider that they are guilty of usurping, in the navy and in the Government, powers and prerogatives that belong solely to himself. On two previous occasions William had warmly and emphatically thanked the Naval League for its patriotic agitation of Germany's claims upon the sea. Now, as by a sudden change in mind, he rebukes the men whom he had once set an example in pursuing the course he now condemns. In explaining this new departure the Temps (Paris) says :—

"More royalist than the Emperor, the league has ended by becoming troublesome to the Government, whose desires it exaggerates, and whose name it compromises by its ceaseless and tactless fussiness. The incident of an article written in the Deutsche Revue by the English Admiral Fitzgerald has called forth the Emperor's action. It is, moreover, considered that the league is responsible for the tension between England and Germany, and the Emperor has taken the present opportunity of answering coldly a message of loyalty, and in begging that the Anglophobe agitation may stop."

The weekly journal Europa (Berlin) attributes the peremptory despatch of William II. to the action of Admiral Hollmann, Secretary of the Navy, who had informed the Kaiser that the league was exciting a widespread hostile agitation against the English. This view is also mentioned by the Vossische Zeitung (Berlin). The publications of the league seemed full of threats against England, we are told. "These writings," says the Vossische Zeitung, "gave ground for the idea that the most recent agitation of the league's leaders was in accordance with the views and wishes of the responsible government authorities, while these diatribes contributed not a little to raise suspicion and distrust in England and to convey a wrong impression concerning the naval plans of Germany, as, for instance, was manifested in the writings of Admiral Fitzgerald."

CHINA.

The Chinese Government has decided that the old-fashioned examinations shall be abolished and a new system adopted; a system better adapted to the needs of the time. Certain high officials have been instructed to prepare a draft of the new system. Incidentally one is reminded of the conservatism of the Chinese, for one learns that only now does archery cease to be a chief item on the list of a Chinese soldier's acquisitions. The impression produced in Japan by this change is evidently good. We may mention here that at the examination recently held in the Palace to test the qualifications of youths who had studied in Japan, the honours fell to the Waseda University. No less than four of its students were placed at the head of the list.

Seventy-three youths selected by Viceroy Yuan are to start soon for educational purposes in Japan.

Mr. Wang, who formerly spent some time in Japan as overseer of Chinese students, is to be sent to America to watch the Peace Conference.

A Shanghai telegram says that five hundred leading merchants, including some native ladies, held a meeting on July 19th and decided not to purchase goods imported from America, as the American Government has not replied to their petition asking for the amendment of the exclusion law. Chinese traders were to hold a further conference the following day to discuss the means of enforcing the present boycott throughout the Empire. As a first step they intend to wire their views to the Guilds in the open ports.

Captain Blake, of the C. E. & M. S. Kwangping sighted a tipping mine in Lat. 38.22 N., Long. 121.28 E., on July 13, and stopped and fired at it. After firing for some time with rifles, the Chief Officer, Mr. Watson, succeeded in hitting it with the Hotchkiss gun. It exploded with a tremendous report throwing up a column of water about 100 feet in height, and scattering pieces of iron in all directions. It should be noted that the mine was hit several times by shots from Lee-Enfield rifles, but they only dented it and did not penetrate. Evidently the greatest caution is still necessary on the northern route.

The North-China Daily News translates the Imperial Decree which authorizes Prince Tsai and other high officials to proceed abroad for purposes of study, as given below:—

Owing to the difficult crisis we are and have been passing through at present, we have repeatedly issued commands for the execution of much-needed reforms, with the object of encouraging progress. For the past few years, however, although there have been attempts made, nothing substantial has been arrived at. The cause of this is due to those who have charge of these reforms being in ignorance of what should be done. Under the circumstances what chance is there to better our country and save her from the dangers which threaten? We therefore have decided to send Prince Tsai Tsch 3rd Order; Tai Hung-tze, Junior Vice-President of the Board of Revenue; Hsu Shih-ch'ang, Probationary Grand Councillor; and Tuan Fang, Governor of Hunan, to go abroad in charge of a number of officials, who shall visit Japan and Western countries to study the Government system and political economy of those countries, so that with the knowledge so obtained those best suited for China may be selected. After the inauguration of the above steps, successive batches of men will be sent abroad, where they may carefully study foreign conditions for introduction into this Empire. Let each person exert his best endeavours and deserve the confidence we have placed in him. With reference to the expenses of the mission and as to how the funds for them shall be issued, we hereby command the Ministers of the Waiwupu and Board of Revenue to confer thereon.

Commenting on the decree, our contemporary says:—

Of the four high officials mentioned there are two, namely, their Excellencies Tuan Fang, Governor of Hunan, and Hsu Shihch'ang, Probationary Grand Councillor, who will be sure to enter into the spirit of their Majesties' commands, both being energetic and progressive. We do not know much of Prince Tsai Tsch; he is young and we hope he will follow the example of that popular Prince Pu Lun—whose democratic ideas and anxiety to learn, it will be remembered, took the hearts of Americans by storm when his Highness went last year to the St. Louis Exposition—rather than that of Prince Tsai Chên, Prince Ching's son, who generally maintained a "don't-care-to-see" attitude when he went on his mission of congratulation in connection with the coronation of King Edward VII. in 1902. The consequence was that when Prince Tsai Chên returned to China, he had to read up books of travel to coach himself in preparation for possible questions that would be put to him when he had his audience of their Majesties. The fourth member of the mission, Tai Hung-tze, Junior Vice-President of the Board of Revenue, is known to be more of a conservative than anything else, and it is to be hoped that travel abroad will widen his views and show him that China is pretty well behind other countries, instead of being the "hub" of the Universe, as he and his confrères usually think.

The China Times of the 10th July contains a letter from the American Minister, Mr. W. W. Rockhill, to Sir Ernest Satow, and the latter's reply, in which is embodied the agreement lately come to by the British and United States Governments for the reciprocal protection of American and British trademarks in China.

Concerning the appointment of Mr. Wang to the Chinese Embassy at Washington, the writer of Notes on Native Affairs, in the North China Daily News says:—

The Universal Gazette of yesterday's date publishes a telegram from Peking to the effect that H.E. Sir Liang Chêng, K.C.M.G., Chinese Minister to the United States, Spain, and Peru, has asked for, and obtained from, the Waiwupu Mr. Wang Ta-hsi, Senior Advisor to that Board, to act as Chief Secretary of the Chinese Legation at Washington. Mr. Wang was second secretary to Prince Tsai Chên, while Sir Liang Chêng was Chief Secretary, when his highness went to London in 1902 to represent the Emperor at the coronation of King Edward VII. On Mr. Wang's return to China, he was appointed, during H.E. Tsai Chun's term as Chinese Minister at Tokyo, Superintendent of the Chinese students studying in Japan, where his progressive idea and unfailing courtesy made him very popular with everyone who had the privilege of meeting him. Especially so was he with the students on account of the kindness and tact with which he treated them. Owing to disagreement with Minister Tsai Chun in connection with the latter's arbitrary treatment of the Chinese students in Japan, Mr. Wang Ta-hsi asked for his recall, obtaining on arrival in Peking the post in the Waiwupu which he has just left in order to proceed to Washington to take up his new duties as Chief Secretary of Legation there.

The Simoenpao states that the Waiwupu having lately protested to Mr. Uchida, the Japanese Minister in Peking, against the establishment by the Japanese of Civil Administration in Kiechou, Haicheng, Liaoyang, and other cities of Fengtien province (after the departure of the main Japanese Army and martial law) on the ground that the conflict of authority between Chinese and Japanese officials is both inconvenient and gives rise to considerable friction, etc., the Japanese Minister replied that he had no authority in the premises as it was a matter concerning the Headquarters of the Japanese Army in Manchuria only. In consequence of this the Waiwupu has instructed the Chinese Minister at Tokyo, H. E. Yang Ch'eng, to present the Chinese protest to the Japanese Ministry of Foreign Affairs and to use every effort to obtain an early settlement of this important matter.

The North China Daily News, in the course of an obituary notice of the late Rev. A. G. Jones, killed by the fall of a temple building, says that he was the senior missionary in Shantung of the English Baptist Missionary Society. He was born in Ireland and had been in China some 28 years, having arrived to be Dr. Timothy Richard's only colleague at the beginning of the great famine in North China. When Dr. Richard went to distribute famine relief in Shansi, Mr. Jones was left alone in charge of the work at Chingchowfu, having then been only some nine months in the country. He lived to see the little church of 69 grow to membership of over 4,000, and largely through his efforts the staff of the Mission was increased to fourteen or fifteen men. At the beginning of his missionary career he engaged a great deal in evangelistic work and personally opened up new districts, but for many years past his main strength was put into theological teaching. No missionary was ever more entirely devoted to his work. Large powers of mind; wide experience of men; deep reading in foreign and Chinese literature; unusual organising ability, with a remarkably devout and earnest spiritual life; made him a missionary of uncommon power. Not by years alone, but by force of character, experience and wisdom, he was senior and leader in the Mission. If he were less known than he deserved to be away from his own district, it was because he always preferred hard work at home to running about and talking; but all who met him knew that he was an uncommon type of man, and those who knew him most intimately admired him most and trusted him fully.

The Shanghai Mercury prints the following translation of a letter said to be addressed by the Emperor of China to President Roosevelt:—

The Emperor of China hereby addresses the President of the United States America and expresses gratitude for his frequent undertakings to maintain the peace of the Far East. Since the war between Japan and Russia commenced many months have passed and the President expressed the view of obtaining peace at this moment and suggested to the belligerent powers to negotiate peace which means not only to settle the disputes of the belligerent powers but to restore the peace of the whole world. My country has maintained neutrality, yet the territory of China is involved as a fighting field which is a great concern to us and I consider there will be many terms in the peace protocol of the belligerents which relate to China as important items. I hope the President will act impartially in accordance with justice and reason in this connection so as to maintain China's sovereignty from being spoiled which is my prayer and I hereby express my respect to him.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

A Buddhist priest, Mr. Nomi Kan, of the Joran temple in Iwami province, is found to have been killed by the Tibetans in the middle of December, 1903. He had studied the Sanskrit and Thibetan languages, and was evidently a man of profound convictions and great daring. He set out in 1898 with the idea of travelling to Tibet via Talifu. He reached the latter place on April 18th, 1901, and thence wrote that he would be no more heard from for some time. He was never heard from again, but on the wall of a Tibetan frontier inn was discovered his name, and a verse of poetry, the gist of which was that he was on the point of being killed by the inhabitants who had discovered him to be a Japanese. We may mention here that Mr. Kawaguchi, the other explorer, who left for Tibet last year, has also not been heard of since.

Death has claimed another of the noble band of ladies whose lives are devoted to the cause of religion and of humanity. On the afternoon of the 21st instant Sister St. Francis expired at the convent in Tsukiji, Tokyo. For a long term of years she had worked with absolute self-effacement and untiring zeal, and though, like the other sisters who confer such lustre on the faith they profess and practise, her existence was entirely without any of the elements usually essential to pleasure, she doubtless enjoyed the highest form of happiness, an abiding sense of duty quietly performed. Her end is said to have been most peaceful and full of hope, as indeed it well might be. The interment took place on Sunday the 23rd instant at 7.30 a.m.

Japanese journals, especially the Yomi, speak of a visit of the Prince of Wales to Japan as tolerably certain to take place in September, and there is also talk of a visit by the German Prince Imperial by way of returning Prince Arisugawa's visit.

We have heard nothing more about the proposed Togo lighthouse, but Japanese papers now say that subscriptions have been sent in from people in America and England who have read journalistic notices of the project. They are very small subscriptions, only one dollar and one shilling. But an Irish firm, apparently Messrs. Edmonson & Co., offers to supply the machinery for the lighthouse gratis.

The Anglo-Indian Association held a meeting on the 23rd instant in connexion with the graduation of seven students from Nepal who have been studying in the Imperial University. Viscount Nagaoka was in the chair. Messrs. Nanjo Fumio, Yokoi Tokiwo, Sawayanagi Masataro and other distinguished educationists were present.

Western Powers are evidently not disposed to be left behindhand in profiting from the lessons to be learned from the naval warfare in the Far East. Thus, the Italian Navy is about to lay down at Venice a vessel of quite a new type, and which is to be known as a "blockading vessel." This new type of craft will be entrusted with the work of laying down blockade mines off an enemy's coastline. The following will be the dimensions of the projected vessel:—Length, 125.80 metres; beam, 16½; draught, 5.15m.; displacement between 5,500 tons and 6,000 tons; speed, 25 knots armour plating at the water line, 150mm. thickness, and above that line, 120mm.; the armament will consist of four 203mm. guns and of many guns of 76mm. The vessel will carry a large provision of blockade mines, and its coal capacity will be 1,000 tons. It will thus be seen that the contemplated speed of 25 knots will enable the vessel to escape easily from battleships; but, as it will not be able to show a clean pair of heels so easily to armoured-cruisers, it will be armour-plated at the water-line and along the battery.

A telegram received at the Naval Department from the Chief Surgeon of the Sasebo Hospital on the 25th inst. says:—"To-day the wound on the forehead of Admiral Rojestvensky was cut open and a piece of bone about the size of a 20-sen piece was removed, after which the wound was stitched. There has been no change since the operation."

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun explains Mr. Odagiri's resignation of the position of Consul-General in Shanghai. Our contemporary says that he is about to join the staff of the Specie Bank and that he will probably be posted in China where his special knowledge will be most valuable.

The constructors of the Panama Canal having decided to employ Japanese, Chinese and Italian labourers, 2,000 of each, the necessary steps have been taken to procure Japanese official consent. Tokyo journals say that it has been given on condition that the authorities receive satisfactory evidence of due hygienic arrangements having been made. The day's work is to be 11 hours and the wage $1½ (gold) per diem. The men must not be under 21 years or over 45 years of age, and an agreement will be given for a term of 3 years.

AN ASCENT OF FUJI.

It is still early in the season for ascending Fuji-san, but already three foreign residents have accomplished the feat, one coming from Kobe the other two from Yokohama. The Yokohama pair left Hiranuma station by the 10.58 p.m. train on Friday and arrived at Gotemba at 2.10 a.m. At that unearthly hour of the morning the adventurers chartered horses and set out at once via Tarobo, the "front way" up the hill. At No. 2¼ station they alighted for breakfast and left there at 8 a.m., walking to No. 6 station, where they arrived at 11.30 a.m. The demands of nature were here assuaged by tiffin and thus fortified they began the last stage of the climb at 12.10 p.m., arriving at the summit of Fuji at 3.37 o'clock. Owing to the early date of their climb the huts on this side of the mountain were still closed, so they walked over to the Subashiri side, finding shelter at 4 o'clock. Dinner was next discussed and they soon turned in under fulon and straw mats to keep out the piercing cold, 30° Fahr. Before sunrise they were astir and were rewarded by a beautiful view, the skies being clear of all fog and mist. At 6 o'clock they started for a walk round the crater to the spring on the Gotemba side, and from there descended into the crater itself, which was thoroughly explored. On reascending they continued their walk along the outer edge by Oyashimazu, the path eventually taking them back to the huts by 9 a.m. They were now quite ready for breakfast and this being disposed of cameras were packed and the descent of the mountain began at 10.10 a.m. Incidentally we might remark that these mountaineers were never severely attacked by pangs of hunger, the lightest of meals sufficed them at every stage. Subashiri was reached at 1.40 p.m. and full justice was done to the tiffin provided by mine host of the Yoneyama hotel. Then the tram was taken to Gotemba, where the railway train was boarded, and Yokohama was reached at 8.22 o'clock on Sunday evening. The cost of the trip worked out at 12 yen each. The climbers were very fortunate in their weather. So far this season, says the hutkeeper at the top, every day has been rainy and stormy, but Saturday and Sunday were absolutely perfect, clear right to the horizon. The mountain paths are still bad and the hutkeepers have not yet got up their summer supplies, but otherwise there is nothing to grumble at.

MARINE COURT OF INQUIRY.

A marine court of inquiry was held at the British Consulate-General, Yokohama, on Tuesday on the application of Capt. Husband of the ship Queen Wilhelmina, who accused his boatswain, Joseph Burgess, of theft of stores and of continued disobedience of orders. The Court was composed of Mr. J. Carey Hall, Consul-General (President) and Captains J. Sinclair of the steamer Highlander and W. Franklin Andrews of the Glenakron. The accused pleaded guilty to stealing one coil of rope.

Capt. Husband testified that the accused had been absent without leave and admitted having stolen a coil of rope. On the 19th he was called aft and disrated and since then he had absolutely refused to do any work. The police had recovered one coil of 7-inch Manila rope. One coil of 7-inch rope would be worth about £10.

The mate, Mr. J. Simpson, was called and corroborated the master's evidence.

The carpenter, Heyer, was called by accused and spoke as to the keys of the peak being hung up in accused's room where any one could reach them.

The accused pleaded as justification for his contumacy the fact of his having been disrated.

The Court after adjournment gave judgment finding that the accused was guilty and from the amount due to him (£10. 18s. 8d.) deducted the costs of the Court, the remainder to be employed in liquidating the amount alleged to be defalcated.

CUSTOMS APPEALS.

Baron Sone, Minister of Finance, according to the Official Gazette, gave a decision on July 19th, in an appeal lodged by Mr. E. H. Hunter, Kobe, against a decision delivered by the Kobe Customs. The appellant imported thirty screw-jacks, or capstans, on which the Kobe Customs imposed 10 per cent ad valorem duty in accordance with No. 17 of the tariff. The importer contended that the goods should be dealt with under No. 12 of the tariff, which includes mechanical implements, and that the duty should be 5 per cent. The appeal was rejected on the ground that the capstan in its nature is regarded as a machine and is not an implement.

On July 20th, the Minister delivered judgment in an appeal brought by Messrs. Bowden Bros, No. 55, Yokohama, against a decision given by the Yokohama Customs. The Customs imposed duty at the rate of sen 25.6 per 100 kin on waste galvanized iron wire which the appellants imported. The importers held that the goods should be dealt with under No. 231 of the tariff, which fixes the duty at sen 14.4 per 100 kin. This argument was not sustained.

On July 20th, a decision was given on an appeal filed by Messrs. Sale and Frazar, Ltd., No. 167, Yokohama. The firm imported a quantity of mild bar steel on which the Yokohama Customs imposed 7½ per cent ad valorem duty under No. 241 of the tariff, which corresponds with No. 45 of the Anglo-Japanese conventional tariff. The importers contended that the steel should be dealt with in accordance with No. 217 of the tariff and petitioned that the rate be altered to sen 26.1 per 100 kin. The appeal was rejected on the ground that the goods were found, after analysis, to be hard steel.

Another decision was given on July 21st by Baron Sone, in an appeal instituted by Messrs. Findlay, Richardson & Co., Kobe. The firm imported three cases of imitation leather for hats. The Kobe Customs ordered the importers to pay duty of sen 5.6 per square yard in accordance with No. 370 of the tariff. The importers contended that the duty should be 10 per cent ad valorem under No. 496. The appeal was dismissed.

PLAGUE.

An official telegram from Chiba reports that a case of plague appeared at the village of Uraga, Unakami. The patient is an old man.

Two cases of plague are reported in Hayashicho, Fukagawa, Tokyo. One of the patients is Tsune, 9 years old, the eldest daughter of E. Kokura, a waste-paper merchant, and another is Hatsu Narni, a female servant in the merchant's employ.

An official telegram under date of July 22nd says that three cases of plague have appeared at Asahi-machi, Chiba. Seventy-four houses surrounding the dwellings of the patients were segregated.

A suspected case of plague has occurred at Tomikawa-cho, Fukagawa, Tokyo. The patient is a coolie lodging in the Omiya inn. He had been employed carrying out sanitary measures in the places infected by plague.

The Governor of Oshima, off Idzu, reports that a case of bubonic plague was found among the passengers of a sailing vessel which arrived there on the evening of July 23rd from Tokyo.

The 234th plague case was recorded in Hong-kong on July 12th. This is still nearly two hundred less than at the corresponding period last year.

An official telegram from Chiba reports that cases of plague were reported on July 25th in the village of Uraga, Unakami. The patients are J. Ito (45), Y. Ito (11) and T. Shinosaki (29). Their condition is serious.

Two dead rats infected with plague have been found in a godown belonging to the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha, Nakagawa-cho, Fukagawa, Tokyo.

M. WITTE.

IT is quite impossible to draw the line between truth and fiction in the accounts published of alleged interviews with M. WITTE. The newspaper interviewer has proved himself to be a person absolutely devoid of conscience, and in ninety-nine cases out of every hundred the safest plan is to dismiss his "copy" as pure romance. There is, however, a certain air of verisimilitude in some of the utterances attributed to the Russian Plenipotentiary. They are spoken to interviewers but they are addressed to the Japanese Government and the Japanese nation. On the whole the impression they convey is that M. WITTE has a bonâ fide commission to negotiate peace if he can do so without serious hurt to Russia's honour. The reservations ascribed to him on the subject of his plenipotentiary credentials are trivial. He is well aware that unless he can satisfy the Japanese as to the nature of his credentials the conference can not proceed. But no plenipotentiary has final competence. His functions do not extend beyond concluding a treaty: its ratification depends upon the SOVEREIGN. That is a fact of which M. WITTE may have reminded his interviewers, and they, in turn, being what they are, may have magnified it into a disclaimer of plenipotentiary authority. For the rest, what M. WITTE is said to have stated is capable of being summed up in a dozen words. They are, "we desire peace, but if you formulate humiliating conditions, you will alienate the sympathies of the peace party, strengthen the hands of the war party, and unite against you the whole of Russia, which is not by any means in the dislocated condition imagined by foreign observers." Concerning the analysis he is reported to have given of his country's conditions, it bears the stamp of a plausible secretary rather than of a shrewd statesman, and need not occupy attention, for to be invited to believe that in spite of the heterogeneous elements composing her immense empire Russia is really as one family knit together by a bond of patriotism is too large an order. The gist of the matter is that M. WITTE has been trying to educate on Japan's side a mood of extreme moderation, which is a natural effort from his point of view, though if he has publicly spoken even a fraction of the words attributed to him his wisdom is not so profound as his record indicates.

As to the terms which Japan will formulate, it is not to be supposed that M. WITTE and his Imperial Master are without a tolerably accurate conception. They must know well that an indemnity will stand at the head of the list, and they must know that unless Russia is prepared to pay an indemnity the conference need not be opened. Russia is prepared, we take it. She may not consider herself thoroughly beaten, but she can not deny that she has been signally defeated, and the custom of nations through all ages has been that the discomfited side, whether in a court of law or on the field of battle, must indemnify the victor. It is then only a question of amount and here we venture to affirm that no one acquainted with the mood of the Japanese people expects them to ask for more than their actual outlays. Japan must not emerge from a victorious war with a greatly increased national debt. Suppose that question disposed of, what problems remain? If there be a territorial demand, it will probably be based on the status quo at the time of the negotiations. If there be a demand for the disarming of Vladivostock, it will probably be softened by some concession on Japan's side. If there be a demand for the abandonment of all special privileges acquired by Russia from China in Manchuria, St. Petersburg will have the solace of observing that these concessions ceased long ago to be practically enjoyable. If there be a demand for the evacuation of Manchuria, it has already been evacuated in effect, and the completion of the operation would only be in accord with Russia's own avowals made before war broke out. If there be any demands in connexion with the railway, agreement will be facilitated by the fact that the railway is in Japan's possession and that Russia can scarcely have any hope of recovering it by force. If there be any demands about Korea, they certainly will not greatly exceed what Russia was willing to grant in the days of her supposed military supremacy. Thus considered, the negotiations do not seem to wear a very difficult aspect, and assuredly they do not comprise anything that menaces Russia's imperial existence, though some fine fear of that kind appears to have prompted certain utterances ascribed to M. WITTE by his alleged interviewers. There is an intangible asset called prestige which bulks very largely among the possessions of an imperial State, but Russia has temporarily lost that asset and the place to recover it is certainly not the conference chamber in New Hampshire.

FEATS OF REPORTING.

WE have always regarded the Daily Telegraph as a newspaper of superlative enterprise and it is a pleasant duty to offer it a tribute of applause, since now at the close of a great war when public interest might be supposed to have waned, we find the London journal performing feats of reporting that surpass all its previous remarkable achievements. A few weeks ago it told the public that the Japanese armies in Manchuria were continuing their victorious advance and that the Russians were everywhere outflanked, and as neither the advance nor the outflanking has yet occurred we must add prophesy to the other moral endowments of the great journal's agents. Something very much more signal has now to be recorded, however. The Daily Telegraph alone among European, American and Japanese journals managed to send a special correspondent with the Japanese Fleet at the time of the Japan-Sea battle. The remarkable fact is clearly stated. At the head of a long line of telegrams despatched from Moji on May 29th and forwarded to London via Tokyo, this caption is used:—"Graphic Description of the Great Battle. By our correspondent with the Japanese Fleet. Story of an Eye-witness." There is not the least room for doubt. Elsewhere the designation used is "our special correspondent who actually witnessed the battle," and the correspondent himself speaks of "the scene which I had the honour of witnessing." Now it is well known that never for a moment throughout the whole course of the war has a newspaper correspondent been permitted to accompany the Japanese Fleet or any squadron of it. The rule of exclusion has been rigid, unalterable. Since then this veto held in the case of the last naval battle, held indeed with the utmost rigour, the only hypothesis which immediately presents itself is that some Japanese officer, or petty officer, or blue-jacket, serving with Admiral Togo's Fleet, agreed to act surreptitiously as the Daily Telegraph's special correspondent. That would have been a very clever coup on the part of the London journal and would also have borne witness to its influence, for the officer, petty officer, or blue-jacket so acting must have defied the rules of the service and exposed himself to severe punishment. Closer examination shows, however, that the correspondent could not have been any one serving with the Fleet. For the telegram—a long account of some 1,200 words—professes to have been despatched from Moji at 7 p.m. on May 29th, and we are told that when it was sent "the engagement was raging off the northern province of Nagato." Now no one serving with the fleet could possibly have left it for the purpose of sending telegrams to a newspaper while the engagement was still raging. This "special correspondent," then, can not have been an acknowledged journalist and can not have been an amateur in the guise of a naval man. What can he have been? We begin at this stage to entertain some idea of the magnitude of the Daily Telegraph's exploit. For on still closer inspection we discover that the correspondent, when he wired his description from Moji in the Strait of Shimonoseki, was really at some point on the Korean coast. The fact is explicitly alleged:—"When your correspondent's message left on the evening of the 29th the engagement was raging off the northern coast of Nagato as far as it could be sighted from the Korean coast." Here at length the problem is solved. The "Special Correspondent with the Fleet" was plainly a supernatural being. At one and the same moment he was despatching a telegram from Moji and watching from the Korean coast an engagement raging at a point 120 miles distant. Moreover, as a matter of fact, there was no engagement off Nagato province or anywhere else on May 29th: the fighting had come altogether to an end on the preceding day. It appears therefore that the Daily Telegraph employs as special correspondents spooks or spirits, omnipresent since they can be simultaneously wiring messages from Moji in Japan and taking observations on the coast of Korea, and omniscient since they can witness imaginary battles from a distance of over 100 miles.

Stranger still is it to find that this wonderful correspondent saw a battle fundamentally different from that which really took place. He "had the honour of witnessing the scene," he found it "grand and awe-inspiring in the extreme," and "with every breath he drew he knew that it only heralded the passing of souls from life to death." But the scene he saw while in this palpitating condition was not the scene that Admiral Togo saw nor yet the scene that any common mortal serving with the Fleet saw. What the spook correspondent saw was the Russians "enflamed by the Japanese fire in front and on both flanks;" ROJESTVENSKY "with a hostile squadron on each side and another ahead of him," whereas no such manoeuvre ever took place. What he saw was that "the bombardment reached its zenith" (the Japanese bombardment) "at 2.10 p.m.," whereas Admiral Togo says that the Russians fired their first shot at 2.08 p.m. and that the Japanese did not reply for some time. What he saw was that "when the darkness set in the powerful Japanese fleet in a horizontal line" (could it perchance have been in a vertical line?) "lay across the enemy's bows," whereas what really happened was that when darkness set in the Japanese Fleet were steaming north, leaving the Russians behind them. But perhaps the most remarkable thing he saw was a manoeuvre absolutely new in the history of naval warfare and absolutely impossible anywhere save in the land of spooks where ubiquitous correspondents and fleets standing in vertical lines are common. He saw "the Japanese war-ships, which had so well found the range of the enemy in the light of day, cover the attack" of the torpedo-craft at night. "Beneath the shells from the great cannon" he saw "the tiny vessels dart forth to sting and sink the enemy." We have heard of sportsmen who attempted to shoot rabbits over a dog's head and we have never heard that they failed to hit the dog too. But warships at night firing over the heads of their own torpedo-craft as the latter went in to attack the enemy, that is a spectacle witnessed only in spook-land. Continuing the "special correspondent's" experiences, it is found that according to his "seeing" "the torpedo boats were let loose to do their deadly work at a little after 2 in the morning," whereas according to Admiral Togo the torpedo attack commenced at 8.15 p.m. and concluded at 11 p.m. It is also found that, according to his seeing, the torpedo-craft sank the Alexander III., Ossliabya, Navarin, Orel (or Ural) and 3 gun-boats, whereas the Alexander III. and the Ossliabya were sunk by gun-fire during the day; the Orel was not sunk at all; the Ural was sunk by gun-fire at 5.40 p.m. and the Russians had no gun-boats to be sunk. Finally this correspondent saw that "when Sunday (28th) dawned the Japanese fleet came to still closer range, pressing the Russians on to the north-west coast of Nagato," and that "all day long the battle raged with unabated fierceness." Now on the 28th there was nothing that could be called a general battle. The Russians had been broken by the night attack of the torpedoers into several sections and it was near the Korean coast that the piecemeal destruction of these took place, not near the Japanese coast, a difference which is absolutely radical. Finally this eye-witness correspondent saw the engagement still raging off the coast of Nagato on the evening of the 29th, whereas not so much as a shot was fired throughout the whole of the 29th, every unit of the Russian fleet having been sunk, captured or put to flight on the 27th and the 28th.

Our readers will by this time have formed their own conclusions about this special correspondent. They will have detected that one or two of his most remarkable misrepresentations are precisely those current in Tokyo at the time and that all are such as could not possibly have been made by an eye-witness. We doubt, however, whether the palm of courageous imagination belongs to him. Certainly he shares it with his alter ego in Tokyo from whom his reports are said to have been received. The latter, for example, informs the Daily Telegraph's public that "a shell from the Japanese fleet sent the Kamchatka spinning round in circles." He evidently thinks that a ship struck by a shell behaves on occasions like a leveret with a pellet of buck-shot in its brain. Yet neither this Tokyo expert nor the spook correspondent can beat a third Daily Telegraph agent who wires on June 3rd from Sascho: "I have just interviewed some of the officers and men from the captured battle-ship Orel which lies at anchor in the harbour here." Now the Orel had to be taken to Maizuru; she did not go to Sascho. Therefore this Sascho correspondent could not have seen her at that place. And that he did not see her anywhere or at all is proved by his account, for he says that "no traces were visible of damage from the Japanese shells," whereas in truth there were just 100 traces and the ship was terribly knocked about above her principal armour.

We have said enough to show what kind of correspondence reaches the columns of the Daily Telegraph from Japan. It is quite unrivalled in its way, but what that way is our readers will be able to divine without further comment.

It is stated that one of the passengers on board the P. M. steamer Manchuria lost his life by either falling or throwing himself overboard on the night of July 12. The deceased was Mr. William Sullivan, of San Antonio, Texas, about 26 years of age, and brother-in-law of Colonel Clemm, Chief of the Quartermaster's Department in the Philippines. He was a graduate of 1903 and had left with the Taft party to tour the Philippines and Japan. The occurrence was witnessed by only one person, a lady passenger.

THE BOOKSHELF.

"Dictionnaire francais-japonais," par E. RAGUET et T. ONO, 1 vol. in 4°, 1140 pages. Price 10 yen plus 20 sen postage for all Japan. Abridged pocket edition 2.90 yen. Subscriptions and orders to be sent to Mr. E. Raguet, No. 39, Akashi-cho, Kiyobashi-ku, Tokyo; the two dictionaries together being purchasable for 12 yen.

The publication of this volume is quite a signal event for all students of the Japanese language. Its size alone is sufficient to convey to our readers an approximate idea of its voluminous and exhaustive character. Eleven hundred and forty quarto pages represent an immense book, and we may add that the type, though excellently distinct, is so small as to be responsible for a comparatively limited extent of space. It was, we believe, the authors' intention to offer their great work to the public for 9 yen, but as it grew to unexpected proportions the possibility of such a low price could no longer be entertained. Even at 10 yen we count the book one of the cheapest that has ever been published in Japan, and when the necessarily limited audience to which it appeals is considered, such moderation becomes the more remarkable. The copy lying before us is not complete. It lacks a preface and we are consequently unable to learn how much assistance has been derived from specialists in each branch. But so far as it is possible for a reviewer to form any estimate, either the authors' own researches have been exceptionally wide or they have had recourse to extensive assistance, for technical terms seem to be very fully treated. Perhaps the most effective way to convey a general idea of such a work is by recourse to numerals. Thus we find that to the preposition ni, which stands at the head of the dictionary, no less than 36 paragraphs are devoted, each setting forth different uses of the preposition and each illustrated with well chosen and thoroughly idiomatic examples. Among these para. 17 runs thus:—"17. (entre deux nombres) naishi: De l'an 1,000 à 2,000, issen nen naishi nisen nen. Article 1 à 10, ichi jō naishi jū jō." Para. 20 runs:—"20. (avec, ayant, appendice fixé, &c.) suki no; après un verbe, suki ni: verre à pied, ashizuki no koppu. Pupitre à tiroirs, hiki-dashi suki no isukue. Le faire à tiroirs, hiki-dashi suki ni suru. To the verb faire, again, three and a half columns are devoted and in no less than 45 paragraphs the different employments of this verb are explained or illustrated. Paragraph 24 says:—(contre-faire), verbes en burn (vide 123 para. de la grammaire), faire l'ivre, yōta juri wo suru; faire l'habile, jōzu na furi wo suru; faire le savant, gakusha burn, gakusha wo hidoru; faire le fier, taka-burn; faire le maître, dannaburn; faire les yeux doux, shuta wo okuru. Paragraph 27 says:—Dans le style soutenu, on emploie souvent la forme causative en seshimuru, et son régime se construit avec wo shite. Pour faire obtenir le salut aux hommes hito wo shite tasukari wo eseshimuru tame. To para. 14 we should be inclined to take partial exception, namely, when it translates "ne fait que lire" by yomi doshi de aru. This Japanese phrase appears to be rather the equivalent of "is perpetually reading," whereas for "does nothing but read" a Japanese would say yonde bakari imu. To continue this numerical method of estimation we may cite the following words:—fermer, 14 paragraphs; force, 10 paras; fort, 15 paras;

forme, 17 paras; fraiss 18; haut 19; heure, 10; honneur, 11; incendie, 7; interest, 7; jouer, 14; lanterne, 4; ligne, 17; metre, 22; peu, 23; porter, 31; si, 29; terre, 13; tel, 17; tête, 19; temps, 26; tout, 31; toujours, 17; etc. A few of the examples given by way of elucidation may be here quoted:—

Mariage d'intérêt=rieki jō no kekkon.

Agir par intérêt=rieki shugi de hataraku.

Agir par intérêt personnel=rieki shugi de hataraku.

It is unnecessary to say that examples might be multiplied ad infinitum but we have quoted enough to indicate the character of the dictionary. In a work of such magnitude there may be and probably are some errors but so far as our examination goes we have detected none. Some little perplexity arises in connexion with numerous abbreviations used for the sake of economizing space, but any one using the dictionary must soon become familiar with these. We cannot speak of the grammar which is to be prefixed because in the advanced sheets of the volume sent to us for review this part is wanting. Judging, however, from the compilers' evidently remarkable knowledge of the Japanese language and their painstaking thoroughness, we anticipate that the grammar will prove a highly useful adjunct. Altogether this publication will do for French students of Japanese what the excellent work of Hobart-Hampden and Parlett has done for English students. The latter book is one whose merits become more and more evident the longer one employs it, and we do not hesitate to predict that the same will be found true of the lexicon of Raguet and Ono. It seems to contain almost all the words in the French language, and the renderings given of them are not mere translations but really idiomatic equivalents, while in addition to numerous illustrative phrases, such as those quoted above, there are many proverbs with happily chosen French representatives. The authors are to be sincerely congratulated on their work and the public on acquiring such a valuable aid to the study of Japanese.

Two Visits to the Island of Saghalien and the Gulf of Tartary, by Mrs. EMILY S. PATTON: Yokohama, Japan Gazette office. Price 50 sen.

At a very opportune time Mrs. E. S. Patton reprints her account of two visits which she paid to the island of Saghalien and the Gulf of Tartary during the summers of 1897-8. These accounts first appeared as letters in the columns of two of our local contemporaries and they aroused considerable interest at the time, both on account of their chatty, interesting style as well as for the side lights they threw on Russian convict life and Russian methods of aggrandizement and colonization in the remote Far East. Mrs. Patton was the first Englishwoman, we believe, to make this adventurous voyage and the pluck and readiness of resource which the journals brought to the surface won her many friends when she came to put her tales in print. The republication of the letters will undoubtedly add to Mrs. Patton's list of friends and admirers. The pamphlet is accompanied by a sketch of Korsakoff made by Mrs. Patton at the time of her visit, and a map illustrating her travels in the north.

The Tokyo Puck.

The latest issue of the Tokyo Puck is quite up to its predecessors. Its cartoons are excellent, some of the drawings being particularly good and the whole number is a very creditable production.

American Trade Index.

We have to acknowledge receipt of the American Trade Index for 1905 published by the National Association of Manufacturers in the United States. It is a hand-book which must prove of the greatest value to merchants and it appears to have been compiled with great care.

We are in receipt of articles 5, 6 and 7 in Vol. XX of the Journal of the College of Science, Imperial University of Tokyo. One of these is an exceedingly interesting paper on certain Mesozoic plants from Nagato and Bitchu by Professor M. Yokohama and another by Professor Isao Iijima treats of a new cestode larva parasitic in man, which was found in the body of a patient admitted to the University hospital in the spring of 1904. Another article deals with "the magnetization and the magnetic change of length in ferro-magnetic metals and alloys at temperatures ranging from -186°C. to +1200°C.

We have to acknowledge receipt of the Imperial Chinese Customs Returns for northern ports prepared with all the fullness and accuracy that have hitherto distinguished those reports. Various diagrams illustrate the returns and there are maps of the course of the Peiho and of the city and settlement of Wuhu.

CRICKET.

BORN IN JAPAN V. THE REST.

Evidently the Born in Japan cricket eleven this year have failed to induce the stars in their courses to fight on their side. Two games have been played this season and both have been drawn. On the 10th of June The Rest made 141 and almost succeeded in dismissing Born in Japan for 100, the stonewall tactics of Strome alone averting defeat. Last Saturday things were a little better. The Rest made 208, and when stumps were drawn Born in Japan had knocked up 141 for the cost of three wickets. The weather was very delightful; the mid-week typhoon which had done so much damage down south, left but a legacy of cool air and refreshing breezes for Yokohama, making life out of doors most enjoyable and desirable, nay, worth the living.

The Rest winning the toss went to bat, sending out Foster and Samuel, to face the bowling of the Kilby brothers. The first wicket fell at 34 to H. W. Kilby, who dismissed Samuel when the latter had 18 to his credit. Then Emerson joined Foster and a merry innings ensued, the score being carried to 110 before the partnership was dissolved. Several changes in bowlers were made, Kingdon, Mollison and Strome trying their hands, but it was not till Hunt went on that Foster succumbed to a Yorker. His 47 included six 4's and two 3's. Piggott filled the vacancy and began scoring very quickly, his opening hit being a boundary, which was followed by three others of the same variety. At length after giving one or two hard chances to the field he was given out leg before. His score reads:—4, 4, 4, 4, 3, 2, 4, 2, 1, 1, 1, 3—34. Meanwhile Cooper joined Emerson and the latter continued to score steadily, but at 170 he lost Cooper, l.b.w., and six runs later was himself caught and bowled by Mollison off a very hot drive—176 5-59. The retiring batsman had played a steady game all through and his score included only three 4's. After Emerson's dismissal the interest petered out till E. B. S. Edwards joined his brother W. D. S. Edwards, the former making 16 ere he was bowled by Kilby, his score reading: 2, 4, 2, 4, 2, 2. On Argent being dismissed for 0, the innings was closed, the score then standing at 208.

Born-in-Japan opened rather badly. W. S. Moss began with a single and followed this with a 3, and then McClure found his wickets. Strome joined E. W. Kilby, but before the latter could open his score he was caught very neatly by Brady—10-2-0. Upon Strome partnering H. W. Kilby matters improved considerably, for although a chance was given by the latter when he had only eight to his credit, he thereafter played skillfully and vigorously and with Strome's staunch help carried the score to 92. Then Strome was bowled by Brady, and Mollison joined H. W. K. Together they kept the field well employed until time was called. Kilby's 60, not-out, included six 4's, five 3's, and six 2's; Mollison's 38, not out, comprising seven 4's, made in succession, one 3, and three 2's. Score.

An official report from Formosa says that on July 15th the Twabar barbarians attacked the Government camphor factory where some two hundred workmen are employed. A native soldier was killed and three policemen injured. The savages were driven back with severe loss.

THE POSSIBILITIES OF HISTORICAL INVESTIGATION.

[WRITTEN FOR THE "JAPAN MAIL."]

Some years ago an enterprising and public-spirited firm of publishers in the United States, the Arthur H. Clark Company, undertook the financial responsibility of bringing out an extensive work, in seventy-six volumes, containing reprints and translations of the early documents written by the first Christian missionaries to America. In carrying out the plan very thorough research was made in the cities of Europe, especially those of Spain, Portugal, France, and Italy, with the result that many valuable papers were discovered and are now accessible to students, either as translations or reprints in the set of volumes issued by the American publishers, or as originals through the identification of the bibliography and index which accompany the set. It is pleasing to know that the enterprise and pluck of these publishers has been rewarded with financial success, in that the subscribers in all parts of the world have been sufficiently numerous to ensure a reasonable profit to the undertakers, for, it will be readily surmised that the initial expense of competent editorial work and translating, as well as the mechanical cost, represented a heavy outlay.

But it is even more pleasing to learn that the results of the investigation set in motion by this first undertaking have, naturally, been even farther reaching than was originally contemplated. Search for documents, the existence of which was known or suspected, but the exact location of which was not certain, has been rewarded with extraordinary success; and more than that, a great number of original papers have been discovered, the very existence of which was not even suspected. Not only is this true as to documents relating directly or indirectly to the particular subject then in hand, but a vast amount of material bearing upon other, yet cognate, subjects has been discovered. A part of these documents, extraneous to the history of the first Roman Catholic missionaries among the North American Indians, has been utilized, supplemented by a vast amount of other valuable material, in the set of fifty-four volumes which the same firm is now bringing out, with equally pleasing financial success, of documents relating to the Philippines from 1493 to 1898, A. D. In the light of modern, precise and scientific, historical research, it is surprising to find that there are many original documents, relating to subjects which were supposed to have been pretty thoroughly investigated many years ago, that have been discovered of late years; this fact justly leads us to infer that there are yet other, equally important documents hidden away in European archives which would be of invaluable assistance in helping us to understand more precisely than we now do, some matters of history relating to important events of the last four hundred years; and that if exhaustive research were made in all those sources of possible information, evidence might be adduced which would radically change our opinions on some of those subjects. It might be quite possible that such investigation would have the result of elevating to a position of high dignity, some matters which we now consider of little importance or that, conversely, something to which we now attach the greatest weight, would sink into insignificance; yet, in the interests of that commendable modern desire for plain, unvarnished truth which inspires our thirst for knowledge, such upheaval should be welcomed.

The habit of compilation is still too often carried on in an altogether slavish imitation by those who profess to write history; and as a result, certain errors that are known to be such and others that are shrewdly suspected, are still perpetrated to our disadvantage. Take, for example, the subject of the earliest discoveries in North America: many people were entirely satisfied to accept the statement that Columbus discovered America in 1492, and that he was the first European who visited that part of the world; others had a firm conviction that long before

Columbus' first voyage, the shores of the North American continent had been visited by Norsemen, and that attempts at colonization had been made on those remote shores several centuries before the Spaniards pushed across the Sea of Darkness on their direct way, as they supposed, to Japan and China. Now, in a way, both were right and both were wrong, as recent knowledge has demonstrated. As to the populating of America, whether that was done by migrations from Europe when, as is now established by geology, the two continents were united in such a way as to make it perfectly easy for wanderers to go on foot westward to the uttermost parts of America or whether immigrants from Asia went, in still earlier times, when Asia and America were actually united, eastward to the other continent, is not now a matter of great importance. It is certain that, geologically, America is quite as old as either Europe or Asia, that conditions favourable to human life existed there quite as long ago as in what we are still disposed to call the Old World, and that between the various tribes of the aboriginal American race, a race entirely unlike any of those with which the first European travellers were familiar, there is now seen to be, except in the sub-Arctic regions, a general physical likeness, such as to constitute an American type of mankind as clearly recognizable as those types which we call Mongolian and Malay, though far less pronounced than such types as the Australian or negro. It may be noted here, in passing, that the most obvious characteristics possessed in common by the American aborigines, the copper-coloured or rather cinnamon-coloured complexion, the high cheek-bones and small deep-set eyes, the prominent nasal arch, the straight black hair and absence or scantiness of beard, seem to differentiate them from the ideal types of Mongols or Malays. Yet, inasmuch as European tradition knows nothing of any such race as the North American Indians, it was supposed that at some time within the historic period they must have moved eastward from Asia into America. These are purely speculative matters; and it is of established facts bearing upon questions of relatively modern history that we wish to treat.

Within the last half century a great deal of evidence has been established to show that more visits were made to that which we call North America prior to the famous date of 1492, than had been suspected before; while during the same period some queer old theories have been revived and re-demolished. In the latter category belongs the legend that in the 5th century of the Christian era, certain Buddhist missionary priests went from China by way of Kamtschatka and the Aleutian Islands to the continent of North America and kept on till they reached a country which they called Fusang, and which was really Mexico. This notion was, we believe, first stated by the celebrated Deguignes in 1761, in his Memoires de l'Academie des Inscriptions, was shown to be absurd by Klaproth, revived by one Leland, and finally, let us hope, demolished in 1881, by S. Wells Williams, the author of The Middle Kingdom. The translations of Icelandic chronicles that constitute incontrovertible evidence as to somewhat permanent colonization in Greenland, and visits at least to the mainland of North America well to the south of the mouth of the St. Lawrence river, belong to the last half century, and these with other evidence of equally modern date, so far as accessibility is concerned, have served materially to alter our point of view. The first semi-modern writer to call attention to the voyages from Iceland to Greenland and Vinland, as the Norsemen called the continent of which they certainly knew something, was Arngrim Jonsson, who wrote in the first half of the seventeenth century; but his evidence lay unheeded until a very short time ago, and it is really less than fifteen years since full justice was done to the subject by historians. Nor does the fuller information that recent research has placed at our disposal, in any way tend to rob Columbus' exploit of its glory. It merely enables us to read the history of a part of the world in a different and more satisfactory way than before.

When we come to think of Columbus himself and of his record breaking first voyage, we need not be surprised to find that much information has been added to our stock of knowledge concerning the reasons which led to his convictions that he must land somewhere on the shores of China, if he sailed west from Cadiz; the difficulties with which he had to contend in securing the necessary assistance in carrying out his convictions (we omit reference to the fundamental mistake in those convictions, for consideration at another time); and the results—positive and negative—of that wonderful first voyage. M. Harrisse (born an American but a Frenchman by adoption), Henry Stevens, John Fiske, and a great many others, have dug into the archives of Europe with a success that is astonishing and which justifies the belief that those lodes have not yet been exhausted. For example; the original Latin text of a letter written by Paolo del Pozzo dei Toscanelli to Fernando Martinez, was found only a few years ago, in the handwriting of Columbus himself, upon the fly-leaves of his copy of the Historia rerum ubique Gestarum of Aeneas Sylvius Piccolomini (Pope Pius II.), published at Venice in 1477, in folio. This book had been long preserved in the Colombina at Seville, but nobody, apparently, had noticed this manuscript addition; and inasmuch as the physicist, Paul, sets forth his conviction that a due west course from the Canaries would bring one to Cipango, its value as bearing out Columbus' own opinion, is important. The original of a second letter from the same Paul to Columbus, is believed to exist somewhere, and it is not too much to hope that it may yet be found. Many similar documents have been unearthed of late years, but an enumeration of them, if that were practicable, would be merely tedious.*

Historical investigation is now something vastly different from compilation; it would have seemed utterly undignified for an historian two hundred years ago to study account-books and such materials for data; yet some very puzzling questions have been finally and satisfactorily answered by just such commonplace evidence. Since then, our knowledge of events of four hundred years ago, in one particular case, is clarified by careful scrutiny to-day, may we not hope that the investigations which are now being carried on by the Historiographical Bureau of the Japanese Government, will not cast out any scrap of evidence as being too trivial and that the result of its work, if they do not enable us to push back the veil which shuts off the remote past, will yet enable us to read Japanese history more clearly than we now can?

* The manuscript of a book, or group of three pamphlets, which Americus Vesputius wrote under the title Quattro Giornate, "Four Journeys," is always spoken of as "Lost," but one hesitates to say too positively about any book that it has perished.

THE STORM.

The following telegrams regarding the storm on July 19, were delayed on account of the damage done to the land lines:—

NAGASAKI.—The Korean steamer Yanmo went ashore on the night of July 18th and was floated on the following morning. The ship was slightly damaged. Many fishing boats capsized sixty miles south-west of Goto island, and some 160 fishermen took refuge at Onna-jima, an uninhabited island. Several hundred fishermen are reported to have been drowned. Many of them were searching for coral at the time. An official telegram adds that sixty fishing boats with about 500 fishermen are missing.

SHIZUOKA.—All rivers in this district overflowed their banks, causing damage to cultivated fields, bridges, roads, buildings and the railway. Fortunately there was no injury to life.

AOMORI.—Owing to an inundation, 960 houses in this city were flooded, and 600 homeless people are being supported by the local government. Cultivated fields were severely damaged.

NUMADZU.—Early on the morning of July 21st, a section of the Tokaido Railway near Numadzu was damaged and traffic was interrupted. It was resumed a little before noon.

KAGOSHIMA.—Fourteen fishing boats with about 350 fishermen from the villages of Tonan and Seinan, Kawabe district, are missing.

the post of Commercial Attache at Peking and at home Mr. Davidson's name is prominently mentioned as the most likely man to secure the appointment. In the interest of American trade in China, we sincerely hope Mr. Davidson will be America's first Commercial Attache, for in him are combined all the qualities necessary for the incumbent of such a position.—Shanghai Times.

On July 26th, the Sasebo Prize Court delivered a decision as to the captured Russian hospital ship Orel, confiscating the hull. No petition had been lodged. The chief accountant of the ship, however, lodged a petition asking for the release of francs 57,002 on board the vessel. The examination will take place on July 28th.

Mr. Sakamoto, widow of the late Mr. Ryuma Sakamoto, one of the most prominent leaders of the Kinno-to, the party of imperialism before the Restoration, is reported to be seriously ill. She is now living at the Kwan temple, Yokosuka. Admiral Inouye, Commander-in-Chief of the Yokosuka Naval Station, has paid a visit to her. She, like her husband, belonged to the Tosa clan.

AMERICAN TOPICS.

Texas was swept by a tornado on July 5 which did an immense amount of damage in Montague country, and involved the loss of 40 lives.

The Massachusetts Park Commission refuses to acknowledge automobiles as pleasure carriages, although they are used chiefly everywhere for that purpose. The Commission has labeled certain reserved roadways in the parks with this notice: "For Pleasure Vehicles Only; Motor Carriages Not Allowed."

Mr. Tom L. Johnson is an aspirant for the Democratic nomination for President in 1908 and is going to seek this nomination on a platform declaring for Government ownership of transportation lines. This is said to be the underlying motive of Johnson in taking so active an interest in the effort to municipalize the Chicago traction lines.

Mississippi is about to raise a State's pack of bloodhounds from the purest blood. It has been prompted to do this because of the numerous recent failures with the bloodhounds now employed. The breed has been allowed to degenerate since the days when fugitive slaves were hunted by Southern planters with dogs, and it has been decided to restore the old-time standard of canine efficiency.

Five years after the great storm which practically laid it desolate Galveston has been rebuilt, with a new seawall three miles long, sixteen feet wide at the base, five feet wide at the top and seventeen feet above mean low tide. Extending toward the sea in front of this great seawall is an apron of granite blocks, twenty-seven feet wide by four feet thick, to ward off another great storm or heavy currents. This great seawall has been built by the citizens of Galveston, who are worthy of hearty praise for the courage and enterprise they have shown. Few disasters so sweeping have been repaired so speedily.

"Borax Bill" Parkinson, known all over America and Europe as the driver of a twenty-mule team, and who for a long time prior to twenty years ago braved the dangers of Death valley in the Artagosa desert in California, every month making a trip of 150 miles into the desert with his famous team, is dead. Parkinson died in Danville, Ill., as the result of an overdose of morphine, according to the report of the officials of the company for which he worked, and "from suicide by morphine," according to the verdict of the Coroner's jury. He had lived for years in semi-retirement, and the one pleasure of his life seemed to lay in reciting his famous achievements on the desert.

The provisional contract for the unification of the consolidated debt of 1881 and the 5 per cent. loan of 1896 of Venezuela, which has been submitted to bondholders, provides for a new loan of £5,229,700 of 3 per cent. bonds. The new loan is not only a direct obligation of the Government, but it is guaranteed by an irrevocable and preferential assignment of 25 per cent. of the ordinary customs duties. Until the total payment of the liabilities, to which 30 per cent. of the customs revenues of La Guayra and Puerto Cabello is assigned, 60 per cent. of the advance customs duties of all the other ports of Venezuela shall be temporarily substituted. The debt of 1888 is to be exchanged at the rate of 72½ per cent. and the loan of 1896 at par. Interest in arrears on the two debts up to December 31, 1904, shall be funded at par.

San Francisco's commerce shows a big increase for the eleven months ended May 31st, according to the official figures issued on June 29. Imports through San Francisco for this period were $43,077,637, against $34,675,255 for the same period last year, an increase of $8,402,382. Exports for eleven months ended May, 1905, were $46,219,174, against $30,674,805 for last year, an increase of $15,544,369. Puget sound ports show a gratifying increase in exports, the total for eleven months being $37,877,195, against $21,564,860 last year, but imports have fallen off badly. The total imports for eleven months past were $6,828,965, against $10,814,364 last year. San Francisco during the past eleven months transacted two-thirds of the entire import commerce of the Pacific Coast and one-half of all the export commerce.

Mr. Secretary of War Taft has emphatically put an end to the reports that he would succeed Chief Justice Melville W. Fuller of Chicago on the bench of the Supreme Court. The report was current, that Justice Fuller was to be appointed a member of The Hague tribunal, to make way for Secretary Taft. "I have heard such stories many times before," said the Secretary, "but never from a source to which credit could be given. I know absolutely nothing about such a plan, and it would be fair to infer that I would know something if any such plan were contemplated at this time." Confirmation of this comes second-handed from Chief Justice Fuller himself. He recently told a close friend that he never contemplated resigning from the bench. He said no Chief Justice of the Supreme Court had ever done so, and he did not propose to violate precedent.

The Chicago Tribune for a decade has waged war on the use of the toy pistol, the mammoth firecracker and other devices for making hideous popular celebration of the Fourth of July. This year, in an elaborate article, it calls attention to a new toy pistol, invented recently, which shoots ordinary parlor matches, igniting them as they issue from the tiny barrel. Fully 300,000 of these toy pistols have been manufactured and were ready for distribution when Mayor Dunne issued an order forbidding their sale or use. The Chief of the Fire Department examined a number of these pistols and found that the match was carried from five to twenty feet, according to the amount of sulphur on the head, but that it was always burning when it fell. It is easy to see the potential power of destruction in such an innocent looking toy. If turned over to energetic boys these pistols would have furnished cause for a second great Chicago fire.

Ever since the return of Chief Engineer Wallace from Panama some time ago, remarks Bradstreet's, rumour has been busy regarding conditions in the Canal Zone. In spite of the reorganization of the Canal Commission, it was said, friction in the management of affairs had not been eliminated, and it was suggested that unsatisfactory conditions there had much to do with Mr. Wallace's visit to the United States. Whatever may be the case in this respect—and it is only fair to say that the officials at Washington deny that there has been any friction—a new situation has been precipitated by the resignation of Mr. Wallace as chief engineer of the canal, to enter the employ of some unnamed corporation system at a salary largely exceeding that paid him by the Government. This action of Mr. Wallace has aroused much feeling among the Government officials, who declare that he has received the constant and ungrudging support of the Government; that he has had nothing to complain of, and that the departure from the service at so early a stage in the progress of the work does not constitute fair treatment to the Government which appointed and sustained him. Of course there may be another side to the story; if so, it will make its appearance in due time. Mr. Wallace's resignation has been accepted, and Mr. John T. Stevens, first vice-president of the Rock Island road, who built the Rocky Mountain section of the Great Northern Railroad, has been appointed to succeed him as chief engineer of the Panama canal.

A semi-official announcement was made in New York on July 3rd that the late Mr. John Hay was the author of "The Bread Winners," the mysterious and much-discussed novel which, twenty-three years ago, was the reigning literary sensation. Its authorship has been a puzzle to the world of letters ever since its publication. Those who were in touch with the publishers of the work have never denied that Hay was the author. Mr. Henry Alden, the veteran editor of Harper's Magazine, said:—"I have not absolute evidence at hand to show that Hay wrote 'The Bread Winners,' but I think no mistake would be made in saying that he did. For several years I have understood so and I think there can be no question of it." "The Bread Winners" was published by Harpers. It sharply criticises the methods of the labour unions. The book is noted for its epigrams.

The biggest deal ever put through in Newfoundland and one that cannot fail to have a tremendous influence on the future of the island colony has just been closed. The expenditure of many millions of dollars is involved in the transaction, which gives the Harmsworths of London, timber lands of nearly 3,500 square miles in extent, from which they will obtain sufficient pulpwood to enable them to manufacture 200 tons of paper daily. From the Government of the colony Harmsworth's newspaper syndicate has leased for a term of ninety-nine years, with an option of renewal at the end of that period, a tract of land containing 3,000 square miles of timber. In addition to this the syndicate has purchased outright 1100 square miles of territory from the timber estates, and 303 square miles from the Reid Company. It is the intention of the syndicate to proceed at once with the erection of mills in the centre of the island. These will cost about $3,000,000 and will employ upward of 1000 men.

American journals are congratulating themselves that the Fourth of July celebrations passed off this year with less than a hundred violent deaths throughout the United States. At San Francisco, John Barry, a longshoreman, was about to return to his work on the steamship Manchuria, when near Second and Brannan streets he saw George Lettes and Charles Hansen preparing to fire a cannon a foot and a half long. Barry stopped to watch them. The cannon was touched off and the two men ran for cover. There was a deafening report. The cannon exploded with the force of a shell. A fragment struck Barry, tearing half of his face and part of one lobe of his brain away. He died before reaching hospital. A little Italian boy also met his death in San Francisco through looking down a cannon. During the ceremony of firing the national salute of 45 guns at Fort Warren, Boston harbour, the charge of the sixteenth round exploded prematurely, injuring Privates J. J. Buckley and H. McNeill of the Ninety-sixth Company Coast Artillery. McNeill was fatally hurt.

Announcements have just been made concerning the inception of a new and important Canadian railway enterprise. The Central Railway Company of Canada, successor to the Ottawa Railway Company, has obtained large powers from the legislature of Ontario, under which it is authorized to construct a railway line between Montreal, Ottawa and a port on Georgian bay, which will probably be Midland, Ont. The route of the new road is almost an air line and will be the shortest possible between Montreal and the upper lakes, the total distance to be about 340 miles. In addition to this there will be branches giving the new company connections with Toronto and other points in western Ontario, it being claimed that it will open up hitherto undeveloped districts in that province. The financial arrangements in connection with the construction of the road have not yet been completed, but it is stated that work upon the new line will proceed rapidly and that it will be pushed to completion in a speedy manner. This development emphasizes the fact that the Canadian provinces are likely to be the scene of an enormous amount of new-railroad connection during the next years.

President Hadley of Yale announced at the alumni dinner on June 28 that a gift of $1,000,000 had been recently made by Mr. John D. Rockefeller. President Hadley also said that $2,000,000 in all have been given to the university within a comparatively recent time, the other million being subscribed by graduates, in sums varying from $50,000 to $250,000. The names of the latter donors were not made public. President Hadley said that the "only condition of any kind underlying Mr. Rockefeller's gift is that the money is to be invested in income-producing securities and preserved inviolate as an endowment for the institution, the annual income only to be used for current expenses." He added that these two millions subscribed were to be considered merely the beginning of an endowment fund which must at least be doubled in the next year if Yale is to maintain her position in the educational world. The announcement of the gifts was received with loud applause. Degrees were awarded to 669 candidates at Yale on June 28 in connection with the formal exercises which annually mark the closing day of commencement week festivities.

Apocryphal of the prospective increase of the U. S. Navy by 3000 sailors, the Evening Post feels that something ought to be done to enable the Navy to keep its sailors after it gets them. Desertion, as every one knows, is a very prevalent and costly evil both in the Navy and in the Army. The Post quotes the Army and Navy Journal as admitting that 500 men deserted from the North Atlantic fleet last fall, of whom no less than 100 fled from one battle-ship. "Good ships," says the Post, "are all very well, but if our sailors run away from them in droves, what then? Ought not that battle-ship commander who lost one-fifth of his crew to have been called on for an explanation?" Desertion, its causes, and the possible remedies for it are extensively discussed both in the Army and in the Navy, and in the Army one of the recognized causes is inconsiderate treatment of the enlisted men by young, inexperienced and unfit officers. The Navy has not been swamped, as the Army has, by officers appointed from civil life, but, undoubtedly, if there are Naval officers who make things needlessly unpleasant for their men, they ought to be overhauled.

Now that the multi-millionaire, William Ziegler, is dead, the disposition of his estate promises to become the subject of fierce contention unless compromised. With the exception of an annuity of $50,000 to the widow, the $30,000,000 estate has been bequeathed to his adopted son, whose true father, George Brandt, was a half brother of the decedent. The boy was adopted when only 3 years old, and is now 14. During Ziegler's life the boy was kept totally ignorant of his true parentage and was so filially loyal to his foster father that the strongest bond of affection was formed between them. With his great estate, Ziegler bequeathed to his heir his personal interest in Arctic exploration, which he is pledged to carry on. The boy is described as an unusually bright and sensible youth—one who, if he lives to attain maturity, is not likely to squander or otherwise misuse the wealth bestowed on him. The estate has, however, been placed in charge of three executors or trustees, who are to manage it until young William reaches the age of 25, when a partial distribution is to be made. This is to be continued until he reaches the age of 40, when the trust expires. It is somewhat remarkable, of course, that the elder Ziegler should have disinherited his sister and others bound equally close to him by the bonds of kinship, in favor of his adopted son; and, in the light of the costly litigation which has followed the disposition of other large estates and which has frequently ended in the judicial dissolution of similar trusts, it is not improbable that a compromise will be arranged, which will satisfy all concerned.

Archbishop Farley declared at Carnegie Hall, New York, on June 19, at the commencement exercises of the College of St. Francis Xavier, that the evils of divorce were fast undermining the walls of American society, and that the whole structure would shortly collapse should no hand be raised to ward off the advance of this tendency. The Archbishop said: "I believe no President since Washington's time has had a more beneficial effect on the roots of society and the family than Roosevelt has by means of his frank declaration. Not only does the President preach the doctrine he believes, but he exemplifies it in his own life and his own family stands as an illustration of what the Nation's executive thinks and says of the race standards. It is likewise gratifying to find that the President has not confined his labours in this direction to his own circle wholly, but the fact is made known to me that the Cabinet has taken this question up and will deal with it. When the heads of our Government take up a problem of this grave nature there can be no need for the people doubting that the situation must be gravely considered, and we feel that much good will be done if effort is properly directed."

East-bound ocean passenger traffic from New York to British and continental ports this summer will surpass by many thousands all preceding records. Already by the middle of June the total for 1905 was nearing the half mark of the total of 1904, and the annual rush to Europe has only begun. The figures up to June 15 had passed the 60,000 mark. It can be safely said that the total now is at least 80,000. The present bookings will increase this by 30,000 by the middle of July. Add to this the figures for August, September and the rest of the year and it will be easily seen that 1905 will go beyond the 200,000 mark. For the past six years the New York transatlantic passenger trade has been increasing steadily. In only one year of the six have the figures fallen behind the preceding year. In that case the preceding year happened to be 1900. That was the year of the Paris Exposition. The totals for the six years are:

	First class	Second class	Total
1904.....	104,708	94,641	199,348
1903.....	102,231	88,402	190,633
1902.....	102,354	78,000	181,354
1901.....	100,627	72,784	173,411
1900.....	104,790	85,747	190,537
1899.....	97,593	66,6—	164,296

All previous records as to the magnitude of the half-yearly interest and dividend disbursements seem to be broken by those which matured on July 1st. Estimates of the aggregate sum which will be paid out at New York and other cities are necessarily incomplete and vary considerably as to the total amounts involved. It would seem, however, that the July 1 payments by corporations, both railroad and industrial, as well as by banks and institutions, which fall due reach a total of at least $140,000,000, which sum compares with about $136,000,000 disbursed for the same causes on January 1, and with similar payments of about $134,000,000 on July 1, 1904. The increase of the payments over those of six months ago is accordingly upward of $4,000,000, while they represent a gain of some $6,000,000 above the figures for the half-yearly payments at this time a year ago. It is to be noted that railroads and banking institutions contribute largely to the present increase, owing to the fact that a number of important railroads have advanced their dividend rates, while others which have not heretofore been included in the dividend-paying list now rank in that category for the first time. It is also noticeable that in spite of the suspension or reduction of dividends by several industrial corporations of considerable importance, organizations of that character contribute largely to the general result.

The dismissal of Mr. Herbert W. Bowen, for some years United States Minister to Venezuela, and the exoneration of Assistant Secretary of State Francis B. Loomis of the allegations brought against him by Bowen, are the outcome of the controversy which has attracted wide attention for many months past. This disposition of the case is made by President Roosevelt in a letter addressed to Secretary Taft, approving Taft's report on his findings and conclusions in the case. The President scathingly arraigns Minister Bowen, declaring that his conduct is "especially reprehensible"; that Bowen asked one of his witnesses to enter the employ of a certain company for the purpose, "in plain words, of stealing" documents which he hoped might incriminate Loomis, and that Bowen "has evidently for many months—indeed, for the last two years—devoted himself" to hunting up scandal and gossip until it became a monomania and caused him "to show complete disloyalty" to the country he represented. The President says he had hoped to promote Bowen, as during much of his service he had done good work, but that his usefulness in the diplomatic service is now at an end. The President adds that he would direct that Bowen's resignation be requested but for his statement that he would consider a resignation an admission of misconduct, and the dismissal is therefore ordered.

The railroads east of Chicago have lost more than $1,000,000 during the last seven months through a decrease in the beef export trade. This statement was made by a traffic official of one of the largest Eastern railroads, and he supplemented it by saying that the United States would ere long lose practically all of the export traffic in packing-house products. In this same connection it is said that representatives of the "Big Four" packers of Chicago are now in the Argentine Republic investigating the beef industry there, with a possible view to securing a monopoly. That this situation is alarming both from the traffic and the trade standpoint is shown by the fact that during the last eleven months the money value of this export traffic has decreased over $4,000,000, and is still on a rapid decline. It is the purpose of the packing-house interests either to secure a monopoly of the Argentine beef industry or to make business changes at home to meet competition. Those interested in the matter have noticed a gradual decline in the export beef industry for more than two years, and it has been the occasion of inquiry for many months. It is reported that the great diversion of this traffic from the United States is due to Argentine packing-houses.

CORRESPONDENCE

MR. BERRY'S FINAL WORD.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—It would be interesting to know how many columns of your valuable space Mr. Berry has been allowed to fill with entirely irrelevant and offensively personal matter, ostensibly called forth by an article against the secularization of Christianity, but in reality incited by low-class personal animus against the writer of the article. With all due deference to your judgment, Sir, it seems to me that limits should be placed on the liberty allowed to wild young writers like Mr. Berry to attack personally men who have contributed articles to your columns for a quarter of a century. From first to last Mr. Berry has shown thorough incompetence to understand the point of view of the writer of the original article and has gone off into side issues and into lengthy statements of his own belief and views, in which the majority of your readers take no kind of interest. Into the way in which Mr. Berry has shifted his ground from letter to letter, into his many subterfuges, into his shallow arguments and ignorance of the conclusions which more matured minds have reached, I will not go, but leave him with the advice, "Begin a controversy by showing that you have mastered the point of view of your opponent."

I am, Sir, THE WRITER OF THE ARTICLE.

Tokyo, July 24th, 1905.

ESPERANTO.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I should like, with your kind permission, to say a few words in favour of Esperanto, the new artificial language which is making such headway in England. It was invented by Dr. Zamenhof, of Warsaw, and has been published about twelve or thirteen years on the continent of Europe, but perhaps barely two years in England, though there are Englishmen who have known the language for a longer period. It was brought to my notice by a friend who wanted me to study it with him, but, knowing what had been the fate of former attempts at artificial languages, I had no idea of learning it, but was converted after looking through the textbook for an hour. I had the same idea as many other people, namely, that the idea was impossible. I am, however, convinced that it is not only possible, but that it is an accomplished fact. The inventor must have been a genius. It cannot be called a totally artificial language, for it consists of the elements of the Indo-Germanic stock made regular. There is not an exception to a rule in the language! How pleasant this would be, and what trouble it would save the writer, a teacher of English, were this the case in his own language! Some have argued that it would be as hard for Japanese to learn and speak as English would be; but that is not so, for my experience in English is that I teach hardly anything but exceptions. There are several magazines published in Esperanto. One, which I have before me now, is called the "Internacia Scienca Revuo; Monata Organo en Esperanto," which needs no translation into English. Among its contributors are some well-known professors and scientists in France, England, Belgium, Germany, and other countries. When I started the study of the language, there was no magazine published in England to support it; there are now two. There are also magazines published in France, Holland, Belgium, Russia, Bohemia, Bulgaria, Switzerland, Italy, Spain, Algeria, Canada, etc., in some of which countries from two to four magazines are published. I studied the text-book two hours a day for four days, and then wrote letters—with some little difficulty—to Europe and South America. I studied it on and off during the summer of 1903, since which time I have received and sent about six hundred post cards and letters in that language. I have used it principally as an aid in the collection of picture cards and postage stamps. Of the latter I have now about 1,700 different specimens from about sixty-five different countries, and I began to collect in January last year. Of course this is not the main object in learning the language; I did so only from choice. I have had long and interesting correspondence with people in European countries on various topics, and have been able to gain and furnish information much more easily than would have otherwise been the case.

To learn the grammar is mere child's play, especially to any one who knows anything of grammar; and to those who have a knowledge of Latin, the memorizing of the words is easy. To give an idea of the grammar; every noun ends in o, as revuo, a review, scienca, a science, libro, a book; every adjective ends in a, as scienca, scientific, alta, high, varma, warm; every adverb ends in e, as sciencie, scientifically, alte, highly, varme, warmly; every infinitive ends in i, as kuri, to run, skribi, to write the present tense ends in as, mi skribas, I write, am writing, the past in is, mi skribis, I wrote, was writing, etc. If it should be necessary to make a clear distinction between the times expressed by I write and I am writing, it can be done with perfect ease, yet the simple tenses are, as a rule, quite sufficient. The accusative case is marked by the addition of n to the regular termination, and adjectives agree with the nouns they modify in number and case, number being denoted by the addition of j (pronounced as a short e, or y in body): thus Bona infano, a good child.

Mi vidis bonan infanon, I saw a good child.

La bonaj infanoj estas en la domo, the good children are in the house.

Mi vidis la bonajn infanojn, I saw the good children.

This addition of n to mark the accusative case makes it possible to write the words in almost any order, as is the case in Latin, without any fear of ambiguity. In letters I have received from Russia, Italy, Turkey, India, etc., there have been slight variations in the order of words, but never the least doubt as to the intention of the writer.

The addition of the vowels o, a, and e, to mark the parts of speech can be used in almost any case. For instance, there is a prefix which shows opposites, (mal), as alta, high, malalta, low; levi, to raise, mallevi, to lower; but this prefix may itself be a word, as, mala, contrary, male, contrarily; mali, to be contrary, to oppose. With regard to this prefix, mal, it can easily be seen what an immense amount of labour it saves in the memorizing of words. Esperanto contains about thirty such prefixes and suffixes, which in a similar way save an immense amount of study.

With regard to pronunciation, it is not difficult. There are five vowels—the same as in Japanese. There is only one sound not found in English, that is the ch of the German buch. Every letter is sounded. No letter has two sounds. The vowels are all of one length. The accent is always on the penult. It is easy to speak, having a pleasant sound. The writer spoke Esperanto for five hours at a stretch with a gentleman with whose native language he has a very limited knowledge, and there was not the least difficulty in being understood.

Among those who support the language may be mentioned the names of Count Leo Tolstoi, the late Jules Verne, Dr. Lloyd, the well-known phonetician of Liverpool University, and others whose names I cannot remember. It should be clearly understood that the inventor never intended this language to supplant any other. It is only intended to be an auxiliary language for use between peoples whose tongues are mutually unintelligible. It took me several years to learn French, and perhaps a month to learn Esperanto; but I should not dare to attempt a public speech in the former without considerable preparation, whereas in the latter I should not have much hesitation.

I am so convinced of the future utility of this language that I shall be glad to give lessons in it, by correspondence, free of charge, the learner paying only the postage and for any text-books he may wish to purchase. Those who desire to take up the course will kindly address "Esperantist" care of the Japan Mail. The lessons will commence about the 15th of September, but the writer would like to receive applications as soon as possible, so that he may know how many papers should be prepared. Apologizing for having taken up so much of your space,

I am, dear Sir, very faithfully yours,

ESPERANTIST.

WHAT JAPAN EXPECTS FROM MANCHURIA.

[BY COUNT OKUMA, TRANSLATED AND EDITED BY ADACHI KINOSUKE FOR "PUBLIC OPINION."]

The time for the practical solution of the Korean and Manchurian problems is now right at hand. The progress of affairs up to date has revived, once again, the interest in their immediate settlement. With the revival has come also and happily the opportunities carrying with them the imperative demand which no longer permits the freedom of an empty talk across a table. In short, the time is ripe when the fruits of many years of investigation and discussion should ripen into history. The evidences of the ever-increasing interest on the part of Nippon in the problem have been many. Since last year, you have noticed that many members of the imperial diet have paid their visits to both Korea and Manchuria! Not only they, but also many leaders in commercial circles. Moreover, we hear a good deal of the organization of companies the object of which is to promote enterprises in Korea and Manchuria to develop the two countries. These are a few indications which tell you in what a serious mood our nation and the world at large are taking the problem.

As for the present war, it goes without saying that it had its root in political rather than economic conditions. Primarily, as is well known, it was for the preservation, independence, and autonomy of the imperial land—we have drawn the sword for the very existence of our country. Nevertheless, and very naturally, it could not be very well helped that the weightier questions of economy should accompany it all. Already the amount which has been expended for the war and that which has been appropriated for the same purpose, according to the reports of authorities, surpass the huge amount of three hundred million dollars. And this amount alone is very far from representing the actual price which we are called upon to pay for the war. The several hundred thousands of young men who are the very marrow of the nation's productive power have for many days and moons forsaken the ploughs and taken up arms. Not a few of them have lost their lives. And the effect of it all must needs be great. In my judgment, the loss which economic Nippon sustains from this indirect cause is much greater than the direct expenditure of money.

Let us admit, as true, that by the appeal to arms, and as the result of the uninterrupted succession of victories on land and sea, we have attained, after a fashion, and in a general way, our political ends in Korea and Manchuria by rooting out from those countries the might of Russia. There still remains unsolved, however, this question of how to make good the economic loss caused by and resulting from this disturbance. With the growth of Nippon's prestige and power over Korea and Manchuria, there certainly will be an attempt made to expand our economic influence in the same direction. And in this we must look for the most effective solution of the important question; for the manner in and through which we might be able to restore the economic waste caused by this war.

The population of Nippon has increased with unusual rapidity. Already it is mounting beyond fifty millions. At the opening of the country to international intercourse, it was reckoned at about thirty millions. The increase of some twenty millions of people has been brought about within a comparatively short time. And who can say that the years which are to follow from this time on will not bring about a still greater ratio of increase than the years which have gone?

This rapid increase in population has caused a complete and sudden change in the economic conditions of the country. For many years following the opening of the country for foreign trade, Nippon produced, except in a rare year of extreme bad crops, more than enough to satisfy the home demand. In fact, we exported no modest amount of such food stuff as the people at home had no need of. With the Chino-Nippon war as a pivotal point, however, the situation took a sudden and decided change. Years that followed it told, with an ever-increasing emphasis, of the growing scarcity of food stuff in the land; Nippon became a land of insufficient supply. Quite naturally, she began to feel keenly the effect of her rapidly increasing population. At the same time, and this, quite naturally too, the standard of life soared abruptly. The progress in agriculture was, leisurely, and forgot utterly to keep pace with the steady demand of the increasing population. Moreover, the soil at home is sorely limited.

As it was with agriculture, so also with the development of industrial and commercial Nippon. To be sure, for a time, it did seem as if in these two directions, the nation had measured her tread pretty bravely with the rapid and revolutionary transition of things. But not so long after that we came to see with regret that with all their strenuous efforts the national activity, even in these two lines, was inadequate. And so it came to pass that, not only in the year of scanty yield, but also in the years which are considered good, we saw that the home production was not sufficient for the home demand.

JAPAN'S CONCLUSION.

It was in those unhappy years that the nation, in all the sobriety of wisdom and with all seriousness, sat down to evolve the solution of this all-important problem, and this is the conclusion to which many of the people are coming:

The products of the Nippon soil are not able to feed the increasing inhabitants of the land. Since salvation is not to be found in her agriculture, we were compelled to seek it in commerce and industry. For our commercial and industrial activity, the first important necessity is to find a solid and permanent field for its development. It would be difficult to point your finger to a happier sphere than the two neighbouring countries, Korea and Manchuria, as the stage for such future expansion and enterprises. Between them and our land is only a flow of a girdle-like channel of war. The historical relationships between us are not the shallowest. And at the present time the power and prestige of a victorious country are impressing themselves deep upon the soil and the consciousness of our neighbours. These fields, therefore, seem to be more than happy and the opportunity is golden for the extension of the commercial and the industrial activity of the nation over those two countries.

As for the geographical extent of these two neighbours of ours, they are more than three times as large as the empire of Nippon, while their population is less than half that of our own. Moreover, both Korea and Manchuria are famous for their soil. It would be a simple and natural thing if in the years to come Nippon should turn to them for food supply. Even in this day when everything seems to be in its primitive state in those countries we receive from them a goodly supply of beans, wheat, and other cereals. With the application of modern machinery in the development of the countries and improved means of transportation, and with the steady stream of the labouring class of Nippon immigrating thither, we shall no doubt see a steady increase in the yield of the lands.

Both Korea and Manchuria are rich in raw materials; neither of them is a manufacturing centre. We can receive from them raw materials; we can export to them the manufactures. Upon such exchange is built a permanent prosperity of trade. With the growth of activity based on such exchange, will come also the profitable growth of shipping.

shipbuilding, railway transportation and railway construction, banking and insurance and all other branches of business which have direct or indirect connection with such international trade. Then encourage immigration; that would reduce internal expenditure and consumption to the minimum. Urge the expansion and growth of productive industries abroad among our colonies; this will insure at once a profitable occupation for a number of our people; and also by engaging in such activity they would be naturally able to raise the standard of life.

To the limited horizon of an individual, and from the standpoint of the near-sighted, the economic activities of our people in Korea and Manchuria might not promise much profit. Viewed with the larger eye of a national economy over the far horizon of many years, our activity in the two countries will do much in solving the troublesome problem of the ever-increasing population, and all the annoying questions arising from the lack of food stuff. That is not all; such economic activities on the part of Nippon immigrants to the two countries would prove also a great blessing to our neighbours. The development of natural resources attendant upon such activities will of necessity be great.

Korea is mountainous. She might fail to make good the food wishes of some of the good people at home whose dreamings are upon the yield of her soil alone. The area under cultivation is not extensive. Nevertheless, with the application of wisdom and patience, one might introduce, in addition to what are already cultivated there, many new things, and with even those which have been native to the soil one can do much in improving them by careful examination of seeds and adaptation to the diverse climatic conditions that govern the soil, to bring about a new era of productivity. As for Manchuria, wide and untamed stretch her great plains. Especially in the valleys of the Liao and the Sungari, their fertility has passed into proverb. The wheat grown there is already covering the wheat markets with a sensational fame; it has been said—and by those not given to wild rhetoric, too—that it even exceeds that of Canada. Of late with the increase of demand for bread in Nippon and also for the making of cakes, the importation of flour has been active. Long since, the value of such import into our country has passed the twenty-thousand yen mark annually. The demand for malt has been active also. Germany and America have supplied our demand along these lines hitherto, but Manchuria has geographical advantages over Europe and America in the export trade with Nippon.

A RIVAL OF THE GERMAN SUGAR-BEET.

For the cultivation of sugar-beet, also, Manchuria is a tempting field. In climate she is not so very different from Germany. What, therefore, is being successfully cultivated in Germany should not have much difficulty in thriving in Manchuria. The profit both Manchuria and Nippon will receive from this will be great. The consumption of sugar in Nippon has increased of recent years in a marvellous degree. Annually, it exceeds over two hundred and fifty thousand tons. Within twenty or thirty years it come it would easily reach from half a million to seven hundred thousand tons.

The increase of demand in Nippon for woollen goods is marked. The raw wool imported into the country amounts in value to over ten million yen. It is steadily increasing. If in the future we could import the raw wool from Manchuria—and as the demand for woollens in Manchuria would also be increased—the prospect for the manufacture of woollen goods in Nippon is tempting indeed. In this the growth of the industry of to-day can not be compared with that of the days to come. Moreover, if our farmers and cattlemen were to shift the stage of their activity into the plains of Manchuria, the national profit would not stop with the gains in cereals and woollens—it would extend to all the different lines of business closely connected with agriculture and stock-farming.

The wealth buried in the earth—coal, gold, silver—has a tempting tale for a number of people; for the two countries promise much for mining enterprises. The wooded stretch from the Chohaku range to the headwaters of the Yalu and the timber which clothes the great and extensive heights which ride the space between the Tumen to the headwaters of the Sungari are quite enough to make the mouths of our timber merchants water. In the opening and developing these many fountains of wealth there is nothing more important than the establishment of suitable transportation facilities over these vast distances. The work is a difficult one; it demands a capital of large proportions. Perhaps the work is beyond the power of an individual or even of a private company. These enterprises, therefore, might naturally look to the State for their establishment—just as the Seoul-Wiju railway has done. The natural growth of that line is over the plains of Manchuria. It now runs from Fusan to Wiju; from Wiju, it must make its way to the East China Railway, and thence make its connections with the network of rail spreading beyond, into China and Siberia. Branches to this main line will not be few; all the mining and commercial centres must of necessity be connected.

If this work of establishing the artery of transportation is important enough both in magnitude and in the difficulties attendant upon it to call for the activities of state, the state enterprise should certainly stop where it can be reasonably and profitably taken up by individual and private effort. Above all is it necessary that there be the fullest freedom for the arms and legs of the enterprises that are to be started there. If there are works that pass the ability of the Nippon people, it would be a happy thing indeed to invite the co-operation of English and Americans. The manufacture of sugar and a number of other enterprises are sure to call for just such association of enterprises. Also it would be a very happy thing if our people were to enter into cordial understanding with the natives of Manchuria and the Chinese of other provinces to carry on the work of development.

Whatever be the detail, one thing must always be kept in view, and that, too, with the greatest emphasis—that the principle of the open door should be respected. The goal of this war is the "open door," the acquisition of territory is out of the question. It is imperative that the Nippon government should, under some article of agreement, restore to China the full sovereignty of Manchuria. It might be added, of course, that the restoration of the country should follow the restoration of peace. It must be after we shall have exterminated completely all roots of danger and evil. Moreover, the time and manner of restoration will have an important effect on the economic future of the land. For the improvement of the administration, for the preservation of permanent order in the land, the progress of things might find it convenient to have a certain armed force within reach.

Now the economic loss by war which we have already suffered is not small, both direct and indirect. However, if the yet undeveloped wealth of these two countries were to be opened in the manner above stated, it would be more than sufficient to reimburse us.

Who knows but that the happy fruit of the open-door policy in Manchuria might have a good and lasting effect upon her neighbour, Russia? Even Russia might be induced to see the wisdom of so healthy a policy; and she, too, with a sudden turn, might try to open her own doors. Would it not be happy indeed for us, if we might be permitted to see the day when the people of Nippon will try their brawn and brains over the plains of Siberia?

There are some among us who value only the occupation of territories; who hold that it is impossible to develop the fountains of wealth unless we begin by acquiring the territory. A hundred enterprises—according to their conviction—would end in naught under any other circumstances, and they are troubled. Nevertheless, with such countries as Korea and Manchuria, where the prestige and power and influence of our country are now so predominant, such forebodings are void of reason.

Because of the power which the present war has added unto Nippon, she occupies the position of vantage over Manchuria and Korea. Commercial and industrial Nippon is about to take a great aggressive step from an island realm into a continental sphere; we are facing the fateful day of unprecedented expansion into an experimental ground.

THE GRAND HOTEL, LIMITED.

Report of the Directors to be submitted at the thirty-second semi-annual ordinary general meeting of shareholders, to be held at the Grand Hotel, Yokohama, on Monday, the 31st day of July, 1905.

The profit and loss account, and statement of assets and liabilities, for the half year ended June 30th, 1905, accompany this report.

The net profit for the half year, after providing for general expenses, directors' and auditor's fees, and after writing off bad or doubtful debts, amount to yen 17,608.34, which it is proposed to apply as follows:—

In payment of a dividend of yen 6.00 per share for the half year 15,000.00
To be carried forward 2,608.34

The Directors regret to have to announce the retirement from the Board of Mr. Kaufmann owing to the demands of private affairs. It is the unanimous opinion of the Board that the vacancy thereby caused should remain unfilled with a view to final reduction of the number of Directors to three, as originally provided for in the Articles of Association.

It is proposed that the dividend shall be payable on the 1st day of August, when warrants will be issued.

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SPECIAL SERVICE.)

CHINA AND THE CONFERENCE.

London, July 20.
Replying to China's notification that she will refuse to recognise any arrangements made at the Peace Conference concerning Chinese interests unless she is previously consulted, Russia says that the war is between Russia and Japan. Peace must be negotiated by the Russo-Japanese plenipotentiaries. Russia, who is in relations of friendship with China, however, recognises that the latter is interested in certain questions that will be discussed.

REFORMS IN RUSSIA.

Later.
A great Zemstvo congress has begun at Moscow. The police have not interfered.
THE CRISIS IN HUNGARY.
The crisis in Hungary has culminated in the Opposition issuing a manifesto to the country urging the people to refuse to pay taxes for military service.

THE ALIENS BILL.

London, July 21.
The House of Commons has read the Aliens Exclusion Bill for the third time.
ROJESTVENSKY'S EXPLANATION.
Reuter's correspondent in Paris learns from St. Petersburg that the Tsar received Admiral Rojestvensky's report on the 10th of July. The Admiral ascribes his defeat in the Battle of the Sea of Japan to defects in his guns, the quality of the ammunition supplied him, and defects in his ships, all due to administrative corruption; and to the mutinous and incompetent crews which manned his ships. A mutiny broke out in the fleet at Madagascar and again off Formosa. Finally during the battle, when the crews of the Admiral Seniavin and the Admiral Apraxine refused to fight, part of the other crews followed their example.

ANOTHER BOMB OUTRAGE.

Later.

The Deputy-Governor of Finland has been wounded by a bomb as he was leaving the Senate. The thrower escaped.

PEACE PLENIPOTENTIARIES.

M. Witte has left St. Petersburg en route for Washington.

The N. P. steamer Minnesota, with Baron Komura, the Japanese plenipotentiary on board, has been sighted off the American coast.

London, July 22.

The Mayor of Seattle met Baron Komura and staff at the pier and conducted them to a special train waiting at the railway station.

London, July 26.

Baron Komura on his arrival in New York was welcomed by the Japanese Colony, who cheered him, and were accompanied by a band playing the Japanese national air.

London, July 27.

President Roosevelt receives Baron Komura informally on Friday.

M. de Witte has started for New York.

BRITISH GOVERNMENT DEFEATED.

London, July 22.

In Committee of Supply in the British House of Commons, Mr. John Redmond, Nationalist Member for Waterford, protested against the way the Irish Land Act was being administered, and moved the reduction of the vote for the Land Commission.

The proposal was carried by 199 to 196 votes.

There was a scene of prolonged excitement, the Opposition shouting exultingly.

In reply to Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Balfour, the Premier, declined for the present to state his intentions in view of the defeat, but said he would do so on Monday after consulting his colleagues.

Later.

The British Cabinet met yesterday. It is believed to have come to no decision.

The House of Commons this morning rushed through the Scotch Church Bill and then adjourned.

The lobbies of the Houses of Parliament swarmed with excited members who showed a marked disposition to regard the Government's defeat seriously.

London, July 23.

Mr. Balfour had a brief audience with the King last evening. It is stated that he informed His Majesty that he and his colleagues were agreed that the circumstances did not make it incumbent on them to resign.

Most of the papers now believe that Mr. Balfour proposes to have the Thursday's vote rescinded and to wind up the session with a dissolution in the autumn.

London, July 24.

Last evening it was understood that Mr. Balfour's remaining in office was largely due to the fact that important negotiations are proceeding with Japan. The present Government also desire to see the peace negotiations concluded.

London, July 25.

The papers are full of surmises and conjectures with reference to the date of dissolution but nothing is certain. There has been no further development of the crisis. The Liberal papers protest vehemently against the idea that foreign politics make resignation inadvisable.

Later.

The Government not having declined to resign, the debate in the House of Commons was unexpectedly terminated. The Government motion for adjournment was carried amid derisive laughter and cheers on the Government side.

London, July 26.

The Unionist papers approve of Mr. Balfour's decision to remain in office, deeming it right that his personal feelings should give way before national considerations.

BOMB EXPLOSION IN CONSTANTINOPLE.

London, July 23.

As the Sultan of Turkey was leaving the mosque a bomb was exploded in the courtyard. Several were killed and wounded. The Sultan was unhurt.

THE BISLEY WINNER.

Later.

Sergeant Conner of the East Surrey won the King's Prize at Bisley.

THE BOMB EXPLOSION AT CONSTANTINOPLE.

Twenty-four were killed and fifty-seven were wounded, 55 horses being injured by the bomb explosion at Constantinople.

THE WORLD'S SCULLING CHAMPIONSHIP.

The World's Sculling Championship was won by J. Stanbury, who beat G. Towns by two lengths.

NEW MILITARY APPOINTMENTS.

London, July 24.

General Forrestier Walker has been appointed Governor of Gibraltar. Lord Chelmsford has been appointed Governor of Queensland.

THE TSAR AND THE KAISER.

Reuter's correspondent at St. Petersburg telegraphs that the Tsar left Peterhof on board the Imperial Yacht Standart for Borgo, Finland, where he will meet the Kaiser at dinner on board the Hohenzollern.

London, July 26.

The Tsar has returned to Peterhof.

THE IMPERIAL CONFERENCE.

Later.

Endless theories are being ventilated with reference to the motives of the imperial meeting, from the natural desire of the sovereigns to discuss the political problems confronting Europe to the designs of the Kaiser to combine Germany, Russia and France against Japan in view of the peace negotiations.

[Received at the Military Head Quarters, p.m. 20th.]

REPORT FROM THE KARAFUTO LANDING ARMY.

The prisoners who have surrendered up to the present in various quarters total 461. They include Colonel Alexefsky, 13 officers and 38 non-commissioned officers.

[Received at the Military Head-quarters on the afternoon of the 25th.]

OPERATIONS IN KOREA.

The Japanese troops in north-east Korea drove back the enemy from Pulyong and Pukochin on the 24th. They then occupied a line extending from Sochhong, which is eight miles to the north of Pukochin, via Paiksa Mountain, (which is seven miles to the north-east of Pulyong) and Musan Mountain which is ten miles to the north of Pulyong via Hollyong road, as far as Phungsan, which is 13 miles to the north-east of Musan Mountain.

(Received at the Imperial Military Head Quarters; 27th inst., p.m.)

THE SAGHALIEN OPERATIONS.

The Karafuto army commenced to land in the vicinity of Alkowa at 9 a.m. on the 24th instant without encountering any great resistance.

(Received at the Imperial Naval Head Quarters; 27th, p.m., from Vice-Admiral Kataoka, Commander of the Northern Squadron.)

The Northern Squadron, in accordance with previous arrangement, left the appointed place and proceeded northward conveying the military transports. On the previous day the fog had dissipated leaving a completely clear sky and the sea had calmed so that not a ripple disturbed the water. On the 23rd before dawn a light breeze came up from the S.E., and the whole day was foggy. There was also a drizzling rain and observations were sometimes difficult. But the transports preserved their order exactly. Prior to this a squadron under command of Vice-Admiral Dewa had reconnoitered the coast and had thoroughly cleared the sea at the appointed landing place near Alexandrofska. Pari passu with the progress of this operation the ships of Vice-Admiral Kataoka's Squadron conducted the transports into the cleared space and landed a party of blue-jackets, who, without experiencing any resistance whatever, occupied the points essential for landing purposes. Thereafter the landing of the troops commenced and the naval detachment handing over the occupied positions to the army, withdrew. The wharves at Alexandrofska, Niyomi and Mukake are all intact and are guarded by the Squadron. In the morning the enemy burned Numina and set fire to Alkowa which is still burning, but the flames have not reached Alexandrofska.

According to a telegram received at 7.30 p.m. on the same day, the Flag of the Rising Sun is floating over the governmental buildings and the town of Alexandrofska. Our war-ships, transports and men have not suffered any loss whatever.

(Received at the Military Head Quarters, p.m. 27th.)

At 1 p.m. on the 24th the force covering the landing on Saghalien drove back the enemy in the neighbourhood of the first Alkowa (N.B. There are three Alkows on the road from the landing place to Alexandrofska) and occupied a line from Porowinka to the second Alkowa. The enemy in this district consisted of a battalion of infantry newly sent from Nicholaïsk, several hundreds of volunteers and about 8 field-guns from Alexandrofska. They broke and fled in the direction of the Rykoff highlands on the east. Prior to this a detachment of infantry had been sent from the sea, under the protection of destroyers, to the wharf at Alexandrofska, and had taken sure possession of it in the face of the enemy's attempts to burn it. Several times the enemy advanced but was always driven back, and our troops were able to hold the wharf until the land force came to their assistance.

The force that took Magati (called Mukake in the naval reports.—Ed. J.M.), cooperating with our torpedo-craft, drove back a small body of the enemy and captured 40,000 tons of coal as well as the materials for a light railway. At 3 p.m. force occupied the third Alkova and a detachment advanced towards Alexandrofska. At 7.15 p.m. this detachment, breaking through the enemy's resistance, took possession of the whole town. The enemy continued to offer resistance in a redoubt on the east of the town and on the north-eastern highlands and our troops attacked him vehemently. Darkness fell under these conditions. At dawn on the 25th the attack against the enemy on the east of Alexandrofska was opened and he was forced back to Nomihaïrovskoe. During this day Dui was completely occupied, this town as well as Alexandrofska having altogether escaped the conflagration.

In the fight on the 24th instant we took:—about 200 prisoners; 7 limbers and ammunition waggons; and a quantity of provisions, fodder and clothing.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

THE "MINNESOTA" ARRIVES.

The party of our Peace Plenipotentiary arrived at the Medical-inspection station in Townsend harbour by the N. P. S. S. Minnesota on the 19th at 11 p.m., and were to reach Seattle at 10 a.m., on the 20th.

Later.

The Japanese Plenipotentiary and his suite arrived at Seattle on the 20th instant. They leave to-night for New York, and expect to reach that city on the 25th.

OPERATIONS ON THE KOREAN COAST.

A Reuter's telegram of the 21st instant quotes Linevitch as reporting:—"A Japanese Squadron has appeared off the Korean coast in the interval between the mouth of the Tumen and Linden Promontory. The ships bombarded the mouth of the Tumen, and two torpedo-boats entering Goshkevitch Bay, fired upon Ongi. They attempted to cannonade our encampment. Our outpost in Ongi Bay fired on the torpedo-boats and the latter replied and then put to sea. At the same time 4 torpedo-boats entered Korniloff Gulf and landed 20 blue-jackets who smashed our line of telegraph south of Ongi. Further 4 Japanese cruisers bombarded our position near Anna Bay, but at 4 p.m. the Japanese vessels withdrew."

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

Mr. Takahira has been officially informed of the appointment of the new Secretary of State to office.

THE ARISUGAWAS.

Prince and Princess Arisugawa arrived at Naples on the 20th instant and left the same day.

RUSSIAN REFORMERS.

Wolff's Agency telegraphs that on the 21st instant the united meeting of Russian Local Assemblies adopted the following resolution:—

"Our Government now violates the laws frequently. Therefore we the people must devise some way to guard popular rights by means of peaceful methods. Nevertheless in cases of extreme violations and in the presence of necessity we are, not obliged to abide by the Government's orders."

A manifesto was then submitted for discussion. Its object was to set forth to the whole nation the events, that had recently occurred and to deal with the problem of representative government. It was adopted by all present with 5 exceptions.

In the meeting on the same evening various questions were debated and among them a bill was passed for admitting to the next united meeting representatives of all districts where local government did not yet exist, and it was further agreed that the small farmers should be represented but not the labouring class. Finally it was agreed that as far as possible popular meetings should be held in the various localities during the present month for the purpose of submitting to them the United Meeting's resolution with regard to the Home Minister's Bill.

MANCHURIA.

According to Reuter General Linevitch reports under date of the 22nd:—At 10 a.m. on the 20th instant two columns of our troops approached the enemy's position on the north of Yuruntz. The right column advanced from the front; the left column went round the enemy's right. The latter suddenly made its appearance on the enemy's flank and the enemy, without resisting, abandoned his position. We captured his fortifications. He withdrew to an artillery position on the west of Yuruntz. Our detachment fell into difficulties in front of the enemy's fortifications and retired to the north.

(This is a typical Russian report. We have the wonted series of events. A complete Russian success suddenly converted into complete discomfiture without any explanation of the metamorphosis.—Ed. J.A.)

OPERATIONS IN THE GULF OF TARTARY.

According to a Reuter's telegram of the 23rd, General Liapoff reports that at 8.30 a.m. on the morning of the 23rd several Japanese war-ships appeared on the horizon of the Gulf of Tartary near Alexandrofska. Two of them advanced north and the rest bombarded Dui from the bay. Our forts were powerless. At 11 a.m. several large ships appeared in the south, and at noon two torpedo-boats approached the mouth of Alkoff River, 7 miles north of Alexandrofska and fired on the shore. The cruisers and 4 torpedo-boats at Dui then left.

(RECEIVED AT THE "HOCHI SHIMBUN.")

NEWS FROM SAGHALIEN.

Awomori, 21st inst.

Since the defeat at Vladimirovka the enemy have lost heart and surrenders are frequently taking place and principally on the part of the volunteers. It is reported that a general surrender is imminent.

(RECEIVED BY THE "KOKUMIN SHIMBUN.")

BARON KOMURA.

Chicago, July 24.

Baron Komura and his party, welcomed everywhere along the road by Japanese and Americans, reached Chicago on Monday at 9 a.m. They had a great reception. At 3 p.m. they are to leave for New York.

Mr. Uchida Teisei, Japanese Consul in New York, went to Philadelphia to meet Baron Komura and accompanied him to New York which place was reached at 9 a.m. on the 25th. The Plenipotentiary was received by Mr. Takahira, the Japanese Representative, and about a thousand people. At the station a band played the Japanese National Anthem and the crowd shouted "banzai." The receptions given to the plenipotentiary ever since he reached Seattle furnish ample evidence of the sympathy of the American people.

THE ROMANCE OF LLOYD'S.

Lloyd's is one of the most widely-known private concerns in the whole civilised world. Lloyd's agents are to be found in every port, their surveyors in every shipbuilding centre; their signalling stations are the outposts of civilisation, perched on remote promontories or savage and inhospitable coasts, whence the news of the passing of ships along the ocean highways is flashed to the markets of the nations. To be classed "At" at Lloyd's is a diploma of excellence in naval construction in every civilised country.

And when a ship meets the common doom, and is cast away on a rocky shore, or founders at sea, or meets with any of the varied mishaps so quaintly expressed on bills of lading, or—most poignant fate of all—when the gallant vessel leaves the port of embarkation and is never more heard of; in all such tales of mischance, Lloyd's have the last word.

This influential association of merchants, ship-owners, underwriters, and ship and insurance brokers, was originally a mere informal assembly of city merchants who met for business as well as gossip, in the coffee house kept by one Edward Lloyd in Tower Street, London. The earliest evidence extant of these proceedings is in the London Gazette, 18th February 1688. Four years later Lloyd removed to Lombard Street, in the heart of the most prosperous business quarters of the city.

In 1696 Mr. Lloyd, with an enterprise remarkable at that time, founded a weekly newspaper called Lloyd's News, which gave shipping and commercial information. After an interval it was succeeded by Lloyd's List, which is still published, and, with the exception of the London Gazette, is the oldest news-sheet in the Kingdom.

A UBIGUITOUS ORGANISATION.

The amount of business done at Lloyd's Coffee House in Lombard Street increased rapidly, but strange to say the merchant shippers and underwriters continued for a long time to conduct their affairs in the same informal and happy-go-lucky manner as they had done from the commencement. Whether the gentlemen who met at Lloyd's found the atmosphere of the eighteenth century coffee-house conducive to the efficient dispatch of their commercial transactions or not, it is a fact that for many years they did not think it necessary to form themselves into an organised body or to draw up a code of rules for their own guidance.

But inevitably the time came when the volume and importance of the business demanded some organisation, efficient supervision, exclusive attention and suitable location. At length, in the year 1772, quarters were secured in the Royal Exchange, and five years later a printed form of policy was adopted to obviate discrepancies and prevent disputes. From that time, and more especially after the reorganisation in 1811 and the Act of Incorporation of 1891, the growth of the association has kept pace with the maritime greatness of England, and is a unique example of the development of a word-wide organisation from the most nebulous of beginnings.

Apart from marine insurance and brokerage, one of the main objects which Lloyd's have in view is the collection, publication, and diffusion of information with regard to shipping generally. This intelligence department, as it might be called, has gradually developed into a ubiquitous affair with no less than 1,500 agents in all parts of the globe. These representatives are in constant communication with headquarters in London, where a large staff of clerks is kept working in relays day and night.

In this connection it might be mentioned that there is an inquiry bureau where relatives of crews or passengers may procure (gratis) information concerning the movements of the vessel in which they are particularly interested. In this way, even before the advent of wireless telegraphy, the whereabouts of "those who go down to the sea in ships" could be ascertained from time to time by anxious relatives.

UNDERWRITING A SHIP.

Otherwise the rooms at Lloyd's are only open to subscribers and members, and the subscription is no nominal one. Underwriters, besides paying the entrance fee of £100, have to enter into securities for from £5,000 to £10,000 to carry out their engagements. The management of the establishment with all its ramifications is vested by the members in certain of their number selected as a "committee for managing the affairs at Lloyd's." If proof were needed of the prestige of the Corporation in matters maritime, it would be furnished by the existence of Lloyd's Register of British Foreign Shipping. This is a Society voluntarily supported by shipowners for the purpose of the classification of vessels. Its awards are accepted as final by every civilised nation—just as the Society, which is not intended to be a profit earning concern, finds international support.

Most vessels and their cargoes are insured at Lloyd's before setting out on a voyage. The method of effecting an insurance is simple, but interesting. It is carried out entirely by brokers. On the prescribed form they note the name of the ship and her captain, the nature and probable duration of the voyage, the subjects insured and the amounts at which they are valued. If the risk is accepted, each underwriter subscribes his name and the amount which he is prepared to take or underwrite; the insurance is effected as soon as the full amount is made up.

We will suppose that a ship is fully insured, and after leaving port is reported "All well; outward bound" at the last signal station—Land's End or the Fastnet, Tory Island or Ushant as the case may be. If she come to grief on the coasts of almost any part of the known world, Lloyd's will have the news as fast as the telegraph and human ingenuity can compass it. Whether it be at home or abroad, on an ironbound coast or in the ocean depths, as soon as the news of the wreck is authoritatively known, it is posted at Lloyd's in a special book kept for the purpose, called the "Loss book."

OVER 2,000 WRECKS A YEAR.

That wrecks are no infrequent occurrences, more particularly during a storm, the daily newspapers will testify. As a result of the gale in January 1905, which lasted for a couple of days, the value of losses reported at Lloyd's amounted to over £100,000 in a single day—which is probably a record. It was said of that day that accidents to quite a score of ships were notified in the course of the few hours during which business was done. Several of them total wrecks. All of which tends to show that marine insurance is a risky speculation for the underwriter.

The statistics of wrecks compiled for any lengthy period of time seem startling. During the fifteen years ending with 1880 no less than 32,857 vessels were lost, or an annual average of 2172. Of this huge total 1403 were posted as "Missing," which works out at 94 vessels per annum. In the years between 1880 and 1888 the losses sustained by British shipping alone were:—Steamers 1,390,000 tons, and sailing vessels 2,190,000 tons. Turning to the latest date for which figures are available—1903—we find that in that year 735 ships were lost to the world's mercantile marine. Of these it is specified that 43 were broken up, 24 burnt, 63 foundered, 5 were lost, 75 collided, 376 were wrecked, and 85 were posted as missing.

THE TRAGEDIES OF THE SEA.

When the premium for re-insurance goes up until it reaches perhaps 95 pns. per cent., it is then that this last item of "Missing" strikes the thoughtful reader most. There is an air of mystery, of significance and of ominous portents of tragedy behind it. How often has a ship left port with everything snug and tight, well found in every particular, with a clean bill of health, and, in fact, every prospect of a prosperous voyage! She sails away, and, once hull down on the horizon, is never again heard of. She is gone into the deep of invariable silence—another of the mute, voiceless, and inexpressibly pathetic tragedies of the trackless ocean.

And the horror of it is immeasurably heightened if it is a vessel crowded with a multitude of passengers—like an emigrant ship. Many will no doubt remember the ill-fated Boston, which, in a voyage across the Atlantic, faded from human ken with her hapless living freight, her hecatomb, leaving behind nothing but a name—how it stirred the compassion of the whole civilized world!

One of the most recent and remarkable cases of a ship's disappearance was that of the small Liverpool steamer Juverna, which, with a crew of eight, left the Clyde on August 13th, 1904, for Kingstown, on her trial trip. Two lifeboats were afterwards picked up by the Isle of Man. One was provisioned, with water, and had oars and a rudder, while the other only had one oar in it. These are the only traces of the Juverna that have been discovered. Her disappearance on her maiden voyage in home waters was a nine days' wonder. Now it is only an item in the list of marine enigmas. There have been, alas! too many such, tragic and inexplicable. The Sphinx-like, yet ever-changing, face of the sea hides many grisly secrets. Now and then the infinite pathos of a bit of flotsam comes, only to deepen the mystery of the silence which broods over the waste of waters.

No notice will be taken of anonymous correspondence. What is intended for insertion in the "JAPAN WEEKLY MAIL," must be authenticated by the name and address of the writer, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

It is particularly requested that all letters on business be addressed to the MANAGER, and Cheques be made payable to same; and that literary contributions be addressed to the EDITOR.

YOKOHAMA: SATURDAY, AUGUST 5TH, 1905.

BIRTH.

On the 1st August, at 2.58 a.m., at Yui-gahama, Kamakura, Sōshū Province, the wife of J. E. DE BECKER, of a son.

DEATH.

On the 3rd inst, at No. 38 Bluff, Yokohama, suddenly, WILLIAM GODDARD, aged 30 years.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

SIX Russian prisoners escaped from Kokura on the night of July 30th.

TWO cases of cholera are reported in the district of Kuriha, Niigata prefecture.

PRINCE and Princess Arisugawa left Suez on July 26th for Aden. They are quite well.

At the end of June 30th, the members of the Patriotic Lady's Society numbered 391,578.

T. YOSHIDA (42) who on May 19th murdered to Tsujimura (23) in the village of Oshima near Tokyo, was sentenced on July 27th in the Tokyo

District Court to penal servitude for life as there were extenuating circumstances.

TOKYO papers report that Japanese war-notes in Manchuria now amount to eighty million yen.

On July 30th, a heavy storm was experienced in Kanazawa; many fishing boats and 62 fishermen are missing.

FOUR hundred and sixty-one prisoners, including 14 officers from Saghalien, were brought to Narashino on July 27th.

A DEAD Russian, apparently an officer, was washed ashore on July 22nd near the village of Sai, Shimokita, Aomori prefecture.

MR. E. T. BETHRELL was hoping to restart the Korea Daily News on August 1st. He has many improvements in contemplation.

THE Yokohama Specie Bank has decided to provide a branch office in Osaka. Mr. K. Matsuo was appointed manager of the new office.

THE Russian civilians, 163 in all, captured in Saghalien, left Yokohama on July 29th by the French mail steamer Tonkin for Shanghai.

THE anniversary of the occupation of Yingkow was celebrated on July 26th by the Japanese there. The city was decorated with flags and lanterns.

TUESDAY was the 614th anniversary of the Independence of Switzerland. Swiss flags were much in evidence in the Settlement and on the Bluff.

TWO of the Russian prisoners at Kanazawa have applied to the Minister for Home Affairs through the local authorities for naturalization papers.

A TELEGRAM from Kashiwazaki near Niigata says that owing to a storm on July 29th, nineteen fishing boats capsized, and six fishermen were drowned.

A TRAIN on the Hokuetsu Railway was derailed on July 29th at Nagaoka station. Two freight cars were smashed and two coolies employed at the station were killed.

TELEGRAMS from Fukoka and other western places say that on July 28th a heavy storm was again experienced causing severe damage to fishing boats, buildings, etc.

MAJOR T. NISHIKUBO and Ensign Z. Imai, who were killed on July 12th in Saghalien, received the Fourth Class of the Golden Kite and the Fifth Class of the Golden Kite respectively.

THE Hochi says that on July 20th, a terrible storm passed over the Liaotung peninsula. The railway between Tashikiao and Kaiping sustained damage. Traffic was temporarily interrupted.

JULY 30th being the anniversary of the birth-day of the Emperor of China, the Chinese section of Yokohama was decorated with flags and lanterns. A dinner was given in the evening at the Chinese Club.

CAPTAIN UYEHARA, of the Navy, arrived on July 31st at Aomori from Saghalien. He left by the evening train for Tokyo to convey to the Emperor details of the operations on the island.

K. OTANI (28) a betto employed by S. Mochida, stable keeper, No. 191, Yamashita-cho, Yokohama, was attacked on the night of July 29th by a man armed with a short sword while crossing Nishi-no-hashii, the bridge near the corner by the Engine and Iron Works, No.

161, on his way to No. 60, Bluff, with a carriage. He received severe injuries in the shoulder and side and finally was stabbed in the neighbourhood of the heart. He was removed to the Juzen Hospital. The assailant, a fellow betto, has been arrested and made confession.

AN OSAKA telegram says that the steamer Ryoko Maru, which recently sank in Moji Strait, was sold on July 27th by auction. The bid was yen 77,553. The cargo included 20,000 bales of fish manure.

It is reported by telegram to the Yoji that a case of cholera has been found among the passengers of the steamer Miyako Maru, which arrived on the night of July 30th at Hakodate from Fukuyama.

AN Aomori telegram states that Captain Taken Tsutsumi, third son of Baron Tsutsumi, committed suicide at Sambongi on Thursday afternoon by shooting himself with a revolver. Insanity is said to have been the cause of the tragedy.

MR. K. WADA, civil engineer of the Hokkaido Government, has been ordered to take up a similar position in the Civil Administrative Office in Saghalien, in addition to his present duty. He left on Aug. 1st for Saghalien to investigate the fisheries.

ACCORDING to a report given out by the Finance Department, from the outbreak of the war up to the end of July, the public donated yen 2,256,117.60 towards the war expenses. Of this sum, yen 2,173,924.91 had already paid into the Treasury.

THE captured German steamer Veteran has been renamed Yaura Maru and assigned to the Sasebo Naval station. This ship was captured on the morning of November 10th, 1904, on her way from Tainan, Kiauchou, to Port Arthur with contraband.

T. TACHIBANA, the proprietor of a printing office in West Soya-cho, Hiroshima, has been arrested by the gendarmes on a charge of having counterfeited war-notes. He is now undergoing preliminary examination in the Hiroshima District Court.

THE Emperor has decided to send Colonel Shimai, one of his aides-de-camp, to Saghalien to make enquiry as to the health of the armies on the island and to distribute tobacco, sake and other presents among them. The Imperial messenger will leave Tokyo within a few days.

ON Aug. 1st, Lieut.-General S. Sakai was decorated with the First Class order of the Sacred Treasure, and Lieut.-Generals H. Okura, S. Ishimoto, and Y. Shibano, and Major-Generals H. Hadano, S. Nishimura, S. Oki and S. Ijichi with the Second Class order of the Sacred Treasure.

MR. H. FUJITA, one of the councillors of the Toyama Prefectural Assembly, who was charged with fraud was punished on July 31st in the Toyama District Court with two months' imprisonment and a fine of yen 10. Five others, who were included in the charge, were convicted and another was acquitted.

THE Kokumin says on official authority that from the outbreak of the war up to the end of July, 67,184 invalids were brought back from the front. During the same period, the naval casualties were as follows: officers and men who were killed or died in hospital from wounds numbered 2,008; wounded, 1,665, many of whom recovered and resumed duty.

SAGHALIEN.

Friday, July 28th.

It will have been observed by close readers of the official reports that the Japanese forces, in their recent operations against Alexandrofska, landed at three places; namely, Mugati, Alkova and Alexandrofska itself. Mugati is the most northerly of the three. It is 20 miles from Alexandrofska. The Russians had not made any considerable preparations for defence there, although they had large stores of coal and some valuable property in the shape of railway material, all of which the invaders captured without difficulty. From Mugati the road runs south along the coast to Niyomi (7½ miles from Alexandrofska), Alkova (6½ miles) and Parowinka, which is mid-way between Alkova and Alexandrofska. The naval report speaks of "Nunina" having been burned by the Russians, but probably the place referred to is Niyomi. The defenders of Mugati, retiring south towards Alkova, doubtless found, on reaching Niyomi, that the Japanese had landed at Alkova also, whereupon they set fire to Niyomi and fled eastward to the hills. As for the landing at Alexandrofska, it had for main object to seize and protect the wharves. That was effected under cover of torpedo-craft, but the landing force did not, so far as we can judge, attempt to penetrate into the town: it merely occupied the wharves and repelled Russian essays to fire them pending the southward movement of the Alkova force. This last encountered the heaviest resistance, as is shown by the official reports. Strange to say the Russians do not appear to have resisted the landing itself: probably the fire of the warships held them beyond range of any artillery in their possession. But after the invaders had begun to march inland and when the cannonade from the sea necessarily ceased, a tolerably stubborn fight took place. From Alkova a good road runs eastward to Rykoff (40 miles distant) and along this road are situated Second Alkova and Third Alkova. The Japanese, having pushed the enemy out of First Alkova, deployed in two directions, namely, southward along the Alexandrofska road and eastward along the Rykoff road. They captured the Second Alkova, thus securing their rear, and they then marched on to Alexandrofska (6½ miles), capturing it at nightfall, but not driving the enemy from its vicinity until the following morning.

It is evident that the Russians have now retreated to Rykoff. Three roads lead thither from the western coast, namely, one from Alkova, one from Alexandrofska, and one from Dui. The Dui and Alexandrofska roads join at Nomihairovskoe, towards which place the Russians were driven on the 25th. Rykoff is a town of 400 houses and 2,000 inhabitants. It lies on a large table-land surrounded by hills, and would therefore be untenable were the latter occupied by an enemy with artillery. It may be said to be the last refuge of the Russians. Driven thence they would have no resource but to fly to the mountains. They are said to have a force of 4,000 men concentrated in the Rykoff region. This number includes volunteers, but judging from the nature of the resistance hitherto organized, the capture of Rykoff does not promise to be a very arduous business.

The Fiji Shimpō observes that Saghalien may now be said to be in Japanese possession, a fact which has an important bearing upon the military situation. It can not be doubted that the flag of the Rising Sun will now be carried to the opposite continent and that fresh losses of cardinal points in Russian territory will soon be witnessed. The Japanese battle-front may be said to extend to a distance of 250 miles from the left wing of Oyama's army in Manchuria to the field of operations in Saghalien. That is unprecedented. Gradually the strategy unfolds itself, the strategy of encouraging the Russians to concentrate their armies in the west for the defence of Harbin, and then striking them in the far east on Saghalien, the shores of the Maritime Province, and the banks of the Amur. Indeed we (Japan Mail) may remark that unless Mr. Witte hastens his negotiations, he will find his trump cards rapidly diminishing in number.

The Nichi Nichi recalls Witte's declaration that if Japan laid hands on Russian territory, all hope of peace would be over since the Russian nation would insist on carrying on the war. M. Witte will now be in a position to test the truth of his prediction. He will learn of the total loss of Saghalien on his arrival in New York and he will soon hear of the hands-laying-on process in the Maritime Province, on the Amur and at Vladivostok. He has said that Japan is exhausted and wants peace far more than Russia who is prepared to fight on. In truth he essays to recover by brave words the losses his country has suffered by inept deeds. But Japan leaves words alone. She acts. Linvitch will soon appreciate the inadequacy of his strategy.

The renaming of places in Saghalien continues. Thus "Brineji" becomes "Shiramizu-mura"; "Daline" is called "Nishikubo-machi" after the brave officer who fell there; "Vladimirofska" is to be henceforth "Haruki-machi" (Major Haruki led the troops that took it), and "Peregna" is to be "Otomo-machi."

Saturday, July 29th.

De Castries Bay, which has just been occupied by the Japanese, has much interest for Englishmen. The Amur, in its great sweep to the north, when it passes the 51st parallel, begins to approach the shores of the Gulf of Tartary (now Mamiya Kaikyo), which also curve inward about the same point. The proximity to the sea, maintained for the remainder of its course up to its mouth, is increased about 51° 30' N. lat. by the fact that an eastern branch of the river forms a spacious lake (Lake Kizi), which extends almost to the shores of the Gulf of Tartary. A narrow mountain-chain alone separates the waters of the lake from those of the gulf. (It has even been proposed, by cutting the mountains or piercing a tunnel to give the river a nearer access to the sea.) At this point the Gulf of Tartary forms the bay of De Castries, five miles broad, with an area of over 20 square miles. Its peculiar situation, close to the Lake Kizi, which communicates with the Amur and forms part of that river system, gives the bay great importance. In fact, it may be considered as constituting strategically a second mouth of the Amur. According to Vladimir's excellent work, Nevolskoy, "at once recognised that an enemy in possession of the bay could command the whole lower course of the Amur," and it was in consequence of this conviction that Russia occupied De Castries in 1853 and established there the post of Alexandrofsk. Two years later Admiral Zavioko's squadron, after transporting the garrison and refugees from Petropavlovsk, anchored in De Castries Bay and was there blockaded by Commander Elliott who, ignorant of the insular character of Saghalien, imagined that he had the Russians in a cul de sac. But when the ice broke up Zavioko was able to take his ships through the strait between Muravieff and Lazareff points and Elliott was "left" in every sense of the word. On the south of the bay there is a promontory in the shape of a boot with the sole turned east and the toe pointing north. It was on the heel of this boot at Kresterkamp promontory, where stands the light-house, that the Japanese first landed and at the toe they found the telephone station. Thence they proceeded into the bay as far as Bazart Island, which lies immediately off the telegraph station of Alexandrofsk. Here the artillery duel took place, with the results shown in the official report. It may be mentioned that there are contradictory statements about the cable: some accounts allege that it runs direct from Alexandrofsk to Alexandrofska in Saghalien, but others say that although originally laid on that line, it was subsequently changed so as to cross the Gulf of Tartary at its narrowest point, namely, between the headlands of Lazareff and Muravieff. Japanese fishermen are reported to have stated that fishing operations on the west coast of Saghalien are very dangerous unless the boats can run across the bay for shelter to the ports of the Maritime Province. It will have been observed that the official report is from the naval side only and that no mention is made of troops. We can not conclude, therefore, that De Castries Bay has yet been permanently occupied. Of course if the Japanese have any intention of pushing up the Amur they may inflict vital injury upon Russia so far as her possessions in that region are concerned. Nikolaiefsk, Habarovsk and Blagovestchensk would all be at the mercy of the invaders. The Fiji Shimpō observes that now, both in fact and in name, Russia's dominions have been invaded. Saghalien was her's only by cession, but De Castries Bay belonged to her by a securer title. The Great Northern Power will now begin to appreciate thoroughly what it means to have been deprived absolutely of the command of the sea. The whole of Russia's Pacific coasts lie at the mercy of Japan's fleets and Japan is evidently determined to push her advantage. Mr. Witte is supposed to have threatened that if Japan laid hands on Russian territory the entire Russian nation would demand the continuance of the war. If he said anything of the kind it was the shallowest bluff. Russia must be made to feel her situation. It begins to be apparent that all her coast stations are virtually undefended. She seems to have drawn off every available soldier from the Amur region. There were, indeed, many indications that some such process was going on and had been going on ever since the beginning of the war. Will she now send back these troops from the Manchurian positions, or will she leave the Amur region to take care of itself, or will she buy peace? If she attaches any value to her Pacific possessions and interests she will adopt the last-named course. If she be willing to abandon in toto her Far-Eastern enterprise, she will adopt the second course. But in the latter event, what object could she have in continuing the war in Manchuria?

The Asahi urges the immediate capture of Nikolaiefsk at the mouth of the Amur. Since the establishment of Vladivostok the work has heard little of Nikolaiefsk, but it was originally Russia's main naval station in the Far East, and its loss would now be a severe blow to her prestige.

It is now stated that the Russian regular at Korsakoff did not number more than 50 and the volunteers 200. The former were excellently armed but the latter used dumdum bullets and old rifles.

Sunday, July 30th.

Another official report from Linevitch speaks of the Japanese having landed a battalion of troops at De Castries Bay and taken possession of the light-house. It is of course possible that the informants of the Russian General were not in a position to distinguish clearly between troops and sailors, nor is the Japanese report altogether clear on the subject. Yet it is a fair assumption that had the army been concerned in the operation a report would have reached the Military Head Quarters. Perhaps it has reached though it has not been published yet.

Other changes of name are announced in the south of Saghalien.

Nomihailovskoi, whither the Russians retired in the first place when driven from Alexandrofska and Dui, is 10 miles from Alexandrofska and 2½ miles from Dui. Preparations for a defence had been made there and provisions were stored by the Russians who, evidently, found themselves too hard-pressed to make a stand. Nomihailovskoi has 170 houses and a population of 500. At other points along the roads to Rykoff defences had also been erected, but it does not appear that the Japanese were able to push on immediately beyond Nomihailovskoi. The country is mountainous and affords no supplies whatever, so that the men have to depend on what they carry or on the exertions of the commissariat which finds difficulty in making transport arrangements.

The Emperor has addressed a message of thanks to Admiral Kataoka and his squadron for valuable assistance lent to the army in "securing a base for the occupation of Karafuto."

In spite of the predictions of the Asahi Shimbun's correspondent that owing to the difficulties of the country some days would probably elapse before an advance could be made against Rykoff, an official telegram, published elsewhere, shows that the advance took place on the 27th and that the place fell into Japanese possession the same day. Our readers may be puzzled to interpret the official report and therefore a word of explanation will be acceptable. The advance against Rykoff was made along two roads, one from Alkova, on the north of Alexandrofska, the other from Dui on the south. The Dui road leads direct to Rykoff, a distance of 40 miles; the Alkova road emerges at Delpenskoe, which is also some 40 miles distant from the coast and lies 11 versts north of Rykoff. On the Alkova road very little resistance seems to have been experienced, and by 3 p.m. the infantry's van reached Delpenskoe, whence the cavalry rode on at once into Rykoff. But on the Dui road the Russians made a more resolute attempt to check the invaders. It will be remembered that on the day (24th) of the landing Alexandrofska was occupied in the evening but the Russians still held a redoubt on the east of the town as well as the highlands on the north-east. From these positions they were forced on the following morning, and they fell back to Nomihailovskoe, on the Dui-Rykoff road. Here being attacked by the Japanese on the 27th, they retreated to Weidernikovsky, which is within 8 versts of Rykoff, but were again dislodged and pursued by the Japanese towards Rykoff. The time of the operations on the Dui-Rykoff road is not stated in the official report, but it would seem as though the Japanese cavalry which entered Rykoff from Delpenskoe on the north must have forestalled the Russians retreating from Weidernikovsky on the west. Saghalien may now be said to be entirely in Japanese hands.

Monday, July 31st.

Tokyo newspapers write in a congratulatory strain about the fact that the island of Karafuto will not see any more fighting of any consequence. The remnants of the Russian force have evidently retired into the hills southward of Rykoff, where it is impossible that they can hold out long.

A correspondent of the Fiji Shimpō gives some particulars of the landing at Alkova on the 24th of July. It would be interesting to know whence the invading force set out, whether from Korsakoff or from some other base, but this is not discernible, nor might we discuss it if it were. The Russians at Alkova appear to have dug shelter trenches, but these did not avail against the fire of the ships, and after losing some 30 in killed and wounded, they retired inland out of range. The account says that they numbered some six thousand, but official reports put the total force at 5,000 with artillery; namely, 3,000 at Alexandrofska and Dui, and 2,000 at Alkova. Eight guns are spoken of as having been left by the enemy at Alkova, but of this no mention is made in the official reports. It will have been observed that the official report speaks of a "confused street fight" in Rykoff, and it will also have been observed that whereas the Japanese on the northern road commenced this movement against the town at 3 a.m., they did not obtain complete possession of it until 8.30 a.m. Probably the house-to-house conflict lasted 2 or 3 hours. The town escaped any conflagration, apparently, but it must have suffered much, and a considerable list of casualties may be expected on the side of the assailants. The only other street-fight in which Japanese troops have been engaged in modern times was that at Yingkow during the China-Japan war, and the Chinese resistance was not of a very desperate character. Some house-to-house fighting occurred at Likampau in the battle of Mukden; very terrible fighting but scarcely to be classed in the category of an urban conflict.

The Yomiuri urges the immediate dispatch of an expedition to seize the coast of the Maritime Province, on the ground that its occupation would deprive Russia of everything resembling a naval base in the Far East and would thus make essentially for permanent peace. These urgings suggest that our contemporary regards over-sea expeditions with undue levity. The Japanese Authorities have shown themselves excellent organizers but there is a limit to their capacity and to the elasticity of their resources. Just think what they have already on their hands. They have the provisioning and support of an immense army in Manchuria—five armies for the matter of that, each demanding an independent transport service. They have the provisioning and support of what may be called an army of occupation under General Hasegawa in Korea. They have the provisioning and support of an army of unknown but certainly large dimensions on the south of the Tumen. They have the provisioning and support of an army in the south of Saghalien. And they have the provisioning and support of an army in the north of Saghalien. Nine armies in all, every one of them beyond the seas. The fact is quite stupendous. We have never read of anything similar in history, and when we find journalistic suggestions that yet another army should be sent out, we wonder whether the civilian mind grasps the huge dimensions of the task already undertaken by Japan. It is for Russia a most striking object lesson. Her statesmen imagined that they had fully gauged the length of Japan's arm in 1903, and that it was not by any means long enough to reach Russia hurtfully. But Japan is proving to be a kind of military Briareus. Judging from the wise caution with which she conducts all her warlike operations we do not entertain any fear lest, to use a vulgar phrase, she should "bite off more than she can swallow," but there is ample food for reflection in what she has already done and is doing.

The exact words of the last official report are as follow:—"On the afternoon of the 27th the unattached cavalry operating with the left wing of the Karafuto Army, entered Rykoff in pursuit of the retreating enemy, but as the town was in a very disturbed condition, they withdrew from it the same night.

"As the enemy's main force had not yet retreated from the highlands on the west of the town, it was resolved to attempt to annihilate him by taking immediate possession of Rykoff. With that object the van of the left column, accompanied by the unattached cavalry, commenced operations at 3 a.m. on the 28th, and, advancing suddenly, attacked the enemy on the north of the town, forced its way in and after a confused street fight gained full possession of the place by 8.30 a.m. Meanwhile on the right wing, a body of which had taken up the pursuit of the enemy after driving him from Weidernikovsk, the main force of the enemy had broken and retreated since the evening of the 27th along a by-road leading from Marotsuimoff (some 5 miles west of Rykoff) to Parco (some 10 miles south of Rykoff). At noon a force was sent southward from the town in pursuit, and it came into collision with about 800 of the enemy's infantry at a place 8 kilometres south of Rykoff. Over 200 of these were killed and 500 taken prisoners.

"The enemy's force confronting our right wing since the night of the 27th seems to have mustered fully 3,000 infantry with 4 field-pieces and 4 machine-guns, and his force confronting our left consisted of 2,000 infantry with 4 guns.

"The enemy's losses in men and material were large. Investigations are now being made."

The Fiji Shimpō says that after taking possession of Liaotung the Russians virtually ceased to buy coal from Japan and made it a matter of duty that the Volunteer Fleet and the railways should use the Saghalien mineral. The latter, according to our contemporary, is produced at three places and the output during the past few years has been as follows:—

	Dui, Tons.	Muguti, Tons.	Alexandrofska and Vladimirov, Tons.	Totals, Tons.
1887	487,344	—	—	487,344
1888	364,209	—	—	364,209
1889	404,400	—	—	404,400
1890	687,717	—	—	687,717
1891	105,245	—	187,549	272,794
1892	516,883	40,000	178,899	735,782
1893	400,590	225,500	205,230	831,320
1894	439,000	353,700	202,220	994,920
1895	515,700	374,908	110,000	1,000,608
1896	488,000	546,030	641,196	1,675,226

But this coal does not appear to be of the best quality. It is mixed, and thus though the mineral itself is good it can not be called very profitable in actual use.

The Fushun coal mines may be referred to in this context. They are said to be almost inexhaustible and to afford most excellent coal. A Japanese expert has calculated their value at 500 millions of yen.

Mr. Kumagaya Kiichiro, a Secretary of the Foreign Office, has been appointed to take charge of the civil administration in Saghalien and will probably be stationed at Alexandrofska.

Tuesday, August 1st.

A correspondent of several Japanese papers says that the expedition to Alexandrofska left its base at 4 a.m. on the 21st July and reached Alkova at 3 a.m. on the 24th, having steamed at a uniform speed of 8 knots. Consequently the distance covered must have been 568 nautical miles, which is too far to suggest Korsakoff (376 miles) as the starting point and too near for Awomori. Already at the time of arrival the navy had dragged for mines, and at 4 a.m. the torpedo-craft opened fire. One result of the cannonade was to set the town on fire, but the main object was successfully attained, namely, the driving of the enemy beyond range and the securing of a free field for landing. The latter operation commenced at 5 a.m., each ship sending a company of blue-jackets who obtained possession of the cardinal positions without difficulty. Thereafter at 10 a.m. the military, in light marching order, began to land, and the operation was completed at 11 a.m.

It was doubtless the intention of the Russians to retreat northward from Rykoff, but the Japanese defeated that purpose by sending their left wing round from Alkova and thus seizing the northern road. Evidently the remnants of the enemy's forces have now no base and will soon be driven to surrender from want of supplies, even though the invaders adopt no immediately strong measures.

The Asahi Shinbun says that the policy of the Government will be to encourage emigration to Saghalien, and that in consequence there will be none of the restrictions imposed upon the going of Japanese subjects to the island. Meanwhile a number of fishermen hitherto engaged in the fishing industry in Saghalien waters have petitioned the Authorities against granting any new or exceptional privileges. These men suggest that the best plan would be for the present to adhere to the limits laid down by the Russians, and not to open any new fishing areas without the fullest investigation. On their own account they ask for a right of priority as they were engaged originally in the work and have left many of their fishing implements on the ground, the sudden outbreak of war having caught them unawares. It is well understood that this petition is in a large degree inspired by apprehensions that political influences will be employed to secure extensive concessions on the Saghalien coasts for other parties. Messrs. Haseba Junko and Shiba Shiro, well known members of the House of Representatives, acting in conjunction with Mr. Uchiyama Kichita, a man of wide experience in fishing matters and a member of the Diet for Hokkaido, are said to have conceived a plan of extensive enterprise in the newly occupied region, and the former fishermen are naturally uneasy in the presence of such competition. It was this Mr. Uchiyama who chartered from the Government the whaling steamer Michael, which had been captured from the Russians. The Michael is a vessel of 3,461 tons displacement, fitted with all the latest appliances. Her charterers expected to reap a rich harvest by employing her, but she is said to have proved a white elephant. It would seem to be a matter of justice that in this matter of privileges the preference should be given to the thirty petitioners by whom the fishing industry was conducted under Russian auspices before the war began.

Wednesday, August 2nd.

The Emperor has issued a rescript thanking the Saghalien army for the celerity of its operations and for the great results achieved. It is evident from this measure that His Majesty considers the conquest of the island complete, as it undoubtedly is, though the remnant of the Russian garrison may still give some trouble. The configuration of the island shows the wisdom of the Japanese plan of action. Had the Russians at Rykoff been attacked from the west only, that is to say from the direction of Alexandrofska and Dui, they might have escaped northward to a region where there would have been difficulty in reaching them. But by attacking from the north also along the Alkova road the invaders compelled the enemy to retreat southward; namely in the direction of districts already in Japanese possession. Naibutsu (the point where the main road running north from Korsakoff strikes the sea-coast) is in the hands of the invaders. Thence the road and any small villages that lie along it are within easy range of gunboats or torpedo-craft. At Chefmenefsky—or Tefmenefsky—on the west of Patience Bay the road again trends inland and presently reaches Onoru whither the Russians, one thousand strong, made their retreat after being driven from Paleo. Chefmenefsky is the place where a part of the crew of the Cecile recently landed, and as Admiral Kataoka sent aid thither, we presume that the town is, if not actually in Japanese military possession, at all events commanded by them. Should that be the case these thousand Russian fugitives are in a regular trap and can not possibly hold out for any length of time.

The civil government will be organized in the middle of the present month, after the arrival of Mr. Kumagaya at Alexandrofska. We hear nothing, however, as to the disposal of the convicts. It is scarcely likely that the Japanese intend to retain them, and as for the Russians, they will not be anxious to relieve their enemy of such a burden. It is a curious problem.

Thursday, August 3rd.

The house-to-house fight in Rykoff on the morning of the 27th appears to have been a very desperate affair. Vehement resistance was offered by the Russians. Partition walls were broken down in order to reach the defenders of a building, and there was a regular melée, some shooting from the windows, some firing into them and some using swords or bayonets only. Out of the Russian force of 5,000, namely, 2,000 on the northern road and 3,000 on the southern, about one half are said to have been killed, wounded or captured and the remainder fled southward along the road to Paleo or eastward into the forests. The confusion was increased by the presence of a large number of non-combatants who had fled from Alexandrofska, and who doubtless regarded Rykoff as a safe asylum. The Japanese, immediately after capturing the place, set themselves vigorously to restore order, but the task does not appear to have been easy. Arrangements had to be made for housing and tending the wounded, as well as for detaining and feeding the prisoners, and when it is recalled that the first landing at Alkova had been made on the morning of the 24th, and that the invaders had forced their way to Rykoff, 40 miles inland, by the morning of the 27th, it becomes evident that there can not have been much time to organize any very effective system of land-transport. In fact the movements of the Japanese in Saghalien display quite a remarkable degree of celerity. In the south, at Korsakoff, they pushed inland without a moment's delay, and having landed on the 7th captured the enemy's stronghold at Daline 50 versts distant, on the morning of the 12th. So too in the north, landing on the 24th, they stormed Rykoff, 40 miles distant, on the morning of the 27th, thereafter pushing on to Paleo, 10 miles southward, and capturing it on the 28th. It can not be supposed that less than ten thousand troops were engaged on the Japanese side, and only military men can fully appreciate the feat of putting such a force in motion without a moment's delay from the time of its landing.

The above estimate of 2,500 killed, wounded and prisoners is probably exaggerated. From the official reports, we gather vaguely that not more than a thousand should be placed to that account, and as only a thousand escaped from Paleo, it follows that out of the total force of five thousand, as many as three thousand remain unaccounted for. The conjecture is that the great majority of these consisted of volunteers and convicts who, after the fight, laid aside their arms and resumed their role of non-combatants.

It appears that Naibuchi (or Naibutsu) had not yet been captured at the date of latest advices. Russian prisoners say that the garrison expected the invaders to land either at Tibisani Bay, which lies eastward of Korsakoff on the southern coast of the island, or at Naibuchi, which lies on the eastern shore at the point where the main road from Korsakoff strikes the beach. Dispositions were made on this basis, and the troops assigned for the defense of these two places are still in position, being ignorant of the defeat of the main body and the capture of the principal towns. It is related that a reconnoitering party of Japanese, marching northward from Vladimirofska on the 20th instant, was fired at by some Russians concealed in a building and twelve of the detachment were shot down, including a sub-lieutenant.

Reports from St. Petersburg indicate that the cession of Saghalien would be for Russia a pill exceedingly difficult to swallow. No wonder. Saghalien, though of itself possessing no great intrinsic value, is of the highest strategical importance. It is an essential link in the chain of Russia's East-Asian expansions. Her great pioneers of empire, Muravieff and Nevolskoy, clearly appreciated the value of the big island. When Muravieff first saw Avaca Bay and Petropavlovsk it was mid-summer, and the splendid facilities offered by the place as an anchorage made him forget for a moment that climatic obstructions render it inaccessible during months in the year. Then he made a celebrated exploration down the Amur, imagined that in Nicolaievsk at the mouth of the great river, he had found a place free from some of the objections militating against Petropavlovsk. But until the discovery of Saghalien's insular character Nicolaievsk was approachable only by the Sea of Okotsk, a sheet of water little tempting to navigators, and even the additional avenue found to exist between Saghalien and the mainland was plainly defective since it narrows to a shallow strait only half a mile across between the headlands Ignatieff and Muravieff. Some port farther south had to be found. Muravieff obtained it by annexing the whole strip of coast between the Ussuri River and the shore of the Gulf of Tartary, at the southern end of which strip Vladivostock is situated. The Ussuri, after flowing throughout nearly its whole course parallel to the coast-line of the Gulf of Tartary, falls into the Amur River. The possession of the Amur and the Ussuri is thus essential to any Power holding Vladivostock and its hinterland. But Saghalien commands the mouth of the Amur, and consequently did the island pass out of Russia's hands she would be deprived of the secure use of the great water-ways without which all this region of the Far East could not be developed. Further, the transfer of Saghalien to Japan would convert the whole Sea of Japan into a Japanese lake, since every approach to it would be commanded by the Japanese—the Strait of Tartary, the Soya Strait, the Strait of Tsugaru and the Tsushima Strait. Vladivostock as a naval base is very defective. With Vladivostock alone, as a port for her war-ships Russia could never hope to recover command of Far-Eastern Seas. But Vladivostock is the last citadel of her power in East Asia. She is naturally reluctant to give it up, and yet to retain it with the Japanese seated in Saghalien and overlooking the mouth of the Amur would be futile. So she will cling obstinately to Saghalien. What is she to do, however? Saghalien is now in the hands of the Japanese. Russia can not land a soldier there. Any attempt to carry troops thither in the face of Japan's complete mastery of the sea would be certainly disastrous. There has been no definite news of St. Petersburg's mood since the occupation of the island became an accomplished fact. The determination not to surrender the place—the determination alluded to above—preceded the conclusive operations of General Haraguchi's army. In short Saghalien is irrevocably lost to Russia unless Japan chooses to restore or sell it to her. This will be a strong card in Baron Komura's hands. Russia may wriggle a good deal when it is played but she is impotent to make any counter-coup. Her time to enter the conference chamber was while the Baltic Fleet was still in esse.

ENGLAND IN EGYPT.

It is very interesting to note the great variety of views taken by different observers about the same thing. For example, we have lately heard England's administration of Egypt held up as an exemplar of practical progress and wise procedure—eulogies which for our own part, we deem well deserved—yet here is what a French observer says of the same page of history (vide Review of Reviews for June):—

In La Revue of May 1st Jehan d'Ivray publishes an article criticising the British Occupation of Egypt.

FLAUBERT'S PROPHECY.

He begins by quoting a prophecy written in January, 1850, by Flaubert, who said in effect:—

"England will in time become mistress of Egypt. She already holds Aden and has filled it with troops and one fine day the Suez passage will be found very convenient for the transport of redcoats to Cairo. The news will reach France a fortnight later, and everybody will be astonished. Remember my prediction: there is nothing to oppose an invasion; 10,000 men would suffice, especially if they were French, because of Bonaparte, whom the Arabs regard a demigod; but it is not for us that the party is cooking."

The great French novelist was only wrong in the number of troops necessary for the invasion; for eventually, in 1882, Admiral Beauchamp Seymour found 800 sailors sufficient, after the bombardment of Alexandria, to quell the revolt in a city of some 300,000 inhabitants.

JUDICIAL FAILURE.

The writer then endeavours to give a résumé of the effects of the British occupation from the point of view of interests of Egypt and her inhabitants, native and foreign. To begin with, he says it would be most unjust to say that the extraordinary progress made in Egypt during the twenty-two years of British occupation is due to Britain alone. It would be equally wrong to say that the presence of redcoats alone has sufficed to stop revolutions, for there has never been anything like revolution in Egypt. A mere mutiny among soldiers is a very different thing. The best work which the British have accomplished in Egypt is to be found in the military reforms, in finance, and in the irrigation works. Far otherwise, however, are the British efforts at judicial reform. The writer protests against the introduction of Englishmen into judicial tribunals to the exclusion of the natives. The British justices, he says, not only have no knowledge of the Arabic language, but many of them know very little about law. In the schools the French language has been suppressed and replaced by English, and the native justices are required to study English, as it is easier for them to learn something of our language than it is for the British to acquire a knowledge of theirs. The result is, the new native justices have given up the practice of studying in France, and are satisfied with an inferior training in their own country. Thus the judicial condition of the country has returned to the deplorable ignorance complained of twenty years ago.

BRITISH INFLUENCE DISASTROUS TO EDUCATION.

While Britain has been happy in the reforms she has brought about in the domains of agriculture and finance, her influence in the domain of education has been disastrous. Nearly all the French professors of Cairo and Alexandria have been replaced by Englishmen, and even in the provinces native teachers who have passed some time in England, or have acquired a knowledge of English, are chosen. The curriculum of studies has been lowered, and all the pupils are adepts at football and tennis. The school of medicine has recently had to close its doors owing to lack of pupils, with the result that in 1904 only twenty native doctors against eighty foreigners applied for permission to practise their art in Egypt. In every domain the British fill the best posts, and the doors are closed to the natives. The Egyptian is kept in a veritable state of servitude. He is taught nothing which could awaken in him ideas of justice and humanity. Alcoholism has spread like a train of fire. The British have introduced their bars. Whisky is sovereign on the banks of the Nile, as in India brandy takes the place of bread. As with Malta and India, and all the conquests of Albion, Egypt is regarded as a source of revenue, and little concern is shown for the condition of the worker or producer.

It does not seem to be quite in accordance with the fitness of things that a French writer should undertake to criticise English methods of colonization, for whereas England has never failed to make a signal success of any colony founded by her, France has never failed to make a signal failure. However, we do not propose to enter into this question of Egypt. The quotation made above is intended to serve as text for calling attention to a similar difference of opinion with regard to Korea. Recently Dr. Morrison, The Times' correspondent in Peking, paid one of his periodical visits to Korea and, after minute observation and inquiry, addressed to the great journal a telegram highly eulogistic of Japan's doings in the peninsula. Then comes the Korea Review and not only denies almost everything said by Dr. Morrison, but criticizes him in a very suggestive tone. Now as between these two men—Dr. Morrison and the editor of the Korea Review—the one has proved himself beyond all doubt to be a great observer of men and things, and further his status as The Times' correspondent must be held to have opened to him sources of information accessible only to the favoured few. The other is simply a man of some years' residence in Korea who, though professing to be friendly to Japan—and professing, we have no doubt, with entire sincerity—has not yet distinguished himself by the wealth or closeness of his observations nor has ever displayed any disposition to take a lenient view of Japanese short-comings. He seems to us to resemble Monsieur Jehan d'Ivray.

We recall, too, that an exactly parallel divergence of views took place with regard to Formosa. One set of foreign onlookers could not find words strong enough to convey their condemnation of Japan's methods. Another and a very much smaller set—one of whom, like Dr. Morrison, found access to the public ear through the columns of The Times—approved her procedure and predicted good results. Which side has been justified by the event? Are there now any who honestly deny that Japan has done well in Formosa? And may it not be that her Korean record will equally be warranted by its fruits?

To guard against one serious misapprehension let us here say that in quoting M. d'Ivray and Egypt we do not for one moment intend to compare Japan's situation in Korea to England's situation in Egypt. On the contrary, it is precisely against any such comparison that we desire to protest. Apart from French intrigue and French obstruction—both natural enough in their way—England had a perfectly free hand on the banks of the Nile, whereas in Korea Japan is expected to perform the feat of reforming without interfering. Japan in Korea resembles the proverbial Irish policeman who is abused by the mob because he leaves a drunken woman lying on the pavement, and assaulted by them for laying hands on a female if he attempts to carry her off. By and bye the position will enter the phase which alone is logical and practical, but in the interval the "chorus of irresponsible reviewers" must have their innings.

THE CASE OF THE "OREL" ("ARYOL")

The Orel (8,175 tons displacement and 19.25 knots speed) and the Kastroma accompanied Rojestvensky's Squadrons in the capacity of hospital-ships, having been duly recognised as such by the Japanese Government through the Minister of France in Tokyo in accordance with the provisions of the Geneva Convention. Both were seized during the Battle in the Sea of Japan owing to suspicious circumstances. The Kastroma was released almost immediately, but the Orel was brought before the Prize Court at Saseho and has now been declared lawful prize of war. The facts alleged against her and proved are briefly these:—On the 21st of November, 1904, in obedience to the instructions of the Admiral in command of the Second Squadron, she followed the steamer Maria and conveyed orders to her, thus acting the part of a despatch-boat not of a hospital-ship. Again, on the 21st of May, 1905, she took on board, for the purpose of carrying them to Vladivostock, the master and crew of the British steamer Oldhamia which had been captured by the cruiser Oleg, though these men were in robust health, thus constituting herself a transport not a hospital-ship. Further, in the vicinity of Capetown, in compliance with the command of the Admiral, she obtained and took on board 10,000 feet of 2-mill. telegraph wire and 1,000 feet of 1-mill. Finally, she took her place in the line of the Russian war-ships in the Tsushima Strait, ranging up with them in various formations. Now the special privileges granted to a hospital-ship carry with them the explicit obligation of not performing any duty except to succour the sick and wounded. If she undertake any functions connected with belligerent operations, she becomes at once liable to capture and confiscation. This is not only the recognised law of nations but is also explicitly provided in the Hague Convention.

PEACE CONFERENCE SPECULATIONS.

Saturday, July 30.

A telegram to the Fiji Shimpō from New York says that the Plenipotentiaries are to meet on the President's yacht Mayflower next Saturday (5th). They will be entertained by Mr. Roosevelt and will then set out for New Hampshire, with the intention of opening the conference on the 8th—the Kokumin Shimbun says the 7th, but the 8th seems a more likely date. New York has published what professes to be a correct statement of Japan's terms. There will be many such publications, but they will merely illustrate what Americans euphemistically call "journalistic smartness." It is very easy to form a tolerably clear idea of what Japan will ask for, but most assuredly no authoritative intelligence on the subject will be allowed to leak out.

The Fiji Shimpō warns its readers against founding any strong hopes on the results of the peace conference. Russia has still a powerful army in the field and its General utterly denies that he is beaten. Her eyes are not yet open. The weapon that will open them is such a utilization of Japan's supremacy at sea as will show that the tranquil tenure of Russia's East-Asian possessions is no longer possible to her. Japan is taking steps to furnish that demonstration, but they have not yet become very striking steps and until they do Russia will scarcely be educated to such a mood as to furnish the guarantees essential to the restoration and continuance of peace. It is better to harbour no hopes and then there will be no disappointment.

There is an interesting consistency, as the Nichi Nichi shrewdly points out, between the various utterances attributed to M. Witte. Supposing him to be well aware—as he must be—that the war party has put him forward as a scape-goat and will welcome his failure to obtain an honourable peace, we can easily appreciate his declaration that the nomination of a Viceroy of the Far East was eminently a mistake on Russia's part, and, while out of keeping with her real interests or her position, tended to alarm and offend England, America, Japan and China. Such a statement coming from M. Witte's would be, in effect, a counterblast to the war party's arguments; an endeavour to fix the responsibility on them. Then we have the Plenipotentiary's declaration, said to have been made in Paris, that if Japan attempted to impose any humiliating terms all Russia would unite against her for a war ending only with the recovery of the Great Northern Power's prestige. Such an utterance was plainly addressed to both the parties in St. Petersburg as an assurance that his country's honour was safe in his hands. M. Witte is certainly in a most difficult situation and he has Japan's full sympathy.

Telegrams from Washington to the Hochi Shimbun, the Nichi Nichi Shimbun and the Asahi as to Japanese peace terms differ slightly, but agree in the main that Japan will ask (1) for the payment of her expenses; (2) for the surrender of Saghalien; (3) for the transfer of Russia's Liaotung lease; (4) for the evacuation of Manchuria; (5) for the giving up of the East-China Railway; (6) for the recognition of Japan's suzerainty in Korea. It is further alleged that this country will not agree to any protracted negotiations: Russia must make up her mind quickly. Indeed if the above be a true exposition of Japan's terms, their moderation should command Russia's speedy consent. The Liaotung lease has ceased to be of the slightest use to her, and to replace herself in a position to utilize it may be called a totally impossible task. The same is true of the East-China Railway. Saghalien she no longer possesses nor can hope to recover. The evacuation of Manchuria is an operation to which she was pledged before the war, and the recognition of Japan's suzerainty over Korea may be also said to have been agreed to by her, with limitations as to a neutral zone, before fighting commenced. There is nothing about Vladivostok, it will be observed, nor anything about a limit to the naval forces maintained by Russia in the Far East.

Monday, July 31.

Telegrams from Peking to Tokyo journals show that the Chinese Government has been warned by its Representative in Japan that the proposal for a Chinese delegate to attend the peace conference has given much offense to the Japanese and that China's best course is to trust her neighbour frankly in this matter. The Foreign Powers also have treated the proposition with extreme coolness and the leading local authorities in China have expressed disapproval of it. The final result is that the idea has been abandoned in Peking, and Mr. Na Tung as well as Mr. Wu Tingfang, the principal supporters of the project, find themselves in a very equivocal situation.

Major-General Semba, who during the past 2½ years commanded the Japanese force in Chili, has just returned to Japan. Tokyo journals quote him as attributing to M. Pokotiloff the Chinese Government's idea as to representation at the peace conference. But it appears to us that if dates are carefully compared the Chinese Government's action will be found to ante-date M. Pokotiloff's arrival in Peking via Mongolia. It may be safely assumed, however, that Russian agents did what they could to foster China's wishes in this matter, if they did not actually start them. General Semba says that Viceroy Yuan never treated the proposition seriously.

We may mention en passant that Major-General Semba speaks in very high terms of Colonel Ogorodnikoff, the Russian military agent in Tientsin. He says that the Colonel is an upright and thoroughly competent officer. In common with General Dessino he strongly opposed the war, but naturally after it had commenced he did his duty to his country by endeavouring in every manner to render assistance to her forces, irrespective of any questions of neutrality.

A telegram says that Viceroy Yuan is making arrangements for a kind of local assembly to discuss affairs relating to his viceroyalty. Yuan certainly seems to be the coming man in China. Major-General Semba says that the Viceroy's wings are now folded, but that when he opens them he will fly far.

Another measure attribute to Yuan is an announcement that any persons about to be appointed to local offices and any candidates for such appointments must travel for at least 2 months in Japan.

Tuesday, August 1.

The latest version of M. Witte's mission has been telegraphed wirelessly to London by the special correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, who is on board the Kaiser Wilhelm. This correspondent claims to have learned in conversation with the Russian Envoy that the latter's function is merely to ascertain Japan's peace terms. Witte denies that he has a plenipotentiary commission to discuss the terms or to make them the basis of a convention. His explanation is that the conference having for aim the conclusion of peace must necessarily be preceded by preliminary interchange of views. No such interchange has taken place in the present instance and he has been instructed to conduct it. That is all. Yet he goes on to allege that his despatch to New Hampshire for this purpose will obtain for the Tsar respect of the world and will conclusively prove His Majesty's desire for peace.

It has already been pointed out in the columns that the very first preliminary of the conference must be mutual exposing and inspection of their credentials by the plenipotentiaries. Should either side, as the result of such scrutiny, the other is not fully empowered to make peace, the conference will end there, and there will not be any statement of terms or any discussion. Whether M. Witte has really made any of the numerous statements attributed to him with regard to the incompleteness of his powers we have no means of knowing, but if he has altogether refrained from such statements he is most unfortunate in having them attributed to him, for they can not but tend to redouble the vigilance of the Japanese plenipotentiaries, and thus to intensify the scrutiny to which M. Witte and Baron Rosen's commission will be subjected. It is as much the business of a man in M. Witte's position to guard his views against being talked of as to refrain from talking of them himself. He certainly has not been successful in the former respect.

As for the petition presented to the Tsar urging His Majesty not to conclude a shameful peace, the verdict of the world will probably be that such a petition was in itself shameful. Assuredly it was a great insult to the Tsar, for His Majesty's subjects are not supposed to suspect the sovereign of any such disposition to betray the country. But the probable truth is that the petition came from the War party and that the Tsar himself was privy to its presentation. It is intended for Japanese consumption, and may be regarded as another Russian manoeuvre. What is certain is that in formulating her terms Japan will make every effort to save Russia's face, but the limits of such complaisance are plain and must be plainly recognised in St. Petersburg. Russia has been beaten. That is a solid fact which emotional diplomacy can not conceal.

Mr. Witte is further credited with saying that he intends to confine the bases of discussion to accomplished facts, and that he will insist on excluding any prospective military achievements. By this we understand that he will decline to take into account any contingencies suggested by the belligerent situation; contingencies such as the investment of Vladivostok or the capture of Harbin; and that he will consider the actual situation. But it is obvious that such limits can not possibly be imposed unless an armistice is agreed to. Supposing the conference to last for only ten days, it is nevertheless quite conceivable that during that interval important developments of the military situation may occur. Indeed we should say that they are very likely to occur. Perhaps we err in attaching too much credence to this interview. If it be accurate, however, M. Witte is not an ideal negotiator.

There is some vague talk about the alleged terms published by New York journals as representing Japan's demand. The name of Mr. Sato Aimaro is associated with the exposé, but Mr. Sato is much too cautious an official to have committed any such indiscretion. It is probably a case of the wonderful expansive faculty for which American interviewers are famous.

Meanwhile it is denied that the President has made any suggestion about an armistice.

Russian journals are evidently in a very morbid mood. They find fault with the visit of Secretary Taft and his party to Japan, their ground of complaint being that as the United States Government is the host of the plenipotentiaries no opportunity for such one-sided displays should have been sought. Surely that is quite unreasonable. There is no cause why the friendly relations between Japan and America should be suspended merely because President Roosevelt has given evidence of his activity in the interests of humanity.

The Kokumin Shinbun has a telegram from San Francisco declaring emphatically that Mr. Witte's powers are altogether adequate. The whole business is bewildering unless we adopt the wise course of attaching no credit whatever to newspaper reporters.

A telegram to the Asahi Shinbun from London says that, in the opinion of European diplomats, the conference will reach a deadlock, at which point the President's intervention will be successfully exercised. That is what we ourselves expect.

Wednesday, August 2.

With curious and disquieting persistence rumours continue to arrive that M. Witte disavows the possession of plenipotentiary authority and declares himself to be commissioned merely for the purpose of ascertaining Japan's terms, after which the Tsar will decide whether a conference shall be opened or not. The Asahi Shinbun writes seriously upon this subject, and compares M. Witte to Mr. Chang who made the futile visit to Kobe ten years ago for the purpose of opening a negotiation which he was not duly empowered to conduct. Chang went home re infecta, and it is very fresh in our memory how one of the foreigners accompanying him, the late Mr. Alexander Michie, addressed to this journal a letter in his own inimitable style, taking us severely to task for having alleged the insufficiency of Chang's credentials. They were insufficient, however. The fact could not be gainsaid and Chang had to return to China empty-handed. The Asahi recalls also the historical parallel of the Korean ambassador Chin I-kei, who succeeded in hoodwinking the simple-minded soldier Konishi Yukinaga, but had the mortification of seeing his despatches torn into fragments by Hideyoshi. What the Asahi writes seems to us perfectly just and natural, but we find the utmost difficulty in believing either that Mr. Witte is so ill-equipped or that, were he sent upon such a futile mission, he would be found proclaiming the fact to newspaper correspondents and others. For M. Witte knows not only that the conference must be closed at the very outset if his powers are insufficient, but also that the role he ascribes to himself would be an insult to the President of the United States as well as to Japan. Is it conceivable that having been frankly invited to take part in a peace conference and having in apparent frankness accepted the invitation, the Emperor of Russia has resorted to mere subterfuge, and instead of sending a plenipotentiary to sit in the conference, sends a messenger to ascertain whether a conference shall be held at all? We do not find it conceivable. Even supposing too that such were the case—, and among all the acts of questionable sincerity that stand to Russia's discredit this would be the most flagrant—, even supposing that M. Witte were commissioned merely to learn Japan's terms, he must be well aware that the surest method of defeating that object would be to proclaim it as he is reported to have done. From every point of view, therefore, we are disposed to ignore these stories. What M. Witte has probably said—and he would have done much better to hold his tongue—is that it will depend on Japan's terms whether a convention can be concluded at Portsmouth, and that whatever convention he may himself sign will be valueless without the final endorsement of the Tsar. That is a mere matter of routine. It is equally true of Baron Komura and the Mikado.

Thursday, August 3.

A Reuter's telegram dated the 26th of July in London reached Shanghai but did not reach Tokyo. It contains the statements alleged to have been made by Mr. Sato, Ainaro and subsequently denied as inaccurate. This is the telegram:—

Mr. Sato, the spokesman of Baron Komura, stated in an interview at New York that he was confident peace would be successfully negotiated.

The Japanese will be guided by moderation, and no excessive demands will be made.

The war is costing Japan a million dollars a day. There was a feeling that there ought to be an indemnity, but an armistice will probably be the first move of the negotiations.

Mr. Sato can scarcely be called the spokesman of Baron Komura but with that exception we do not see that the statements erroneously attributed to him need have caused such a flutter. That Japan will be guided by moderation in her demands can be predicted by every one that knows her, and that she expects an indemnity in view of the great cost of the war might also be asserted without any fear of contradiction. It is probable, also, that the figure put into Mr. Sato's mouth, namely, one million dollars, or two million yen, daily is a fair approximation to the actual outlay. Seventy per cent. of it circulates in the country, but when an empire has seven great armies in the field, all campaigning beyond the sea, the expenditures must be enormous, and it is in accord with the commonest principle of justice that the vanquished side should make compensation.

We observe that the Jiji Shimpō has an article which, while professing to be inspired by purely subjective ideas, nevertheless suggests that our contemporary is not without apprehension of intervention by some third Power, and of the Japanese Government showing a yielding mood. On the other hand the Kokumin Shinbun writes in a strain exceptionally strong for that journal. It entertains little hope of a successful issue to the peace negotiations, seeing that Russia's mood is such as her Sovereign, her press and her plenipotentiary represent it to be. Judging from utterances that emanate from these three sources, Russia appears to think that she is doing Japan a favour by agreeing even to talk of peace, and that when she accepted President Roosevelt's invitation she acted in obedience merely to the dictates of lofty benevolence. In short her pride is not one whit humbled. She talks as though she were the victor, not the vanquished, and as though it were for her to dictate terms of peace instead of acceding to Japan's terms. There can be no peace so long as she retains such a disposition. Apparently she counts on three things, namely, Japan's weariness, the off-chance of a victory by Linevitch, and the possibility of intervention by other Powers. Japan is not weary, and as to the intervention of other Powers, it can not take place without lighting a universal conflagration. As to Linevitch's chances this country says nothing. She has throughout maintained an attitude of moderation and has refrained from all boasting as well as from all insulting language towards her enemy. Her set purpose is to let her deeds speak for her. She is entirely prepared to continue the course of object-lessons until Russia awakes to a full perception of the situation.

This language coming from the Kokumin Shinbun, is distinctly significant.

M. Witte was to reach New York on the 2nd and to meet President Roosevelt on the 4th. It is reported that the plenipotentiary entertains a project of raising a loan in the United States.

Telegrams from Peking to the Hochi Shinbun say that M. Pokotiloff, before leaving, urged the Chinese Government to formally declare that inasmuch as a special agreement exists between Russia and China with regard to the East-China Railway, the latter must not be included in the discussion of the peace-terms. The Chinese Government having hesitated to take this step, was again approached by the Russian Chargé d'Affaires in Peking, but it has now finally decided to reject the suggestion and to refrain from making any such declaration.

Rumour also says that Russia is endeavouring to make France move in this matter, on the ground that French capital is largely sunk in the line.

THE "CECILIE"

There is some curiosity about this steamer. It is recalled that Baron Krieglstein by whom she was chartered, had acted as correspondent with both the Japanese and the Russian armies. He fell into Japanese hands after or during the Battle of Mukden, and was of course released as a non-combatant. Japanese journals are now asking what function the Cecilie can have been discharging when she steamed along the coast of Japan and entered Russian ports. Her ready access to the latter suggests that she possessed a Russian permit of some kind, but it is noted that Baron Krieglstein took care to carry all the ship's papers and his own documents to Petropavlovsk when she ran aground and to avoid Japanese scrutiny as far as possible. Correspondents who sail under two flags do not inspire much confidence, and it must be confessed that the doings of Baron Krieglstein and the Cecilie invite explanation, especially as he was a reserve officer in the German service.

In connexion with the German steamer Cecilie, which went ashore near Kataoka point, Saghalien, and was subsequently towed off on July 26th by a Japanese warship at the request of the German Government, a telegram from Otaru to the Jiji reports that forty of the crew of the vessel are on their way to a certain place by a Japanese ship. Lieut.-Colonel Krieglstein, of the German Army, commanded the ship. He left for Nicholaisk via Alexandofsk before the Japanese reached his vessel.

At the examination, the replies of the crew were very vague. One of them is reported to have said that the purpose of their trip was to photograph the scenery and another states that they were cruising for scientific investigation. A Sapporo telegram to the Asahi says the German ship was on her way from Petropavlovsk, Kamchatka, to Nicholaisk.

Captain Bougouin, on July 27th, received from the Tokyo District Court, the thousand yen which he deposited as bail.

MANCHURIA.

Saturday, July 29.

There are no signs of any activity in Manchuria. Rain falls for three days consecutively and thereafter follow two days of sunshine, so that, just as the roads are recovering consistency, they are again reduced to pulp. The momentary move made recently by the Russians at Hailuoging—the move which elicited such a remarkable report—did not, apparently, encourage them to any fresh advance. All is quiet. In spite of the unwholesome weather there is very little sickness among the Japanese troops, and out of every three men on the doctor's list, two are reliefs.

A European merchant who reached Peking on the 26th instant from northern Manchuria via Mongolia, is reported as stating that dysentery and cholera are terribly prevalent in the Russian armies. Such are the ravages of these diseases that the morale of the troops is seriously affected. The price of provisions too is very high. A dozen of champagne cost 265 roubles, and a case of 4 dozen tins of butter sells for 80 roubles. But champagne and butter are essentially luxuries and one can not be surprised that they should command big prices.

Monday, July 31.

An officer who has just returned to Moji from the front, says that when Prince Kilkoff first inspected the Siberian Railway, the line was capable of transporting only one army corps in 25 days, which would be at about the rate of 1,000 men daily. Owing to the improvements then made, however, the time of transport was shortened so that an army corps could be transported in 20 days. Since the Battle of Mukden there has been an interval of about 140 days, so if we assume the above rate of transport to have been continuous, the Russians must have brought their armies up to the pre-Mukden strength and even to something over it. Probably they have half a million, all told, in the fighting lines. They do not seem to be in any want of provisions. That, of course, is a point which can not be spoken of confidently, but judging from the condition of one army which there has been an opportunity of observing, they find local supplies nearly if not altogether sufficient for their purposes so that the railway is not much occupied with the transport of provisions. They are suffering terribly, however, from cholera, typhoid and dysentery; diseases which happily have not invaded the Japanese army. The heat is very great. Operations during the day time are scarcely possible and the preservation of fresh provisions is a great difficulty. This officer does not regard it as altogether inconceivable that the Russians might do as suggested by the military correspondent of The Times, namely, utilize the wet season to deflect a large force from the lines southward of Harbin for the purpose of hurling them against the Japanese in north-eastern Korea. It would be a brilliant coup, certainly, but when we come down to hard arithmetic the enterprise looks scarcely feasible. To carry even an army corps from Harbin to Vladivostok would be a task demanding at least 3 weeks, and to place them on the Tumen in fighting trim would require a further interval, so that, in sum, their services would have to be completely withdrawn from the Harbin lines just at a critical moment. The rainy season will soon be over. It does not last long enough to permit such operations.

It will be a great triumph for the Japanese sanitary arrangements if they succeed in fighting off all epidemics throughout the course of so great a war fought under such trying conditions. We read in the columns of the Kokumin that the utmost vigilance and the most thorough precautions are observed, and that among the immense numbers of troops there are only a few hundreds of sick, including sufferers from kakke, typhoid and dysentery.

Wednesday, August 2.

Linevitch seems to be directing much attention to his right. He is said to have his head-quarters between Pamién-ching and Sankiatz, whence he constantly rides on tours of inspection. The Russian troops massed in the Manchurian lines are reported to aggregate 300,000—they were recently estimated at 350,000—which is presumably independent of the forces on the Tumen, at Vladivostok and along the routes of communication. The military correspondent of The Times, who has shown himself conspicuously well-informed throughout the war, wrote as follows on the 21st of June:—

It is difficult now to fix with the desirable degree of accuracy the total of effectives that figure on Linevitch's field states. He has the six Siberian army corps, six army corps from European Russia—all of two divisions—six rifle brigades, one odd division, and the cavalry, in addition to less important units. It is probable that his numbers are not over 300,000, if so many. Reports of the situation upon the railway have not been numerous of late, and it must have required an immense effort to repair the losses of Mukden in material alone, so that the normal troop transport may not have been secured. General Linevitch has taken over a very heavy task, and we cannot blame him if he fails with an army that has been so often and so soundly beaten; for a battus like Mukden is not an episode that an army forgets in a hurry. He has, we are told, a large number of gin and 12in. guns. Whether he proposes to build battleships on the Amur or Sungari we are not informed, but a 12in. gun is about as suitable an ornament for a field army as a camelopard for a lady's boudoir. That these encumbrances have been sent out from Russia may well be doubted; that part of the armament of Vladivostok has been withdrawn is another matter. We do not yet know whether the Tsar has decided to make a present of another bouquet of 528 guns to the Japanese, as at Port Arthur, or whether he intends to retain them for his own use.

We must, of course, recognize that Linevitch can fight with his massed forces against Oyama, leaving Hasegawa out in the cold, but it is obvious that the Japanese must also be cognisant of the fact, and that in consequence the main forces of the Japanese must be considered adequate to break down all resistance in their front. On the other hand, Hasegawa is protected by the advance of the main armies and by the inability of the Russian armies to travel far away from the railway. Nothing, moreover, would suit the Japanese plans better than a Russian concentration on the lower Tumen, but they have not sent Hasegawa far enough forward to make him an attractive bait. It might, perhaps, have been worth doing.

That the general advance of the main armies can proceed without check is most improbable. The locust-Cossack may be relied on to have relieved the Chinese of all their spare supplies; it is a business, and one of the few, for which he is eminently fitted. To supply half a million men and 125,000 horses on the European scale means the provision of 2,000 tons of food alone a day, or seven trains of 300 tons at eight tons a wagon and with 37 wagons per train, exclusive of ammunition and warlike stores. The repair of the railway as the army proceeds is an unavoidable necessity, and it is not yet certain that the effective reach of even a Japanese army, raids apart, extends much more than 60 miles from railroad or steamers.

The temptation along the lower course of the Tumen has been offered and has evidently attracted the Russians, though we suspect it of being much more than a mere temptation. In fact every strategical menace, in order to be effective, must be capable of conversion into a reality should occasion offer, and that is certainly true of the movements of Hasegawa's army in north-eastern Korea. Meanwhile the Japanese and Russian outposts are within 1,000 metres of each other away off on the other flank in the Fakumun district. It looks as though Linevitch were determined to stake everything upon a resolute attempt to turn the Japanese left. But possibly there may be another and a simpler explanation of his dispositions, namely, that he is tied to the railroad. That is likely enough.

Thursday, August 3.

It is said that owing to the spread of the cholera epidemic among the Russian forces, the head-quarters station at Kunchuling has been withdrawn to Fenghwa, where Linevitch now is.

The Yalu Army is said to have largely solved the transport difficulty during the rainy season by laying thick planks along the roads. In this Army's district several Koreans have been captured who, having docked their top-knots and assumed Japanese costume, were acting as Russian spies.

There is something very suggestive in the language of the report said (Reuter's telegram) to have been sent by Linevitch to the Tsar; "All Japanese attempts to approach me have been unsuccessful." What a declaration for a General to make who is at the head of a great army in the open field! If General Linevitch were occupying a fortress and were speaking of the enemy's failure to force his outposts, such language would be intelligible, but in existing circumstances it is ludicrous. Apparently the Russian General's idea of conducting warfare is to avoid an encounter with the enemy, and apparently he regards it as a triumph to be able to say that the enemy has not succeeded in approaching him. Does there not devolve upon him any duty of approaching the enemy? His army has been beaten again and again by the Japanese, and has been driven from all the positions essential to Russia's Far-Eastern expansion, yet it seems to content him if he can remain unmolested in the region of his retreat. If that be his programme it is a plain acknowledgement of final defeat.

THE INDEMNITY.

Rumour again refers to Russia's alleged idea of acquitting her monetary obligations by shouldering Japan's foreign debt. The attractiveness of such an operation would consist in the absence of any ostensible payment of indemnity. But it is plain that the operation would be quite impracticable in the sense of a transfer. Russia might pay over to Japan a sum sufficient to defray all the debts contracted by the latter abroad in connexion with the war but she could not take over debts which are specially secured and which Japan would have no right to transfer without the lenders' consent. Possibly a majority of the lenders might not object, but how to canvass them is inconceivable. Every holder of a Japanese bond would have a right to be heard in such a matter. As a point of justice, too, one fails altogether to see why Russia should pay a part of Japanese expenses and leave the rest unpaid. The foreign loans aggregate 820 million yen, the domestic 500 millions. The latter were incurred on account of the war as plainly as the former. It may be greatly doubted whether Japan will accept a compromise, though certainly she will be ready to endorse and assist any scheme that tends to save Russia's face. That kind of consideration for a vanquished foe is just as much an element of bushido as are bravery and loyalty.

THE ANGLO-JAPANESE ALLIANCE.

The Progressists have adopted a brief resolution to the effect that the only way to secure permanent peace in the Far East is to extend the scope of the Anglo-Japanese alliance. Some opposition was provoked by the brevity of the resolution, but the leaders of the Party held that anything more explicit would be inexpedient in view of the fact that negotiations are understood to be now actually going on between the British and Japanese Governments.

Viscount Tani is the only influential Japanese who openly raises his voice against extending the alliance. He was opposed to it even in its restricted form and his opposition is not weakened by the prospect of extension. The Nitoku Shimpō is publishing the Viscount's views and they will doubtless be an interesting study when complete. In the meanwhile we refrain from comment further than to note that Viscount Tani has always moved in an orbit of his own, and that his course is not affected by any of the influences usually potent in the case of ordinary men. He has invariably been in opposition to public opinion, ever since, on his return from Europe in 1886, he laid on the table of the Privy Council his celebrated memorial against the proposed scheme of treaty revision.

What has become of the small coterie of politicians who advocated a Russo-Japanese alliance in preference to an Anglo-Japanese, we do not know. They were led by Mr. Ozaki Yukio, the present Mayor of Tokyo, a man of brilliant parts whose association would necessarily lend weight to any movement. It was rumoured in 1902 that certain statesmen, very much higher placed than Mr. Ozaki, entertained a similar view and would have concluded an alliance with Russia had not Great Britain forestalled them. Such things belong still to the realm of secret history, but it may fairly be assumed, we think, that whatever strength the pro-Russian tendency had four years ago, its exponents now see the impracticability of this programme. If Russia is to have a new ally, it can not be Japan.

Opinions differ as to the effect of the alliance. But there can not be the least doubt that it has largely contributed to Japan's rise from the position of a second-rate to that of a first-rate Power. Neither can there be any doubt, we think, that the consciousness of her elevation inspires those critics who upon the shoulders of the alliance lay chief responsibility for the war. For it must have been observed by every careful onlooker that the exponents of this creed are without exception the men to whom Japan's successes are unwelcome and whose judgment of her is unfriendly. They studiously close their eyes to the question, what would have been Japan's situation to-day had she purchased peace at the price demanded by Russia. She might have purchased it. Russia did not want to fight could she have obtained her objects peacefully. But what would the attainment of her objects have involved for the Japanese empire? What would it have involved for China, and what for the policy which England and America desire to establish in the Far-East? To say that the alliance made war possible without considering what sacrifices would have been necessary to preserve the peace in the absence of the alliance, and without considering that to join hands with Russia was for Japan the inevitable alternative to joining hands with England, is to consider only a very small fraction of the problem.

Several Tokyo newspapers allege that negotiations for the new and extended Anglo-Japanese alliance have been carried to such a length that the conclusion and publication of the convention may be expected to follow the restoration of peace. They allege that the period of the alliance is fixed at ten years.

MR. TAKAHIRA AND THE PANAMA CANAL.

Since it became a German organ the tone of the Japan Herald has been conspicuously critical of everything Japanese. Criticism is an excellent thing in its way, but when there is an obvious anxiety to be condemnatory, the critic can not hope to be very convincing. Probably these words will evoke a vehement protest from our contemporary. Critics are themselves proverbially intolerant of criticism, and we shall be told in terms which have already done repeated duty that the truest form of friendship is that which frankly condemns what is blameworthy. Very likely it is, yet an instinct much older than this ingenious plea warns every human being to distrust the friendship of men who see only evil in his acts. If the Germans of Yokohama and Tokyo belong to the latter category they are faithfully represented by their organ, but we do not believe in any such affiliation, nor do we see how German interests in Japan can be materially advanced by such writing. The latest example is not very serious but is certainly typical. Referring to a rumour that Mr. Takahira, Japanese Representative in Washington, had "offered to supply the Panama Canal Commission with any number of labourers to work on the Panama Canal," the Japan Herald writes:—

The action of Mr. Takahira in the matter has aroused some criticism, and it must be acknowledged as extraordinary that a Minister to a Foreign Power should be in a position to offer the country the services of a number of his nationals. Such action cannot raise the prestige of this country in the eyes of the United States, where the liberty of the individual is fully respected. What opinions can be formed of a country whose representative calmly offers to provide a large number of men to do work which white labour will not undertake? The only conclusion that can be formed is that the Japanese Government looks upon its nationals as so much live-stock which it can dispose of where and when it pleases.

Such hypercriticism is really very quaint. The commonest sense should have taught the critic that Mr. Takahira's part in this business must have been limited to expressing an opinion that the terms offered by the Panama Canal Commission would easily attract Japanese labourers, and that, provided hygienic requirements were fully satisfied, the Japanese Government would place no obstacle in the way of the scheme. This talk of "the Japanese Government looking upon its nationals as so much live stock which it can dispose of where and when it pleases" is such obvious bathos that its sincerity becomes more than doubtful, and we are compelled to regard it as a deliberate attempt to bring the Japanese Government into undeserved odium. Had our contemporary devoted the most cursory attention to the record of the Japanese Government's invariable attitude in the past towards the question of contract labour and the emigration of labourers, it must have recognised the extreme injustice of insinuating that the "liberty of the individual" is not respected by the Japanese authorities or that the Japanese Government looks upon its nationals as so much live stock. No journalist animated by friendly sentiment towards Japan could prostitute his intelligence so far as to resort to these tortuous devices for fault-finding. The interest of the matter lies in the fact that the journal making these charges is said to be owned by a German syndicate and edited in German interests. Thus we arrive at the fact that out of four publications conducted or controlled by Germans in Shanghai and Yokohama, three are unequivocally unfriendly to Japan. The Germans will probably gird at the inference suggested by these figures, and may even charge us with hostility on account of our arithmetic. But we invite them to survey the facts quietly, and to remember that they are facts patent to all the world as well as to us.

FINAL OPENING OF THE TOKYO ELECTRIC RAILWAY'S POWER HOUSES.

On Monday the 31st of July at 10 a.m. the power station of the Tokyo Electric Railway Company was finally opened. The ceremony being of a semi-private character only a small number of persons were present. Among them were the Directors Messrs. Hama, Ogawa and Okada, the Managing Director, Mr. Kawada, Mrs. Hama, Mrs. and the Misses Kondo, Mrs. Kawada, Mr. and Mrs. E. Brown, Mr. Kodama, the Chief Engineer of the Company, Mr. Schultz, the Constructing Engineer representing Messrs. Dick, Kerr and Company, Mr. Rice, Mr. Ray, Mr. T. B. Glover, Captain Brinkley, &c. Some weeks ago we described the ceremony of lighting the fires under the boilers for the first time. On Monday the engines were started. The actual ceremony occupied only a very short time. Mr. Schultz delivered the following speech which was translated into Japanese by Mr. Kodama:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—We met here a few weeks ago to take the first step toward the inauguration of this power station and Mrs. Hama very graciously took this step for us by lighting the boiler fires, but our object in meeting to-day is to take the final step by starting the machinery and putting the complete power station in operation. Mrs. Kondo has very kindly consented to do this for us and I feel certain that the entire equipment will run along sweetly for many years when Mrs. Kondo has once set the machinery in motion. On behalf of the contractors I beg to thank you, Mrs. Kondo, for so kindly consenting to start this plant for us and I trust you will accept this trifling memento of the occasion. (The speaker here handed to Mrs. Kondo a girdle-fastener set in brilliants.)

Mrs. Kondo was then conducted to each of the three huge engines, against the framework of which she broke three bottles of champagne in succession, the engines being set to work in the same order. Finally Mrs. Kondo touched a switch and thus lit the electric lamps placed round the building. It was specially remarked that even when the whole machinery had been brought into full motion, no perceptible vibration was communicated to the building, so solidly was it constructed. After these proceedings the party repaired to one of the annexed offices where refreshments were served. The Chief Director, Mr. Hama, speaking in Japanese which Mr. Kawada rendered into English, thanked those present for coming such a distance in wet weather, and especially thanked Mrs. Kondo for the part she had taken in the ceremony. He also, in the name of the company, expressed grateful appreciation of the fine work done by the contractors under the able direction of Mr. Schultz. The healths of Mrs. Kondo and the contractors as well as prosperity to the Tokyo Electric Railway Company were drunk enthusiastically.

MR. TAFT IN JAPAN.

The bankers and merchants of Tokyo had the happy inspiration of entertaining in purely Japanese style on Thursday evening the distinguished party of Americans now visiting Japan. Much difficulty attended the arrangements for the guests and their hosts aggregated some 240, and Tokyo does not possess any room capable of accommodating so many diners a la japonaise. The Maple Club was finally chosen, but it became necessary to divide the party, one hundred being assigned to the upstairs suite of rooms and the remainder to the ground floor. Nothing could exceed the perfection of the preparations, and the novelty and grace of the entertainment elicited many expressions of delight and appreciation from the guests, to the majority of whom a Japanese dinner was entirely a novelty. A most attractive programme of dances had been arranged, and each guest was provided with a dainty hibretto in English. It need scarcely be said that the now celebrated Genroku-odori was among the performances and that it deservedly won much admiration. Great applause was bestowed also on a dance representing a bevy of beautiful girls supposed to have just emerged from one of Iwasa Matahei's pictures. The well-known Saya-ate dance assumed an allegorical character for this occasion, the combatant samurai wearing respectively the insignia of the Eagle and the Rising Sun, and the maiden that separated them displaying the Stars and Stripes. Baron Shibusawa, who acted as chief among the hosts, made an interesting speech. He recalled the fact that three years previously, when he had the honour of visiting the President at the White House, Mr. Roosevelt spoke with admiration of Japanese art and the Japanese military system, but said nothing of commerce. The Baron, on that occasion, had expressed a hope that though Japanese commerce did not yet merit mention, the time might not be far distant when it would deserve notice. That time had not yet come, but it was approaching, he thought, and it would not be extravagant to allege that some steps had been taken on the path. It need scarcely be said that Baron Shibusawa repeated the wonted but none the less sincere expression of regard and confidence felt by Japan toward the United States. Mr. Taft replied briefly. He referred to Count Katsura's depreciatory remarks about Japanese cooking at the banquet in the Imperial Hotel on the previous evening, and he declared that after what they were now witnessing, such modesty must be pronounced out of place. America was a land of business-men and it afforded him and his fellow-travellers sincere pleasure to have the honour of meeting Japanese business men that evening. They would not easily forget the delightful occasion, but would long make it a topic of conversation on their return to America. He felt it to be in a certain sense presumption on his part to address them on behalf of a party numbering no less than seven Senators, all renowned for eloquence, and twenty members of the House of Representatives, and he trusted that these gentlemen would supplement his imperfect remarks. Mr. Taft concluded with a repetition of thanks and an expression of the conviction that the relations between the United States and Japan would grow constantly closer.

Subsequently one of the Senators and a member of the House of Representatives made interesting addresses, and the party did not break up until 1 a.m.

His Excellency the United States Minister and Mrs. Griscom gave a garden party on the afternoon of the 27th in honour of the U.S. Secretary of War and his numerous fellow-travellers. It is entirely due to Mr. Griscom that such parties are possible at the Legation, for during his tenure of office the Legation grounds have been entirely remodelled, and now present a very beautiful vista. The Minister, Mrs. Griscom and Miss Roosevelt received the visitors, who, about a thousand in number, included T. I. H. Prince and Princess Kanin, all the prominent Japanese in the capital—statesmen from Marquis Ito and Count Inouye downwards, military and naval officers of the highest ranks, officials, merchants and private individuals—as well as the members of the Foreign Corps Diplomatique, all the American residents of Tokyo and Yokohama and many of the British residents. Fire-works and music occupied the intervals of conversation until five o'clock when refreshments were served à la carte. The weather was most propitious, and the party proved in every sense a thorough success.

The Hon. W. Taft and party left Shimbashi by the 9.38 p.m. special train on Friday for Kyoto on their way to Kobe, where they embarked for Manila. In Kyoto, Mr. Taft, Miss Roosevelt and seven other ladies and gentlemen put up at the Kyoto Hotel, while the others were to the Ya-ami Hotel. Mr. and Mrs. Nagasaki and Count and Countess Terajima, representing the Imperial Household, escorted the American guests to Kyoto.

Mr. S. Tashiro, a wealthy merchant of Tokyo, has presented the Hon. W. Taft with a sword made by the ancient swordsmith Kanemoto, and to Miss Roosevelt he gave a short sword made by Kanemitsu, and a flower vase. He also presented another sword to President Roosevelt.

Telegrams have been received with regard to the welcome accorded en route to Mr. Taft and his fellow travellers, who left Shimbashi on July 28th by the night train for Kyoto.

Shidzuoka.—The American visitors arrived at 2.41 a.m. on July 29th at Shidzuoka station. Governor Kamei, the members of the Prefectural Assembly, and the City Assembly, and ladies and gentlemen representing branches of the Red Cross Society, and the Patriotic Ladies' Society, etc., welcomed them on the platform with presents. The welcome was very enthusiastic. The station was decorated with myriads of lanterns. The crowd raised the usual bansais and saw the American guests off with a hearty bon voyage.

Nagoya.—At 7.18 a.m., the train with Mr. Taft and party arrived at Nagoya. Marquis and Marchioness Tokugawa, Governor and Mrs. Fukano, Messrs. Suzuki and Hattori, representatives of the province, Mayor Aoyama and many other ladies and gentlemen welcomed the distinguished visitors. Bouquets, silk fans, etc., were presented to the Americans, especially a pair of cloisonné vases to Miss Roosevelt, by the local members of the Patriotic Ladies' Society, and a photograph of Nagoya castle to Mr. Taft by the Nagoya Economical Society. Mr. Taft warmly returned thanks through Mr. S. Nagasaki, an official of the Imperial Household. Meantime, twenty-one fire-work bombs were displayed. After a stay of seven minutes the train left for Gifu.

Gifu.—At 7.50 a.m., the train arrived. A pair of flower-baskets and other valuable articles were presented by the leading government officials and citizens.

Kyoto.—The train arrived in Kyoto at 11.08 a.m. Twenty-one bombs were sent up in honour of the visitors. On the platform a representative of Prince Kayo, Governor Omori, Mr. Kinoshita, President of the Kyoto University, Major Saigo, and the leading citizens were present and warmly welcomed the visitors with bansais.

Mr. Taft, Miss Roosevelt and various ladies and gentlemen proceeded to the Kyoto Hotel by carriages provided by the local government and the others, about 40 in all, went to the Ya-ami Hotel. Karaumaru, Sanjo, Terauchi and Kawara-machi through which streets the American tourists passed, were dressed with the American and Japanese colours.

At Kobe the party had a very warm reception. They left on Saturday evening. Passing through Shimonoseki, the whole of the straits were illuminated in their honour. At Nagasaki they were as warmly received as elsewhere in Japan.

Tokyo papers report that President Roosevelt conveyed, through the American Minister, a telegraphic message on July 29 to the Japanese Government thanking them for the warm welcome accorded Mr. Taft and party by the Imperial Court and people.

KOREA.

The Korean Government, on the 28th of July, finally agreed to Japan's proposals with regard to throwing open the coastwise carrying trade. It is expected that the fact will be officially announced in a few days.

The permission which the Korean Government has agreed to give with regard to the coasting trade is to hold, it is said, for 15 years, during which landing places and other conveniences may be constructed at suitable places, but of course ships will be required to pay the regular dues.

It is stated that Mr. Stevens will pay another visit to Japan. He was to leave Seoul on the 30th ultimo.

It is reported from Seoul that the whole Korean Cabinet has resigned with the single exception of Li Yong-ik. An explanation is given by the Yoroku Choho, namely, that Li has steadily been acquiring power of late and that his colleagues' assent to Japan's coast-wise-trade proposal furnished him with a pretext for denouncing them as traitors to their country. The chief of police is alleged to be of Li's party and to be consequently preparing some important exercise of his power. Thus these interminable faction fights continue to impede all progress in Korea. And in the meanwhile Japan's critics condemn her for not accomplishing reforms with lightning speed, while they would blame her even more vehemently for interfering with Korean independence did she adopt the only practical method of making reform possible.

Li Il-sik, accomplice of the murderers of Kim Ok-Kyun and now charged with illicit practices in connexion with the Oshikawa concessions, has been handed over to the Judicial Department in Seoul. We trust that his career is run.

Telegrams from Seoul say that the rains in north-eastern Korea exceed in violence anything recorded during the past thirty years. Floods are reported everywhere. The bridges which the Russians had thrown over the Tumen have been swept away, and communication with Vladivostok has become so difficult that the greatest embarrassment is experienced in sending supplies from Vladivostok to the troops at Possiet Bay and on the left bank of the river. Evidently all military operations must be suspended.

The great rains in the north-eastern districts of Korea commenced on the 25th of last month and speedily put an end to all military movements. Then the floods came down the Tumen carrying away all the Russian bridges, isolating the forces at Hoilyong and elsewhere south of the river.

On the 30th the weather cleared completely and the rainy season may now be assumed to have ended, though the Tumen will still remain in a swollen condition for some days.

GERMANY AND RUSSIA.

It is not to be denied that the Emperor of Germany has reason to feel somewhat embarrassed vis-à-vis Russia. Now that the discussion of peace-terms is about to commence the St. Petersburg journals are writing in a manner which must unpleasantly recall to His Majesty some facts in his own record. The Novosti, for example, invokes the aid of Europe at this crisis in language which being in effect an echo of the Kaiser's own utterances, should appeal forcibly to his ears. "We do not think," writes the St. Petersburg journal, "that Europe can afford to display greater tolerance towards the embodiment of the Yellow Peril which menaces all the Powers equally. Europe can not think that Russia's rôle as the shield for Western civilization in the Far East is quite exhausted. Materially rehabilitated and morally regenerated, Russia would again assume that mission, and under conditions which the whole world would sanction. In one word Europe can not, ought not, to allow the invasion into her sphere of the yellow peril, and Russia must (the italics are the Novosti's) be given the chance to obtain peace terms which will not fatally compromise the prestige of all civilized nations in the East." The Novoye Vremya (quoted by the Literary Digest) speaks in a similar tone:

"It is the duty of Europe to see to it, and employ every means in the effort, that the peace-terms shall not imply the admission of final and absolute defeat of the mightiest of the white Powers. Europe must take care that the balance in the Far East be not upset for too long a period, else Japan's victory in the Sea of Japan will be a menace to the Powers not only in a political sense, but in respect of the great markets that are to be won and retained."

"The Japanese will not stop. The victory over Russia is merely the beginning. For a decade, perhaps, they will be satisfied with their industrial conquest, but during this interval they will create under their flag a military and political organization co-extensive with the Far East. They will stand forth as the leading Oriental Power, and their present success may mean the opening of a new chapter in world-history—a chapter full of portent for Europe."

These voices can not but remind the Kaiser that he himself sounded the key-note for them a few years ago. Has His Majesty's point of view undergone a radical change since the date of his celebrated picture? He certainly was terribly in earnest then. He always is in earnest. Indeed history will probably say that could he have avoided extremes more adroitly, his subjects would have enjoyed greater security under his remarkable sway, and the world would have watched his movements with less uneasiness. If there still lingers in his heart anything of the sentiment that inspired his renowned picture, he can not but feel now that Russia has an emphatic lieu upon his assistance. All through the war he must have felt as much, and to-day, at the supreme moment, when he hears St. Petersburg's bitter cry, he must long to do something which would rehabilitate his reputation for consistency.

It is curious to observe what a large influence Japan is exercising on the world. She has unquestionably brought America and England much closer together than they ever were previously, and appearances go to indicate that on her account also Germany is gradually bending towards Russia's embrace. This war will not accomplish more than to divert the Great Northern Power's ambition: to divert it from Far-Eastern Asia. Possibly it may seek a new field in Mongolia. But Mongolia, after all, is valueless except as a half-way house to China, and China will henceforth have Japan for guardian. Afghanistan or Persia would naturally be the next avenue of advance, but if the scope of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance be extended, Persia and Afghanistan will also be removed from the sphere of immediate danger. There remains then only the Near East—Asia Minor, the Valley of the Euphrates and Persia. Is it possible that the meeting between the Tsar and the Kaiser was in some respects a replica of the Treaty of Tilsit, and that Turkey's fate, inter alia, has been sealed? We shrink from indulging in such conjectures. One salient defect in the historical parallel will be at once detected by any German. When Napoleon and Alexander were discussing the terms of the treaty on the raft at Tilsit the King of Prussia, though the fate of his Kingdom was at stake, did not obtain admission to the conference. He sat on his horse by the bank of the river awaiting a decision in which, through it concerned him so closely, he had no voice. But the Kaiser to-day is supreme in the councils of Continental Europe. His love of the dramatic and his perilous zeal must often inspire his subjects with anxiety, yet it is unquestionable that under him, partly owing to favourable circumstances but largely because of his extraordinary personality, Germany has attained a place seldom occupied by any State in history. Quite recently the Kokumin Shinbun, forecasting the combination of Powers that would henceforth preserve peace in the Far East, bracketed together the United States, England, Germany and Japan. One does not see why France should be omitted, but so far as Germany is concerned, it may be that her ruler has turned his eyes from East Asia to nearer fields of enterprise.

CHINA.

A spirit of radical reform continues to be attributed to the Chinese. The Empress Dowager is quoted as having said that "the best way to put an end to all talk of a dynastic revolution is to establish representative institutions. But what a revolution that would itself be! We can scarcely imagine any more momentous event. It would metamorphosise China from a congeries of mutually divided provinces into an enormously powerful entity. In all the modern troubles of the Middle Kingdom its impotence owing to want of union has been conspicuous. Every observer, every one acquainted with the Chinese, agrees that the qualities of the individual units of the race are of the highest order. Imagine these three hundred millions knit together by the bond of representative institutions and taught to recognise the true significance of the word "fatherland." It would indeed be an epoch-making occurrence."

The Swatow railway line is under construction entirely with Chinese capital and in Chinese hands. A curious incident is related with regard to it. The son and heir of the late Mr. Lin, the well known Formosan capitalist, is said to have subscribed for a million taels' worth of the shares through Mr. Okuza, a Japanese expert connected with the work. But the Chinese shareholders concluded—on what evidence it is not stated—that this was Japanese money, and the matter is reported to have ended in the resignation of Mr. Okuza and the withdrawal of the subscription.

The Chinese, according to a telegram in the Kokumin Shinbun, continue their boycotting of American goods but are carrying on the movement without any semblance of disturbance, and are showing that while they desire to protest vehemently against America's public acts, they entertain no enmity whatever to individual Americans. There are signs that the boycott will soon be brought to a peaceful termination without loss of face on either side.

That is the Kokumin's news. But the Asahi has a Shanghai telegram which says that, while endeavouring to create the impression that Japan is fomenting this mood among the Chinese, the Russians are its real prompters. They are doing their utmost to excite the Chinese and their hope is that by clever manipulation they may bring about another uprising like that of the Boxers.

The latter journal publishes another telegram to the effect that the carrying companies of Kiangsu and Chekiang have announced their determination not to transport American goods.

It is stated that the Chinese Cabinet recently memorialized the Throne asking to have Viceroy Yuan's jurisdiction extended to the Three Eastern Provinces (Manchuria) and to the four home provinces of Chili, Shantung, Shansi and Honan. This would give to Yuan direction of military and naval affairs throughout the above extensive district as well as the general control. Prince Ching is said to have intimated to Yuan that the matter has received the Government's mature consideration and has been sanctioned by the Throne, and if Yuan agrees the measure will be duly promulgated. It is a measure of such far reaching importance that we hesitate to credit the statement without full confirmation.

There being no cases for the July Criminal Sessions in Hongkong on the 18th July, the Registrar presented the Chief Justice, Sir F. T. Piggott, with a pair of white gloves in a neat casket.

At an extraordinary general meeting of the members of the Shanghai Race Club held at the Grand Stand, it was decided that the club should purchase B. C. Lot 361 A, with the buildings thereon known as Mokaw Terrace, for the sum of Tls. 165,000. By purchasing this property the danger of any obstruction being raised to the view of the straight run in from the grand stand, is permanently done away with.

The following Notes on Native Affairs are taken from the North China Daily News of July 27:—

PROPOSED ITINERARY OF THE HIGH COMMISSIONERS.

According to a private letter from Peking, an itinerary has been drawn up by the Waiwupu for approval by the Throne with reference to the route to be taken by the Chinese High Commissioners who are to go abroad. It is proposed that the party shall go to Japan first and thence to the United States. A portion of the mission under one of the Commissioners will remain in the States to study the country, while the rest will proceed to Europe, where again they will be divided into three parties, each under one of the High Commissioners, and travelling about in a certain portion of Europe previously agreed upon among the four leaders of the Mission. It is estimated that the number of attachés to the mission, composed of officials holding rank above the average, will be not less than between fifty or sixty. The time to be occupied abroad has not been determined upon as yet, whilst the itinerary as set forth above may also be subject to change.

ON THE WANE.

A Peking correspondent writing about the recent snub experienced by Prince Ching when he was fined five years' salary for supporting the proposal of Viceroy Yuan Shih-k'ai and T'ieh Liang, Manchu President of the Board of War, that officers and soldiers in the Imperial Army should be permitted to cut off their queues "for convenience sake," gives it as his opinion that the snub Prince Ching received was a sure sign of waning influence for never yet in the history of the present dynasty has such a severe punishment been given to a Prince of the Blood. It is stated that there are several princes anxious to step into Prince Ching's shoes and that they have been lately using all sorts of intrigues to lower the influence of the old Prince over the Empress Dowager. It is moreover an open secret that the Emperor cordially hates Prince Ching because at the coup d'état in 1898 the latter in his zeal for the Empress Dowager was exceedingly harsh and disrespectful to his Sovereign. This, with the Prince's attempt to get the Emperor deposed in December of the same year in favour of the son of the future Boxer Chief (ex-Prince Tuan) are events deeply engraved in the memory of the Emperor from whose wrath only the influence which Prince Ching has over the Empress Dowager has so far saved him. Hence if some other Prince succeeds Prince Ching as President of the Grand Council and Chief Adviser of the Empress Dowager, one may be sure the Emperor, at least, will not move a finger to save his enemy from his fate. On the other hand, however, Prince Ching is friendly with the two most powerful Viceroy of the Empire, namely, Yuan Shih-k'ai and Chihlung, and these two may exert themselves to assist him if the Empress Dowager shows any inclination to dismiss him from office.

THE PROPOSED SOOCHOW-HANGCHOW-NINGPO RAILWAY.

The line which a British syndicate has been trying to construct is being resisted tooth and nail by gentry and merchants, natives of Chekiang province residing in Shanghai, Sochow, Ningpo, and Hangchow. They contend that they have funds themselves to construct any railway or railways in their native province of Chekiang and oppose any foreign capital in railway schemes affecting their province. Many meetings on the subject have been held within the past month by natives of Chekiang who are officials in Peking, and by their fellow-provincials in this port and in Hangchow, with the result that the following telegram, signed by one hundred and sixty natives of Chekiang, composed of some of the wealthiest and most influential officials and merchants in Shanghai, was sent to the Waiwupu on Monday:—"To the Prince, Presidents, and Vice-Presidents of the Waiwupu.—At a meeting held here yesterday by the undersigned one hundred and sixty gentry and merchants, representatives of the whole province of Chekiang, it was decided that we ourselves should construct railways of our native province, and that no foreign capital would be required. We therefore beg your highness and excellencies to remain firm and annul the draft agreement for the proposed Sochow-Hangchow-Ningpo Railway." Among the signers of the telegram are such prominent natives of Chekiang as Taotais Shen Tun-ho (Director Shanghai-Nanking Railway), Shen Neng-hu (Director China Merchants' S. N. Co.), Yu Yaching (Comptroller Dutch Bank) Shih Tsch-ching (President Silk Guild), Chu Faosan (President Ningpo Guild), Yen Sing-hou (Chief Director Customs Bank), Zia Lun-hui (Director China Mutual Life Insurance Co., and Director of Native Banks' Guild), Chang Mei-yi (Acting Chancellor Nanyang College), etc., etc.

The following telegram was also sent to Sheng Kung-pao, Director-General of Railways, who is in Peking at present:—"Yesterday there was a meeting here of Chekiang gentry and merchants. It was shown that sufficient funds have already been subscribed for constructing the Sochow-Hangchow-Ningpo Railway, and the draft agreement with Jardine, Matheson & Co. should therefore be cancelled. We beg your Excellency to set about the matter at once."

According to a letter received by the N. C. Daily News from a correspondent in Yunnan, who had taken a great deal of trouble to gather statistics from several provinces, at least half-a-million people in China attempt suicide every year by swallowing opium. The majority of these are women. Quarrelling is the cause in most instances, one of the litigants indulging in this method of taking revenge against his opponent. The correspondent, who is not a medical man, has himself attended to nearly 2,000 cases of attempted suicide by opium during the last few years.

A cutter of the U. S. S. Callao being capsized by a collision in Hongkong harbour, the crew of three men were thrown into the water, and one who could not swim was drowning, when P.C.D. Foley jumped into the water as he was from the police pinnace, and held the drowning man up until another launch rescued them.

THE ATMOSPHERE OF LIBERTY.

England carries to remarkable lengths her theory that the free atmosphere of heaven is the best medium for dissipating all noxious exhalations. We are constantly reminded of the fact when reading the Review of Reviews. Consider for example the following utterances culled from its April and June numbers:—"Sir Henry Campbell Bannerman demanded explanations with as much moderation as was compatible with the indignation of the leader of a party suddenly confronted by the discovery that it had been swindled once more." * * * When Mr. Chamberlain taunted the Liberals with being pro-Boers they ran over each other in a mad stampede to prove that they did not deserve the accusation. There was their fatal mistake. The charge stuck, despite all their protests. Their only chance was to have worn the pro-Boer colours with pride, to have attacked the war as treason to the Empire and impeached its authors as the true enemies of England." * * * At the meeting of the Liberal caucus at Newcastle last night C.-B. spoke with the restraint and the authority of one who is Premier Elect, and who is only kept out of his rightful position by the insolent usurpations of ministers who set at defiance the will of the nation." * * *

To be overwhelmed in a war against your will merely because you forgot the warning to agree with your adversary quickly while you are in the way with him is a very different thing from deliberately making war as a matter of calculation and policy. It is that which makes the figure of Lord Milner so much more pathetic than that of the Tsar. * * * In Lord Milner's case there is no redeeming triumph, like the construction of the Hague tribunal, to alleviate the black and bloody horror of the desolation which he made in the particular portion of the earth entrusted to his care. * * * Lord Milner willed the war with the Dutch Republics; he made the war; it was his war far more than Mr. Chamberlain's or Mr. Rhodes's. * * * Between the Dutch, who constitute the overwhelmingly preponderating fighting and voting force in South Africa, and the party which made the war, devastated the country and did to death the women and children in the concentration camp, there can be no peace. * * * If the Empire is to be saved in South Africa it will be saved by the advent of the Liberals, who, if they have any of the instinct of statesmanship left in them, will spare no effort to convince the Dutch South Africans that the new Government utterly and with a whole heart detests and abhors the infamies by which its predecessors sullied the British flag during the war."

A great deal of the free air of heaven is needed to dilute the malodour of such utterances. It is not alone their extravagance, their reckless abuse of language, their shockingly unpatriotic tone; it is also that they degrade British politics to the level of bar-room disputes and introduce into them an element of bitterness and rancour which is at once miserable and mischievous.

A JAPANESE SOCIALIST.

There is, it appears, a certain Mr. Kichi Kaneko who belongs to the small coterie of Japanese calling themselves "Socialists." He has contributed to the Arena an essay containing passages which many journals have reproduced by way of counterblast to the eulogies showered on Japan since the Battle of the Yalu was fought:—

Japanese history is a history of war, of bloodshed, of warriors. No nation ever existed in the world's history with such a sanguinary record as Japan. We have saloons under the name of beer-halls, of Sakaya, and the machi, which is very much worse than the American saloon. We also have many strikes nowadays going on much of the time. The condition of the working-men in Japan is a most miserable one. They are yet in a state which may be described as wage slavery. In 1899 we had 280,922 workers employed in the various factories in Japan. Of these 184,111 were female workers. They are working generally twelve hours a day, and sometimes fifteen hours, for a wage varying from 6d. to 1s. per day.

While cost of living is increasing year by year, the workmen's wages are not increased accordingly. The conditions of his labour are terrible; 2,810 workmen were injured in a single month in 1904 in the Tokio arsenal. Our agricultural products are not enough to support our people. We are importing Chinese rice nearly every year.

The Japanese government system is the make-believe system. It is not by the people, of the people. It is the government of the few, of the nobles, of the titles, and above all, of the figure-head—the Mikado. Who can prove that it is greater than Witte, that the Imperial Diet is better than the Russian Zemstvo? I am of the opinion that these differences of political institutions are not of much importance when it comes to the actual strength of the people. Some critic has said that the Japanese are playing with their toys, namely, the constitution and the parliament.

What these utterances illustrate is that Mr. Kaneko manipulates statistics with much intrepidity and that his ignorance of foreign history is as colossal as is their ignorance of Japanese history who quote him with conviction. "No nation ever existed in the world's history with such a sanguinary record as Japan." We wonder whether the Arena's essayist ever studied history at all. Has he read the history of Greece, for example—Greece, the mother of arts and sciences, the pioneer of European civilization, the country at whose feet the Occident has sat for 20 centuries, the State whose escape from destruction by the Persians has filled the breast of Western annalists with thankfulness? In point of "sanguinary record" Japan can not compare with Greece; can not begin to compare with her. It is easy, however, to be courageous in the construction of historical parallels for few people take the trouble to scrutinise them closely. But what are we to say of the "strikes going on much of the time" in Japan; what of the 2,810 workmen injured in a single month in 1904 in the Tokyo arsenal; what of the allegation that there is no freedom of the press since editors can be and are sent to jail for criticising the legislation proposed by the Government? We fear that there is only one word properly applicable to the statements; an ugly little word of four letters. The truth seems to be that the food of facts does not suffice to nourish socialists in Japan: they are obliged to have recourse to fiction.

OJI ORPHANAGE FUND.

Since the yen 2,405 already announced, the following subscriptions to the Oji Orphanage Fund have been received and are gratefully acknowledged by the Committee:—

"NAN-SHU MEI-GWA-YEN."

This term signifies "Garden of Renowned Paintings of the Southern Sung Dynasty." It is the third volume of the kind published by the Shimbi Daikwan. We have often expressed the opinion that the best place to obtain materials for a clear appreciation of Chinese pictorial art is Japan, since there have been preserved in the latter country for many centuries with reverential care numerous fine specimens which are accessible to students, whereas in China, although innumerable examples, probably still finer, must be assumed to exist, there seems to be no possibility of viewing them, or at any rate no possibility for foreign observers. This beautiful volume now lying before us partly confirms our view, but we certainly think that the pictures reproduced can not be regarded as really fine types. Unfortunately the album is without English text, and it will therefore be the most convenient plan from our readers' point of view if we append a list of the pictures in regular sequence, beginning, of course, from the right more Japonico.

No. 1 is a sepia painting on silk, the subject being "the Mountain Kazan when rain threatens." It was painted by the Chinese artist Kau Janhui, who flourished during the Sung dynasty, and it is said to bear comparison with two other landscapes by the same artist which are preserved in the Konchiin in Kyoto. Viscount Akimoto is the owner. What strikes one especially about this picture is the remarkable effect of atmosphere and breadth obtained by the artist. But we should distinctly demur to the verdict that it is a model example of the Southern Sung style. For it shows the great defect of unity of plane. The piled-up peaks in the back-ground stand out more clearly than the woods and waterfall in the foreground and middle distance. The artist has sacrificed aerial perspective to massiveness.

The second picture is a hare emerging from chrysanthemums. Here again, while the brush-work is of a very high type, the picture—in colours on silk—suffers from two serious defects: it is absolutely in one plane and the use of heavy outlines quite untrue to nature, conveys the impression that the rocks are cut out of cardboard. The artist is Hsu Lin of the Ming Dynasty, and the proprietor is Baron Iwasaki.

Third in the series is a sepia drawing on silk from the brush of Chang Shuitu of the Ming Dynasty, the property of Marquis Ikeda. Chang flourished towards the close of the Ming, and rose to the rank of prime minister. He has chosen for subject in this case the waterfall of Lushan, immortalized in the poetry of Li Peh of the Tang Dynasty. The picture is a really beautiful example of woodland scenic representation, the lights finely centralized and the aerial perspective excellent. The fault of strong outlines is not entirely avoided, however.

The fourth reproduction is from a picture in sepia on white satin in the collection of Baron Iwasaki; painted by Wang Szjen of the later Ming Dynasty. This is an interesting picture in so far as the style is unusual. The artist's conception is to depict a solitary house in a valley among woods. He lacks nothing in boldness of touch and he has undoubtedly succeeded in producing an effect of profound solitude. But the mountains and rocks in the distance are nearer to the eye than the trees in the foreground. It is essentially a picture with three planes in one.

Next (No. 5) comes a really fine drawing—lightly tinted on silk—from the collection of Baron Iwasaki. Wang Kienchang of the Ming dynasty is the painter. Many of his works are to be found in Japanese collections but this is one of very exceptional merit. The subject is "the coming water and the rising sun"; in other words, sun-rise on a water-fall. Here are none of the faults of previous examples. The aerial perspective is admirable, the atmospheric breadth noble, the outlines are almost free from harshness, and the brush-work is of the highest quality. Yet there is a blemish: above the tops of the trees where clouds might be expected, there is a confusion of tumbling water, delicately traced indeed but physically impossible. It is a thousand pities that so grand a picture should be marred by such a solecism.

No 6 is a pretty picture but little more can be said for it. In colours on a silk ground, it represents ladies in a garden, one of them playing the koto, another seated beside her and a servant girl fanning the charcoal under a kettle. Baron Iwasaki's collection has again been laid under contribution, and the artist is Ho Lung of the Ming Dynasty, a painter best known for his skill in depicting dragons, though here he has occupied his brush with gentler objects. The extremely artificial rocks affected by Chinese landscape gardeners are faithfully shown, and the brush work is delicate, but all Chinese pictures including objects that emphasize the false vanishing points of the Middle Kingdom's art are difficult to admire.

In the next picture—sepia on silk from the brush of Cha Shilpiao of the Tsing (present) Dynasty—we have a representation of cloud and mist effects in one of the gorges of the Hsiaohsiang, a tributary of the Yangtze. This painting has merits: the mists and clouds which it professes to depict are very striking. But again there is the defect of harsh outlines, and as for the river, its surface seems to have been solidified in hummocks. Mr. Honda Shuchiku is the owner.

No. 8 is a landscape greening in spring, by Lo Mu of the Tsing Dynasty (Kianghsi era) from the collection of Baron Sugitani. This is finely composed and the water and atmospheric effects are good as is also the brush-work, but there are the common faults of heavy outlines and want of aerial perspective.

In the ninth reproduction—sepia on silk from the artist Tsai Ho of the Tsing Dynasty, Count So's collection—a female figure is shown, graceful and delicately painted, but greatly marred by indecision and confusion of the lines in the drapery. No great Japanese painter would show such blundering flurry in a matter so essential.

The last picture (No. 10) is in colours on silk from the brush of a Japanese artist, Chinzan, who, having studied under Buncho and Kazan, became finally a disciple of Chang Chiuku, a Chinese painter of the Tsing Dynasty. His work is painstaking and, though delicate, shows considerable boldness, but the composition of this example can scarcely be applauded.

It will be seen from what has been here set down that this album does not contain by any means the highest types of Chinese pictures. Everything commendable in these examples may be found in the best works of the Kano School without any of the defects. But there are Chinese paintings which, in their own class, have never been surpassed perhaps never equalled, by the work of Japanese ateliers. Nevertheless to every one interested in the subject we commend this volume strongly.

We have received from Mr. Tajima, editor of the beautiful and instructive publications now issuing from the atelier of the Shimbi Shoin, a letter which we translate as follows:—

Chinese paintings, as you know, are divided into two schools, the Northern and the Southern. The Nan-shu Mei-gwa-Yen (the publication recently reviewed in these columns—Ed. J.M.) contains mainly pictures of the Southern School. The Northern School flourished chiefly under the Tang, Sung and Yuan dynasties, but in the days of the Ming and the Tsing the Southern School seems to have had the stage almost to itself. The great scholar Tang Chi-chang of the Ming Dynasty was an ardent advocate of unity of the pictorial and calligraphic arts and did much to promote the Southern School. The custom of applying calligraphic principles to painting was practised by this School, and I believe that the female figures of Tsai Chia give expression to this idea. Regarded from an ordinary art standpoint it can not be denied that the paintings of the Southern School show many defects, as you have noted, but in respect of lofty harmony of idea they are not reached by the pictures of the Northern School. Hence the so-called Bunjin-gwa (literateur's pictures) drawn by the celebrated historian Rai Sanyo who flourished at the close of the Bakufu era, though they are almost without pictorial value, are esteemed and applauded by scholars on account of the taste and elegance they display. The sum of the matter is that the Southern School made harmony their chief motive, and if a picture lacked that quality they attached no more value to it than to the dust under foot though its brush-work might be minute and skilled. Among Chinese pictures of the Tang, Sung and later eras there are many far superior to the examples shown in the Nan-shu Mei-gwa-Yen, but the majority of them belong to the Northern School, and we purpose publishing them in a separate album designated Shina Mei-jin Gwa-shu (collection of pictures by celebrated Chinese artists). Meanwhile I believe that the pictures reproduced in the Nan-shu Mei-gwa-Yen are all without exception first-class examples. I observe that you translate Nan-shu Mei-gwa-Yen by "Garden of Renowned Paintings of the Southern Sung Dynasty," but "Garden of Renowned Paintings of the Southern School of Art" would be more appropriate.

These interesting remarks elucidate the principle followed by the compilers of the Nan-shu Mei-gwa-Yen. Identity of ideograph betrayed us into using the name of the dynasty instead of attaching the significance "school." It is of course well known, and has been fully set forth elsewhere by the writer of this article, that from the Tang Dynasty two schools of painting became distinguishable in China, the Northern and the Southern, just as there were two divisions of the Zen sect of Buddhism also called the Northern and the Southern. The Northern School had for founder Li Szhsun, the southern, Wang Mochi. It was the latter that inaugurated the "sketchy" style (kentan). Chinese critics discussing these two schools say that "as atmosphere varies according to locality, men also vary with it. In the south the landscapes and waterscapes are soft and their contours rounded, and so the men born amid this environment, if they are good display the characteristics of gentleness and amiability, but if they are bad display insincerity and temerity. In the north the landscapes and waterscapes are strange, severe and harsh; and the men born there, if good show stalwart and upright traits; if evil, are distinguished by carelessness, violence and selfishness. That is the natural law, and in further obedience to it the painters of the south and the north exhibit similarly distinguishing features." The album we recently reviewed contained specimens of the Southern School's work, and it appears from Mr. Tajima's letter that the Shimbi Shoin will soon publish another album of gems from the gallery of the Northern School. We look forward to it with the greatest interest. Owing to the efforts of this enterprising firm the public is receiving an education in Chinese and Japanese art such as could never have been otherwise obtained.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

The Naval authorities announce the seizure of the German steamer Lydia (1,057 tons) off the coast of Riukiu on the 27th instant. Presumably she was en route for Vladivostok, imagining perhaps that Japanese vigilance might be now relaxed.

A telegram has been received in Yokohama announcing that the office of Chairman of Directors, which was specially created in connection with the affairs of the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, has been abolished, and the Hon. Paul Morton, late Secretary of the United States Navy, has been elected President. Three new policy-holders have been elected on the Board of Directors, making twenty-three policy-holder directors elected so far. Altogether the Equitable has been setting its house to rights in a most thorough-going way.

Much indignation has been caused in Tokyo by the discovery that a Shiba policeman abused his power recently and applied torture to a man arrested on a charge of receiving stolen goods. The victim, according to the Fiji Shimpō, was a pawn-broker of Asakusa, and a constable, seeking to extract information from him, tied him up so as to cause laceration of the wrists and wounds on the shoulders where the cords bit into the flesh. The constable was immediately dismissed when his crime came to light, and he is now in custody awaiting trial. Pictures are published of the man's hurts, and the strong protests evoked by the incident will doubtless help to finally eradicate abuses which long ago became quite exceptional.

It will be observed that the Novoye Vremya, in veiled yet unmistakable language, endeavours to create an impression that the Kaiser's recent meeting with the Tsar had for one object to strengthen the latter's hands and assure him of German interference between Russia and a humiliating peace. But the public can not so easily forget that the Emperor William unquestionably coöperated with President Roosevelt to bring about the peace conference, and that there is nothing in all the Kaiser's record to imply a capacity for double-dealing. His Majesty's influence seems to have been sincerely lent to promote peace, and it is very natural that such should have been the case, for to Russia in revolution the Kaiser would certainly prefer a constitutionally governed Russia still under the control of the Romanoffs towards coöperation with whom he appears to be steadily inclining for the purpose of solving Near-Eastern problems. The Japanese press is not one whit distressed about the meeting of the two monarchs, and the Austrian press, as will be seen from telegrams published elsewhere in our columns, regards the event as making for peace.

It need scarcely be said that the utterances of the Yokoye Vremya as epitomized elsewhere in a Foreign Office telegram are treated with some ridicule by the Japanese press. The Fiji Shimpō asks whether this newspaper which now makes an ad-misererecordant appeal to the nations to intervene at the peace conference is the same journal which recently talked so big about Russia being prepared to carry on the war for any number of years. The Yellow-Peril lament was supposed to have been used for its full worth, yet here we have it paraded again, and here once more we find the old uncivilized attempt to foster and excite race prejudices. In short, Russia, while claiming to be the representative and guardian of Occidental civilization, draws of herself a most uncivilized portrait since she preaches a crusade of exclusiveness inconsistent with any principles of enlightenment. But, after all, the Japanese may welcome these appeals for they prove that Russia is really in earnest in entering the peace conference. She sincerely wants peace, and naturally she wants to procure it on the best possible terms. The ultimate verdict of the world will probably be that she little consulted her own dignity when she punctuated the approach of her plenipotentiaries to the conference chamber now with threats and anon with plaints. Silence would have better become her.

There has arrived at Hakodate a schooner called the Tora Maru, having on board 4 men belonging to another schooner called the Matsumoto Maru. It appears that the latter vessel was fishing off the Commander's Island in June when she encountered a storm which sent her to the bottom with 9 of her crew. The remaining 18 embarked in three small boats, and after much hardship 14 of them were compelled to make the coast of Kamchatka, where they naturally expected to procure succour. On the contrary, they were attacked by a force of Russian soldiers, and the whole were killed. Meanwhile the remaining 4, who, not being so exhausted as their comrades, had remained at sea hoping to meet a friendly vessel, fell in with the Tora Maru, and told the story of the 14 who had preceded to Kamchatka. The Tora Maru immediately went to succour these men. Not only did she find, however, that they had all been slaughtered, but her own people were fired on when they landed, and 4 were killed and 4 severely wounded. This is not by any means the first instance of Russian soldiers butchering Japanese non-combatants at sight. The Russians in the north seem to be thoroughly imbued with the spirit which prompted a St. Petersburg newspaper to urge the extermination of all Japanese as noxious vermin. However, we must not quarrel with the Russians. They are "the shield of Western civilization in the Far East."

The alleged autograph letter from the Emperor of China to President Roosevelt, a translation of which was lately published by several journals in the Far East, is now declared to be a forgery.

According to returns compiled by the Finance Department the total of the sums voluntarily subscribed to the war-chest since the war broke out up to the end of July, was 2,256,217 yen, of which aggregate 2,173,924 yen has already been received. Tokyo's contributions stand at 749,766 yen.

The seven emigration companies of Japan have refused to take up the scheme for supplying labourers to the Panama Canal. We do not gather that their refusal is of a radical character but only that they object to the terms. Thus they point out that no arrangements are made for the tendance of the sick; that provision does not appear for the return of the families of deceased labourers; that there is no allowance for passage money to and fro; that the drinking water is bad and that the sanitary arrangements are defective. These objections are of such an extensive character that little probability seems to exist of a satisfactory composition. The Japanese Government took steps to fully explain the terms offered by the Canal Commission so that there should be no misunderstanding or subsequent disappointment.

Statistics extending to the 30th of July show that the casualties in the Navy from the outbreak of hostilities until that date, aggregated 3,673 of all ranks. Among these the number who were killed in fight or died subsequently of wounds totalled 2,008, and thus the wounded are seen to have been 1,665. Of the latter 674 had to be sent to hospital, and the remainder were so slightly hurt that they could be treated on board ship. Only 32 died after admission to hospital, which is less than 5 per cent; a remarkable figure seeing that gun-shot wounds are generally of a much more serious nature than those produced by rifle-bullets.

Six Russian prisoners effected their escape from the quarters at Kokura on the 30th of July and were supposed to have achieved their design as no traces of them could be found. On the 1st inst., however, they were re-captured. The police discovered them lying asleep in the hills of Toyohara in Yamaguchi Prefecture.

NIPPON RACE CLUB.

NEW SUBSCRIPTION HORSES.

The subscription horses for the Autumn meeting of the Nippon Race Club arrived by the steamer Timon on Friday morning and were landed shortly before noon. Whilst the process of landing them was in progress, three of the boxes were precipitated into the harbour, but were ashore none the worse for their wetting.

The drawing for the horses was to have taken place at Messrs. Durand, Cobb and Co.'s stable at 2 o'clock, but owing to some confusion as to the numbering of the horses having arisen the drawing was postponed to 5 o'clock.

The horses have landed in wretched condition and it is doubtful if a more miserable lot of half-breeds have ever been brought to Japan.

THE LAW COURTS.

SHIPPING CASE.

In connexion with a claim of yen 120,000 lodged in the Kobe District Court by Mr. E. Wakino, owner of the Kyoyo Maru, which recently collided with the French steamer Breia Ixi (4,930 gross tons) in Moji Strait and sank, the captain of the latter has filed a protest in the case. The captain insists that he has no direct responsibility for the claim.

On July 29th, discussion took place between the parties in the Kobe Court. Interlocutory judgment is fixed to be delivered on August 1st. The steamer is under seizure by the plaintiff.

MESSRS. L. F. LAWTON AND R. MASUJIMA.

WE have received the following correspondence:—

[Copy.]

R. MASUJIMA Esq.,

Sir,—I beg to instruct you to take any steps that you may deem advisable with regard to the comments appearing in the Japan Mail of July 25th respecting the correspondence to the Daily Telegraph (London) on the battle of the Japan Sea.

Yours truly,

(Signed) LANCELOT F. LAWTON.
Staff Correspondent Daily Telegraph
Japan.

Tokyo, July 27th, 1905.

CORRECTION.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I beg to refer to an article on the despatches to the Daily Telegraph, London, relating to the naval battle of the Japan Sea, which appeared in your issue of July 25th. Inasmuch as you attempt to prove that the statements contained in the original despatches carry their own refutation, the following points call for correction:

1. Statements quoted which were not made in that original despatch. Correction—the all-important sentence in the original despatch "Here your correspondent's message ends" has been suppressed in the Mail article. The main theories of the article are based upon such misrepresentation. Reference—original despatch.

2. Statement quoting Togo's report that the Russians fired the first shot at 2.08 p.m. Correction—Togo's earlier reference to the Japanese coming into touch with the enemy between 10 and 11 a.m. and thereafter being fired upon from time to time; other references confirmatory of original despatch: official report made by Linevitch and published in the Times (London) of June 12th and the official report of the captain of the Tsushima, all ignored.

3. Statement that in original despatch it was asserted that torpedo boats attacked 2 a.m. whereas Togo's report mentions the attack as beginning 8.15 p.m. and ending 11 p.m. Correction—statement in original despatch that torpedo attacks began 8 p.m. as well as 2 a.m., also statement in Togo's report that there were torpedo attacks at 2 a.m. completely ignored. Additional confirmation—Times, (London) despatch from Tokyo on June 8th.

4. Statement that original despatch mentions the Orel as sunk. Correction—the fact that the Orel was queried Ural in original despatch ignored.

5. Statement that on the 28th there was nothing that could be called a "general battle." Correction—original despatch did not use the phrase "General battle." What it did say was confirmed by Togo's report.

6. Statement that Kamichaka did not describe circles. Correction—well known that if steering gear of a ship is damaged in a certain way the ship describes circles. Obviously in this case the shell damaged steering gear. Reference—the damage of Tesavitch August 10th last year.

7. Statement that correspondent did not see the Orel anywhere at all. Correction—Reference original despatch June 3rd giving details of damage sustained by the ship officially confirmed; and in the matter of the number of shells which hit the ship confirmed by exact total given in Japan Mail article now in question.

8. Statement that the "Orel" was terribly knocked about. Correction—Times (London) June 1st announces that the Orel will be commissioned for active service immediately.

Other matters criticized involve questions of purely personal opinion.

I am to request you to print this whole correspondence, in as conspicuous a part of your next issue as that occupied by the article in question. Enclosing my authority for the purpose I remain,

Yours truly,

R. MASUJIMA.

Attorney for the Daily Telegraph Correspondent,
Japan.

Since it is not our intention to do any injustice to the correspondent of the Daily Telegraph we shall devote a little space to analysing the explanations he offers through his attorney, Mr. R. Masujima; and since the letter containing the explanations is signed by Mr. R. Masujima, we must assume that the latter endorses its contents and guarantees their accuracy. For the sake of clearness we shall adhere to the order of Messrs. Lawton and Masujima's letter.

1.—In its issue of June 1st the Daily Telegraph published a long telegraphic account of the Battle in the Sea of Japan, ascribing the account to "our correspondent with the Japanese Fleet" and calling it the "story of an eye-witness." From that report we took eight statements, and showed that, every one of them being flagrantly at variance with the reality of the incidents to which they referred, the unavoidable deduction was that the report could not possibly have been written by an eye-witness. To this Messrs. Lawton and Masujima's first answer is:—

The all-important sentence in the original despatch, "Here your correspondent's message ends" has been suppressed in the Mail article. The main theories of the article are based on such misrepresentation.

Now every one of our eight excerpts occurred in the body of the despatch and preceded the concluding sentence "here your correspondent's telegram ends." There is no more connexion between the eight excerpts and the concluding sentence than there is between the colour of a man's hair and the religious creed he professes. Yet Messrs. Masujima and Lawton have the interesting audacity to call this wholly irrelevant sentence "all-important," to describe its omission as a "misrepresentation" and to declare that the main theories of the Mail's article are based on such.

2.—In the original despatch these words occurred:—

The Japanese knew instantly the enemy was beaten and the concentrated fire now became absolutely infernal. Every gun was trained upon the Russians caught in a cul de sac. Long lines of smoke like sea-clouds floated across the water, interspersed with the flashes of the artillery. At 2.10 p.m. the bombardment reached its zenith.

This is an unmistakable allegation that the bombardment of the Russian fleet by the Japanese reached its zenith at 2.10 p.m., whereas the fact is that the action between the Japanese main squadrons and the Russian fleet did not commence until 2.08 p.m. and that scarcely one shot, if even one, had been fired by those squadrons at 2.10 p.m. No eye-witness of the battle could have fallen into this egregious error. Yet Messrs. Masujima and Lawton attempt to obscure the blunder by reference to a desultory interchange of shots which took place between the Russians and the Japanese scouting vessels in the forenoon, although they must know thoroughly that these preliminary discharges formed no part of the engagement proper. This equivocation is so flagrant as to be beyond the excuse of carelessness.

3.—In the original despatch these words occurred:—

A little after 6 o'clock in the morning the torpedo-boats were let loose to do their deadly work. There were scores and scores of them. Admiral Rojestvensky never dreamed that the Japanese had such a flotilla. Under the fire of the enemy all of whose spare guns were trained upon them, the little craft dashed on. One moment a shot would strike the water, but not before the boat had darted on towards the sides of the heavy war-ships.

If this means anything at all it means that the main torpedo attack commenced at 2 a.m. and that "scores and scores" of boats were engaged in it. Yet Messrs. Masujima and Lawton pretend that the reference is to an altogether secondary operation described in Admiral Togo's report, when the Suzuki Squadron, which was manœuvring independently, attacked two of the enemy's fugitive vessels at a place far remote from the scene of the main torpedo action. They ask us to believe that an affair in which "scores and scores" of torpedo-craft were engaged and in which "all the enemy's guns were trained upon" these craft, refers to an isolated operation by one solitary section against two flying Russian ships. Nobody can be deceived by such a clumsy subterfuge. Messrs. Lawton and Masujima are not deceived.

4.—In the original despatch these words occurred:—

The night's work (i.e. by the torpedo-craft.—Ed. J.M.) resulted in the sinking of the following ships: Alexander III, Oslabya, Navarin, Orel (Ural?) and three gun-boats.

Upon this our comment was:—"According to the correspondent's seeing the torpedo-craft sank the Alexander III, Oslabya, Navarin, Orel (or Ural) and 3 gun-boats; whereas the Alexander III and the Oslabya were sunk by gun-fire during the day; the Orel was not sunk at all; the Ural was sunk by gun-fire at 5.41 p.m., and the Russians had no gun-boats to be sunk." In reply to this criticism Messrs. Masujima and Lawton accuse us of "ignoring the fact that the Orel was queried Ural in the original despatch." We did not ignore it. We explicitly mentioned it and we showed that whether Orel or Ural the statement of the eye-witness correspondent was equally erroneous. Thus this allegation of Messrs. Masujima and Lawton has not even the honour of being classifiable as a subterfuge, a prevarication or an evasion. It is a plain falsehood.

5.—In the original despatch these words occurred:—

When Sunday dawned the Japanese fleet came to still closer range, pressing the Russians on to the north-west coast of Nagato. All day long the battle raged with unabated fierceness, but the Russians were in no strategical position in which they could offer any effective resistance.

On this, one of the most damning misstatements in the whole despatch, our comment was:—"On the 28th (Sunday) there was nothing that could be called a general battle. The Russians had been broken by the night-attack of the torpedoers into several sections, and it was near the Korean coast that the piece-meal destruction of these took place, not near the Japanese coast, a difference which is absolutely radical." To this Messrs. Masujima and Lawton reply that "the original despatch did not use the phrase 'general battle,' and by thus falsely placing the phrase between inverted commas which we did not use, they dishonestly endeavour to suggest that we assigned it to the original despatch. For the rest, if the words of the original despatch do not imply a general battle, what can they imply? The Japanese fleet coming to still closer range, pressing the Russians on to the north-west coast of Nagato and engaging them with unabated fierceness throughout the whole day—what is that but a general battle? Yet Messrs. MASUJIMA and LAWTON repudiate the term. Their eye-witness correspondent saw the Japanese fleet—not a few ships but the whole fleet—engaging the Russians with unabated fierceness all day long off the coast of Nagato, whereas in truth the operations on the 28th consisted of a number of petty independent actions off the opposite or Korean coast. No eye-witness could possibly have made such a stupendous blunder. Like the inverted commas of Messrs. MASUJIMA and LAWTON it is a figment of the imagination.

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT

We decline to follow Messrs. MASUJIMA and LAWTON into their remaining three points because these do not concern the original despatch in which alone the public takes any serious interest. Indeed it is quite apparent that in entering into these details we are assisting the strategy of Messrs. LAWTON and MASUJIMA, which strategy is to bury the main question under a mass of side-issues. That main question is:—Did the Daily Telegraph's Tokyo correspondent send to that journal a despatch purporting to contain the story of the Battle in the Sea of Japan as seen by an eye-witness who was with the Japanese Fleet, whereas no journalistic correspondent of any kind accompanied the Fleet. To that question our article of July 26th was devoted and the most significant feature of the whole affair is that Messrs. MASUJIMA and LAWTON wholly ignore that question in their reply. Mr. MASUJIMA is a barrister of some repute in Japan. We invite him now to say whether, having examined the evidence, as he must be supposed to have done since he associates himself with the case, he believes that any correspondent of the Daily Telegraph accompanied the Japanese Fleet in the battle on the 27th and 28th of May, and if he does not believe anything of the kind, we invite him to explain how he reconciles his advocacy of such a case with any principle of respectable legal practice.

THE BOOKSHELF.

Yokohama Yarns. First Series. Anonymous: Yokohama, Messrs. Kelly & Walsh, Ltd. $1.50.

This book will find many readers in the foreign settlements of Japan, but it will not be much in vogue elsewhere, and we are glad to recognise limits to its probable popularity—or notoriety. Not that the volume is without general interest. It has plenty of that; very lurid interest too. But such short tales—there are six of them compressed into the space of some 200 pages—must be highly dramatic or strikingly picturesque in order to attract the attention of readers who have neither personal nor local connexion with the incidents described, and we do not think that “Yokohama Yarns” satisfy either of these conditions. That a narrow circulation seems desirable is because the volume creates a most unpleasant impression of Yokohama life. The history of Yokohama is very chequered. During the 50 years of the settlement's existence an exceptional per-centage of abnormal incidents have disfigured its annals. There must be special reasons. Many have been suggested. The kindest is that the atmosphere of Japan instils a kind of subtle poison into Occidental blood, sapping morality and subjecting neurotic fibres to a tension which often becomes unendurable. It is hard to credit such a theory. For why, if the climatic influences be such, why should the nation which has breathed this opalescent air for three thousand centuries be remarkable for qualities precisely antithetic to those which the same air produces in aliens in one or two decades? Another explanation turns upon the conditions of Settlement life. Certainly it is a strange life: a confusing mixture of sordid reality and intoxicating fiction. Bread-winning is ostensibly the unique occupation of every adult male, yet associated with it is a singularly disproportionate pursuit of pleasure. Consider the club life, the social life and the sporting life of a man in Yokohama as compared with the corresponding phases of the same man's existence in a great city of the Occident. The comparison reveals glaring dissimilarities and suggests that for many a unit of the community custom and circumstance may set a “pace” apt to over-tax his staying power. Misled by examples which if he scanned them closely should be deterrent, and basking in the sunshine of a spirit of comradeship which creates a false sense of security and encourages extravagance, a man loosens the rein without reflecting, and when wisdom comes he finds himself impotent to obey her counsels. Many a future that should have been full of promise has thus been clouded by catastrophe, and many a noble heart has preferred death to the continued consciousness of disgrace. But whatever be the true analysis there is no gainsaying the fact that the story of the Settlement has been episodic. Long ago it already furnished sufficient material for more than one stirring volume, and we can neither be surprised nor indignant if now at length an author has begun to exploit the rich mine. But unhappily this book now before us deals with the dross only: the true metal, of which there is certainly no lack, is not treated at all, or, if allowed to appear, shows itself rarely and fortuitously. The male types depicted—always excepting the author himself—have nothing to recommend them save companionship and a superficial mood of mutual helpfulness. The female types are execrable. There is not one really pure, really lovable, really gentle woman in the whole book; at least not among the “heroines.” If there be any that would pass normal muster, they figure accidentally. Even “Irma” who tells the opening tale, “Doctor Yoho,” is a heartless bundle of conceit. She is apparently meant to be attractive, but in truth repulsive would be a more appropriate adjective. Yet “Irma” is an angel to those that she pre-ludes. We have no knowledge of such women. Our experience of Yokohama—not a short experience either since it dates from a time when the settlement was only seven years old—includes many types yet none quite so unlovely as those depicted in “Yokohama Yarns.” Nevertheless the author's observations may be just and accurate; our own negative testimony proves nothing. Neither have we any right to quarrel with him if he has chosen that his pages shall reflect only the shadows and none of the sunshine of settlement life. We concede too that as a writer he has done his part clearly: has painted his characters vigorously, unnatural as they often seem to us; has grouped them cleverly and has disposed the accessories with much skill. What we have a right to complain of, however, is that he has made truth a foundation for fiction. There can be no difficulty in identifying several of his leading figures: they are associated with events seared by the fire of horror upon the settlement's memory. The actors and actresses on the stage of these events are not to be mistaken by any old resident. Their stories are public property: facts stranger than fiction, well adapted for dramatic representation. But being public property they should not be distorted. The author should tell them as they occurred, not as he imagines that they might have occurred. He will say, perhaps, that the reality in some cases was more repellant than his version. We do not think so. The real women were not such monsters as he depicts; the real men not so excusable. And in one particular case he has unwarrantably distorted a tragedy so as to multiply its pathos for the direct sufferers that survive. These liberties might be permissible thirty or forty years hence; to-day they are premature. We regret therefore that the book has been published, though its interest is undoubtedly vivid.

We acknowledge receipt of the May number of The Coloniser. Surely before the departure of the last mail from England the June number had been issued. It is a journal evidently very largely in demand by persons desiring information as to British Colonies and foreign countries. Its facts are accurate, so far as we can judge, and they are presented in an attractive fashion. It is published at 16 Eldon Street, London, E. C.

The recent dreadful earthquake in India is profusely illustrated by photographs in The Empress, an interesting magazine published at Calcutta. These show with remarkable clearness the tremendous havoc that was wrought upon buildings. The other matter is equally interesting.

CUSTOMS PROTESTS.

On July 31st, Mr. Minakami, Director of the Yokohama Customs, delivered two decisions on protests. One was filed by Messrs. Cornes & Co., No. 50, Yamashita-cho, on imported tissue woven with linen and jute yarns, to which certificate of origin was attached. The appraisers of the Customs imposed 15 per cent., ad valorem duty in accordance with No. 357 of the tariff. The importers contended that the goods should be dealt with under No. 354 of the tariff which classifies “flax or linen canvas,” on which the duty is sen 4.7 per square yard. The protest was not sustained on the ground that linen in the tissue is predominant in weight.

Another protest was lodged by Messrs. A. Oestmann & Co., No. 76, Yamashita-cho. The firm imported imitation precious stones (made of glass) on which the Customs authorities ordered duty to be paid under No. 470 of the tariff. The contention of the importers was that the goods should be dealt with in accordance with No. 469. The director of the Customs decided to levy the duty under No. 62 of the tariff on the ground that this imitation of precious stones differs from “Venetian Glass,” being a kind of trimming.

BYE-ELECTION IN YOKOHAMA.

As Mr. F. Watanabe, member of the Upper House representing the highest taxpayers of Kanagawa prefecture, having resigned, a bye-election took place on July 27th at the Kencho. The result of the ballot was:—

YOKOHAMA ENGINE AND IRON WORKS, LIMITED.

The eighteenth annual general meeting of shareholders of the Yokohama Engine and Iron Works was held on Friday. Mr. B. C. Howard, Chairman, presided and there were also present Mrs. Lowder, Messrs. F. S. James, N. F. Smith, C. K. M. Martin, T. W. Hellyer, E. W. Frazar, C. B. Bernard, F. T. Abbott, E. Andreis, W. K. Tresize, manager, and R. T. Bell, secretary.

The CHAIRMAN said:—

GENTLEMEN,—This is the eighteenth annual general meeting of the Company and I have the pleasure of presenting to you the Accounts and Directors' Report for the past year, and as they have been in your hands for some days, I will ask you to take them as read.

The net profit for the year is yen 38,320.80 against yen 10,867.00 for the previous year, and I think you will all agree with me that this can be considered a satisfactory showing. You will observe that the usual percentage for depreciation has been written off buildings, plant, and machinery, but the steam launches account remains the same, as they are kept in a thoroughly efficient state of repair, and are entered on the books at a low valuation.

The stock of material shows a slightly higher value than last year, and the bank account is in a much more satisfactory condition.

The balance at credit of profit and loss account for division to-day amounts to yen 51,935.35, which is so satisfactory that your Directors consider it a good opportunity to start a reserve fund, and they recommend that a sum of yen 20,000.00 be carried to that account as a commencement: a dividend of yen 10 per share is proposed, the balance, yen 5,935.35, to be carried to new account.

In a business like ours there are always great fluctuations and until peace is proclaimed the return of trade must be more or less uncertain. It will therefore be the policy of your Directors to keep in view the sound financial position of the Company, and they hope to be able to recommend additions to the reserve fund as opportunity offers.

Directors and Auditors:—Messrs. F. S. James, and N. F. Smith retire by rotation and are proposed for re-election. We must further confirm the appointment to the Directorate of Mr. C. K. Marshall Martin, and Mr. F. J. Abbott.

The Auditors, Messrs. F. J. Hall, and J. F. Cox-Edwards, also retire but signify their willingness to again serve.

Unless someone wishes to ask any question I propose the adoption of the report and balance sheet and will ask someone to second it.

Mr. Bernard seconded that the report and accounts be adopted and this was unanimously carried.

On the motion of Mr. Bernard seconded by Mr. Andreis, Messrs. F. S. James and N. F. Smith, who retired by rotation and were eligible for re-election, were re-elected.

The next business was the confirmation of the election to the directorate of Messrs. C. K. Marshall Martin and F. T. Abbott, which on the motion of Mr. Bernard was adopted.

The re-appointment of Messrs. F. J. Hall and Cox-Edwards as auditors was carried on the motion of Mr. Hellyer.

The CHAIRMAN said the dividend warrants would be issued on Saturday and the meeting closed with a vote of thanks to the Chairman.

Following are the Report and Accounts:—

The Directors beg to submit the statement of Accounts for the year ended 31st May last.
The Net Profits for that period (including the sum of yen 13,614.55 brought forward from 31st May, 1904) after providing for Depreciation of Buildings, Plant and Machinery, and payment of Directors' and Auditors' Fees, &c., amount to	Yen. 51,935.35
This amount the Directors propose to deal with as follows:—
In payment of a Dividend for the year of yen 10 per Share	Yen. 26,000.00
To Carry to Reserve Fund	20,000.00
The Balance to be Carried Forward	5,935.35
	51,935.35

Board of Directors:—Messrs. F. S. James and N. F. Smith retire by rotation in accordance with the "Articles of Association," but offer themselves for re-election. Mr. C. B. Bernard having resigned his seat on the Board, the Directors elected Mr. C. K. Marshall Martin to fill the vacancy, and have also appointed Mr. F. J. Abbott a Director: both these appointments the Directors recommend should be confirmed at the forthcoming General Meeting.

Auditors:—Messrs. F. J. Hall, and J. F. Cox-Edwards retire, and offer themselves for re-election.

RUSSIANS FROM SAGHALIEN.

Major P. S. Dmeyantvitch (60) (reserve), Superintendent of the Kurilyon (?) Light House near Korsakoff, and thirty-eight civilians, including women and children were brought on August 2nd to Yokohama by the 10.30 a.m. train from Aomori under the escort of the gendarmes. As usual, they were assembled in the meeting hall of the Prefectural Assembly. Governor Sufu briefly told them that they were to be released and delivered to the French Consul, and expressed his sympathy with them over their tedious travels.

After a short consultation with the French Consul, they were put up in several Japanese hotels. They will leave by the next French mail steamer for Shanghai.

A telegram from Aomori adds that about six hundred civilians will be brought on August 10th from Alexandrofska and will be delivered to the French Consul in Yokohama.

THE GRAND HOTEL, LIMITED.

The thirty-second half-annual meeting of shareholders of the Grand Hotel, Limited, was held at the Hotel on Monday, July 31st. Dr. C. H. H. Hall, presided and there were also present, Messrs. B. C. Howard, A. M. Knapp, and L. Mottet.

The notice calling the meeting having been read by the Secretary,

The CHAIRMAN said:—The Report and Statement are now before us for consideration and will, as usual, be taken as read if there is no objection.

They present but little subject matter for special notice, the smallness of the returns being obviously due to recognized conditions incident to a state of war. The Directors have lost the co-operation of a conscientious colleague by the retirement of Mr. Kaufmann. They take this occasion to suggest that, as casual vacancy permits, the composition of the Board of Directors be restored to the number of originally provided for in the Articles of Association, viz. three Directors. The reason for the increase to five has long since ceased to operate, and a considerable reduction of fixed charges can be effected by a return to the number actually required. For these reasons the question of reverting to the original number of Directors will be formally submitted to you in due time. No writing off is recommended for this half year because the profit is represented wholly by cash and the property is already written down far below its actual value. Hitherto, the writing off has been based solely upon the estimated depreciation, and the latter has been thereby fully covered, but at the same time other influences have been operating for the production of an opposite effect, viz. appreciation. The result of these influences is that while yen 292,184.36 have been written off since the Company began operations, sixteen years ago, the actual value of the property is now more than double the total assets as presented in the Statement before us. This reflection and the prospect of an early termination of the war, which has especially affected business dependent upon travel, must serve for our encouragement while awaiting the return of normal conditions. You may have observed that the ratio of general expenses to working account has risen considerably of late. This fact is due largely to falling off of travel but in some degree also to greater proportionate expenditure. The increased cost of hotel supplies has, therefore, been the subject of serious consideration by the Directors with a view to minimize as much as possible the growing expense of working. To this end and in order to more effectively discharge its responsibility, the Board decided in April to appoint one of the Directors to supervise the management and, as managing director, to keep the Board in constant touch with the working of the Hotel. The results of this measure are already gratifying and warrant expectation of large advantages when such co-operation becomes complete and therefore more effective.

In view of the late large increase of cost of beef and the resulting public agitation for its reduction, you will be interested to know that the Directors have made inquiry into the feasibility of procuring a supply from abroad but found that while frozen beef could be laid down here for about twenty sen a pound efforts to effect economy in the direction was paralyzed by the absence of suitable storage. Frozen meats must be received immediately into cold storage for preservation but at present there is no available provision for such care. I now move the adoption of the directors' report and statement of account for the half year ended June 30th."

Mr. KNAPP seconded and the proposal was adopted unanimously.

A vote of thanks to the Chairman concluded the business.

On July 30th, 285 invalids were brought from the front to Ujina. On the same day, 158 invalids arrived at Shimbashi by the 12.30 p.m. train from Hiroshima.

THE INDUSTRIAL BANK.

On Thursday, a general meeting of the Industrial Bank (Credit Mobilier) was held when Mr. Yoshida, an official of the Imperial Household, Messrs. Arai and Nagahama, officials of the Financial Department, and other Government authorities were present. The accounts for the first half year were submitted. The net profit was yen 124,501.66. Of this sum, yen 15,000 was set apart as legal reserve, yen 3,800 as reserve for equalizing dividends, yen 62,500 was allotted as first dividend (at the rate of 5 per cent per annum), yen 25,000 as second dividend (at the rate of 2 per cent. per annum), yen 10,000 as bonus to employees, and the remainder carried forward to the next account.

Mr. Soyeda, President of the Bank, made a speech. He said, according to the Jiji, that since the establishment of the bank, three years have passed during which the business of the bank has been put in good order and gradually developed. As a result a dividend of 7 per cent., per annum has been declared for this half year. Immediately after the establishment of the bank, war between Japan and Russia broke out and this might have been expected to have retarded business greatly but on the contrary, business had been fairly active. Fortunately the Japanese armies and navy have hitherto won brilliant successes, and as a result the public, especially commercial circles, were enabled to view the situation with much easiness. In this half year, Port Arthur surrendered and the Baltic squadron had been annihilated, which great successes produced still greater tranquility in business circles. Such efforts must be matters of congratulation for shareholders. The new foreign loan of three hundred million yen was warmly received in Europe and America and the fourth and fifth domestic loans were issued with great success. Under these hopeful conditions, the fourth and fifth Exchange Bills were issued. Of them, yen 84,150,000 were dealt in by the bank. If the amount of the first, second and third Exchange Bills issued through the Bank are added together, the sum exceeds yen 124,580,000. Bills now in possession of the bank amounted to yen 3,011,500. This enormous advance, if compared with the capital of the bank, seems perhaps too heavy. At a critical time, however, the bank could not escape from the great national burden. The President further said as to business during the first half year, that yen 6,025,366 was advanced for national and local loans, yen 3,255,532 for debentures in various commercial companies, and yen 2,581,803 for several industries, making a total of yen 12,762,701. The credits exceed by yen 1,390,352 those of the previous year. During the present half year, the gross income was yen 613,132, including the balance carried forward from the previous account. Having liquidated sundry expenditures, there remained a net profit of yen 124,501. This year, the Government revised several laws concerning their business, as the result of which the bank assumed a more favourable position.

BASEBALL.

It was very hot on Saturday. In shady spots where the sun could not possibly penetrate, the thermometer marked 90° Fahr. at 2.30 p.m., so what it was like in the full blaze of Old Sol's too-ardent countenance we leave the reader to imagine. Perhaps it was this roasting prospect which lay none too-alluringly in front of them, in addition to the worries, disappointments and delays inseparable from Mail-day, which kept players shyly away from the shelterless field of the Y. C. & A. C. until after three o'clock. But once the game got started the men put in their best and some good plays came off during the afternoon. McChesney's team at the end of the second innings were 4 runs to Merriman's 2, but they were held down by their opponents till the sixth, when they bunched 6 runs, making them ten. Merriman's team stuck gamely to their task, however, and were only 2 runs behind when the game was called. Teams:—

JAPANESE SPIRIT OF CAMARADIE.

Dr. McGee's article in the Century Magazine for May contains the following :—

Besides the disabled Japanese on the Kobe Maru hospital ship, we carried forty Russians. All except two officers were badly wounded privates, and all were provided for and treated exactly as were their captors. The Russians asked for little besides, but that little was given them at once.

But to me the most beautiful sight on shipboard was the spontaneous friendliness shown by Japanese patients who happened to be on deck whenever a bandaged Russian appeared there. The Japanese would at once offer him a seat, and a cigarette, and make attempts at a gesture-and-tone conversation for his amusement. The role of victor was never assumed; their relations seemed those of host and guest. So greatly did the gloom of the prisoners lift in this atmosphere that on the evening we steamed along the Inland Sea they joined in an international concert, which began with American airs, continued with Russian folk-songs, and ended with the grand national hymn of Japan.

that the pictures are the never-failing comess and good-brearing of every Japanese from whatever station in life, seemed a condensed illustration of the whole conduct of the war. The same traits shown by these simple soldiers actualize those in authority, whose aim is not merely to win military victories, but also to conduct this war according to such high and humane principles that the whole world will recognize in Japan one of the most enlightened nations of the Earth.

Japan has learned much from the United States. Now the time has come when America should learn from Japan.

If, as seems probable, all other departments of the military service were organized with the foresight and completeness displayed in the medical, and conducted with equal skill, it would seem unnecessary to look further for causes of the uniform success of their arms, upon the land and upon the sea, without a break from the beginning to the end; a success which has astonished the world, and raised that little brown people to the front rank of military powers. At the same time they have won a grand respect for traits other and better than mere warlike prowess.

FIRE

On Saturday, about 10 a.m., according to the Kaga-cho police, some wax and turpentine oil, materials used in the manufacture of shoe-blackening in a godown, at No. 73, Yamashita-cho, caught fire and in consequence heavy smoke escaped through the windows. The fire was soon put out with but slight damage.

Early on the morning of July 20th, fire broke out in the Hirayama Fire-works Factory in the village of O-oka, not far from Ota, Yokohama, destroying the building. The cause is not known.

Early on the morning of Aug. 2nd, fire broke out in Fukagawa, Tokyo, destroying two buildings. Negligence was the cause.

PLAGUE

An official telegram from Chiba prefecture says that four cases of plague have appeared in the village of Uraga, Unakami.

A dead rat infected with plague was found on July 29th in a godown at Fukagawa, Tokyo, belonging to the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha.

A suspected case of bubonic plague is reported from the village of Hyakuken, Saitama prefecture. The patient is a woman, who was living up to July 27th at Fukagawa, Tokyo, which place is infected with disease.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

A hundred and sixteen sergeants were promoted ensign on July 18th.

A Peking telegram says that the German-China Bank was opened on August 1st.

The Hon. W. Taft, Miss Alice Roosevelt and their fellow travellers have presented ~~yen~~ $1,000 to the Japan Red Cross Society.

Mr. Tanabe, Japanese Consul in Bangkok, wired on August 1st to the Foreign Office that plague is now prevalent in that city.

During the first half year, the export of coal from Moji was: 329,572 tons to Hongkong, 143,528 tons to Shanghai, and 55,192 tons to Singapore.

A Lieutenant, two sub-Lieutenants, an engineer and two bluejackets from the captured Russian hospital ship Orel were removed on July 27th from Ujina to Niposhima.

The German steamer Lydia, which was recently captured in the neighbourhood of Okinawa prefecture (Loo-Choo islands), was brought on Aug. 2nd to Sasebo for adjudication by the Prize Court.

Five hundred Russians captured in Adrofska and surrounding places have been brought to Aomori. The officers will be removed to Hirosaki and the non-commissioned officers and men to Narashino.

Toki (75), the mother of a merchant named T. Tozaki, residing in West Toke, Yokohama, attempted on Sunday to commit suicide in her residence by injuring her throat with a razor. The cause seems to have been temporary insanity.

The Nichi Nichi says that Mr. T. Araki, a professor of the Tokyo Female High Normal School, was arrested on July 29th by the Mal police on a charge of having photographed the scenery in the area of the Straits fortifications.

A copy of the first issue of the Wingon Daily Report, which is published in Yingsi (Newchwang) is to hand. It is printed in Japanese, Chinese and English and is very well prepared for a first production. We wish our contemporary a prosperous career.

A telegram from Awomori reports that a junk with two Russian naval officers and 14 bluejackets has been captured by a Japanese warship in the neighbourhood of Etorofu, Kuriles, where it was in distress owing to a storm. The Russians will be brought to Awomori in a few days.

During two months commencing August 15 the Kyushu Railway Company will issue special excursion tickets either for certain sections or for the whole line. The pass for the whole line is available for twenty days and the first class fare is ten yen, not including transit tax.

Dr. H. Ishibashi and thirty-two others have been appointed surgeons in the Army, and Mr. Ishikawa and five other sergeants promote to ensign. T. Kobayashi, J. Otori and T. Kimura soldiers, were deprived on July 27th of decorations conferred on them after the Japan-China war.

The Hochs has a report from Post Arthur that the work of floating the sunken Russian ship has progressed greatly. The steamer Amur and the battleships Rennan and Pobieda are now being pumped out, the temporary repairs being completed. They will be floated in the near future.

About 7 p.m. on Aug. 2nd, the Osaka Shosha Kaisha steamer Gunsan Maru, while entering Kobe harbour, collided with the British steamer Southgrove (the agents of which are Messrs. Dodwell and Co.) with the result that the latter sustained severe damage on the port side of the engine room six feet under the water line. Temporary repairs having been made by men from the warship Tsukushi, and the Harbour Police Shipbuilding Yard, the Southgrove was brought to the pier of the Kawasaki Shipbuilding Yard. The Japanese ship was not damaged.

It is reported by a Seoul telegram that Vice-Admiral Sir Gerard Noël, Commander-in-Chief of the British squadrons in Asiatic waters, arrived on July 30th at Chemulpo with two cruisers from Wei-hai-wei, together with his staff. On the following day, they proceeded to Seoul. They left on Aug. 1st for home.

During July, the price of commodities advanced by 1.39 per cent. on the average. The details are as follow:—

	July.	June.	July 1904.
Goods for domestic use ...	118.26	117.00	105.32
Goods for export	113.00	109.78	93.78
Goods imported.....	120.31	119.69	109.06
Average rate	118.00	116.61	104.54

About 3.30 p.m., on August 2nd, I. Iwasaki (19) residing at the village of Ikasa, Yokosuka, attempted to murder his father, Hisakichi by name, in their dwelling, inflicting severe injuries on the latter's head with a sword. The culprit gave himself up to the Yokosuka Police Office. The cause was a dispute as to property. On Thursday the accused was removed to the Yokohama District Court.

Two coolies were arrested on Aug. 1st by the Harbour police and removed to the Yokohama District Court. On the evening of July 29th, they broke open a case containing a hundred pieces of cotton in the cargo on board the Mongolia and stole sixty-two pieces while they were employed in landing work. Some of the goods stolen were found in two lighters at the English Hatoba.

There is general regret in Tientsin (said the China Times of July 19th) at the announcement of the approaching departure of Major-General Semba. This clever and popular Japanese officer has made many friends in North China, by whom he is deservedly held in the highest respect, and his removal hence, even though it be to undertake the duties of an important appointment in Japan, is regarded as real deprivation.

The Hokkaido Colonization Bank has decided to issue debentures to the amount of yen 800,000. The terms of the loan are reported by the Koku-nin to be as follows:—Subscription to be made not later than August 31st and to be paid up not later than September 30th. For the first year the loan is to be left untouched and during the ensuing five years, it will be redeemed by lottery in April each year. The interest is 7 per cent. per annum.

We have received the following communication from the Superintendent of Foreign Mails:—"Please allow me to acquaint the public through your paper with the fact that the Parcels Post Convention between Japan and the United States is now extended to the Guam Islands under the same conditions as for the United States, and that parcels destined for the above island are to be forwarded by means of the ships of the Nanyo Boyeki Heki Company.

T. Yamada, contractor in Nagasaki, has asked the local government to transmit his claim of yen 6,825 to the Russian Government. According to his petition, he was attending to the construction of a branch of the Russo-Chinese Bank in Harbin under the instructions of the Russians. After the outbreak of the war, he was compelled to leave without completing the work or receiving payment so that he has sustained the foregoing loss.

A Reuter's telegram from Queenstown, dated June 19, says:—"Three large iron sailing barques reached Cork harbour this morning from Australia, after a remarkable passage. They are the German Este, 1,420 tons register, Captain Carstens; the English Iredale, 1,574, Captain Roberts; and the Scotch Inverurie, 1,417, Captain Charleston. Ninety-nine days ago these three vessels were towed out of Melbourne harbour at about the same hour, laden with cargoes of wheat, and bound to Queenstown for orders. That night they lost sight of each other and did not meet again until about entering Cork harbour, being almost simultaneously reported from the headland signal station. The vessels are well-known fast sailers, and in shipping circles there was considerable speculation as to which would turn up first. The German vessel has actually the best of the time, while the Iredale comes second."

A private letter to Singapore from the Celebes says that the Dutch have made an unfortunate start with their expedition against the natives of South Celebes. The Dutch flagship has got ashore about 150 miles from Macassar, in the Gulf of Boni, and is pretty hard on, it is believed. She is one of the newest cruisers and has the Admiral on board. It is stated that the Nam Yong may be chartered to go to the stranded vessel, to take off stores, &c., and lighten her.

The white-flag which was hoisted on the Russian destroyer Budevi (now Salsuki) when Admiral Rojestvensky surrendered to the Japanese destroyer Sazanami in the battle of the Japan Sea, has been brought to Tokyo. It is said by Tokyo papers to be made from a linen cloth covering a table in the wardrobe, the size being 8 shaku in length and a little over 4 shaku in width. The naval authorities intend to exhibit it in the military museum, Yushukwan, Kudan, Tokyo.

THE AMERICAN BOYCOTT IN CHINA.

The Shanghai Times says that the compradors of several Shanghai firms have received threatening letters because they continue to remain in the employ of American firms. The following is the translation of a letter sent to the comprador of the American Trading Co.—

SIR,—I have been longing after your grand good manner for a long time, but have not had the pleasure of meeting you. We now hope that your wealth is abundant and your health splendid. On account of the American Government ill-treating Chinese labourers, injuring our brothers, insulting our hands and feet, we feel very painful in heart, so painful that we can find no word to express it, and our hatred toward America can not be allayed. We have noticed that Shanghai gentlemen have also shown their sympathy and are trying to devise a means to stop the ill-treatment of Chinese. Some enlightened gentlemen have proposed that a boycott on American goods can be used to retaliate against America. The idea is best. When this proposal was first made people in every direction approved of it. You are also a Chinese. You have been the Compradore to the American Trading Co. for several years. Don't you know that to-day, the 20th, is the day fixed that no more American goods are to be used? This morning we saw you go into the office of the American Trading Co. in a haughty manner, considering that you are its Compradore. You never think of the sufferings of our brethren nor of the public's desire, but only seeking for your own profit by handling American goods. Is it not a sin? You are a man that is to be pitied. We do not think that you, being a man having extraordinary talents, will have no food to eat and no clothes to wear if you quit the American Trading Co. Should you not be able to live after leaving that firm, we would supply food and clothes to every old or young member of your family and you need not feel distressed. In order to abate the rage of the public we allow you three days in which to settle your accounts with your employers. If three days are not sufficient, take five days. If five days are still not enough take ten days. But after the expiration of ten days, should you not have attended to the matter, you must not blame us for cutting your head off and burning your house down.

We understand, says the N.-C. D. News, that upon receipt of the disturbing news from Amoy the Committee in charge of the Boycott matter at Shanghai at once telegraphed to the principal merchants and gentry of that port exhorting them to maintain control of their fellow citizens and showing how foolish it is for the people of Amoy to act so rowdily. "You should," said the dispatch, "continue friendly relations with every American in your midst and act courteously as usual towards them. Our dispute is not with American merchants, officials, and missionaries here, nor with American merchants in the States. We merely want just treatment for our countrymen going to the United States, and if we cannot get our wish we merely show our displeasure by refusing to buy things of American manufacture, that is all. We must not quarrel or ill-treat Americans in our midst, the majority of whom heartily decry the action of those concerned in the States. It is therefore to be earnestly hoped that you people of Amoy merely keep to the letter of our programme already decided amongst us, namely, abstain from buying or contracting for American goods until we get our wish, which is very simple and does not require any exertion or bullying on the part of the mob. There is no use for such things at all. We are heartily sorry that you have done such things in Amoy and sincerely hope people of other cities will not follow your bad example."

The following reply has been received from the Amoy Committee by the Shanghai Committee:—"We have read your telegram deprecating the attack on the U.S. Consul here. There has been nothing of the sort. Where did you hear of this?"

It is reported that those in charge of the boycott have advised parents not to keep their children from attending schools kept by Americans as there is no quarrel with them.

As there are American goods still unsold in Shanghai and goods previously contracted for still to arrive, Chinese will be allowed not only to buy the former but goods contracted for before the commencement of the boycott are without exception to be taken delivery of when they arrive from the United States.

With reference to a telegram sent by the Waiwupu, a short time ago, to the various Committees in charge of the protest against the new Exclusion Treaty forbidding them to boycott American goods, some Chinese in San Francisco on learning of this sent the following telegram to the Waiwupu:—

"You seek to forbid us Chinese merchants from making a protest in the shape of boycotting American goods, thereby proving yourselves willing slave of the U.S. Minister in Peking; you have thus shown yourselves traitors willing to sell your country; therefore you are an enemy of all. Punishment must be meted out to you and we shall immediately send a 'Chuang Shih' (brave hero: like the Japanese 'Soshi') to kill you. For an example we request you to see what has been done in Russia by patriots in removing high Ministers of State.—A joint telegram from 100,000 angry Chinese residing in America."

To this extraordinary telegram, says the N.-C. Daily News, the Waiwupu sent a reply through Mr. Chung, the Chinese Consul-General in San Francisco, denying the charge of trying to coerce Chinese merchants from putting into force the boycott of American goods and declaring that on the contrary the Ministers of the Waiwupu were doing their best in discussing with the U. S. Minister about the deletion of obnoxious clauses in the proposed new exclusion treaty. The wild and reckless words of the senders of the San Francisco telegram are deprecated in a dignified manner by the Waiwupu, and the Chinese of San Francisco are exhorted not to listen to baseless rumours and so spoil matters.

The boycott started in Shanghai, Amoy, and other places in South China, against American goods, has now extended to Nagasaki. The Chinese merchants there have passed the following resolution: (1) To stop shipping by American steamers after the 1st August; (2) to refuse cargoes brought by them; (3) to stop buying or selling American goods, or handling goods forwarded via America; (4) goods covered by old contracts not to be dealt with subsequent to November next; after that date, no fresh contract to be signed.

Up to July 27 the Chinese committee in charge of the American boycott had received telegrams of support from the following Chambers of Commerce:—Chengtu and Chungking (Szechuan province), Shasi, Wuchang and Hankow (Hupei province), Nanking, Hankow and Huaian (Kiangsu province), Kiukiang, Nanchang, and Hukow (Kiangsi province), Wuhu and Ningking, (Anhui province), Shaoxing, Hangchow, Wenchow, and Ningpo (Chekiang province), Foochow and Amoy (Fukien province), Canton, Swatow, Samshui, and Chaoching (Kuangtung province), Wuchow and Kueilin (Kuangsi province).

LITERARY GOSSIP.

In a discussion on University prize poems the Academy remarks that on two occasions at least the Newdigate is said to have been awarded on the strength of the merits of a single line. The telling line in D. S. MacColl's "Fall of Carthage" was "The monotone of everlastingness." In Dean Burgon's description of Pedra occurred the phrase "A rose-red city—half as old as time." Neither line can be fairly appraised without its context. Mr. MacColl wrote:—

'But better still in slumber slanting ease
To be beside the falling of the seas,
To listen and to listen till the tune
Of all the life of all the afternoon
Deepens to one note of a long distress—
The monotone of everlastingness.'

The passage in which Dean Burgon's bit was effected ran—

'Not virgin white—like that old Doric shrine
Where once Athena held her rites divine:
Not saintly grey—like many a minster fane
That crowns the hill or sanctifies the plain:
But rosy red—as if the blush of dawn
Which first beheld them were not first withdrawn:
The hues of youth upon a brow.
Which men called old two thousand years ago.
Match me such marvel, save in Eastern clime—
A rose-red city—half as old as time.'

Thanks to Mr T. Fisher Unwin, the reader of books of travel may now have for 3s. 6d. the voyages and adventures of that wonderful sixteenth century Portuguese traveller, Ferdinand Mendez Pinto. This classic has been translated into many languages, and the present reprint is that of Cogan's translation of 1663, somewhat abridged. The reader will be particularly delighted to find that the quaint, interesting illustrations of that edition have been reproduced in facsimile, and they add much to the value of the volume. Mendez Pinto had a career of adventure which even the most imaginative fiction writer could scarce make more exciting. He travelled in Ethiopia, China, Tartary, Cochinchina, Siam, Japan, and the East Indies. In his twenty-one years of wandering he was five times shipwrecked, sixteen times sold and thirteen times made a slave. The narrow ignorance of his contemporaries branded him as a prolific liar, but we know that he was a close, and for the most part, accurate observer of people, places, and customs, and that his book of travels is an invaluable record of the condition of many parts of Asia in the sixteenth century.

"I remember," says a correspondent of the Academy, "once penetrating into the heart of that wild west where Carlyle came from and in the village of Ecclefechan searching out the birth-place of the seer. When shown the very room in which he first saw the light, I could not help asking, 'Was Carlyle really born there?' 'Ay, that was he,' replied the stout dame who was showing the room, adding as though the fact were of even greater importance, 'And oor Maggie was born in the varra same bed.'"

Lord Acton's list of the hundred best books published in the Pall Mall Magazine has been described as "a very learned affair." There are not more than half-a-dozen English books in the entire list. These include Hooker's "Ecclesiastical Policy," Newman's "Theory of Development," Darwin's "Origin of Species," Marne's "Ancient Law," and Mill's "System of Logic." Shakespeare is excluded. Among other books recommended are the following:—Mozley's "University Sermons," Cori's history of the religious movement in the Canton de Vaud, the "Breviloquium" of Bonaventura, Blondel's book on the Primacy, Ronaveau's book on Poland, Burke's Correspondence, and Humboldt's "Kosmos."

The intimate association of Southwark—where King Edward accompanied by the Queen, inaugurated the cathedral of the new diocese on Monday, the 3rd July—with the great names in English literature—Gower, Chaucer, Shakespeare, Goldsmith, Johnson, Dickens, Ruskin—is well known, but the locality has the equally interesting but perhaps less generally known distinction of being the place whence the first Bible printed in England was issued. That Bible was "Imprynted in Sowthwarke for James Nycolson" in 1537, and was the second edition of Coverdale's translation, the first having been printed by Jacop van Meteren at Antwerp, and sent to Nicolson of Southwark in sheets—a protective Act prohibiting the introduction of bound books into England.

Professor Bury, Regius Professor of Modern History in the University of Cambridge, has published through Messrs. Macmillan & Co., "The Life of St. Patrick and His Place in History." Mr. Bury explains the nature of the attraction the subject has for him. In the first place, it was not as an important crisis in the history of Ireland, but "as an appendix to the history of the Roman Empire, illustrating the emanations of its influence beyond its own frontiers." In the second place, Mr. Bury adds, the theme attracted him "as a notable episode in the series of conversions which spread over northern Europe the religion that prevails to-day." Historical students will grasp the significance of this mere outline of the scope of the work.

Mr. John Lane publishes an interesting volume of historical memoirs relating to the reign of Charles II. This is the "Memoirs of Lady Fanshawe," edited with an introduction by Beatrice Marshall, and a note on the illustrations to the volume by Allan Fea. The writer of these recollections was the wife of Sir Richard Fanshawe, the poet and translator, Charles II.'s Ambassador to the Courts of Spain and Portugal. With the memoirs are printed in illustration of them extracts from Sir Richard's correspondence. In an "introductory memoir" the editor gives a succinct sketch of the Fanshawe family, and of the chief personages referred to by Lady Fanshawe. The illustrations with which Mr. Allan Fea deals comprise reproductions of family portraits and contemporary prints.

Mr. Horatio Brown, already the author of many books about Venice, is adding another to the series, entitled "In and Around Venice," which Messrs. Rivington announce for early issue. It is intended to be a companion to the "Life on the Lagoons," and several of the chapters appeared originally in the first edition of that book, but for various reasons these were subsequently omitted. Another chapter appeared in the author's "Venetian Studies," published in 1887, and now out of print; but the rest of the volume has never appeared in book form.

Two further volumes in the series of twelve photogravure facsimiles of rare fifteenth century books printed in England and now in the University Library, Cambridge, will shortly be published by the Cambridge University Press—"The Temple of Glass," by John Lydgate, and "A Ryte Profitable Treatise compendiously drawn out of many and dyvers Wrytynges of Holy Men," by Thomas Betson. The copy of "The Temple of Glass," printed at Westminster by Caxton about the year 1477, formed part of the collection of John Moore, Bishop of Ely, which was given to the University by George I. in 1715. It is now preserved in a separate binding at Cambridge, but was formerly bound up with seven other publications in one priceless little volume, lettered on the back "Old poetry printed by Caxton." According to Blades, "the collection appears to have been made before it came into the Bishop's possession; but the fact of the poems being bound together led Middleton, and all succeeding writers, to describe them as one work. A careful examination, however, showed that the volume contained eight distinct publications, which have since been bound separately. Some of these are unique, and some are found alone in other collections." They evidently included some of the first productions from Caxton's press. "The Ryght Profitable Treatise" is reproduced from the copy printed in Caxton's house by Wynkyn de Worde about 1500, and—like "The Temple of Glass"—was presented to Cambridge by George I. with the rest of the library of Bishop Moore. The tract is one of twenty-six formerly bound together in another of the remarkable volumes included in that collection, which was very rich in black-letter books, and cost George I. altogether £6,000.

A monthly magazine tells a good Law Courts story. A counsel, in the middle of his cross-examination, was handed a telegram. "Hello," he said, as he read it, "So-and-so has won the Derby." "Mr. A.," said the judge, severely, "it is very unseemly that in the course of solemn judicial proceedings, where a man's liberty and reputation are at stake, you should be talking of the winner of a horse race. Er—by the way, does the telegram say what was second and third?"

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT ON AMERICAN COLLEGE IDEALS.

President Roosevelt is already spoken of as the next head of Harvard University when the venerable President Eliot retires. The selection would be an ideal one, besides solving the great American problem "how can we best employ our ex-Presidents?" President Roosevelt was the principal speaker at the Harvard Commencement this year and his speech, as was only to be expected, was on a very high level. He began by saying:—

"A great university like this has two especial functions. The first is to produce a small number of scholars of the highest rank, a small number of men who, in science and literature, or in art, will do productive work of the first class. The second is to send out into the world a very large number of men who never could achieve, and who ought not to try to achieve, such a position in the field of scholarship, but whose energies are to be felt in every other form of activity; and who should go out from our doors with the balanced development of body, of mind, and above all, of character, which shall fit them to do work both honorable and efficient.

"Much of the effort to accomplish the first function, that of developing men capable of productive scholarship, as distinguished from merely imitative, annotative, or pedagogic scholarship, must come through the graduate school. The law school and medical school do admirable work in fitting men for special professions, but they in no shape or way supply any shortcomings in the graduate school any more than does the college proper, the college of the undergraduates. The ideal for the graduate school and for those undergraduates who are to go into it must be the ideal of high scholarly production, which is to be distinguished in the sharpest fashion from the mere transmittal of ready-made knowledge without adding to it. If America is to contribute its full share, to the progress not alone of knowledge, but of wisdom, then we must put ever-increasing emphasis on university work done along the lines of the graduate school.

President Roosevelt then turned to an aspect of the question which singularly enough has only lately come into prominence in the United States:—

"We can best help the growth of American scholarship by seeing that as a career it is put more on a level with the other careers open to our young men. The general opinion of the community is bound to have a very great effect even upon its most vigorous and independent minds. If in the public mind the career of the scholar is regarded as of insignificant value when compared with that of a glorified pawnbroker, then it will with difficulty be made attractive to the most vigorous and gifted of our American young men. Good teachers, excellent institutions and libraries are all demanded in a graduate school worthy of the name.

"But there is an even more urgent demand for the right sort of student. No first-class science, no first-class literature or art, can ever be built up with second-class men. The scholarly career, the career of the man of letters the man of arts, the man of science, must be made such as to attract those strong and virile youths who now feel that they can only turn to business, law, or politics. There is no one thing which will bring about this desired change, but there is one thing which will materially help in bringing it about, and that is to secure to scholars the chance of getting one of a few brilliant positions as prizes if they rise to the first rank in their chosen career. Every such brilliant position should have as an accompaniment an added salary, which shall help to indicate how high the position really is, and it must be the efforts of the alumni which can alone secure such salaries for such positions.

"As a people I think we are waking up to the fact that there must be better pay for the average man

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SPECIAL SERVICE.)

DE WITTE INTERVIEWED.

London, July 28.
 Reuter telegraphs from St. Petersburg that M. de Witte has been interviewed and the interview has been published at St. Petersburg. He is reported to have declared that the institution of a Viceroy of the Far East was one of the principal causes of the war inasmuch as it constituted a provocation to China, Japan, Great Britain and America, and it did not correspond with the true strength of Russia in the Far East, particularly on the Pacific Ocean where Russia, properly speaking, has no interest.

DE CASTRIES BAY.

London, July 28.
 General Linevitch reports that on the 24th inst. the Japanese landed a battalion of troops at de Castries Bay, south of the Amur.

THE NORWEGIAN THRONE.

It is reported that the Kaiser is proposing a Hohenzollern Prince for the Norwegian crown.

BRITISH FLEET TO VISIT THE BALTIC.

The British Admiralty has decided to dispatch the Channel squadron on a cruise to the Baltic in August and September to visit the Scandinavian ports.

RUSSIAN CRUISER STOPS ANOTHER BRITISH STEAMER.

The Russian auxiliary cruiser Kuban stopped the British steamer Fazilka in the Red Sea on Tuesday.

THE JAPANESE TERMS.

London, July 29.
 A version of the Japanese terms has already been published in Washington with some show of authority.

M. DE WITTE.

Later.
 In an interview transmitted by wireless telegraph from the Atlantic liner on which he travelled, M. de Witte declared that nothing which had recently occurred in Europe could remotely or indirectly affect the problem with which he would have to deal.

THE JAPANESE COMMISSIONERS.

Baron Komura and Mr. K. Takahira lunched with President Roosevelt yesterday.

TERRIBLE TRAIN ACCIDENT.

An electric train from Liverpool to Southampton ran at full speed into a stationary train. Twenty-two persons were killed and four killed.

VISIT OF FRENCH SAILORS TO ENGLAND.

London, July 30.
 The whole programme for entertaining the French naval officers during their visit to England in August has been elaborated. It comprises a Royal lunch at Cowes, a reception at Windsor, a lunch at the Guildhall, culminating in a lunch at Westminster Hall, which latter is regarded as quite an exceptional compliment.

THE BRITISH CHANNEL SQUADRON.

London, July 30.
 The forthcoming cruise of the British Channel Squadron in the Baltic is causing a great outcry on the part of the Berlin conservative newspapers, which claim that the Baltic must be regarded as controlled by the countries bordering it. Sweden, Denmark and Russia being unable to say much Germany must be considered mistress of that Sea.

VLADIVOSTOCK.

A strong Japanese squadron is blockading Vladivostock.

THE TSAR'S RESOLVE.

London, July 31.
 The Tsar has replied to a petition urging him not to conclude a shameful peace, "that the Russian people may rely on me never to make a dishonourable or unworthy peace."

BRITISH GENERAL ELECTION.

There is a growing belief that there will be a general election in the autumn. The Scottish Conservative candidates have been officially warned to be ready for a general election before the end of October.

RUSSIAN REFORMS.

London, August 1.
 It is reported from St. Petersburg that the Council of Ministers has approved the electoral scheme for a national assembly. Everyone is to be enfranchised who is over twenty-five years of age and who fulfills the prescribed property and taxation qualifications. Each province and twenty of the largest towns are each to elect an electoral college, which elects the deputies. There will be a secret ballot throughout. The peasants will have no individual votes, their collegiate representatives being elected by cantonal assemblies, which will be elected by the communal councils.

THE PEACE TERMS.

London, August 1.
 Owing to the sensational reports of interviews published by the American press regarding the peace terms, Mr. Sato has been obliged to announce that they are fabrications and misquotations. He avers that he was ignorant of the Japanese terms.

THE BALTIC.

Semi-official Berlin journals deny that Germany has entertained any project of closing the Baltic.

PARIS MUNICIPALITY TO VISIT LONDON.

The visit of the entire Paris Municipality to London as guests of the London County Council in October promises to be a unique event, the French councillors holding a special business meeting while in London.

RUSSIA'S NATIONAL ASSEMBLY.

London, August 2.
 The Tsar to-day presided at a council for the final consideration of the national assembly scheme. Modifications are unlikely. The elections are proposed to take place on the 1st of October and the assembly will meet on the 1st November. The meetings will be private, but the President can admit the Press. The members will receive pay of £1 a day.

MR. TAKAHASHI.

Viscount Hayashi has presented Mr. Takahashi, Vice President of the Bank of Japan, to the King.

M. WITTE.

Baron Rosen has visited President Roosevelt to arrange for the President's reception of M. Witte.

THE BRITISH SQUADRON AND THE BALTIC.

London, August 2.
 Reuter's correspondent in Berlin telegraphs that the Berlin Foreign Office deprecates the newspaper outcry with regard to any anxiety in reference to the visit of the British Channel Squadron to the Baltic. Germany, it is said, is prepared to give the squadron the usual hospitality and to furnish it with coal, provisions, etc.

MANCHURIA.

General Linevitch has telegraphed to the Tsar contradicting the newspaper reports that the Russian Armies have been surrounded, and declaring that all Japanese attempts to approach him have been unsuccessful.

EXODUS FROM VLADIVOSTOCK.

The inhabitants of Vladivostock are leaving the city en masse and proceeding to Blagovestchensk.

LINEVITCH'S CONFIDENCE.

Later.
 General Linevitch concluded his Message to the Tsar by stating that the "morale of the troops inspires complete confidence in our armies. They are ready for any task."

THE TSAR'S DETERMINATION.

Replying to another address, the Tsar telegraphed his hearty approval of the recommendation to continue the war till the enemy is crushed, and further that he would not entertain any proposals for the cession of territory or the payment of an indemnity.

[Received at the Imperial Naval Head Quarters From Vice-Admiral Kataoka, commanding the Northern Squadron. Received p.m. 27th inst.]

NAVAL NEWS.

The report of the officer commanding the squadron despatched to de Castries Bay on the 24th instant (Castries Bay is about 60 nautical miles N. W. from Alexandrofska on the opposite coast) is as follows:—
 "On the afternoon of the 24th we landed near Kresterkamp (promontory). The men in charge of the light-house fled, leaving nothing but an officer's cap and 7 soldier's caps. At Tsboy, which is the other extremity from the light-house, there was a building for a telephone with communicated with the light-house. Here we found 21 beds but no sign of any person. The light-house is very strongly constructed and has a ware-house, quite full of provisions. Subsequently we pushed on far into the harbour. When we reached the neighbourhood of Basart Island and got as far as the telegraph office of Alexandrofsky (not Alexandrofska which is on Saghalien), we observed 4 guns, 2 of which suddenly opened on us. We at once replied, and the enemy was finally silenced. Thereafter a large conflagration broke out in the town, and there was an explosion apparently of a powder magazine."

RYKOFF OCCUPIED.

[Received at the Imperial Military Head Quarters. 29th p.m.]

From an early hour on the 27th the Saghalien Army advanced vigorously, pursuing the enemy. At 3 p.m. its van occupied Delpenskoe and its cavalry rode into Rykoff. Meanwhile the force which had forced the enemy back to Nomihairovskoe pushed on eastward and driving his infantry and artillery from their position near Wodernikovskiy, at once took up the pursuit. The heat was severe, the thermometer registering 93° F.

THE CAPTURE OF RYKOFF.

[Received at the Imperial Military Head Quarters at the afternoon of the 30th inst.]

The gist of this report is as follows:—The Russian forces confronting the Japanese left on the north of Rykoff mustered 2,000 with 4 field pieces. The military force confronting the Japanese right west of the road from Dui to Rykoff mustered 3,000 infantry with 4 field pieces and 4 machine guns. The Japanese unattached cavalry which entered Rykoff on the afternoon of the 27th were obliged to retire during the night owing to the disturbed state of the town. It being thus seen that the Russian main force on the western road still occupied the highlands above the town, the Japanese formed the plan of attempting to annihilate this force by capturing the town in its rear and attacking simultaneously in front. With that object the van of the left column, accompanied by the unattached cavalry, moved rapidly along the northern road at 3 a.m. on the 28th and entered the town and after some confused street fighting obtained full possession of the place by 8.30 a.m. Meanwhile the right wing opened a vehement attack against the Russians on the western heights and these seeing the town in their rear occupied by the enemy broke and fled along a byroad leading from a point 5 miles west of the town to a point 10 miles south. The Russian losses in men and material are believed to have been heavy, but have not yet been ascertained. At noon a force was sent out from the town to pursue the enemy southward and at a place 8 kilometers from Rykoff they came into collision with a body of 800 Russians, of whom they captured 500 and killed 200.

[Received at the Headquarters of the Imperial Army on the afternoon of the 1st August.]

SAGHALIEN.

The Karafuto Army having broken the enemy, who had retired to a point 8 kilometers south of Rykoff, pursued him vigorously and on the 28th attacked him in a strongly fortified position at Paleo. The place was captured the same day and the enemy, about 1,000 strong, retired southward in disorder toward Onoru.

[This place is 65 versts south of Paleo.—Ed. J.M.]

Lieut.-General Haraguchi, commanding the Karafuto Army, proclaimed on the 30th July that the whole island is now under military law.

[Received at the Imperial Military Head Quarters.]

JAPANESE TRADING STEAMER ATTACKED.

At 4.48 a.m. on the 3rd two Russian destroyers fired on the Japanese merchant steamer Keisho in Kyong-song Bay. Seven shots struck the steamer in the engine-room and the bridge and killed the Master and the cabin boy and wounded the steward and a Korean sailor. The Russians fired about 60 shots and at a little after 5 o'clock ceased firing and steamed in the direction of Vladivostok. The Keisho listed but was able to continue her voyage.

[RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.]

THE PEACE CONFERENCE.

The Austrian newspapers hold that the meeting of the two Emperors will exercise considerable influence on the general situation as regards peace. All agree in that view. The Fremdenblatt says that as the Kaiser supported the President's intervention and assisted it, there is no reason to suppose that at his meeting with the Tsar he forgot his own previous acts.

The Nieuw Freie Press says:—"The meeting is the Kaiser's manner of commiserating the Tsar with respect to the existing situation. The German Emperor fully understands, of course, that constitutional institutions can not be avoided, in Russia and the meeting will therefore have the effect of facilitating reform in that sense. As to foreign affairs this newspaper argues that the meeting will exercise a powerful and excellent influence on the peace question. Further, with regard to the view taken by English journals (namely that such a meeting on the very eve of the peace negotiations must be regarded as a measure intended to destroy Japan's political influence), the Nieuw Freie Press contends that since the outbreak of hostilities Germany has maintained a neutral attitude and has sought to avoid all suspicion of supporting Russia vis-à-vis Japan. Therefore the Kaiser is not now likely to commit the folly of offending Japan, who possesses so great power in the Far East. In sum, the meeting will more than ever strengthen the Tsar's desire for peace.

Prince Meshchersky, writing on the 20th of July, says:—"We do not know what powers have been entrusted to M. Witte but since his nomination public opinion may be said to take two forms. The first is that the War Party, having made failure upon failure in the Far East, which failures have incurred public censure and placed them in great moral difficulties, welcomed Witte's appointment as a means of avoiding their own responsibility. The second is that Witte's enemies have contrived to have entrusted to him a difficult task in which he can not succeed, so as to bring about his ruin. Thus if the general opinion be inferred it does not believe in the restoration of peace, inasmuch as Russian desires an honourable peace and the situation does not admit of an honourable peace. Witte, when he accepted the post, must have well understood the trend of public opinion. But when we recall that Russia has felt obliged to assent to a peace conference and that it is essential for her to quell her domestic disturbances, the occasion does not warrant us in paying any attention to side issues.

The Novoye Vremya, in consecutive issues, has discussed the question of the hour. The gist of its writings is this:—"The peace conference is an affair of prime importance to the world for it will determine the positions of the Powers in the Far East as well as the superiority or inferiority of the yellow race. It is not Russia's interests alone that have to be considered. There devolves upon her the duty of indirectly working on behalf of other Powers also, and that her task is correspondingly heavy need scarcely be remarked. Consequently it is not to be supposed that the States of Europe will stand by as idle spectators when the balance of power in the Far East and their own interests are concerned. If we consider the recent meeting of the Kaiser and the Tsar from the point of view of the German Emperor, who is so careful of the world's conditions, it must be regarded as an event of deep political significance. The Novoye Vremya also cites the cases of the interference of the Powers after the wars between Russia and Turkey and between Japan and China, and refers to the recent Morocco question, arguing from these precedents that the Powers should interest themselves actively. It shows a covert desire to enlist their intervention.

THE MEETING OF EMPERORS.

As the Havas News Agency and the French newspapers still continue to state that the meeting of the two Emperors was suggested by the Kaiser and took place in spite of the Tsar's wishes, the Kölnische Zeitung traverses the allegation. It says:—"However frequently such a story be repeated it is unworthy of credence. In Germany it need not be refuted. She may calmly abandon the matter to the French, and may wait until some documentary evidence is furnished. Everything relating to the meeting is kept rigidly secret in Berlin, but it is known that after a most friendly consultation the two Sovereigns parted entirely satisfied.

RUSSIA'S WHEAT HARVEST.

According to reports published by the Russian newspapers the wheat crop this year appears to be bad. In the districts where this is notably the case the local assemblies have decided to ask the Government for power to organize measures of relief and to ask also that money be granted to assist merchants and farmers. Further, at the recent meeting of united local assemblies in Moscow it was resolved that the Government be asked to extend to the local assemblies such assistance as shall suffice to mitigate the apprehended famine.

STORMS IN KOREA.

Fusan, July 30.

According to a telegram from the Consul at Fusan continuous heavy rain since the 28th has caused no little damage inside and outside the settlement. A land-slip has occurred at one place causing 10 deaths and several injuries. Reports received show that the Nakdong River has risen 10 feet but the flood has not killed or injured any men or cattle. Between Masampho and Senho the railway is interrupted, and there have been land-slides at places on the Seoul-Fusan line. Communication was barely restored from 7 p.m. on the 29th, and at 6 a.m. on the 30th the Choryang train just succeeded in getting to Samnangjiu. Several Japanese houses appear to have been in- yaded by the water. The rain ceased to-day (30th).

YELLOW JACK.

Chicago, July 30.

A bad type of yellow fever prevails in New Orleans, which is an important market for cotton.

A RUSSIAN EXPLANATION.

According to Wolff's telegrams the gist of two editorials of the Novoye Vremya has been wired to Berlin and published by the newspapers there. The main points made by the latter are:—"The meeting of the two Emperors does not at all differ in spirit from the recent meeting between the King of England and the President of the French Republic. The meeting of the chief personages of England and France did not in any way imperil the Franco-Russian alliance, and similarly the meeting of the two Emperors does not bring that alliance into the smallest danger. The peace negotiations between Russia and Japan are an incident of great importance to the whole world, and to confirm the friendly relations between the German and Russian Emperors is an event of great potency for strengthening the world policy. Every confirmation of the friendly relations between the Russian and German Emperors is a good omen for the peaceful settlement of the Morocco question which has arisen out of the Anglo-French convention. It is especially important to-day that friendly relations should be observed among the nations of Europe, the meeting of the two Emperors should have great force in extending those relations.

THE TSAR'S RESOLVE.

The semi-official St. Petersburg Telegraph Agency says that the priests in the Trenburg district have forwarded a telegraphic petition to the Tsar signed by 38,000 persons urging that no dishonourable terms of peace should be accepted. The Tsar has answered:—"The people of Russia may trust me. I shall certainly not make any peace dishonourable or unsuitable to Great Russia."

RUSSIAN NEWS.

General Linevitch, in a report dated the 29th July says:—"On the 23rd a detachment of ours fell in with some Hunghtsz at Vangovling in the Hailungching district. On the 24th our troops approached Erhdugan, and after an exchange of fire occupied the place. On the 26th a force of ours, exchanging shots with the enemy's outposts, advanced, whereupon the enemy retired to Marugo, and as he occupied the latter we opened fire upon his defences, assumed the offensive and attacked his position. At 6 p.m. he retired, leaving some killed and wounded, among whom was an officer. Our troops, having performed the task entrusted to them, retired."

Lt-General Redéger has been appointed Minister of War.

M. WITTE IN NEW YORK.

M. Witte arrived in New York on the 2nd and is to meet the President on the 4th.

NEWS FROM MANCHURIA.

Reuter telegraphs that General Linevitch reported under date of the 31st July that on the 25th the Russian infantry and cavalry crossed the Musan Pass and advanced but were driven back by the Japanese to Kophungsan and were pursued; but the Russian artillery arrested the pursuit.

(Received at the Naval Department.)

WRECK OF A GERMAN STEAMER.

The German Representative in Tokyo having informed the Japanese Government that the German steamer Cecilie (1,258 tons displacement) had gone ashore near Kataoka-misaki (Cape Patience) and that a part of her crew had taken to boats and landed at Tifmeneff and having requested assistance, our Northern Squadron sent a ship to give succor and the commander of the latter reports:—"On the 4th of June the Cecilie (owned by the corresponding of the German Lokal Anzeiger and having for master a German commander on the Reserves) left Shanghai, and passing north of Okuishi Island in the Tokara cluster, steamed from the south of Hachijo-jima along the Japanese coast at a distance of 50 or 60 nautical miles. On the 15th she entered Petropavlovsk in Kamchatka. On the 19th she left that place, but meeting a heavy gale, took refuge on the south of Horomushiro Island. Setting out again on the 22nd, she passed northward of Saghalien, and steered direct for Nikolaievsk, but could not reach her destination owing to floating ice. She had therefore to steer south, and on the 27th she ran on a rock at the west of Bratkofsk cape, some 25 nautical miles north-west of Kataoka-misaki. We (succor ship), obstructed by the weather and other causes, were barely able to take off the crew of 4 Germans, 2 Englishmen, 1 Norwegian and 36 Chinese. Carrying these we arrived at Otaru on the 26th of July. It is stated that the master of the steamer proceeded overland to Nikolaievsk."

(Received by the Naval Authorities.)

ADMIRAL ROJESTVENSKY.

Naval Hospital at Sascho; p.m. July 31. The result of the operation on Admiral Rojestvensky's temple is good. The Admiral is greatly pleased. Yesterday for the first time he was able to leave his bed and occupy a chair. But the after effects of the wound on his left leg are still painful and he is suffering from rheumatism in the joint of his right knee so that he can not yet walk.

PEACE PLENIPOTENTIARIES.

New York, July 29th, p.m.

The President received Baron Komura and Mr. Takahira most kindly and had a long conversation with them. What the newspapers of this city report as having passed at the interview is entirely false.

KOREAN INDEPENDENCE.

With regard to Korea's endeavours to procure an American guarantee of her independence the newspapers write in a strain of ridicule. Not a single journal treats the matter gravely.

(RECEIVED AT THE "HOCHI SHIMBUN.")

THE TSAR'S REPLY.

Washington, August 3.

The Tsar, replying to a memorial from the people, has declared that he will refuse either to cede territory or to pay an indemnity.

PESSIMISTIC M. WITTE.

M. Witte takes a pessimistic view of the Conference. He says that it will last only a week and that Russia will not be able to endure Japan's terms. But President Roosevelt is hopeful. He says that if Japan does not change her terms Russia will give up the Ussuri region.

[This telegram is unintelligible. Certainly President Roosevelt never said what is here attributed to him.—Ed. J.M.]

RUSSIA FROM WITHIN.

Mr. Harry de Windt has been printing in the columns of the Westminster Gazette some of his impressions of Russia as he saw it this spring. He approached the big empire by way of Odessa:—

Odessa is certainly the pleasantest, if not the most interesting, city in Russia—in fine weather—but sea fogs and a persistent downpour accompanied my stay. As the train rumbled in a line regiment was drawn up outside the station, and if I have ever seen misery personified it was in that line of grey sodden figures devoid of all trace of soldierly bearing, standing motionless in the rain with pallid faces and downcast eyes. Near them a glittering group of officers, chatting and smoking cigarettes, looked gay and unconcerned; but champagne and vodka had not cheered the departure of their men, who might have been a gang of convicts bound for the city gaol—a destination most of them would probably have preferred to their own—Manchuria. "Some more doomed ones," said my drosky-driver as we drove away. Most of these men were recruits from Bessarabia, from which district, by the way, no fewer than a thousand peasants were taken a few months ago straight from the plough and hustled across Russia to Cronstadt to serve as sailors in the Baltic Fleet! To those in Russia behind the scenes Admiral Togo's victories lose much of their English glamour.

In Odessa, as in other Russian towns which I afterwards visited, the war was scarcely ever mentioned in my hearing, although I have many acquaintances here and mixed freely with all classes. This is probably because your true Russian is as much a fatalist as the Turk, and generally receives news of the most crushing public or private disaster with a shrug of the shoulders and a muttered "Nichevo!" an untranslatable word which means many things—amongst others, "Never mind! It will all come right in the end!" During my entire journey from Odessa to the Caucasus, and thence back to Warsaw, I do not think I met half a dozen who were not confident that the Japanese would eventually be driven out of Manchuria, though I was not informed how this was to be accomplished! I should add, on the other hand, that Russians no longer allude to their formidable foes as "monkeys," as they did at the commencement of the war. The implacable, ever-victorious Japanese is at last regarded with respect by all, and the Yellow Peril has a sinister meaning for the humblest peasant. "Take care," I heard a moujik's wife say to her child—"or—I will give you to great ugly Togo!"

The continuance of this disastrous war is generally ascribed in England to the obstinacy of the Grand Dukes and their baneful influence over his Majesty the Emperor, but all prominent officials in Odessa and elsewhere with whom I conversed on the subject almost ridiculed this theory. It is an open secret in Russia that peace would have been made long ago but for the intervention of the Empress-Dowager and a personage as little known in this country as he is (perhaps unduly) dreaded in his own—Monsieur Pobiedonosteff, the Procurator of the Holy Synod, before whose influence and power even Grand Dukes must bow the knee. No one but his own relatives and immediate entourage can know the Emperor's feelings upon the subject, and the public might well have been spared the rubbish which has appeared in the Press about his Majesty's personal opinions on the great question of peace. It is probably safe to assume, however, that the Czar will be chiefly guided by Monsieur Pobiedonosteff in the future as he has always been in the past, and that this illustrious official really holds the key of the situation. I have the honour of his personal acquaintance, and have seldom met in private life a more charming and sympathetic person, whose keen interest in the welfare of Siberian exiles has come under my own observation. More than this I cannot say.

THE SUEZ CANAL COMPANY AND SHIPOWNERS.

The annual meeting of the shareholders of the Suez Canal Company was held on Tuesday last week at Paris, Prince d'Arenberg, the president, in the chair, said Faithfully of June 13th. The Prince described the agitation against the administration of the Company as "virulent." He maintained that the London Agreement of 1883 was a programme, not a contract; in other words, the Agreement, confirmed as it was by a meeting of shareholders in Paris, and accepted in this country as a settlement, was not an Agreement at all, but a huge sell. Even on that showing, however, he was not able to say that the programme had been carried out on the part of the Company. As a matter of fact, the Agreement was a compromise strictly in the nature of a compact or contract. The representatives of British shipping dropped the movement they were then promoting, amongst other things, a second Canal, and were content with the arrangements made, including the specific stipulation by the Suez Canal authorities, afterwards confirmed at a meeting of the shareholders of the Company, that on the annual dividend reaching 25 per cent. the surplus profits should be devoted to the reduction of the dues until they fell to five francs per ton. British owners, abandoning their agitation of and before 1883, have remained loyal to the Agreement. The Company has not. It has accepted all the advantages secured to it under the Agreement, but has, to the extreme surprise of British and foreign shipowners, declined to carry out its part of the bargain. If the revenues of the Company had been declining there would have been some excuse, though no justification, for the Company's breach of faith; but with the income increasing by leaps and bounds, its action can only be described as cynical effrontery.

The Company actually seems to plume itself on its action, for at last week's meeting the president told the shareholders that no reduction would be made in the dues unless the dividend was proportionately increased. So the 25 per cent. modest maximum at once disappears. British shipowners are thus openly informed that the company does not intend to observe the definite conditions to which it was an assenting party in 1883, and on the strength of which the determination to make a new Canal was abandoned. The apologetic tone is now exchanged for one of contemptuous defiance; the "Arrangement" which had become an "honourable understanding" has now dwindled down to a "programme," and the difference between an "arrangement" which is the result of agreement between two parties in dispute and a programme which may be issued by the conductor of a band, is obvious. This cannot fail to make a most unfavourable impression on owners here, and on the country. The British directors who were present at last week's meeting raised no protesting or dissenting voice when the president stated that the Agreement was not a contract, but a programme; which goes to show that such of the directors as were generally understood to represent British shipping are more disposed to give that great interest away than to stand up even for the barest justice. It is needless to say that all the resolutions were adopted nem. con., amid applause, together with a vote of confidence in the directors; recalling the famous line of Molière's, "Le véritable Amphitryon est l'Amphitryon où l'on dîne." There is quite a bit of philosophy in Molière.

JAPAN AND THE INDIAN ARMY ADMINISTRATION.

Lord Kitchener, in his Minute on the administrative system of the Indian Army, makes the following reference to Japan:—

Japan has shown us what can be done by thoroughly enlightened and up-to-date methods of army administration, whereby a young nation, which had set before itself the object of producing an army complete in every preparation for war which foresight and singleness of purpose could suggest, has attained striking success. The disastrous consequences to the Russian Empire of opposite methods give us the other side of the picture. Can we then hesitate any longer to break the chains of custom and the tolerance of admitted defects which are so strong in India, and shall we not reform, while yet we have time and opportunity, our ancient and defective system of army administration?

Sir E. R. Elles, commenting on the Minute, says:—

These words call for most serious consideration, and we shall do well to examine the Japanese system which his Excellency rightly admires. First of all I may observe that in none of the principal European armies does the administration and control of the army services rest with the commander of the army. As to Japan, I may with advantage quote Lieutenant-General Sir William Nicholson:—

Japanese system of military administration.—This system generally resembles that of the German army. There are two principal administrative heads, working in conjunction with but independently of each other, and both report directly to the Emperor whose Advisory Council (a) includes the Ministers of War and Marine, the Chief of the General Staff.

One head is the Chief of the General Staff who is responsible for plans of military operations, intelligence, topography, questions of defence, manoeuvres and the training of Staff officers, distribution of the army, mobilization and movements of troops by land and sea. The other head is the War Minister, who is a member of the Cabinet and responsible for what may be styled routine duties and departmental services.

So far as can be judged by the results hitherto obtained, the Japanese system works very smoothly, efficiently, and economically both in peace and war. We may be certain at any rate that it is the outcome of the most careful investigation of the relative merits of the various systems adopted by the European Powers.

In the system above described if we substitute "Commander-in-Chief" for "Chief of the General Staff" and deprive the Commander-in-Chief of his seat in the Cabinet as an Extraordinary Member of Council, we have an exact parallel to that in force in India, where the two principal administrative heads are the Commander-in-Chief and the Military Member of Council working in conjunction with, but independently of, each other, and both directly responsible to the Viceroy. I am in agreement with His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief and accept his recommendation that we should copy the Japanese system, which has proved so successful.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"YOKOHAMA YARNS."

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—As a resident counting almost as many years in the country as yourself I wish to endorse all you have written with regard to "Yokohama Yarns." Indeed, I can only regret that your condemnation had not been written in stronger terms, for then you would have voiced the sentiment of the greater portion of the community. With all our sins, and they are many, we did not deserve such a book as this. I can only think that the writer speaks of what has been told to him (or her) and not from actual knowledge gathered during a long residence here. Besides, the author falls into the trap of introducing comparative newcomers among old-time scenes, and alludes to modern innovations in the local press as things of the long ago. All of which makes me doubt the bona fides of the narrator of "Yokohama Yarns."

Yours, etc.,

1866.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Will you permit me to express the opinion (shared by many others) that the book "Yokohama Yarns" is simply inane rubbish, dull, stupid, absolutely incorrect and misleading, and apparently quite purposeless.

I regard the work as merely a trap to catch the money of unwary buyers, and can only congratulate the writer on the fact that he has not had the impudence to put his name to his mendacious drivel.

Yours, etc.,

V.E.R.Y. DISGUSTED.

THE TRADE OF KOREA.

BRITISH CONSULAR REPORT.

The report by Mr. Harrington, Acting Vice-Consul Chemulpo, shows that the total foreign trade of Korea, during the year 1904 amounted to £3,444,178, as against £2,827,381 in 1903, an increase of £616,797, or 21.8 per cent. These figures are the largest yet reached by Korea. This expansion in trade is especially interesting as it has occurred during a period of war. In general it may be said that in Korea the war has resulted in an unprecedented activity in commerce and industry. This activity cannot be gauged by the ordinary returns of increased trade alone. The large supplies of railway material brought in transports, the numerous works undertaken by the Japanese, and the influx of money, all contributed to the same end.

Imports.—The import trade of Korea was especially active during 1904. The principal causes of this were the increased purchasing powers of the Koreans, the demands of the Japanese troops and of the largely increased civilian population, and the railway and other works undertaken by the Japanese authorities. The trade in cotton goods is almost entirely British and Japanese; as stated elsewhere, the former is estimated at £384,549, and the latter's figures are £422,107.

Exports.—The decrease in the exports (£259,710) is more than accounted for by the drop of £298,484 in the export of rice. The rice crop both in October, 1903 and 1904, was good, in the latter case probably above the average; but the exports fell in 1904 to less than one-third of those of the previous year. This was due mainly to the fact that the Koreans were under no necessity of bringing the rice to the ports for export, as they were obtaining good prices in the interior from the Japanese military authorities. An additional reason for the small export was the good crop in Japan, which thus closed a channel of demand. Other important decreases were cattle and live stock, due to disease (£26,080), and whale flesh and blubber (£9,207), while there was a large increase in the export of beans and peas (£85,694).

British Trade.—In the keen competition between British and Japanese cotton goods the former derived considerable advantage from the facts that, firstly, the Osaka mills were full of orders for the Japanese forces, and, secondly, that money being plentiful amongst the Koreans they were enabled to indulge their preference for the dearer, but more durable, Manchester article. The total import of railway plant and material, according to the customs returns, was £472,951, and of this sum probably some £200,000 worth was of British origin. The energy of railway construction during 1904, however, makes these amounts abnormal, and though, till the completion of the railways, imports will continue to be large, British trade under that head must expect to suffer a decline eventually. Apart from the sum mentioned above quantities of railway material were landed from Japanese Government transports. This material did not pass through the customs nor was its value recorded by them.

Currency.—The use of Japanese currency is extending greatly, the notes of the Nippon Ginko (Bank of Japan) and of the Dai Ichi Ginko being in general circulation. The amount of the Bank of Japan notes thus in use is very large, probably exceeding £700,000. The notes of the Dai Ichi Ginko in circulation at the end of 1904 had increased to £344,206, and this issue was covered by a reserve of £196,102 in specie and £186,404 in Government securities. During the year about £881,648 worth of paper money was imported, and as only £116,908 worth (of which about half was Russian paper) was exported, the excess of imports of Japanese paper money was over £800,000. A portion of this increase has probably crossed into Manchuria. The debased nickel coinage of Korea is still in constant use, especially in the interior. The fluctuations of this currency have, as in former years, been the subject of much embarrassment to merchants. An Imperial ordinance of January, 1905, provides for the improvement of the coinage and the substitution of a new nickel coin, to date from June, 1905. This will involve a loan from Japan, 3,000,000 yen in specie being the sum named.

Railways.—It is estimated that the cost of construction of the Seoul-Fusan line has been about £10,000 per mile, and expenses will be paid when the line earns about £1 per day. As the earnings are reported to be already about 15s., the line ought shortly to pay expenses at least. By way of comparison it may be mentioned that during the last half of 1904 the receipts on the Seoul-Chemulpo section exceeded £5 per mile per day.

Foreign Trade.—Owing to the great rise and fall of the trade of Chemulpo and the shallowness of the river channel nearest the town, great difficulty and delay are experienced in landing passengers and cargo, and vessels of any size have to be a considerable distance out. To obviate this great inconvenience the Japanese authorities are engaged in a work of considerable importance and magnitude. Across the nearest river channel are two islands, Roze Island and Observation Island, on the further side of which the water is deeper. Accordingly a bridge is to be built across the river enabling trains to run direct on to Roze Island, along the outer side of which the railway will be extended over a pier to Observation Island. Wharves, &c., will be built, and ships lying outside these islands will be in close proximity to the railway and may even be able to come alongside the wharves. Considerable work in the shape of building stone piers, blasting, cutting, &c., has already been done, but the main task of actually bridging the river is yet to be commenced.

The population of Korea has been subject of widely differing estimates. A recent calculation of the population by provinces resulted in an estimate of 5,629,487 for Korea, except the northern Ham Keung province (in Russian occupation). This would give a total of 5,000,000 in round numbers for the whole country, but it is very doubtful whether this estimate is not too low. The population of Seoul, the capital, has been placed at just over 200,000 including nearly 9,000 non-Korean residents. The Japanese population in Korea increased by some 26,000 during the year and now numbers over 50,000.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

CASE of cholera was reported on Aug. 3rd in maguchi.

ASUTE, a village in Etorofu, Kuriles, has been named Utsutsu.

SEVENTEEN 15-c.m. guns and 160 other prizes were brought on Aug. 4th from Dairen to Moji.

Death of Mr. Y. Nishi, eldest son of Agera Nishi, was announced on Aug. 7th.

Construction of the Seoul-Wiju Railway being completed, traffic will shortly be resumed.

Crown Princess proceeded on Aug. 6th to Osaka. The Crown Prince has gone to Osaka.

Due to a storm, a land-slide occurred on Aug. 11 in the district of Momofu near Sendai. Three persons were killed.

General MISU, who sustained injury to his left arm in the battle of the Japan Sea, and who is undergoing treatment in the hospital of the College of Medicine, having almost recovered, intends to remove to Hakone shortly.

PRINCE and PRINCESS ARISUGAWA arrived at Colombo on Aug. 4th. They will reach Nagasaki on the 22nd.

ON the night of Aug. 2nd, fire broke out in the district of Atsukishi, near Sapporo, destroying fifty-three houses.

PRINCESS HIGASHI FUSHIMI paid a visit on Aug. 6th to the warships in Yokosuka and was entertained in the barracks.

It is officially reported that a submerged rock has been discovered 2 1/4 chains north of the pier of Alexandrofska Saghalien.

A REPORT from Formosa says that during the year ended June, 407 inhabitants were attacked by snake-bite and eighteen died.

THE Ashinoyu Telegraph Office, Hakone, will commence on Aug. 11th the transmission of foreign-style telegrams—domestic only.

OWING to heavy rains, a section between Tsukayama and Hojo on the Hokutsu Railway has been damaged and traffic is interrupted.

THE Sasebo Prize Court, on Aug. 8th, examined the German steamer Lydia, which was captured in the neighbourhood of Okinawa prefecture (Luchu).

ON Aug. 5th, in the Osaka Copper Refining factory, a crucible containing molten copper exploded. A workman was killed and three injured.

A LONDON telegram has been received in Tokyo to the effect that a severe shock of earthquake occurred on Aug. 4th in Lahore, India. Nineteen persons were killed.

OWING to the rains in June and July, the crop of tobacco will probably be reduced by about 10 per cent. from the former estimate of 13,500,000 wanme (about 3.75 kilo.)

COLONEL HIRAI, one of the aides-de-camp to the Emperor, left Ueno on Aug. 6th for Awomori on his way to Saghalien. He is appointed to distribute presents among the army.

TWO Russian prisoners at Himeji who recently caused trouble were sentenced on Aug. 7th in the Hiroshima District Court to four years' imprisonment. They were removed to Himeji jail.

THE First Bank held a general meeting on Aug. 5th and submitted to the shareholders the accounts for the first half year. The interim dividend was 6 per cent (or 12 per cent per annum).

HAVING completed investigations the Toyo Kisen Kaisha has decided to open a regular service between Japan, Hongkong and Peru. The first voyage is expected to take place in October.

It is reported by telegram from Peking that the Emperor of China has requested the Dalai Lama, now in Kulon, to return to his country, and that British soldiers in Tibet are preparing to escort the Dalai Lama.

MR. OURA, Minister for Communications, returned on Aug. 7th from Kyoto by the night train. Marquis Ito proceeded on Aug. 6th to his villa in Oiso. Margins Yamagata returned to Tokyo on the 10th.

TOKYO papers report that the Government intends to convert the sugar business into a Government monopoly. For this purpose, the authorities are preparing a bill to be introduced in the next session of the Diet. It is said that the Government can increase its income by this means by twenty million yen.

AT 10 a.m. on Aug. 7th, two freight trains collided at Nagoya station, the result being that the locomotive and three cars of the up-train were severely injured and some cars of the down-train also sustained damage.

THE formal inauguration of the new Mitsubishi floating dock at Kobe took place on Tuesday afternoon in the presence of about eight hundred spectators, when the N.Y.K. steamer Wakanoura Maru was successfully docked.

THE Russian prisoners in Japan seem to be having very pleasant times. In Nagoya they recently gave amateur theatrical performances. At Matsuyama bicycle races were held on Aug. 4th in the Dogo public garden.

EIGHT hundred coolies employed at the Nippei copper mine, Miyasaka prefecture, created trouble on Aug. 4th and attacked the dwelling of the chief engineer of the mine. They recently presented a petition asking for an increase in wages.

AN Osaka correspondent of the Jiji says that the clearing of the sea in the neighbourhood of Port Arthur is already completed. Consequently the Osaka Shosen Kaisha will extend its service—between Kobe and Dairen—to the naval station.

THE Osaka Shosen Kaisha's chartered ship Nippon Maru (220 tons), says the Nippon, owing to a dense fog went ashore on Aug. 1st off Mantan, Korea, on her way from Chemulpo to Wonsan. After some hours she sank. The crew, passengers and post bags were all saved.

THE Central Tea Guild presented a petition on Aug. 2nd to the Department of Agriculture and Commerce asking for a subsidy of seventy thousand yen per annum for five years. The guild intends to spend the amount enlarging the tea business abroad. The term of the previous subsidy has already expired.

OWING to a gale, eight fishing boats capsized on Aug. 3rd off the district of East Muro, Wakayama prefecture. The fishermen are all missing. The steamer Takeyama Maru (69 tons) sank on the morning of Aug. 5th at Ishikawa-jima, Tokyo. The cause was the sudden gale which swept the Bay. The crew were saved.

A LITTLE over three thousand Russians who were recently captured in Saghalien will be brought about Aug. 14th to Awomori. Lieut.-General Riapnoff and other officers will be removed to Hirosaki, and the men to Narashino. A telegram adds that the civil officials will be released at a port in the Maritime Province.

CHING (28) a Chinaman living at No. 136, Yamashita-cho, Yokohama, was arrested on Aug. 7th and removed to the District Court. According to the Harbour Police, he attempted to smuggle two cans each containing about a pound of opium, from a British steamer. At the English Hatoba he hired a jinrikisha and concealed the drug in the vehicle.

S. ISHIDA (42) an importer in Tokyo, who had been undergoing examination in the Tokyo District Court on a charge of having sold to the Tokyo Arsenal a large quantity of mineral oil under instructions of the Yokohama agent of the New York and Rochester Company and embezzled a large sum of money that he received from the Japanese office, was released on Aug. 4th on the ground that the evidence against him was insufficient.

SAGHALIEN.

Friday, August 4.

It has already been gathered by careful observers that the Russians made a very determined stand at Rykoff. Apart from the street fighting, which seems to have been desperate and was doubtless very sanguinary, it is now stated that a dummy artillery position had been formed on the hills westward of the town. The Japanese bombarded it, and receiving no reply, imagined that the enemy had retired. They therefore advanced but were welcomed with a hail of shot from a concealed park of field-pieces and quick-firers. There has not yet been any official statement of casualties; not even the usual list of killed which is generally inserted with the least possible delay in the Official Gazette. It need not be inferred that heavy losses have occurred, but the delay must tend to cause some uneasiness. At all events the general conviction is that there will be no more fighting worthy of the name.

As to the interesting question of the convicts, it is not to be supposed, of course, that the Japanese authorities will constitute themselves jailors for the Russians. We were prepared therefore to learn what the Nichi Nichi Shimbun now states, namely, that it has been determined to transfer the whole of the convicts to the Maritime Province and there hand them over to the Russians. There is also in the island a considerable element of ex-convicts, engaged for the most part in agriculture. These also are not a class of persons whom Japan can be expected to willingly include in her population, especially since many of them must be subject to police surveillance. They too will be sent across to the mainland. According to the accounts of persons who accompanied the invading force these Russian farmers are chiefly remarkable for dirt. The filth and stench of their houses are described as something indescribable. But that is not unnatural in the case of persons who must be regarded as the dregs of the Russian nation; representatives though they be of "the shield of Western civilization."

Linevitch reports that telegraphic communication with Saghalien has been severed. He says that on the 24th two Japanese torpedo-boats landed men at Pogobi (Cape Lazareff) and cut the cable. Japanese reports say nothing of this incident, but it tallies with a previous statement that the cable originally existing between Alexandrofska and Alexandrosky was transferred recently to the narrowest part of the Strait, namely, the short stretch of water between the two points known as Muravieff and Lazareff.

The Statist (Tōkei Shūshi) in its issue No. 292 contains interesting tables with regard to the population of Saghalien and the Maritime Province. The figures are based on the census of 1897:—

That Saghalien should be sparsely populated is not extraordinary (though less than one inhabitant for every two square versts is an extraordinarily low figure), but that the Maritime Province, with an area of over two million square versts, should have only 371,755 inhabitants is indeed remarkable.

Saturday, August 5.

So far as official reports inform us the Russian losses in prisoners in Saghalien has thus far been as follows:—

Korsakoff.....	461
Alkova.....	200
Between Rykoff and Paleo.....	500
Surrendered with Riapnoff.....	3,271
Total.....	4,431

As yet no record has been published of the killed and wounded but if these be added it is evident that virtually the whole of the Russian forces in the island have been accounted for.

In one sense the campaign was very remarkable. We have it on official authority that the naval landing parties handed over the positions occupied by them to the army at 10 a.m. on the 24th, whereupon the troops began to land, and by 11 a.m. the landing was completed. This was at Alkova. We are not permitted to discuss the numbers of the landing force but it must have aggregated many thousands, and the feat of debarking such a body of men in the space of one hour was a notable record. Moreover the landing was effected in such an orderly manner and with all preparations complete, that the troops were able to commence operations at once. On the same day they drove the Russians out of Alkova and Alexandrofska and on the following morning they renewed the engagement along the roads leading eastward towards Rykoff. Thenceforth there was no least intermission, and the final result was that after 7 consecutive days of fighting and pursuing, and after a march of nearly 100 miles, the invaders received the surrender of the remnants of the Russian force. It was a very smart piece of work; the success in the whole war. Of course the cooperation of the Navy must have been invaluable.

The Hochi Shimbun's Awamori correspondent wires that the number of combatants seeking Japanese protection grows greatly and is already very large. Our contemporary alleges that it has been decided to send all these across to the Maritime Province and release them. This is somewhat vague. They can not be dumped down in the Maritime Province. It will be necessary that they should be handed over to persons competent to receive them and will also be necessary that due preparation be made for their reception. To take them to Alexandrofsky or Nicolaievsk and simply hand them over, leaving the Russian authorities to provide for them, might entail catastrophe from which Japan would shrink.

A letter from Mr. Haseba Junko says that the Russians had anticipated a Japanese landing at Dui, on the south side of Alexandrofska, and had made all their preparations accordingly. The debarkation at Alkova completely dislocated their plans. He also says that the buildings at Alexandrofska are on a scale which indicates a big purpose. Some of them are incomplete, the interior not being yet finished, but they show that the Russians contemplated the growth of the town into a very important centre. Among the papers seized were two most interesting telegrams. One was a copy of a message sent by General Riapnoff to General Linevitch, saying that a Japanese descent on Saghalien was to be apprehended at a certain time, and asking Linevitch to despatch divisions for the defence of the island. The second telegram was Linevitch's answer. He said that he could not spare a single man and that Riapnoff must rely upon his own resources and employ every available man in opposing the Japanese. Riapnoff did duty stoutly, but these two messages tell a tale. Mr. Haseba concludes by observing that the soil of Saghalien seems to be rich and that it should prove a fine field for agriculture.

The Official Gazette of the 5th inst. announces that the name "Korsakoff" be changed to Kushunkotan. For the information of persons who object to the change of nomenclature, we may explain that Korsakoff formed part of the Japanese empire, it was called by its Aino appellation of Kushunkotan, so that the apparent change now announced is really a reversion to old title.

Sunday, August 6.

Telegrams to the Hochi and Asahi state that the Japanese casualties in the fighting in northern Saghalien were only 27 killed and wounded and that most of their casualties occurred in the house-to-house fighting.

Rykoff. We find the number scarcely credible when compared with the accounts hitherto received of the fighting. The same telegrams add that the surrenders continue in the neighbourhood of Onoru and that the number has now reached 4,200. Considering that about 500 surrendered in the Korsakoff districts, and 500 immediately south of Rykoff, it appears that this Saghalien campaign will make a notable addition to the army of Russian prisoners in Japan. The Hochi says that the surrenders now taking place seem to be mostly due to lack of food-stuffs.

There had been some 60 convicts in jail at Rykoff before the Japanese attack, but they broke out during the fighting.

General Haraguchi is said to have intimated to the Russian inhabitants of the island that they are at liberty to go away if they please, and that the Japanese authorities will transport them as far as Awomori, free of charge.

It is stated that some Russian troops are still resisting in the south-east of the island, and that Japanese subjects who had repaired thither, presumably for fishing purposes, have suffered some injury. A force has been sent out to deal with this remnant.

A Japanese officer, speaking through the columns of the Kokumin Shinbun, says that the original estimate of the enemy's force in Saghalien was about ten thousand men. The troops that surrendered with Riapanoff and those taken in the south probably represent the regular forces, the remainder being volunteers. A much more obstinate resistance had been anticipated, but whether the Russians were capable of making any stubborn stand is a question upon which much light will be thrown when the nature of the spoils is accurately ascertained. Evidently it would have been greatly in the interests of their country that they should hold out until the peace negotiations commenced, at all events, and possibly their failure to do so may be attributable to want of universal compliance with the orders of the General in command.

The Kokumin Shinbun says that sum annually appropriated by the Russian Government on account of Saghalien was 889,390 roubles, of which 712,682 roubles were devoted to administrative purposes and 176,807 roubles to military expenses. The General in command acted as governor and the island was divided into three administrative provinces. Recently published statistics show that the yearly value of the fisheries is between 4 and 5 million yen, and in addition there are the collieries and the forests. If then these figures as to outlays be correct the island is a more valuable acquisition than was at first supposed.

Monday, August 7.

The rank and file of the Saghalien garrison are to be sent to Narashino, and the officers will be quartered at Awomori, Akita and Sendai. General Liapnoff is to go to Akita.

The Military Authorities have published an announcement that fishing will be allowed in the waters of Saghalien. Applicants will have to compete by tender and certain restrictions are imposed for purposes of preservation. To those already in possession of licences granted by the Russians priority of claim will be accorded. It is laid down distinctly that no captures of seals will be permitted at Seal Islands.

Regulations are also published with reference to Japanese subjects desiring to visit Saghalien for any purpose. The gist of the regulations is merely restrictive as to the standing and qualifications of applicants.

The question of how to dispose of the population of Saghalien is now attracting much attention. In the Nichi Nichi we find an interesting article on the subject. Our contemporary's statistics show that the Aino, Giljak and Okhotsk elements of the population aggregate some 4,000 and that the Russians total about 35,000, of whom 29 per cent. are women. In this figure are included some 2,600 administrative officials and their families, who being excepted, the remaining 32,400 are one and all criminals undergoing sentence, or under police surveillance, or released on the termination of their periods of punishment. This last class—liberated convicts and therefore free settlers—aggregate 17,800, but they are just as objectionable units of any respectable community as are the convicts still under punishment. The Nichi Nichi emphatically and the Fiji Shimpō in less pronounced terms advocate the removal of all these inhabitants with the exception of the Aino, the Giljak and the Okhotsk elements. The idea is that every effort should be made to bring about voluntary departure, but that those declining to go of their own accord should be forcibly removed. It is not to be supposed that Japan will saddle herself with a large section of the criminal population of Russia. She must get rid of these highly objectionable individuals by some means. But it is a very difficult problem. Failing some understanding with the Russian Government we do not see how any satisfactory solution can be found, and the Russian Government is not in the least degree likely to show itself helpful in the matter.

Tuesday, August 8.

Accounts from Saghalien confirm the impression conveyed by the original telegrams, namely, that after the occupation of Rykoff all the fighting on the Japanese side was done by cavalry. The Russian rear-guard of 800 men, posted at a point just south of Paleo, had great advantages of ground, but the cavalry seem to have made short work of it. Thereafter the pursuit, vigorously continued, proved very arduous owing to the mountainous and thickly wooded nature of the country. There does not appear to have been any check, however. The Russians were forced rapidly in the direction of Onoru, and had they retreated much farther they must have emerged from the inland road upon the sea-coast, when it would have been necessary for them either to come under the fire of the Japanese ships or to abandon the road and take refuge in the hills on the west. It seems that the Japanese invited them to surrender and that their envoys came in answer to the invitation, having doubtless been promised good treatment. The officers were allowed to retain their swords at the time of surrender. General Liapnoff said that he believed he had done his duty towards his Sovereign, but that none the less he bitterly felt the shame of surrender. This use of cavalry against infantry and artillery is a comparatively new feature of the war. In old times the chief role of cavalry was to attack a retreating enemy, but that function involved the idea of an enemy broken and in such disorder as to be a fitting prey for the sabres or lances of horsemen. The operations southward of Rykoff were not of that nature. The Russians were retreating in compact order, and it would probably be more correct to describe their pursuers as mounted infantry.

A lady who has been 17 years in Saghalien where her husband served as secretary to the civil administration of Korsakoff, is said to be proficient in the Japanese language.

According to her account the Russians at Korsakoff had not the least expectation of a Japanese landing. Their force consisted of 300 regulars and 400 volunteers. The latter behaved in a shocking manner. They were worse than any enemy could have been. Robbery, arson and rape seemed to be their chief occupations. This lady declares that she and her party had all their money stolen by these their protectors, and that they owed their rescue from worse misfortunes to the Japanese.

According to official statistics the Russian population of Saghalien consists of the following:—

	Men.	Women.	Totals.
Free Settlers	5,319.....	4,478.....	9,797
Convicts	19,770.....	2,397.....	22,167
Total	25,089.....	6,875.....	31,964

Even the so-called "free settlers" are ex-convicts. There is a further subdivision of the "convicts." Among them 6,366 men and 714 women are actually undergoing sentence and are never free from chains. In the next category there are transported settlers, 7,977 men and 958 women, who are not in chains and who have permission to go about anywhere within the Amur jurisdiction. Finally we have the third class, transported farmers, who are free to visit any place except the principal cities of Russia. We read in the Fiji Shimpō that there has already been a large exodus of the inhabitants across the Gulf of Tartary to the opposite continent, and that before the island is finally recognised as in Japanese possession it will probably have very few Russian inhabitants. The actual convicts will of course be handed over with the least possible delay.

The Nichi Nichi says that the Japanese Government has decided to remove the seat of administration from Alexandrofska to Korsakoff. Such a change has obvious recommendations from a Japanese point of view.

Already there are signs of a considerable emigration of Japanese to Saghalien. Three hundred applications have been received.

Wednesday, August 9.

Evidently it is the intention of the Japanese to extend their military influence to the whole eastern coast of the Gulf of Tartary within the latitude of Saghalien. The landings at De Castries Bay and now at Port Emperor (Imperator Bay) plainly indicate this resolve. Port Emperor is 80 nautical miles distant from the coast of Saghalien and is marked on large-scale maps as a Russian military post. From such ports torpedo-craft might at any moment slip out to Saghalien and work considerable mischief before the Japanese navy could send succour. It is true that Port Emperor is 600 miles from Vladivostok, but 600 miles could easily be negotiated by destroyers in 30 hours. However, the danger of such enterprises is probably a secondary consideration. What the Japanese contemplate is to establish themselves thoroughly on the Gulf of Tartary. We shall not be surprised to find that these naval descents upon Russia's coast continue and take wider range. Japan's business is to utilize to the full her complete command of the sea.

Thursday, August 10.

Awomori reports that 165 Japanese sick and 13 wounded together with 16 sick or wounded Russians have arrived from south Saghalien, and 3 Russian officers and 27 men, prisoners, from the northern part of the island.

It appears that there are from 50 to 200 Russian soldiers taking refuge in the dense forests near Vladimiroffska and Korsakoff. They do not preserve any semblance of military formation, but confine themselves to robbery when opportunity offers. Lack of provisions will soon compel them to come in, it is expected. In the northern regions also there is still some slight resistance, but surrenders are numerous.

Mr. Haseba Junko, writing in the Kokumin, says that there are over ten thousand convicts scattered about here and there, and that the question of dealing with them presents great difficulties. It was stated originally, as our readers doubtless remember, that these convicts had broken out of the jail at Rykoff when the fight there was in progress, but the account now given—a much more credible story—is that they were let out by the warders. The convicts are one of the few instruments still available for embarrassing the new holders of the island.

It is stated that up to July 31st over 800 Russian settlers had applied for permission to return to Russia.

There is considerable difficulty at Alexandroffska on account of scarcity of drinking water, the resources of the place not being adequate to meet the increased demand caused by the influx of Japanese troops. The climate at present is comparable with that of March in Japan. The crops are said to be fine, and the potatoes and cabbages are described as of a size unknown in this country.

We mentioned in a recent issue that the Government had decided to throw open the Saghalien fisheries. In the Kokumin Shinbun it is now stated that the method of competitive tenders will be resorted to. Three classes of persons, however, will have preferential rights. They are, first, Japanese subjects who received Russian fishing permits in 1903 from the Russian Government; secondly, Japanese subjects who have rented fishing privileges from Russian holders of the same, and who are in possession of buildings or other property relating to fishing in the fishery district; and thirdly, Russian subjects living in the island who have obtained fishing licences from their Government and are actually carrying on the enterprise. Special notice should be taken of the fact that Russian subjects are included in this category. Such magnanimity reflects the highest credit on the Japanese Government, since it shows that even during the existence of a state of war Russian subjects will be allowed to engage in peaceful enterprises under Japanese jurisdiction. Of course that is only in accord with the best canons of civilization but frankly it can not be said that Russian treatment of Japanese throughout the present war encourages such displays of benevolence on Japan's part.

The season covered by a licence now granted is to be the current year and next year inclusive. That is because the herring fishing is already over, and though about one half of the salmon season remains, preparations could scarcely be made in time to utilize it. Therefore next year has been added. On the whole the rules of the Russian Government are to be followed temporarily, pending full examination by experts, when permanent regulations will be issued. It appears that when the war commenced there were 99 Japanese fishing districts and 78 Russian which had the sanction of the local Russian authorities. These are expected to be all resumed under the new regimen. It is very plain that the Japanese have made up their minds to remain in Saghalien. But what if Russia offers to buy back the island, subject to certain conditions as to fishing permits? At all events this call for tenders and this announcement that permits will be issued holding good for next year as well as the current year, constitute an open declaration of intention to retain the island.

We recently published some statistics of the fisheries in Saghalien. Official figures now appear in the Nichi Nichi Shinbun relating to the year immediately prior to the outbreak of war, namely, 1903. The figures show the aggregate results of Russian and Japanese fishing:—

Herring	188,000 Koku
Salmon	4,500 "
Masu	27,000 "
Edible Sea-weed	6,000 "

Total..... 225,500 "

The value is put at 4,580,000 yen, and as only 52 persons held the licences in the 177 districts, each person obtained a yield of some 90,000 yen. It is a highly valuable property, and the loss in connexion with it caused by the war has been a serious matter.

INSECT PESTS.

Japan is fortunately comparatively free from insect pests, though at various times and places visitations of a more or less serious kind do take place. Thus only a few months ago Count Date found his valuable apple trees in Sendai infested by an insect which, when the Rev. H. Loomis sent twigs and specimens to the United States, was found to be the woolly aphid—the ravages of which in California have assumed the effects of a blight. This, however, so far as we know, is an exceptional case, and to Japan probably belongs the honour of furnishing parasites that tend to alleviate the insect scourges that afflict so many parts of the American continent. It is now some thirty-five years since the gypsy moth caterpillar was introduced into North America from the European continent. It was known to be a great pest, but it was imported by Mr. Leopold Trouvelot, a French artist, naturalist and astronomer, who was experimenting with regard to the rearing of silk-worms. For some twenty years the spreading of the caterpillar was little noticed but in 1888 and 1889 the destruction wrought by it became so marked that in the following year the matter was brought before the State Legislature of Massachusetts, and an act was passed appropriating a large sum of money towards the extermination of the pest. But either the business had been undertaken too late or the caterpillar had found its new habitat most congenial for in spite of all that has been done it has spread practically all over the State of Massachusetts and into part of Rhode Island. Of course entomologists turned their thoughts early towards the question of finding a parasite to cope with the caterpillar. Their efforts were fruitless, however. Among those whose attention was attracted to the plague was Mr. Loomis, of Yokohama, who for some years has been studying the matter. It is good news, then, to learn that he has at length detected a parasite—an ichneumon fly—which destroys the gypsy moth larvae. Specimens both of the host and the parasite have been sent to the Massachusetts Office for Suppressing the Gypsy and Brown Tail Moths and a reply has been received by Mr. Loomis, expressing the thanks of the Superintendent, Mr. A. H. Kirkland, and announcing the inauguration of a series of experiments. Should these be successful a scourge that has sorely tried the State of Massachusetts will be, at any rate alleviated, if not wholly removed.

It is interesting to note that though the gypsy moth caterpillar is found all over Japan, from Sapporo to Nagasaki, its presence is rendered innocuous by its association with the parasite, which keeps down its numbers. There seems, however, to be some reason for apprehension with regard to the woolly aphid of the apple, which in America does not confine itself to the apple tree, and Mr. Loomis has consequently placed all the information in his possession at the disposal of the Department of Agriculture and Commerce. There is reasonable suspicion that this aphid was introduced into Japan from America.

THE "KEISHO."

The Russians have apparently made a most discreditable addition to their naval record by firing on the little steamer Keisho. We do not know the vessel, but presumably she is Korean. The name Keisho is the Japanese pronunciation of "Kyongsan" and the inference is that the steamer was originally Korean. In the Hochi Shinbun we read that she displaces 169 tons and that she is employed by the Japanese military authorities, but she had no soldiers on board nor was she in any way distinguishable from an ordinary merchant steamer. Such being the conditions it was simply an act of murderous piracy for two Russians destroyers to set upon her and devote their energies to sinking her with all her crew. Only two men were killed and 2 wounded, but the telegram alleges that this harmless little vessel was hit 7 times and that 60 projectiles were fired at her. If that be so the gunnery of the Russians is as bad as their conduct is inhuman. There may be some explanation. Perhaps the steamer refused to stop, though considering her size and the fact that she was assailed by two destroyers, any theory of that kind is hard to entertain. Still we must suspend judgment pending fuller investigation, for although the treatment of non-combatants by the Russians throughout this war has been most blameworthy, we can not imagine that people claiming to be "the shield of Western civilization in the Far East" would deliberately perpetrate such a crime.

JAPANESE PRISONERS IN RUSSIA.

The following seem to be the numbers of Japanese prisoners now in Russian hands:—

ARMY.
Non-commissioned officers	32
Privates	447
Non-combatants	7
Total	500
NAVY.
Officers	1
Non-commissioned officers	3
Blue-jackets	13
Non-combatants	263
Total	281
OTHERS.
Railway officers	13
Travellers	10
Photographers	2
Merchants	5
Stone-masons	1
Total	31

The above aggregate 812, and they have been supplemented by about 150 others, although not included in the Russian official reports, have sent letters to Japan. It will be perceived that the Russians still hold a number of non-combatants—at least 301 of a total of about 1,000 prisoners.

THE PEACE CONFERENCE.

Friday, August 4.

Rumours continue to occupy the wires. London now says that Witte, on arrival in New York, repudiates the pessimistic views attributed to him; and New York says that Mr. Martens has authorized the press to express Russia's keen appreciation of the action of the United States in bringing about a conference, and her hope that peace with her brave enemy will be restored. Another report alleges that President Roosevelt, having been informed of Japan's terms, finds them excessive. The Kokumin Shinbun's New York correspondent wires that M. Witte has two missions. One is to ascertain Japan's terms and, if he finds them moderate, to negotiate a treaty. The other is to arrange for a Russian loan in America, the proceeds to be devoted either to paying an indemnity or continuing the war. Another message sent by the same correspondent is that M. Witte has personally stated to him that Russia's position as one of the strongest Powers of the world is not impaired, and that Japan is not so strong as the world has been led to believe. Russia can not agree to any humiliating terms. From San Francisco to the Kokumin comes a telegram in the sense that M. Witte attributes to Russia the design of throwing open the Amur, and thus necessarily abandoning the isolation of the Ussuri district (the Maritime Province). It may be that this is the statement which underwent such strange mangling in previous transmission.

But of what use is it to busy oneself with all these stories if it be true, as another cablegram says, that the Tsar has published in the St. Petersburg Official Gazette an Ukase declaring that the war must be continued until the enemy is crushed, and that Russia will not agree to pay any indemnity or to surrender any territory? Such a declaration would mean simply that His Majesty had been a party to a huge jest when he appointed a plenipotentiary to attend a peace conference. Apparently the issue of this Ukase is credited in America, for the New York journals are said to be asking what may be understood to be the real intention of Russia.

Of course the Tokyo press has a good deal to say on the subject. The Fiji Shinpo brushes away all these tales as not worthy of attention. They can not affect the real situation. Japan has certain demands to prefer. If Russia declines to accede, then the war must be continued. That is all that need be said. This turmoil of talk is quite beside the mark. If the Russian Plenipotentiary is responsible for any part of it, he nicely shows his bad taste and his ignorance of the country he has to deal with. The Yomiuri finds the circulation of rumours quite natural at such an epoch. It does not like them but it does not particularly dislike them. As for Witte's alleged statement that Japan's terms are too severe, or will be too severe, he can not know what Japan's terms are, and he must therefore be talking merely for the sake of effect. The Nippon is for continuing the war. It credits the assertion attributed to Witte that the actual state of affairs must be made the basis of negotiations. That would mean that Russia is to retain the whole of northern Manchuria as well as the railway. It would not be peace, but only a truce. There remains nothing except to drive Russia from Harbin and from the whole region south of the Amur. The Hochi Shinbun regards it all as a diplomatic dodge. It does not consider that the conference will be easily brought to a satisfactory conclusion, but it brushes aside all this clamour, which deceives no one.

Saturday, August 5.

If the manifesto which the Kokumin Shinbun's telegrams attribute to M. Witte is a genuine document, we do not see how the conference can meet at all. The Japanese plenipotentiaries will certainly not enter a conference which the Russian plenipotentiary has publicly declared to be informal, nor will they make known their terms to an official who proclaims himself incompetent to discuss them without previous reference to St. Petersburg. All this must be perfectly evident to M. Witte. He is too experienced a statesman to be ignorant of the rudiments of diplomatic usage. What then is his object? At first sight one is tempted to imagine that while seeking to obtain a statement of Japan's terms for the purpose of using it to silence the peace party in Russia, he aims at acquiring the knowledge without incurring the odium of breaking off the conference. Inasmuch, however, as he can not hope to procure the information he seeks without showing credentials authorizing him to open a formal conference, that hypothesis is seen to be untenable. He is right of course in saying that meetings of plenipotentiaries are generally preceded by pour-parlers which arrange a general basis for discussion. In fact without such preparation of the ground a conference of plenipotentiaries would be very unlikely to succeed. But if that were the real subject of his solicitude, he would not proclaim it abroad. He would, on the contrary, employ some of the many means always at diplomatic disposal to obtain beforehand a sufficient insight into Japan's terms. Baron Komura is an eminently practical man and must be assumed to desire the success of the conference. He certainly would not oppose himself to a preliminary interchange of views provided it were private. Even President Roosevelt might well constitute himself an avenue. But from the moment that M. Witte makes this public announcement the whole business becomes painfully complicated. And he knows it. Does he then wish to fail without incurring any personal responsibility? Does he seek to return to Russia with the plea that Japanese obstructiveness made it impossible to carry out the Tsar's orders and prevented him from obtaining information whose possession was an essential preface to a formal conference? It looks very much as though such were the case, supposing the telegram to be correct. M. Witte will find himself greatly mistaken, however, if he imagines that his honeyed utterances about the compliment Russia has paid to America will deceive the hard practical sense of the American nation. The inconsequential character of the statements attributed to him must be apparent to any intelligence. For if it is a concession on Russia's part to send a mission without ascertaining Japan's terms, how can it be a concession to send a mission for the purpose of learning those terms when Japan sends a mission without knowing whether Russia will or will not agree to her terms? If M. Witte has gone to America unauthorized to open a formal conference, not all the graceful platitudes he may utter can obscure the fact that Russia has played fast and loose with President Roosevelt's invitation. This part of the alleged manifesto is a worthy prelude to the previousrodomontade about the might of Russia. The Great Northern Power, forsooth, does not consider an enemy formidable whom, in a war now eighteen months old, she has never once succeeded in beating though she has strained every nerve to win a victory; does not consider an enemy formidable who has smashed her armies again and again in the field; has taken her nominally impregnable fortress; has seized an important part of her territory and has annihilated her navy! Is any one deceived by such silliness? Most certainly Mr. Witte himself is not deceived, but if he used such language the world is deceived in one thing, namely, in its estimate of M. Witte who, having hitherto been regarded as a sober-minded man of sense, would now have to be classed with idle boasters. We do not believe that he has taken such a line. In our opinion the simple explanation is that M. Witte has been grossly misquoted. He never made the statements attributed to him.

In the face of all the above the Kokumin Shinbun publishes a telegram from its New York correspondent alleging that beyond all question M. Witte has full powers, and that he is merely manoeuvring to obtain a knowledge of Japan's terms in order that the Tsar may be able to submit them to Linevitch before deciding upon anything. San Francisco, too, wires that Witte denies having made any statement as to Japan's terms being excessive, and that he entertains hopes of restoring permanent friendship between Russia and Japan. This telegram further states that Witte's powers are as full as those of Baron Komura. Yet another telegram from New York declares that M. Witte denies the assertions attributed to him on the voyage, namely, that the Japanese terms were excessive and that he did not expect the conference to last more than a week. What he did say was that if he found Japan's terms excessive, he would have to break off the conference. All this looks as though the newspaper reports had been doing the mischief for which they are rapidly becoming proverbial, namely, circulating falsehoods. It will probably turn out, as we originally supposed, that M. Witte has not in any way disavowed the sufficiency of his own powers.

The Asahi writes in a somewhat pessimistic tone. It is perplexed to believe that simple and innocent statements have been embroidered to such an extent as has probably been the case with M. Witte's remarks. Our contemporary thinks that until Linevitch shares the fate of Kuropatkin Russia will not awake. For our own part we (Japan Mail) do not share these pessimistic views. The Tsar is bluffing, and M. Witte is diplomatizing à la Russe. Moreover, the Russians have the stage to themselves, and thus their performance occupies a correspondingly large share of public observation. The Japanese are neither cajoling nor vapouring. They approach the conference very quietly. With set teeth, doubtless, but not with loose tongues.

Tokyo newspapers treat the utterances of the Tsar, General Linevitch, M. Witte and the Holy Synod as so much bluff. They say, in effect, that as the old proverb has it, "a dog yelps loudest when it is hardest pressed," and though no one thinks of applying the comparison literally, it inevitably suggests itself. There is nothing to be done but to put matters to the test of practice. If Russia wants more fighting, she can have it, and unless she is prepared to grant reasonable terms she must have it. There does not at present seem to be much hope of a happy result from the conference. Japan will regret its failure but she is fully prepared for it. Baron Komura says nothing. His course is simple and straightforward, not calling for any pettyfogging devices.

Monday, August 7.

It appears to be pretty certain that the Conference will hold its first meeting on the 8th instant. The probability is that the opening day will be devoted to exchanging and preparing credentials. If this part of the proceedings be satisfactorily concluded, as in all probability it will, then Wednesday would be the time for Baron Komura to formulate his terms. It is noticeable that now, since M. Witte's arrival upon the scene, the rumours which accompanied his approach are no longer heard. There is indeed a statement that to the President's natural expression of hope that the negotiations would terminate favourably, M. Witte replied in the sense that he feared the Japanese terms would be too heavy. He may well have said that, but there is no more talk of his powers being insufficient or of his conviction that the conference will be broken off within a week. In fact, considering the silence which has succeeded to these pessimistic utterances, we are more than ever disposed to regard them all, or nearly all, as apocryphal. That the conference may come to a deadlock is not all improbable. But there is always a deus ex machina in the person of President Roosevelt, and until his good offices have been exhausted it would be foolish to abandon hope.

The St. Petersburg correspondent of The Times telegraphs, however, that since M. Witte's departure his enemies have been intriguing against him, and that they have succeeded in re-establishing a warlike spirit at Peterhoff. That is distinctly bad news, especially in view of the source from which it comes.

Tuesday, August 8.

Telegrams say that at the meeting in Oyster Bay on the 5th instant President Roosevelt, in proposing the healths of the Sovereigns of the belligerent Powers, said that he earnestly trusted that the conference would lead to a firm and lasting peace, not only in the interests of the countries directly concerned but also in the interests of the civilized world. The Plenipotentiaries do not seem to have made any reply. In fact the President intimated that they were not expected to do so.

The correspondent of the Kokumin Shimbun speaks as though a building had been newly erected at Portsmouth for the purposes of the conference. He wires that the conference chamber is on the second floor and that 3 rooms on the right are set aside for the uses of the Japanese delegates and three on the left for the uses of the Russian envoys. Downstairs are telegraph and telephone offices. All the arrangements are of the completest and the fittings and furniture are exceedingly handsome.

The Plenipotentiaries arrived at Portsmouth on the 7th at 10 a.m. The two parties put up at the same hotel but use different entrances.

It need scarcely be said that the vacillating condition of Russia is fully appreciated in Japan. Up to the time of M. Witte's departure the peace party was in the ascendant but now the war party has again raised its head, and as for the Tsar, he appears to be blown hither and thither by every wind of doctrine. The extraordinary rhodomontade of the Viedemosti, quoted on the 7th instant in a Foreign Office telegram, has provoked chiefly amusement in Japan. In truth such extravagance of language and crudity of ideas are not reconcilable with any conception of sober purpose or conscious strength. If the war party found itself really strong, its organ would not use language which is obviously an appeal to passion not to reason. Nevertheless M. Witte's position is evidently very difficult. At any moment the state of affairs in St. Petersburg may turn again in the direction of peace, but who can venture to be sanguine where the chief element in the calculation is a country torn from hour to hour by conflicting opinions. The Jiji Shimpō says that the Japanese nation does not look for a successful issue of the conference, Russia has not developed the mood of "amicable appreciation" which the Emperor of Japan, in addressing Baron Komura at the farewell banquet in the Palace, declared to be essential to a satisfactory adjustment. Therefore the Japanese are ready for either issue and will be content with either. At the same time the fact does not escape attention that the language recently attributed to the Tsar and to the leaders of the War party reduces the peace conference to a mere farce and places the President of the United States in an almost ridiculous position. At his instance the two Powers have sent plenipotentiaries to arrange peace, if arrangement be possible, and actually before the plenipotentiaries have been able to meet, Russia, speaking through the mouth of her most responsible individual, the Sovereign himself, is declaring that the war must be continued until Japan is crushed. The conference thus becomes a grim comedy and Russia stands convicted of playing fast and loose with the President of the United States. That phase of the situation is strongly commented on by the Jiji Shimpō. The Kokumin Shimbun, however, regards the trumpet now blown by the Russian war party as a species of cry of despair. It compares it with the celebrated utterance of M. Jules Favre on the eve of the peace conference between German and French plenipotentiaries that France would cede "ni un pouce de son territoire ni une pierre de ses forteresses." It is not an uncommon impulse of human nature to seek consolation in the language of bombast when overwhelming facts have to be faced. Russia must be literally sensible of her situation. She must see how vain are her hopes of retrieving the belligerent situation and she must understand that the longer peace is deferred the more onerous will be the price she will have to pay for it. It is a common experience that negotiations relating to great international questions are beset with difficulties and frequently involve several ruptures before they are brought to a successful issue. Japan is prepared for these things. She is not disturbed by the war party's fanfare nor does she close heart in the presence of obstacles which were not unexpected.

The Nippon observes that President Roosevelt may now be said to have performed the great task assigned by himself to himself: he has brought the two Powers together. The issue rests with them. As for the language attributed to the President, namely, that Russia should not forget that she is the beaten side, the Nippon regards it as extremely apocryphal, but it thinks that by giving the precedence to the Japanese envoys, President Roosevelt intended to convey that intimation. The pretext employed was that the Japanese had been the first to arrive, but the implication was probably designed. The Nippon, however, takes no notice of the Russian war party's clamour. We should have expected some answering note of defiance from our usually stalwart-toned contemporary, but it maintains the most circumspect silence.

Wednesday, August 9.

It was a mistake to say that the ships carrying the plenipotentiaries arrived at Portsmouth on the morning of the 7th. They had to remain a day at Newport on account of foggy weather and were consequently expected to reach Portsmouth on the evening of the 7th or the morning of the 8th. Then the first meeting probably took place on the 9th. Of course the business done would be merely examination of credentials.

It appears that at Portsmouth the precedence was to be given to the Russian Plenipotentiaries. The Japanese enjoyed that distinction at Oyster Bay, so things were "levelled up" by reversing the order at Portsmouth. At any rate M. Witte probably reached Portsmouth far ahead of the others, as he went by railway while they had to await the clearing of the fog.

The Kokumin Shimbun's American correspondent, Mr. Carl O'Laughlin, telegraphs from Portsmouth that the Japanese Plenipotentiaries will put forward two statements of terms. The first will embody the conditions which Japan is willing to accept now at once. Of these the principal are payment of an indemnity of 1,500 million yen and the cession of Saghalien. There are minor items but these are cardinal. The second list embodies contingent conditions: contingent upon the refusal of the former and the continuance of the war. These conditions would be the payment of a proportionately heavy indemnity and the cession of the Maritime Province as well as certain other regions now forming part of Russia's dominions.

We do not believe the above statement in so far as it relates to a statement of alternative terms. The imagination of the reporters has been at work. Japan has never indulged in menaces and she is not likely to resort to them at such a time. They would be quite futile, for if Russia resolves to continue the war it will be because of her belief in a favourable turn of events in the field, and threats would not only fail to shake that belief but would also supplement it with exasperation.

The Japanese press is editorially silent with regard to the peace conference. One might expect that as national feeling must be in a state of extreme tension, the leading journals could scarcely refrain from reflecting that condition. But they say nothing.

Thursday, August 10.

Everything relating to the question of peace is interesting. We therefore quote a statement made by the Niroku Shimbun—made, however, on the very vague authority of a New York telegram received in a "certain quarter." The statement gives the following as Japan's peace terms:—

- 1.—Recognition of Japan's political supremacy in Korea.
- 2.—Restoration of Manchuria.
- 3.—Transfer of the Liaotung lease and of the East-China Railway.
- 4.—Cession of Saghalien.
- 5.—Payment of expenses actually incurred by Japan, amounting to some 1500 million yen.
- 6.—If Russia accepts these terms as a basis of conference an armistice will be at once agreed to by Japan.

A Russian volunteer nurse, niece of Admiral Rojestvensky, who was among the captives taken in the battle of the Japan Sea, and who subsequently left for Shanghai, returned again to Japan and applied to the naval authorities for permission to have an interview with her uncle. Her petition was dismissed and at the same time the Russian Admiral is said to have written requesting his niece to leave for home. On August 7th, she left by the Empress of China for Shanghai.

MANCHURIA.

Friday, August 4.

In the Hochi Shimbun we find a statement attributed to a Japanese who has just returned from the Amur. He appears to have gone up the river in June and to have found the fogs very obstructive, but investigations show that these grow less in July and are virtually absent from August onwards. There are some forts, he says, at the mouth of the river, but they were originally planned to keep off pirates and are armed with obsolete artillery. A few good guns have been placed in position since the war commenced, but the defences would not be capable of offering any resistance to the heavy metal of war-ships. In Nicolaievsk the inhabitants live in constant apprehension of a Japanese invasion, and they certainly have cause to fear, for Nicolaievsk is only 80 miles from Alexandrofsky and De Castries Bay, where a Japanese landing took place on the 24th of July. The Amur, indeed, suggests a most interesting enterprise. Under ordinary circumstances steamers ply regularly up and down the river during 6½ months of the year from Khabarovsk to Sretensk on the Shilka, which is a terminus of the Trans-Siberian Railway, but higher up only boats drawing from 2 to 3 feet can navigate. For this river-service there used to be 112 steamers and 152 barges, and doubtless it contributes important assistance to Linevitch in virtualizing his army. The appearance of a Japanese force at Khabarovsk would impart a pretty severe shock to Russia. It would very forcibly bring home to her the vulnerability of her situation.

Saturday, August 5.

The only news from Manchuria this morning is that on the 3rd instant the Russians made a reconnaissance with some four thousand infantry and cavalry in the neighbourhood of Yingepienmin. A collision took place, ending in the enemy's retreat, which would be the natural outcome of such a movement. The Jiji, in publishing this statement, does not mention the number of casualties.

An officer who has just returned from the front speaks of a collision which took place on the 22nd of July northward of Kaiyuan. The Russians advanced with 500 men and were driven back with very heavy loss. On the Japanese side there were 64 casualties, so the affair must have been pretty hot.

Sunday, August 6.

Skirmishes appear to be frequent in Manchuria. On the 20th of last month there was an advance by some 2,000 Russians near Hailungching. Their movement was fully reconnoitered by the Japanese who placed a regiment to receive them, but the Russians retired without a contest. Four days later a curious incident occurred at Pataukautz. Five hundred Russians marched out to make a reconnaissance, but halted before coming within touch. Before dawn on the following morning a Japanese party of 11 under a non-commissioned officer went out to scout. Coming within range of the Russians who were quietly lying asleep, the little party of Japanese at once opened fire, when the enemy, taken by surprise, retired precipitately, leaving 2 men and 14 horses in the hands of their assailants.

It is stated that reinforcements have reached the Taolu district, numbering 17,000 infantry and 2,000 cavalry with 34 guns, including 10 heavy pieces. There were already 30,000 troops at Taolu. The whole are formed into two lines, the first lines being 38 miles distant from the main position. It is stated that these are strongly entrenched.

There are said to be a large number of Mongolians in the Russian lines opposed to Major-General Umezawa's brigade, which, we presume, still forms part of General Kuroki's army. It had been noticed that the Russians were not receiving supplies of foodstuffs from home, and investigations showed that they were getting large quantities from Mongolia, the Mongolians who served with their armies being used for purposes of requisitioning. The Japanese are said to have taken successful steps to check this violation of neutrality and the result is that the enemy is much embarrassed.

The 17,000 infantry and 2,000 cavalry spoken of above as having re-inforced the Taolu army, do not appear to be troops newly arrived from Russia. They are said to have been moved by Linevitch from his left to his right. This is a further confirmation of the frequently expressed hypothesis that the Russian General fears a Japanese attempt to turn his right, or contemplates an attempt to turn the Japanese left.

A band of 500 Hungtutz is spoken of as operating most vigorously on the Russian left rear, cutting telegraphs, breaking bridges and attacking convoys.

The affair referred to above as having occurred on the 3rd instant between Nanshanchintz and Tashiltaokau seems to have been of some magnitude so far as concerns the number engaged. The Russians were 10,000 strong and their advance carried them between the battalions of Lt.-Colonels Miwa and Mimatsu. Apparently the Russians, finding themselves so disadvantageously situated, retired without pushing home their reconnaissance—for we presume it was only a reconnaissance in force. Their casualties are not mentioned. The Japanese had one killed and 6 wounded. The heavy rains had just cleared off but the roads were in an impassable condition and effective movements were out of the question.

Monday, August 7.

A Japanese officer says that the tactics of Linevitch differ cardinally from those of Kuropatkin. The latter's method was to post his troops in as great a force as possible along the fighting line, partly to deter attack and partly to prevent anything like wedge-driving. But Linevitch masses his forces at intervals and in columns so that although he leaves spaces which can be penetrated, his strength of resistance is not impaired by the breaking of his front line. It is farther observable that the Russians of late avoid encounters as much as possible. This does not consist with reports recently received of frequent skirmishes, but such nevertheless is the statement of the officer quoted by the Asahi. The enemy, he says, remain silent and inactive in their entrenchments, evidently seeking to avoid fighting. In the middle of last month a reconnaissance in force, commanded by a Lieut. Colonel and a Major, was sent out to discover what these tactics meant. It surprised a large body of Russians who retired precipitately leaving an officer, 4 men, 6 horses and a machine gun in the hands of the Japanese. It was subsequently discovered that the Russians in retreating had smashed the railway bridges and torn up the road-bed imagining evidently that they had to do with a Japanese advance on a large scale.

In the recent affair near Hailungching it is stated that the Russians did not fire a single shot before retreating.

Among the prisoners now coming into the Japanese lines it is stated that there are many Tartars who allege that they have been driven to surrender owing to distaste for remaining with an army which never accomplishes anything and above all owing to shortness of provisions in the Russian lines.

It is now stated that Linevitch is massing his forces in the direction of Taolu and Hailungching. The interpretation is either that he fears a Japanese attempt to turn his left in the Kirin direction, or that he himself contemplates some essay against the Japanese right, his hope being to accomplish a coup which may strengthen the hands of the Russian plenipotentiaries in the Peace Conference.

The Hochi Shimbun says that, collating the various reports, Russia seems to have made unexpectedly large use of the Trans-Asian Railway to recruit her forces. She professes to have a million men in the field, but the truth is that she has 20 army corps each consisting of 2 divisions. The nominal strength of a division is 15,000 men, and 40 divisions would consequently muster 600,000 men, but probably 500,000 will be nearer the truth. This is a considerably larger number than Kuropatkin had under his command before the battle of Mukden. It is thought, according to the Hochi, that as a fighting force the value of the Russian army is far inferior to its numerical suggestion, for many of the men have had little if any military training and the same is true even in a greater degree of the officers, while the spirit of the whole is much dejected, as may be inferred from the frequent surrenders which take place.

It will be recalled that before the battle of Mukden similarly conflicting rumours were published about the strength of the Russian forces. To-day some authorities give the Russians 300,000; others, as the Hochi, for example, put the figure at half a million. The only solid facts are that 140 days elapsed between Mukden and the end of July, and that if the Russians lost 150,000 men in the Mukden fight, they remained with only 200,000 in the fighting lines after the battle. Let us see how this works out:—

Remaining after battle of Mukden	200,000
Returned to duty subsequently	60,000
Sent from Russia, 1,500 daily during 140 days	210,000

Total

But is it credible that troops have poured over the line in an uninterrupted stream of 1,500 daily for 140 days? If Russia were capable of such an effort, if the railway were capable of it, why was it not made prior to the battle of Mukden?

Wednesday, August 9.

A Harbin report states that the Japanese left has withdrawn somewhat from the positions previously occupied by it. The place names as transformed into Russian pronunciation defy identification and at any rate the movement has no special significance.

It is stated that the question of making Dalny and Port Arthur free ports is now under serious discussion and the measure is likely to be adopted very soon. The authorities having determined upon the advisability of throwing open the riverine district from Liaoyang northwards, applications were invited from persons desiring to settle. At first there were 300 responses, but since the great heat of summer has passed, it appears that only 40 of these are desirous of availing themselves of the privilege.

KOREA.

There is renewed trouble in Seoul, this time of a financial nature. It appears that the principal merchants of the city have been issuing notes in a somewhat reckless fashion, and a run resulted which they found themselves unable to meet. They accordingly—acting through the Chamber of Commerce—applied to the Government for an unsecured loan of 3 million yen carrying no interest, and by some contrivance which was not explained, the Minister of Finance was induced to give his consent to this extraordinary measure. Mr. Megata, however, the Financial Adviser, ridiculed the idea when it was submitted to him, and this led to the resignation of the Finance Minister. The merchants, however, were not satisfied, or willing so lightly to abandon the pleasing prospect which the Minister's complacency had unfolded. They memorialized the Throne, and the Emperor not only authorized the Government to assist them, but also ordered that a sum of 150,000 yen should be placed at their disposal out of the treasury. It would seem that the merchants endeavoured to ascribe some of their trouble to the strict enforcement of the drastic measures recommended by Mr. Megata for regulating the nickel coinage, and the Emperor in his reply made an allusion which suggested sympathy with this complaint, for he spoke of nickels not being in circulation as though their absence were an obstacle to the smooth conduct of transactions. Mr. Megata was justly indignant at the whole proceeding. It is evidently futile that he should occupy the position of adviser if such radically unsound measures of finance are undertaken without consulting him, and moreover the Sovereign's independent action as well as the independent action of the Minister of Finance were both in plain contravention of Mr. Megata's agreement, which entitles him to be consulted before any step is decided. Tokyo journals say that he has addressed a very strong memorial to the Throne, and that the leaders of the party which finds its account in financial disorder and political turmoil are rejoicing in the hope that this too able adviser may decline to retain his post. They will be disappointed, but the incident shows what difficulties beset the path of reform in Korea.

According to official investigations the commotion among Korean merchants in Seoul is due to the following causes:—The Koreans, fearing that nickel coins circulating in the city and the inferior nickels would lose currency in view of the coinage reforms, treated them as mere merchandise or as movable property, lent them to Japanese and Chinese subjects or to foreigners, passed them over to others, or organized a run on the new notes which are not yet on a firm basis.

A telegram from Seoul says that the Japanese Representative has closed his doors to the Korean Ministers, which step is intended as an intimation that these gentlemen being occupied entirely with political intrigues and not having any care for their proper duties, Mr. Hayashi has no business with them. The story sounds a trifle romantic.

No news is to hand about the disturbance in Seoul's business circles. The Emperor is reported to have placed another sum of 200,000 yen at the disposal of the embarrassed merchants, but the impression conveyed by the whole affair is that of a deliberate attempt to discredit the financial reforms inaugurated at Japan's instance.

A Russian report from Harbin says that on the 25th of July the Japanese advance was checked at Ko-Phungsan by a heavy fire, rifle and gun, and that a force of theirs, at least a battalion strong, was compelled to retire from Paiksapong. The Russian casualties in this affair are said to have been 1 officer killed and 3 wounded and 7 men killed and 17 wounded.

The latest Japanese official report from this quarter described the occupation—on the 24th instant—of a line extending from Sochong on the east sea-shore to Sin-Phungsan on the right bank of the Tumen, the line extending over Paiksapong and Musan en route. It is possible that the troops occupying this line threw forward an outpost to Ko-Phungsan, where the Russians claim to have checked the advance, but it does not seem likely that a Japanese battalion occupying a strong position like Paiksapong can have been dislodged with such trifling loss on the side of its assailants as the Russian report indicates.

The Harbin message further states that fighting had to be suspended owing to heavy rain, and we have a subsequent Japanese report which indicates that the rain was continuous for about a week, and that it cleared off on the 30th. It may be assumed that operations were not resumed for at least 3 or 4 days after the weather had taken up.

THE FIRST BANK.

The First Bank held its semi-annual General Meeting on the 5th instant in the Bankers' Club. The accounts for the half year were read, the distribution of profits was agreed to, and the election of officers took place. The accounts stood thus:—

Net profits.....	Yen. 580,217
Brought forward from last account...	164,892
Total	745,109
Rewards and Gratuities	29,000
Reserves	200,000
Reserve for the Korean Branch	20,000
Dividend, old shares (10 per cent.).....	250,000
Dividend, New shares	26,000
Carried forward to next account	220,000

Baron Shibusawa, President of the Bank, said that economic conditions had been very firm during the half year. In spite of the war trade and industry had progressed healthily. Happily the war had been thus far successful and the great naval victory, above all, had proved the prelude of a peace conference which had given an impulse to business. Moreover the country's position in Korea had become more assured, with the result that the Bank's business there had developed greatly, and on the 24th of January it had been entrusted with the duty of adjusting the Korean coinage system and handling the Treasury's funds. The Bank's notes circulated throughout the peninsula, and on the 24th of March an Imperial Edict had been promulgated with regard to the Bank's business in Korea so that thenceforward the Bank became the financial organ of Korea under the superintendence of the Ministers of Foreign Affairs and of Finance. It had undertaken on the 24th of June to raise a loan of 2 million yen for Korea and the result was that in July the subscriptions amounted to four times the sum required, a clear proof that Japan's finances were not embarrassed by the war. The results of the measures taken since January to adjust the Korean coinage and the conditions with regard to the handling of the public funds would be reported at the next general meeting. They were able to show a profit this half year of over 580,000 yen, and they would join with him in congratulating themselves on such a favourable result.

THE NEXT AMERICAN PRESIDENT.

If New York papers are to be believed the good folks who saw in the Hon. W. Taft the next Republican successor to President Roosevelt were somewhat mistaken. The Taft boom is said, on very good authority, to have subsided when Mr. John Hay died. One journal declares that Mr. Elihu Root surrendered his profitable law practice, with its income running into the hundred thousands a-year, and accepted the place of Secretary of State, with its meagre thousands, in consideration of President Roosevelt's active support for the Republican nomination in 1908. The New York World, which is not an organ of the Republican party, says that Secretary Taft will withdraw from the race and give his support to Mr. Root, and in return Mr. Taft will be appointed Chief Justice of the Supreme Court by Mr. Roosevelt if Chief Justice Fuller retires in his term, or by Mr. Root if he is nominated and elected. The World says:—"Mr. Root believes he will have the hearty support of the corporations with which he has been allied professionally since he left the cabinet seventeen months ago. He also is confident that he will be boomed by the New York delegation to the national convention. The President and Mr. Root think this combination cannot be beaten. They regard Mr. Root's nomination as a settled fact, and they are supremely confident that he will be elected. The President's support of Mr. Root will be of the strenuous kind. From now on convention time in 1908 every important appointment that is made will be handed with the understanding, implied and understood if not actually stated in plain English, that the man to whom it is given will work for Mr. Root. The word will be passed along the line to all the present federal office-holders of the rank which entitles them to active participation in politics, and with the quiet but always effective work of the corporations and their agents, it is expected that a machine will be created that will be powerful enough to secure Mr. Root's nomination on the first ballot. It was not until the President promised Mr. Root this kind of support that Mr. Root agreed to surrender his immensely lucrative law practice which impelled his retirement from the cabinet and which he at first was decidedly adverse to giving up."

Just before Mr. Taft started on his present trip to the Philippines he expressly stated that he had abandoned all thought of going on to the Supreme Bench, just as President Roosevelt most explicitly declared that he did not intend to stand for a third term. Still it is always the least expected that happens in American politics and outsiders in this case do not always see the best of the game. Mr. Root would make an excellent President, there is no doubt, but it has to be remembered that all through life he has been connected with great corporations, and great corporations at present are rather offensive to the nostrils of the American people, and it is the people who really elect Presidents, not the political machines. On the whole we prefer the chances of the Hon. W. Taft, for he is a public servant of whose unselfish life and blameless record any nation might be proud.

CHINA.

Saturday, August 5.

Statements are again published with reference to the Fushun coal mines. An expert who has just returned from inspecting them affirms that the mineral is in 16 strata, each stratum from 50 to 70 feet and the field extending to a length of nearly 40 miles (nothing is said of the width). The coal is alleged to be probably better than the Kyushu mineral and certainly not inferior to it. The method of working the mines even when they were in Russian possession is said to have been most primitive. Since they fell into Japanese hands 300 tons of coal have been taken out daily, but the quantity could easily be increased to 1,500. The mines are spoken of as the most valuable prize of war made by the Japanese. From this we infer that the Russians had obtained a concession from the Chinese Government.

Monday, August 7.

Japanese journals publish a long statement of the views said to have been submitted to the Throne by the Chinese envoys who are soon to visit Japan on a mission of inquiry, namely, Mr. Tang Fang, Governor of Hunan, and Mr. Lu Yuan, Governor of Kiangsu. The gist of the two officials' advice is that China should consult Japan about everything and should, in short, be guided mainly by her neighbor's advice. Messrs. Tang and Lu are evidently whole-hearted advocates of a pro-Japanese policy. They consider that the future of Far-Eastern Asia lies in the hollow of Japan's hand and that China's only hope lies in reformed administration.

Speaking of the views of Chinese officials it may be mentioned that the Chinese Representative in St. Petersburg is said (Fiji Shimpō's Peking telegrams) to have wired to his Government that Russia's internal and fiscal conditions render it impossible for her to continue the war; that the nation longs for a cessation of hostilities; that peace may soon be looked for, and that China should prepare accordingly.

This action on China's part in sending envoys abroad to study foreign institutions appears to have caused some chagrin in St. Petersburg, where it is believed that the object of the energy is, not merely to conduct researches, but mainly to establish special relations with the countries to which the envoys are to proceed, namely, Japan, England and the United States. The Russian Minister of Foreign Affairs is said to have resented the omission of his country from the list of places to be visited, and the Russian Chargé d'Affaires in Peking is reported to have conveyed a similar complaint to the Wai-wu-pu. But this is incredible for there is, we believe, no intention of admitting Russia.

It is further stated that Russia is by no means satisfied with China's refusal to cordon the East-China Railway as a special asset, which must be excluded from Japan's polia opina in Manchuria. The Russian Chargé d'Affaires is alleged to have renewed his protest on this point.

Tuesday, August 8.

Russian newspapers persist in their endeavour to prove that Japan is responsible for the protest which the Chinese are making against the treatment of their countrymen in the United States. There is not a title of evidence that Japan has taken any direct part whatever in promoting this demonstration, though we do not by any means think at she would be censorable had she done.

But if the Russian newspapers mean that China's observation of Japan's resolute determination not to be the tame victim of Russia's arbitrary aggressions in Asia has encouraged the steps now taken at Canton, Shanghai, Amoy and elsewhere, their analysis can not be denied. The important factors are the newspaper and the telegraph. The Chinese are becoming an animate race vis-à-vis national problems. They have hitherto been inanimate.

It is reported that a serious rising of the Kolao Hui in the north of Shansi has taken place. The troops sent to deal with the insurgents were defeated, and more extensive measures to quell them are now being taken. All the missionaries are reported to have fled to the Governor's Yamen for refuge. The China Times is the principal authority for this story.

Wednesday, August 9.

It is denied that the Chinese Government has submitted to the peace conference a demand for 100 million yen by way of compensation for injury to life and property owing to the campaign in Manchuria, but the matter is said to be under serious consideration in Peking. There can be no doubt that the unhappy inhabitants of Manchuria have suffered severely. Not all of them. One class has certainly derived no small benefit from the war. Still the destruction of property must have been enormous. But no more complete reversal of the proper order of things could be conceived than a Chinese demand for compensation from the belligerents. China herself is responsible. She it is who has failed to discharge the first duty a government owes to its subjects, the protection of their life and property. The inhabitants of Manchuria have an undeniable right to demand indemnification from Peking, but in order to acquire a right to pass on the demand Peking would have to take up arms and expel the intruders. It was Mr. Frederick Greenwood, if we remember rightly, who propounded the naive theory that, since to pay an indemnity to Japan would hurt Russia's amour propre, the dilemma might be solved by selling back Manchuria to China. That is to say, Russia, who stole Manchuria from China in the first instance, is to leave the Chinese to pay the piper merely because, although St. Petersburg's conscience is not too tender to shrink from international brigandage, its vanity is too fine to endure the resulting punishment. The Chinese, however, may have an uneasy sense that as truth is often stranger than fiction some trick of that kind is not unlikely to be played on them, and therefore they may deem it advisable to carry the war into the enemy's camp by demanding an indemnity on their own account.

It is now reported that the Russians made strenuous efforts to have the Chinese envoys sent in the first place to St. Petersburg, but China declined, and the envoys, on their side, have expressed themselves unwilling to go to Russia at all. It is indeed a little difficult to conceive what they would find to do in Russia. The object of their westward trip is understood to be the investigation of constitutional systems of Government and the observation of their practical working. But Russia has no object lessons of that nature to offer. What Russia can teach is the urgent need of constitutional institutions, and it is presumable that the commissioners already appreciate that need.

Sir Wu Ting-fang is understood to have denied the statement that he is to proceed to Washington for the purpose of negotiating a new treaty on the subject of Chinese immigration into the United States.

There is a rumour that a body of Lama priests, numbering about one thousand, attacked and wricked several French places of worship in Yunnan. The locality mentioned is Soko, and it is added that there were many casualties. The French Representative in Peking is taking active steps.

Thursday, August 10.

A man armed with a dagger was found on the morning of the 8th instant in the Jade Chamber (Wheng-ho) of the Imperial Palace in Peking. On being arrested and questioned he replied that everything seemed like a dream to him and that he only knew that he had been three days in the Palace. The telegram (Asahi Shimbun) conveying this news does not give any information further than that many theories prevail. It is probable that some confession will be extorted from the man under torture.

There is also a telegram to the Nichi Nichi Shimbun saying that Tsen Chun-hsuan, acting viceroy of the Two Kwang, has been wounded in the left arm by a man who attempted to take his life and who was found to be a member of the revolutionary party.

A terrific thunderstorm swept over Canton on the 21st ult., and a servant-girl was killed by lightning.

A Chêngtu, capital of Szechuan province, telegram to the local mandarins reports that the Chinese troops sent to Patang, to avenge the recent murder of the Assistant Resident, Fêng Chuan, and others, gained a decisive victory over the Tibetans at a place called Erhlangtan on the 24th ultimo, and that in consequence General Ma has occupied Tingpa with his troops.

The writer of Notes on Native Affairs in the North China Daily News says it is reported in Mandarin circles that their Excellencies Lien Fang and Wu Ting-fang, Senior and Junior Vice-Presidents, respectively, of the Waiwupu, will be sent abroad to study political conditions with special reference to parliamentary representation. This question has lately been much discussed by young men who are, and have been, studying abroad, who claim that China can never progress unless the Throne permits this institution in the country. As a matter of fact, Viceroys Yuan Shi-k'ai and Chang Chih-tung, who are the only high officials who make it a point to keep in touch with public opinion, seem so much impressed by the unanimity with which all Chinese who have been abroad advocate popular representation, that quite recently their Excellencies conjointly memorialised the Throne on the subject. They advised their Majesties to grant a Constitution and a Parliament to their subjects as the only way to prevent them from attempting to obtain these privileges by force, and a Constitution and Parliament on the lines of Japan have been accordingly strongly recommended by these two Viceroys, who have also obtained a willing adherent to their views in the person of Viceroy Tsen Ch'un-hsien, thus forming a triumvirate of the three most powerful Viceroys in the Empire. Three princes also consider the matter favourably, and they are Princes Ching, Su, and P'u Lun. For this reason one of the principal duties of the High Commissioners, who are going abroad, will be to study the Constitution and form of Government of each country they may visit.

Two prominent returned American students (Chinese Educational Mission to the U. S. in the seventies), Messrs. Chu Pao-fay, an Expectant Taotai of the First Class of Chihli province, and Wan Pingchung, Expectant Secretary of the Imperial Patent Office, connected with the Grand Secretariat, have been specially recommended to the Throne to accompany the High Commissioners abroad to study foreign methods of government, etc. Taotai Chu Pao-fay, who has been lately in China as adviser on Foreign Relations to the Governor of Shantung province, was recommended to the Throne by the Grand Councillor Hsu Shih-ch'ang, and will be remembered by his many foreign friends in Shanghai as the manager for many years of the Head Office of the Imperial Chinese Telegraph Administration there, and until lately a Director of the Shanghai-Nanking Railway representing the Imperial Government. Mr. Wan Ping-chung will be remembered as the popular Interpreter of the U. S. Consulate at Chinkiang, and afterwards at Nanking, from which he resigned last year, after twenty years' faithful service, in order to join the Staff of the Liangkang Viceroy as Special Attaché. Mr. Wan's services on the Viceregal Staff have been greatly appreciated, with the result that his former Chief, H. E. Tuan Fang, who was for a short time last year Acting Viceroy of the Liangkang and who we know is going abroad as one of the High Commissioners, has specially recommended Mr. Wan to the Throne and asked that he be permitted to accompany his Excellency abroad. As both Messrs. Chu Pao-fay and Wan Ping-chung have had long experience in matters affecting International Relations, the High Commissioners could not have selected better men to accompany them abroad, considering these two gentlemen without doubt are the right men in the right place.

The P. & T. Times says that the Tientsin mint is about to coin 100-cash pieces. The coin itself "is a cylinder two inches in length," rather an inconvenient substitute for a 10-cent piece.

The fact that the C.N.S. Schang, which is 285 feet long, was able to swing at the Tientsin Bund with nearly 20 feet to spare, shows the great improvement made in the river by the Conservancy.

Mr. F. J. Freame, superintendent manager of the Shanghai and Hongkong Dyeing and Cleaning Company, Ltd., died in Shanghai on July 27. Mr. Mason, the foreman, died on the previous Tuesday. In both cases the cause of death was heat apoplexy.

The North China Daily News understands that at Tientsin and Newchwang the American boycott has been practically abandoned, and that its hold on the Chinese merchants and tradespeople in Shanghai is by no means strong.

A number of wealthy men of Hsinning in Kuangtung province, having decided to construct a railway between their city and Canton and points beyond, sent in May last a couple of their number to the United States to interest their fellow-townsmen, of whom there are a large number doing business there, in the scheme. News has lately been received from San Francisco that the representatives of the proposed Hsinning-Canton Railway have already collected over $600,000 within a few weeks of their arrival in the States, and that this sum, with the money already guaranteed in Canton and Hsinning, will now come up to almost two million dollars. It is further stated from Canton that permission for the construction of this railway has already been granted by the Shantung.

Captain Nott-Bower, the Commissioner of the City of London police, issued last month his annual report of the work of the city police during the year 1904, accompanied by the usual statistical returns. In view of the recent criticism of the Shanghai Municipal police, says the N. C. Daily News, a comparison of some of the figures is interesting, if not surprising. The value of property stolen in the City during the year 1904, according to Captain Nott-Bower, was £13,039, and the value recovered £4,303. During 1904 in Shanghai the total value of stolen and lost property was $230,177, and of this $160,084 was recovered, the actual value of stolen property in the Settlement, being $154,676, of which $105,266 was recovered. The figures for the City of London for 1903 were:—stolen property value £19,860, recovered £5,445. According to the Shanghai police report for 1903 the amount of stolen and lost property was $302,876, of which the remarkable amount of $253,332 was recovered, although only $144,236 worth was stolen in the Settlement. When one considers the difficulties that have to be encountered in China by the police, and on the other hand, the supposed perfection of the machinery of the law in London, the local constabulary certainly gains by comparison with the home police.

Calcutta has been going better than Shanghai; a paper of the 13th ult. says:—This city is passing through a terrible heat wave, which has lasted several weeks. The daily temperature is over 104 degrees. A large number of bullocks and horses have dropped dead in the streets. Very few gharries are plying for hire. Passengers arriving at the station are suffering great inconvenience, having to pack luggage in bullock-carts and walk behind in perspiring procession through the streets. Several Europeans have died from heat stroke. Three engineers working at the Kidderpore Docks were struck down. In some cases divers' apparatus was used for supplying air to men working below deck. Two hundred tons of ice were consumed in the city on Sunday. There was practically an ice famine in the evening, 4 annas a lb. being given. The sky is now cloudy. A fall of rain is anxiously looked for. Vasto, the winner of the Viceroy's Cup in 1903, died on Sunday, the result of the excessive heat.

PORT ARTHUR.

In the Asahi Shimbun we read that the Bayan's hull can be easily repaired so as to render her seaworthy, but that her machinery will require some time to render it serviceable and she will have to be towed to Japan. Our contemporary gives the probable date of her transit and her destination, but we presume that such details must not be published. On the other hand the battle-ships Peresviet and Pobeda are wholly unhurt as to their machinery though their hulls have suffered considerably. Temporary repairs will enable them to proceed to Japan under their own steam. At present the work of raising the battle-ships Pollawa and Retvizan and the cruiser Pallada is proceeding vigorously. They are expected to be afloat before the end of this month. It is further expected that 4 merchantmen and some destroyers and gun-boats can be salvaged. Operations are in progress to raise or remove the 21 vessels lying at the mouth of the harbour, which were recently sold by auction. The gates of the dock were found to be beyond repair. New ones have had to be made and will soon be ready for placing in position.

The civil administration of the place is said to be now well organized. Street repairs have been effected, as have those of the injured buildings. Many Japanese tradesmen have arrived at the place and the prices of commodities are falling.

The Jiji Shimpō says that the sea about Dalny (Tairen) has now been thoroughly cleared of mines, and that ships can steam in without any danger. The voyage from Tairen to Yingkow is also safe.

LOCAL FINANCING.

The Japanese Economist publishes some interesting figures on the subject of local finance. Among them we find a table showing the burden per head of population on account of the several items:—

	BURDEN PER HEAD OF POPULATION.
	1905 Sen.	1904 Sen.	1903 Sen.
Education	1.95	2.10	2.45
Police	2.17	2.24	2.26
Engineering Works	1.78	1.86	3.24
Sanitation	0.34	0.39	0.44
Administration	0.73	0.66	0.74
Other	2.08	2.34	2.31
Totals	9.05	9.59	11.45

It is evident from this table thus the tendency is in the direction of diminution. But there is an important fact to be remembered, namely, that during the years of war, 1904 and 1905, special arrangements were made to lighten the burdens of the localities in view of the great increase made in taxes paid to the central treasury. Probably this fully accounts for the difference between the figures for 1903 and those for the following two years.

Turning now to the question of local debts, the following table shows their gradual increase:—

DEBTS OF LOCALITIES.		Yen.
1895	10,209,934
1896	10,518,414
1897	13,738,161
1898	20,264,480
1899	28,228,299
1900	37,729,473
1901	43,720,802
1902	61,110,355
1903	67,111,893
1904	64,992,508

The debts have therefore increased six-fold in ten years. The bulk of them have been contracted for building and furnishing schools and on account of public works, so that they can not be called unproductive expenditure. In 1890 they amounted to only 720,000 yen, and it is not perhaps untrue to say that their development since that time is an evidence of wholesome progress. In the table showing the burden per head of population no figure appears indicating the yearly disbursements on account of these debts. If we assume that seven per cent. represents the interest and appropriations to sinking fund—an estimate probably too low—then the aggregate payments on this account would be 4½ millions of yen, approximately, and would impose a burden of 10 sen per head of population on the average.

TEA.

The officials of the Central Chamber of the Tea Traders Guild, Mr. Aizawa Kiho and Mr. Otani Kahei, representing the tea-dealers of the whole of Japan, have petitioned the Minister of State for Agriculture and Commerce to renew the grant in aid voted for them by the Diet several years ago. The grant was for the avowed purpose of extending the routes of the trade. Its period terminated in 1903 and the guild having applied for an extension, the Government made a special appropriation of 350,000 yen in 1904. A petition was then presented to the Diet and readily submitted by the latter for the Government's approval, but in consequence of the war no grant was made in 1905. The petition now addressed to the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce says that the opening of new markets has been stopped and that enterprises already in progress have had to be suspended, so that the record of the trade for the current year is unfortunate. It is pointed out that everything tending to increase the national capital should now be promoted, and that any diminution in the export of principal staples is much to be regretted in national interests. The memorialists ask for a grant of 70,000 yen annually for seven years, commencing with 1906.

It looks as though the tea-men considered it right to become perpetual pensioners of the State. Doubtless they seem to see a reason justifying such an exceptional condition, but they have never succeeded in making that reason clear to the general public, nor do the records of the trade indicate that it has benefited perceptibly by grants hitherto made on its account from the Treasury's chest.

ELECTRIC TRAMWAYS IN TOKYO.

Only a very few years ago it was a constant complaint that Tokyo, the Metropolis of Japan, showed conspicuous backwardness in the matter of electric railways. The city could not boast as much as a mile of these notable facilities whereas other towns of comparatively small importance were fairly well supplied. It was understood, however, that Tokyo did not suffer from want of enterprise: the trouble was of precisely the opposite character—excess of enterprise. So many companies competed for charters to build electric lines that the authorities found it impossible to discriminate, and thus all were equally "hung up." Finally certain amalgamations and adjustments took place, with the result that concessions were given to three companies only, the Electric Car (Densha), the Street Railway (Shigae) and the Tokyo Railway (Tokyo Denki). The lines of the first-named company were to occupy the routes already traversed by the horse-trams. In fact the "Electric Car Company" was but a new name for the familiar old "Horse Tram Company," whose poor vehicles and poorer cattle had for years earned for their owners a splendid dividend. "The Street Railway," however, and "The Tokyo Railway" were altogether new concerns. To the former some 70 miles of route were assigned; to the latter about 30 miles. Very glaring differences present themselves in the nature of the three companies' constructions, but it is perhaps premature to discuss that point yet. What leads us to allude to the matter here is that already the career of the enterprise is threatened with embarrassment. The three concerns are all competing for extended concessions and the authorities are confronted by a dilemma somewhat similar to that which caused so much delay at the outset. Perplexed to choose between the companies and unwilling to reject all their applications, the Home Minister suggested that they should confer among themselves and, in order to avert the construction of superfluous lines, should agree to use some sections in common and to abandon others. This was interpreted by some as a suggestion in the direction of amalgamation and as amalgamation would excellently aid the interest of concerns which have mismanaged their finances or scamped their constructions, it was mooted at the first joint meeting of directors summoned to consider the Home Minister's advice. But though amalgamation would certainly be advantageous when the time comes, that time has not yet come, and consequently the directors decided that since their present state of competitive division precludes the possibility of successfully discussing and apportioning the projected extensions, the better plan is to ask the Home Minister to decide the question as he deems best. Viscount Yoshikawa seems to have been not over well pleased by this request. Speaking to a deputation of directors who waited on him, he explained that the electric companies threatened to absorb every street in the city, regardless of the convenience of all other kinds of traffic. It is the duty of the authorities, the Minister is reported as saying, to guard the interests of all classes of the citizens and not to allow one class alone to monopolise the thoroughfares. Again, the Government desires, in the interests of hygiene, to relegate to a distant suburban quarter the squalidly indigent section of the inhabitants, and these are very willing to fall in with the scheme provided that some very cheap means of conveyance are furnished to carry them to and from their work. None of the electric-tram companies, however, seems willing to contribute to the success of this reform. Their sole object appears to be the multiplication and extension of their lines in populous regions. It may be said that there are already two lines running from the Shimbashi vicinity towards Ueno, yet the Electric Car Company wants to add a third line eastward of the other two. Viscount Yoshikawa threatens, under these circumstances, to exercise the full powers reposed in him by the terms of the concessions; powers which entitle the Home Minister to order the removal of a line, or its transfer elsewhere, or the building of a new route. The Jiji Shimpō denounces such interference as most mischievous and recommends that the companies be left to compete freely. The time will come for amalgamation without any arbitrary action on the part of the Home Office. Our contemporary suggests that instead of busying themselves about such matters the Authorities should rather direct attention to the important fact that the companies have not made any arrangement to consult public convenience by having their tickets interchangeable. In name the three-sen fare exists, but its operation is limited to the lines of each company, so that if a passenger wants to be carried further he must buy a new ticket. And so, in our opinion, he ought. When any publicist proves satisfactorily that the san-sen-kin-itsu system has justice on its side, there will be reason to advocate it. Nobody has proved anything of the kind. On the contrary, the system is opposed to the elementary principle that the amount of remuneration should vary according to the degree of service. A maximum charge may well be fixed, but to dictate a uniform charge is purely arbitrary. For the rest the difficulty which immediately suggests itself seems to admit of very easy solution. It rests with the Home Minister to grant or to withhold charters. He can preserve as many routes as he wishes to preserve simply by declining to allowed them to be traversed by new lines, so long as such refusal does not unduly impair the interests of lines already built and which would not have been built unless concessions for their connexions were regarded as assured.

ANOTHER SPECIMEN OF RUSSIAN METHODS.

About May last several Japanese sailing vessels disappeared at sea. Among them was the Yayeyama (115 tons register). She belonged to a Mr. Hiromi Nisaburo of Osaka and in the middle of May she left Hokkaido bound for Tsuruga in Echizen. Thereafter nothing more was heard of her until a few days ago when a letter from one of the crew reached his family. He explained that the vessel had been sunk by the Vladivostok war-ships which took off her crew of 10 men and sent them as prisoners to Harbin where they are now detained.

This is another example of Russia's uncivilized methods. She really makes no distinction between combatants and non-combatants. There have been international jurists who contend that the able-bodied population of a belligerent State are all lawful prize of war since their capture diminishes the military potentialities of the nation. But it is a barbarous doctrine, no longer practised by enlightened Powers. Japan, throughout the whole course of this war has carefully refrained from exposing Russian non-combatants to its dangers or inconveniences. At this moment she is engaged releasing all the officials and employees of the civil administration in Saghalien. But the Russians have seized Japanese non-combatants and held them prisoners whenever such a course was possible. Lately there was a case of their attempting to sink a little coasting steamer with all her crew on board, and there have been instances of their murdering Japanese fishermen in cold blood. With regard to the schooner Yayeyama, not only did they carry off her crew and send them into confinement at Harbin, but they also refrained from sending any information to Japan and thus during nearly 4 months the families of ten sailors mourned for them as dead men. There is no conceivable excuse for such barbarity. A Prisoners' Information Bureau exists and, so far as the Japanese are concerned, they do not lose an hour in conveying to Russia the names of all Russian prisoners and any facts contributing to their identification. But to this day there are in the hands of the Russians Japanese prisoners concerning whom not one word of intelligence has been forwarded to Japan, and now we have the case of the little ship Yayeyama, the fate of whose crew would have remained still unknown had not one of them managed, after 4 months, to communicate with his family. Nothing could be more inhuman. One is always disposed to make allowances for cruelties said to have been perpetrated against wounded men, or for alleged mutilations of the dead. Such things are apt to be exaggerated, and though the great volume of instances recorded against the Russian must necessarily have a large basis of truth, public indignation is checked by a sense of uncertainty. But the capture, detention and even murder of non-combatants, as well as the silence preserved about them, are indisputable facts, which no language can be too strong to condemn. This is the nation that proudly claims for itself the title of "the shield of Western civilization."

LINEVITCH.

It will have been observed that in the anti-peace protest addressed by Linevitch and his Generals to the Tsar, the Russian commander-in-chief, after dwelling upon the advantages of position he claims to possess and the splendid spirit of his troops, declared that before the end of the month he hoped to assume the offensive against the Japanese. "The end of the month" meant the end of July. There are as yet no indication of this offensive movement and we are now at the 10th of August. Perhaps the rainy season intervened. But Linevitch must have fully apprehended the rainy season when he penned his protest. Is this then merely another example of Russian brag? What is the use of a great army inspired with lofty convictions of victory if it does not achieve victory or attempt to achieve it? General Linevitch appears blind to facts. Five months have now passed since the battle of Mukden. Is not that sufficient interval to recuperate his strength and to strike one blow at least on behalf of the fallen flag of his country? Merely to have an army in esse is nothing unless it acts the part of an army by fighting. It is not upon Japan that the responsibility of securing fresh triumphs rests. It is for Russia to retrieve some of her crushing disasters. She has done absolutely nothing and yet Linevitch brags at the top of his voice. Muscovite brag has become a very unsightly affair.

THE ALLIANCE.

The Miyako Shimbun and the Niroku Shimpō publish statements about the alliance. Both agree that the draft of an extended alliance—"offensive and defensive" they call it—has been concluded but ratification has not yet taken place. The two journals differ, however, in one respect; namely, that the Miyako represents the draft as having been submitted to the Privy Council on the 8th whereas the Niroku speaks of the 9th. The latter says that the appended despatches will not be published, but that they are understood to contain details as to the localities of employment and the numbers of ships and troops contributed by each Power in the event of coming to the other's assistance. We reproduce these rumours but do not, of course, endorse them. The Niroku was the first to publish intelligence of the original alliance and it evidently aims at repeating the distinction. The same journal applies to term hemmu (one-sided) to the alliance on the alleged authority of Marquis Ito and says that, on these grounds, the distinguished statesman was opposed to it at first; but he changed his views on being assured that the compact would have the effect of diminishing Japan's burden of armaments. It is altogether an entertaining story whatever may be its value.

The Hochi Shimbun and the Yorozu Chōhō now refer to the question of the alliance, and allege that the new treaty has been concluded and will soon be published. The Yorozu speaks of the close of this month; the Hochi of some time before Parliament rises. It will be observed that four journals have now published this news—the Niroku, the Miyako, the Hochi and the Yorozu. Thus far, however, the leading newspapers are silent.

THE CHINESE BOYCOTT.

The Chinese in Yokohama are said to have held a meeting at the Chinese Chamber of Commerce on the 6th and to have decided that they will cease all transactions of buying or selling American goods and will take no part in loading or unloading American ships, except at ports where no other foreign vessels enter. They have not yet formulated any resolution with regard to Chinese in American employ inasmuch as a fund has not been formed for the support of these men if they are compelled to give up their work. It is stated that these resolutions are to be enforced by fines, but such a course would be of course illegal.

It is alleged (telegrams of Hochi Shimbun and Shogyō Shimpō) that the Emperor of China has privately instructed Viceroy Yuan and Chang in the sense that it is most inadvisable to continue the present agitation with regard to the Chinese emigration question and that the Viceroy should endeavour to suppress it and to break up the associations formed for the purpose. His Majesty's alleged reason is that President Roosevelt is using his best efforts to effect the restoration of peace, and that anything calculated to estrange American good-will should be most carefully avoided at this juncture. Of course if these two great officials, the Northern and the Southern Superintendents of Trade, employ their influence, they should be able to check the agitation, temporarily at all events.

A telegram received in Tokyo from America says that President Roosevelt has decided to convoke an extraordinary session of Congress in connexion with the Chinese boycott. The Hon. W. Taft, now in Manila, is expected to return about the time of the convocation of the Houses.

It is reported by telegram from Shanghai that the British merchants in that port have sent a telegram through the British Consul-General there to their Minister in Peking asking him to warn the Chinese Government of the menacing attitude of the Chinese traders in boycotting American products.

The Foreign Chamber of Commerce has transmitted a similar telegraphic petition to the Corps Diplomatique in Peking.

It is said that some prominent Japanese traders in Yokohama are endeavouring to pacify the Chinese traders and persuade them to revoke their recent decision.

PEARY AND THE NORTH POLE.

Commander Peary, who is seeking the North Pole once again in a specially built ship, the Roosevelt, left New York on the 16th of July in high spirits. "Remember," said he, "that my last word was one of thankfulness to the men and press of this city. I hope to come back with a chip from the pole. But, if anything happens, it will be all for the best, and I'm sure Mr. Jesup would feel even then that the money had not been thrown away. What is it the poet says, 'They never fail who die in a good cause.'"

Peary, although he directed the start, did not sail on his ship. He left New York at midnight for Sydney, C.B., where he will join the Roosevelt. Before starting he said: "I have the best-equipped expedition that ever started out to plant the flag on the uppermost part of the globe. Every possible thing that would facilitate the work of discovery and every comfort for the men have been attended to."

With all his exuberance the friends of the explorer noted a strain of sadness in his conversation toward the close, that they had not noticed on the eves of previous departures. "It isn't that I have lost my enthusiasm," he explained, when some one suggested that he took a sombre view of the forthcoming expedition. "I never had more than I have now. But I know the difficulties better—the long blackness, the awful cold, the solitude and the silence. The desolation of those plains of ice gets into one's soul. Why, I've seen the time when I would have welcomed a life and death struggle with a lot of polar bears just to relieve the loneliness. The memory of it is a spell upon me."

Some one asked him if any thought of explorers who had never come back would creep to him through the Arctic night. His fine face darkened. "Yes, and all they failed to do comes over one. The pathos of it is overwhelming. When I have been tramping all day across plains of ice and have come suddenly to an elevation, I often have caught myself looking far and wide for—well, what do you think? The pole? No, the humour of that notion doesn't go far then. I'm looking for a possible clue to the fate of Andree, or still more likely, that of Sir John Franklin. Somehow, I imagine I shall find wedged in ice, disclosed by a big fracture, a boat, a box, a piece of mast or sail, a bit of chain, a marlinspike—perhaps manuscript, ship's log-books, or something to connect me with the defeated past. It is a sensation no one can understand who has not known it himself. For, you see, I always say to myself, 'Who will stand here fifty years hence—the North Pole still undiscovered, perhaps, and wonder in what crevasse lies the body of Peary and what was his last message to the world he left behind?'"

The Roosevelt, which is to carry Peary and his fortunes, was built in Portland, Me. She has many peculiarities of model, among others a pronounced raking stem and wedged-shaped bow, very sharp dead rise of floor, affording a form of side which cannot be grasped by the ice; a full run to keep the ice away from the propellers, a pronounced overhang at the stern to still further protect the propeller and a raking stern post. Her principal dimensions are: Length, 184 feet; breadth 35 5-16 feet; depth, 16 2-10 feet; gross registered tonnage, 614 tons, and maximum load displacement, about 1,500 tons. The filling in of the bow, where it is to meet the ice, is almost solid. To lessen the danger of having propeller flanges broken off by the ice the propeller has been so constructed as to be easily disconnected and hoisted upward into a well. The main features of the machinery are in a compound engine of massive construction; an unusually heavy shaft of forged steel twelve inches in diameter; a massive propeller ten and one-half feet in diameter, but with blades of large area, which are detachable in case of injury; a triple boiler battery; arrangements for admitting live steam to the low pressure cylinder, in order to largely increase the power for a limited time, and an elliptical cruiser type smokestack to reduce wind resistance.

PRISONERS.

We read in the Nichi Nichi Shimbun that the Japanese Government has felt compelled to protest through the French Authorities against the treatment of Japanese prisoners by the Russians, and that the protest has been attended with good results. On the other hand, the conduct of the Russian prisoners in Japan seems to be often of a very unruly description. Our contemporary says that among the soldiers there are men so utterly ignorant and so little under self-control that one of them will eat a string of raw onions and seven or eight raw cucumbers at a sitting. If remonstrated with these men complain that the Japanese Authorities do not furnish sufficient vegetables. Others, being allowed to take exercise freely outside their quarters, indulge in all kinds of excesses, and resent any attempts to restrain them as undue interference with their liberty of movement. The Japanese authorities have issued instructions that an appeal should be made to the good sense of men behaving in this manner. Hygienic expediency should be explained to them and they should be reminded of the condition of their comrades who are suffering the hardships of a campaign in Manchuria. Should these appeals fail—as they probably will—strong measures must be employed. When we remember that the Japanese have to deal with some seventy thousand prisoners, it is not to be reasonably supposed that troubles of this nature can be avoided.

We learn that Mr. C. B. Clausen, of Clausen's Hotel, has acquired the buildings on No. 87, fronting the present hotel, and intends to transform them into residential and hotel premises. The Vivanti Buildings will not be demolished, but will be altered to suit the requirements of their new owner. It is proposed also to lay down two double bowling alleys so that this fine exercise and sport will be at the disposal of the public. The buildings will probably be opened in November.

"MASTERPIECES SELECTED FROM THE UKIYOYE (POPULAR) SCHOOL"

The Shimbi Shoin promises us another great work on Japanese pictorial art. It is to consist of 5 volumes, each containing some 30 reproductions of the best pictures of the Ukiyoye School. A specimen picture is now before us. It is from the brush of Katsukawa Shunsho, and the original being very familiar to us we have no hesitation in saying that the reproduction is absolutely perfect in line and colour. Judging from what the Shimbi Shoin has already done with the assistance of the able art critic and historian, Mr. Shichi Tajima, by whom the works of this great publishing firm are edited, we anticipate a series of most beautiful volumes such as will be a perpetual source of interest and delight to their fortunate possessors. We take from the prospectus the following details:—

Pictures by the Ukiyoye School of Artists justly take an important position in the history of Japanese Fine Arts, and if anyone is at all disposed to investigate the pictorial art of this land in its consecutive phases, he must not omit this school from his studies.

This work is intended to give a collection of coloured wood-cuts which shall reproduce, in the minutest details of line and colour, about 150 masterpieces selected from the works of the great artists of the Ukiyoye School; and for this purpose we have made a careful selection from original pictures or from old wood cuts. As a result, this collection will fully exhibit the very essence of that eminent school. It goes without saying, therefore, that the volumes will be a most pleasing ornament for the drawing-room, and at the same time it may be termed an unequalled dictionary, as it were, to which students of the Ukiyoye School may turn for reference. Hence, we believe that the work may justly be considered the very key-note of the wonderful themes that those artists wrought in design and in colour; and that it should be in the hands of all art-lovers as well as art-students, rather than such should be satisfied with possessing what are too often worthless wood-cuts, alleged to be old, that are obtained at high prices.

The Shimbi Shoin, convinced of the correctness of this view, intends to publish, by the convenient method of subscription, a set of volumes containing reproductions of only the choicest pictures of the Ukiyoye School. The edition will be limited strictly to 700 copies, of which 100 will be a special édition de luxe (that will be bound in a more attractive way than the ordinary edition and such pictures as were originally painted on silk will be reproduced on silk) and the Shimbi Shoin desires to have all those who care to avail themselves of its offer, send in their subscriptions as soon as possible.

PARTICULARS.

- 1.—The Series will be completed in 5 volumes.
- 2.—The number of plates to be inserted in each volume is about 30, making a total of about 150 pictures in all. Each picture will reproduce, with strict faithfulness of line and colour, every detail of the original as perfectly as such work can be done with Japanese coloured woodcuts.
- 3.—As an Introduction to Volume I, there will be an essay on the origin and development of the Ukiyoye School; and the marked characteristics of each branch of the school will be touched upon by a competent critic. With every plate will be given a descriptive text containing particulars of the life of the artist, his name, the subject, the size and character of the original, and the name of the present owner.
- 4.—The contemplated work will be in volumes 1 foot 4 3/4 inches in height by 1 foot in breadth. The plates will be printed upon the most excellent quality of Japanese hand-made paper, expressly prepared for this edition. The binding will be most artistically done, the cover being a silk fabric of a special texture on which is stamped an appropriate design in colours. In letter press, bindings, and general workmanship, the volumes will stand as an exponent of the triumphs of Japan's Arts.
- 5.—The price of the édition de luxe is to be forty-five (45.00) yen for a single volume; or Two hundred and twenty-five (225.00) yen for the complete set, while the price of the ordinary edition is to be thirty-five (35.00) yen for a single volume; or one hundred and seventy-five (175.00) yen for the complete set. Expenses of packing, carriage, customs duties, and terminal delivery charges (concerning which information may be had on application to ourselves or to our duly appointed agents) are to be added to the purchase price.

6.—In order that every needful attention may be given to this important work, the time during which subscriptions will be received, is restricted to the 15th of December, 1905.

7.—The number of volumes in this edition is limited to seven hundred copies, including 100 copies of the édition de luxe. Each volume in the entire series will be numbered and registered, as a guarantee of its genuineness; the numbers following the order of precedence in which subscriptions are received. If the number of subscriptions should exceed seven hundred, the edition will still be limited to that number; the subscriptions in excess being returned at once.

8.—It is intended to publish the first volume in February, 1906, and thereafter one volume every three months.

CONTRACTS AND DISCOUNTS.

There are to be three forms of subscription contracts, designated A, B, and C, and, according to the particular contract, discount is allowed as follows:—

A. If the whole subscription price for the entire set of the édition de luxe is paid in advance in one payment at the time of signing the subscription contract, forty (40.00) yen will be deducted from the 225.00 yen, making the net price one hundred and eighty-five (185.00) yen. This edition will be distributed only to those who make one payment of the price.

B. If the whole subscription price for the entire set of the ordinary edition is paid in advance in one payment at the time of signing the subscription contract, thirty (30.00) yen will be deducted from the 175.00 yen, making the net price one hundred and forty-five (145.00) yen.

C. Net price one hundred and sixty-five (165.00) yen; being a reduction of Ten (10.00) yen from the gross price (of the ordinary edition). Forty (40.00) yen to be paid when the subscription contract is signed; and twenty-five (25.00) yen when each volume is received.

The stipulation, that all expenses of packing, carriage, customs duties, and delivering are to be borne by the subscriber, is a part of each contract.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

The Kokumin Shinbun publishes figures showing, approximately, the anticipated revenues and expenditures of the State railways for next fiscal year:—

	1906.	1905.	Difference.
Income	27,230,000	24,410,000	+ 2,820,000
Expenditure ...	17,810,000	14,830,000	+ 2,980,000
Net Profit	9,420,000	9,580,000	- 160,000

This reduction of net revenue in spite of an increase in the length of State lines is attributed to three causes. The first is the great rise in the price of coal. The second is that the Hokkaido lines have been transferred to the Railway Bureau. And the third that supplementary works representing an outlay of a million yen have to be undertaken. In the one item of coal alone there is an increased expenditure of 800,000 yen, while the loss on the Hokkaido lines represents 150,000 yen. These three items total nearly 2 millions of yen. Coal, of course, may have fallen to its normal value before the next fiscal year opens.

It seems that the Russians now fire on the Japanese whenever and wherever they see them, quite careless whether they are combatants or non-combatants. The latest case is that of the schooner Ota Maru of Hakodate. Being in want of water she sent a boat with 7 men to obtain this necessary at a river at Ozeronai in Kamchatka. While the men were filling their kegs a party of Russian soldiers appeared and at once opened fire. The Japanese sailors being unarmed, had only to fly. Five of them were shot down and 2 escaped. Truly it may be said without exaggeration that the only victories won by the Russians during this war have been over non-combatants, sailors, fishermen and such folks.

The Hochi Shinbun says that according to official returns the numbers and classification of the steamers now forming the Japanese mercantile marine are as follow:—

	Vessels.
From 20 tons to 50 tons	376
From 50 tons to 100 tons	219
From 100 tons to 300 tons	249
From 300 tons to 500 tons	86
From 500 tons to 1,000 tons	103
From 1,000 tons to 2,000 tons	114
From 2,000 tons to 3,000 tons	90
From 3,000 tons to 4,000 tons	37
From 4,000 tons to 5,000 tons	11
From 5,000 tons to 6,000 tons	5
From 6,000 tons to 7,000 tons	28
Over 7,000	1

The total number of ships is 1,309, and their aggregate tonnage is 882,092 tons.

In our issue of the 2nd instant we gave an epitome of the reasons assigned for the confiscation of the Russian hospital-ship Orel. We now learn from the Official Gazette of the 5th instant that there was found on board the vessel a sum of 54,569.83 francs and another sum of 2,484 roubles 44 kopeks, which money also has been confiscated on the ground that it was designed for paying the crew and defraying the ship's expenses, and as it has been proved that she was employed for belligerent purposes and not for mere hospital work, the money, constituting a part of her necessary equipment, becomes lawful prize of war.

During her visit to Tokyo Miss Roosevelt presented yen 100 to the poor of Tokyo through His Honour the Mayor. Mr. Taft gave yen 100 for the same object through the same channel.

Miss Roosevelt, Mr. Taft, and the Senators and Representatives of the party presented yen 1,040 to the Japanese Red Cross Association.

Among the cargo of the S.S. Bawby there were found 4 cases of dry goods the property of Messrs. Carl Bediger and Co. of Kiaochow. These boxes have been released because, although the vessel carried contraband, no part of it belonged to this German firm and therefore no reason existed for confiscating the boxes.

Lord Curzon has addressed a warm letter of thanks to the Jiji Shimpō for the measures taken by that journal to collect funds for purposes of the Indian earthquake relief. The fund collected was 16,434 rupees. His lordship, while acknowledging the great assistance this money will bring to distressed families, says that it has still more signal value as an evidence of the kindly feeling animating the Japanese towards their allies.

Official statistics show that the decrease of foreign tourists noticeable in 1904 did not undergo any material change in 1905. Taking each year as ended on June 30th the following figures are shown:—

Some of these figures are obviously too small.

In the annual address delivered by Bishop Hall to the Convention at Vermont, we find the following:—

■ is, I think, right that I should refer to a request which I received in a tentative form last fall and more definitely a few weeks since, that I would visit Japan for the purpose of giving courses of addresses and conferences at different centres on the Christian Religion. The invitation was interesting as being sent on behalf of an interdenominational society of foreign (that is, English and American) missionaries and of native Christians. The work would be extremely attractive, especially in what all admit to be a critical time in the religious development of Japan; and the appeal for such help from a missionary body constitutes a legitimate claim on representatives of an older Church. I cannot, however, think that at this time it would be right for me to accept the invitation. The strain involved might prove more than one was equal to after a severe illness. But the really determining consideration in my mind is that, after my absence for three months last summer and my disability for three months this spring, it would not be right for me to be away from the Diocese for the length of time which such a mission would require—some five months next winter. Accordingly I have written to those from whom the invitation came that such a visit is impossible for me at present. Since the matter was spoken of before my illness as a possibility about which, if the request were pressed, I might consult the Diocese, it seems proper that I should use this opportunity to say that under the actual circumstances I have myself concluded that the plan is barred.

Captain Hutchison, who has served since last summer as Naval Attaché at the British Legation, left Japan by the mail of the 11th instant. He has won extraordinary popularity during the brief period of his service in Japan and he carries away with him many good wishes.

The Japan Herald endeavours to convict us of inconsistency. The evidence is this: In an article written by the editor of the Japan Mail for Munsey's Magazine it was stated that "all the journals edited and owned by American citizens and British subjects in China and Japan champion Japan's cause in the war with Russia;" and in an article in the Japan Mail we said, "during 37 years we have known the Japan Herald and throughout the whole of that period its undeviating role has been to foment distrust of Japan and the Japanese in foreign minds and to place obstacles in the path of friendly intercourse and the country's material development." Our contemporary professes to find inconsistency in these utterances. There is not the smallest inconsistency. The Japan Herald is unquestionably one of the newspapers that has championed Japan's cause in the war with Russia. But not less unquestionably its traditional role has been to foment distrust of Japan and the Japanese in foreign minds and to place obstacles in the path of friendly intercourse and the country's material development. In the matter of the war it has gone with the crowd and has admitted that right was on Japan's side, but its besetting tendency remained as conspicuous as ever in other cases. Our contemporary seems to resent the appreciation and suggests that its obvious intention is to make bad blood. As to the latter point, it is putting the saddle on the wrong horse with a vengeance. As to the former, the simple remedy is for the Herald to mend its ways.

Japanese newspapers are publishing intelligence as to the launching of new destroyers and as to the number added to the Japanese navy this year. Inasmuch, however, as some of our contemporaries have been fined for publishing cognate news, we are disposed to abandon the monopoly of it to Japanese journals.

As we go to press we learn that the newspapers publishing the above have been prosecuted.

The Shogyo Shimpou makes a striking comparison. It notes the singular fact that while a conference to restore peace, if possible, is sitting at Portsmouth in New Hampshire, arrangements are being made for a grand reception of the French Fleet at Portsmouth in England with the object of strengthening the Anglo-French entente and thus preserving the balance of power in Europe. At the conference the parties concerned are Japan, England's ally, and Russia, France's ally. At the naval demonstration the parties concerned are England, Japan's ally, and France, Russia's ally. It is a singular coincidence. Our contemporary does not venture to predict any happy result of the conference but is not without hope.

The many friends of Mr. Clay MacCauley will be glad to learn that he projects a visit to Japan. It is his intention, we understand, to sail from Seattle by the S.S. Shawmut, of the N. P. Line, on the 23rd of this month, so that he will reach Japan early in September. His stay in this country will be until the end of November. Mr. MacCauley has done much as a lecturer and a literature to make Japan and the Japanese known to America, and we have no doubt that his forthcoming visit will furnish him with fresh material.

Many residents in Yokohama have subscribed from time to time to Dr. Barnardo's Homes and they will be interested to learn from a letter published in the home papers and signed by, among others, the Duke of Argyll, two Duchesses, seven peers, six Bishops, and eight M.P.s, that an earnest appeal is being made for help to enable the Council of the National Waifs' Association to wipe out the liabilities on the conduct of Dr. Barnardo's Homes, which have grown out of several years of deficient income. Dr. Barnardo, who for more than 40 years has been the "Father of Nobody's Children," completed his 60th year in July. The responsibility of his task of providing for an enormous family of 8,500 children has told upon his constitution, and the best recognition that could be made of his life's labours would be to give him the assurance of the adequate provision for the smooth working of "this gigantic mechanism of intelligently organised philanthropy." This could be done by a sum of £120,000. Lord Brassey is the Treasurer of the new fund.

DISASTROUS STORM.

A train on the Kyushu railway was overturned by the gale on the afternoon of the 8th instant. Nine of the passengers were severely injured and 38 slightly injured. Among the severely injured one subsequently died. His name is given as Captain Parker, an officer of the United States Army. Two other trains were also upset on the same line. In one case 3 persons were injured, but in the other there do not seem to have been any casualties. It may be reasonably hoped that this storm will usher in a spell of calm sunny weather, which is much wanted in the interests of the rice crop. Meanwhile the cable between Shanghai and Nagasaki has been interrupted, but apparently communication was restored on the evening of the 9th.

News regarding damage caused by the recent storm was received in Tokyo as follows:

Hiroshima.—On the night of Aug. 7th, a terrible storm was experienced with the result that 136 buildings in the districts of North Abi and Muko-Uwajima were flooded, two persons were drowned, and several landslides occurred.

Akita.—Heavy rains continued from Aug. 4th to the 6th. Inundations occurred. Many new bridges were destroyed and many buildings and cultivated fields were damaged.

Niigata.—Owing to inundations, traffic on the Hokoku Railway was interrupted on the morning of Aug. 8th.

Kanazawa.—Storms have continued for some days. The Nanao Railway sustained damage so that traffic was stopped. River bridges and many buildings were damaged.

Toyama.—In the city, 373 houses were flooded. In the surrounding districts, similar damage is believed to have been sustained which the local government authorities are now investigating.

Later.

It is officially stated that owing to the recent storm, the cable between Shanghai and Nagasaki was damaged so that the transmission of foreign telegrams has been stopped since the morning of Aug. 9th.

Shimonoseki.—Service through the strait was temporarily interrupted on the morning of Aug. 9th. Four small vessels sunk, and seventeen were damaged. The pier sustained severe damage. Fortunately no person was injured.

Saga.—A train on the Karatsu line of the Kyushu Railway was overturned on the evening of Aug. 9th. Many houses in the prefecture collapsed, and many persons sustained injuries, the nature and extent of which the authorities are still investigating.

Kanazawa.—Heavy rain continued for a night and a day. All the rivers overflowed their banks. Much damage was sustained in the districts of Kawakita and Kajima. Traffic on the Hokoku Railway between Nanao and Tsubata was stopped. One person was killed and three were injured by the collapsing of a house.

Izuhara.—About three hundred houses were flooded, over seventy vessels were sunk. One person was drowned and nine are missing.

THE BOOKSHELF.

An Introduction to the History of Chinese Pictorial Art, by HERBERT A. GILES, M.A., LL.D., Professor of Chinese in the University of Cambridge. Shanghai, Messrs. Kelly and Walsh.

THIS is a book to be welcomed with the fullest pleasure. The author is among the greatest Chinese scholars of the world. His "Chinese Literature" and his "Chuang Tzu" are classics which have delighted thousands of students, and helped them to a knowledge which they would not otherwise have attained. One can be certain, therefore, that this latest volume is a model of scholarship and accuracy. It is not an appreciation of Chinese pictorial art from the author's point of view: it is exactly what its name represents, a history of the subject, though emphatic objection may be taken to Professor Giles too modest title "an introduction." So far from being a mere introduction one may safely predict that the volume will long remain without rival, for Mr. Giles' wide acquaintance with Chinese literature has enabled him to draw upon numerous sources inaccessible to a less profound scholar. He does not attempt to descant upon the merits or defects of the pictorial art of China. His unique purpose is to tell his readers something about Chinese artists and their lives, when they flourished, what were their specialties, and in what estimation they were held by their own countrymen. Thus the work is a compendium of Chinese views about Chinese pictorial art dating from the Han dynasty down to the close of the Ming. The present dynasty is excluded "chiefly for lack of materials." There are 15 illustrations, many of them full page. For the most part they are reproductions of pictures in the British Museum, but 4, particularly beautiful examples, are taken from the Kokka. Mr. Laurence Binyon, of the British Museum, adds explanatory notes to each of the full-page pictures, notes of which Mr. Giles justly says that they are "illuminating" and "entirely in keeping with its high reputation as an art critic." We apprehend that these notes will prove somewhat of a surprise to the millions of intelligent Europeans and Americans who know nothing of Chinese pictorial art and who, mistaking their own ignorance for a proof of the art's significance, look down upon it with supreme contempt. For example, referring to a picture by Ku Kai-chih, who flourished in the 4th and 5th centuries A.D., Mr. Binyon says:—"For beauty of sweeping yet sensitive line, few paintings in the world approach this. Yet charming touches of actual life prevent the art from being over-caligraphic." * * * Chinese art must have been flourishing for many centuries before work so mature as this could be produced." Again referring to a religious painting by Li Lung-mien (11th century), he writes:—"The reigning qualities of this art—serenity and grandeur expressed by means of a rhythm of fluid lines building up a majestic composition, apparent also in the calm and superhuman figures—denote a period of climax, similar to those from which Phidias and Raphael were produced." And discussing a landscape by Chao Ling-jiang, he says:—"The language was one of the few ages of the world which have the intellectual character we call 'modern.'" * * Not till the 10th century in Europe do we find anything like the landscape art of China in the Sung period. * The landscape art thus founded and continued by the Japanese in the 15th century must rank as the greatest school of landscape which the world has seen." It is indeed a pleasure to find that Europe is thus at length awaking to facts which to us in the Far East have long been familiar. We have, however, one astonished comment to make with reference to this welcome book. Mr. Giles commences his preface with these words:—"This is the first attempt which has been made so far, in any European language, to deal, even cursorily, with the history of Chinese pictorial art." And then he goes on to quote the wholly insignificant and sometimes scornful comments of writers like Paléologue, Lübke and Reinach, and to note that in the presently-to-be-published "History of Arts" by M. André Michael, the Mussulman, Chinese and Japanese arts are expressly excluded as though they did not deserve to be spoken of in the same breath with European art. Professor Giles unwillingly commits a great injustice here. He seems to be entirely unacquainted with the great work of the late Dr. W. Anderson on the Pictorial Art of Japan, where an admirable chapter, full of information and insight, is devoted to the story of China's art. Even in "The Oriental Series," where, in view of Dr. Anderson's well nigh exhaustive labours, only one chapter is given to pictorial art, Chinese art receives most appreciative notice. Many of the Chinese pictures in the British Museum were collected by Dr. Anderson, to whom indisputably belongs the credit of having introduced Europe to its first knowledge of Chinese pictorial art.

"List of Higher Metropolitan and Provincial Authorities of China."

Mr. S. F. Mayers has issued (Messrs. Kelly and Walsh) a new edition of this invaluable publication. It is brought up to date and one can immediately find in it the names, ranks, titles and records of all important Chinese officials. We have nothing to add to our former eulogies of Mr. Mayers' work. No one connected journalistically or otherwise with Chinese affairs can afford to be without it.

"An Anglo-Chinese Calendar."

We have received specimen pages of an Anglo-Chinese calendar compiled by Mr. Chas. Kliene of the Imperial Chinese Customs Service. The work covers a period of 250 years from 1751 to 2000 A.D. Speaking broadly it corresponds in plan with Bransen's Chronological Tables for Japan, but being printed in two colours and arranged with a special view to facilities of reference it will do even more usefully for China what Bransen has so excellently done for Japan. We need scarcely say that the want of a calendar of this kind extending over a series of years and really conveniently arranged has been very severely felt by all those who have anything to do with China. Mr. Chas. Kliene's volume runs into 500 pages, royal quarto, and is strongly bound in cloth with leather back. It is to be supplied at the very cheap rate of $12.50 per copy to those sending in their names to the author (Custom House, Hoihow, Kiangchow, Hainan, China) before October 1st. After that date it will be procurable only from the booksellers at a higher price. The edition is limited and it is therefore desirable that subscribers should apply without delay.

"Secret Court Memoirs."

The Grolier Society announces the issue of a work in 20 volumes called "Secret Court Memoirs." In its cheapest form the book will cost 13 guineas, but there will be an édition magnifique costing 250 guineas. The installment system is to be pursued. Thus a payment of a guinea down followed by 12 monthly payments of the same amount will secure the "green linen" form. The Memoirs cover a period of over 200 years, from Henry of Navarre to the Battle of Waterloo. Their compilers do not profess prudery. In fact it is impossible that anything like a true history of European Society in those days should be able to pass Mrs. Grundy's muster. Things are better covered up now, but how much better are they in reality? The story of the venture is thus told:—

A publisher, whose career ended so sadly that it is to-day painful for his friends to remember with what pride he himself would have regarded this magnificent issue, cherished throughout an active life the dream of making a sumptuous edition of the best Court Memoirs. He had no more thought of profit in connection with the project than had the late George Smith in connection with the project of his Dictionary of National Biography, which is supposed to have cost £60,000. The preparation of such a collection of memoirs was the more formidable a task because the researches which were needed in order to settle moot points of history had to be supplemented by a critical examination of portraits. For years the publisher, who brought his business, acumen and expert knowledge to bear upon this subject, devoted to it his spare time as well as his spare money; employing every day he could spare from his office in visiting the capitals of Europe, in every one of which his correspondents were reporting to him new discoveries in the shape of unpublished pictures. It is not too much to say that the directors of all the great art collections of the world, lent their cheerful collaboration to the huge task of sifting evidence for and against portraits of which the authenticity was not clearly established. In the meantime, etchings and mezzotint engravings of those pictures which had already passed the ordeal were being executed by artists of distinction. The cheap expedient of the "half-tone process" which yields the rough and ready engraving seen every week in the illustrated newspapers, was out of the question in the case of portraits of 'world-wide' celebrity. The illustrations included in the series of Secret Court Memoirs would, if removed from the volumes and mounted for framing, form in themselves a collection of which any connoisseur might be proud. The question of the type to be used for the pages was also the subject of study. When the designs had been finally approved, special steel dies were cut as carefully as if they were being prepared for the mounting of coins, and the type struck by these dies was set apart for the printing of the book. The translations, all of which had to be submitted to the few among French scholars who are thoroughly familiar with the periods of history in question, were at last ready for the printers. The paper also was subject to the most loving care. Special arrangements were made with the Insetsu Koku papermakers of Japan, and a special grade of paper set apart by centuries of precedent for Imperial rescripts was, as an exceptional favour, obtained for the purpose of printing the exquisite plates.

The History of Meiji Finance. ('Meiji Zaiseshi') or The Record of Count Matsukata's Finance. ('Matsukata Haku Zaisei Jiki;')

THIS long expected book has just been published. It deals with the story of Japanese finance during the 35 years of the Meiji era; deals with it so thoroughly that 15 volumes of about 1,000 pages each have been filled by the compilers. Some time ago, when Baron Shibusawa reached his sixtieth birthday a book was issued with a similar double title, namely "The History of Modern Business Development" or "The History of Baron Shibusawa's Sixty Years." It was felt that Japan's commercial progress during the Meiji era was indissolubly linked with the name of Baron Shibusawa, and so too it has been felt that when the annals of Meiji finance came to be compiled they must be regarded as the annals of Count Matsukata. An association was formed to carry out the latter task. It comprised such men as Messrs. Matsuno Shinzen, Soyeda Julchi, Yamaguchi Muneyoshi, Hayakawa Senkichiro, Barons Mitsui, Iwasaki and Shibusawa, Messrs. Soma Nagatane, Takahashi Shinkichi, Sonoda Kokichi, Sone Shizuo, and Matsukata Kojiro. The Chairman of the association was Mr. Sakatani, Vice-Minister of Finance, and he too undertook the compilation of the book as he had done in the case of the history of commercial development. Considerable expense had to be incurred, of course. It was met by the following subscriptions:—Mr. Yamamoto 3,000 yen; Mr. Soma 2,000; the Barons Iwasaki 1,000 each; Barons Mitsui and Shibusawa 1,000 each; Messrs. Kawasaki and Takahashi 1,000 each; Messrs. Kawakami and Nomoto 750 each; Messrs. Soyeda and Sato 500 each; and Mr. Minobe 300; making a total of 14,300 yen. The publishers are Messrs. Maruzen and Company and the price is 35 yen. The first volume opens with a general discussion of the subject, after which comes an account of the organs of finance and the finance law. In the second volume we find the laws relating to special finance, to the indemnity and to extraordinary war expenditures. Vol. III gives the financial laws applying to settled accounts, and the next four volumes relate to the various taxes and dues that go to make up the state's income. Then come two volumes devoted to the national debt, and the tenth volume relates to pensions and relief funds. Eleven and twelve deal with the coinage, and thirteen and fourteen relate to banks. The last volume contains an index with an appendix which gives much information about the financing of the Russo-Japanese war. We do not imagine that this remarkably exhaustive work will ever be translated into English, but the fact that it is in Japanese will not deter earnest students. Mr. Sakatani deserve the utmost credit and the gratitude of his country for compiling such a work. It is a veritable cyclopedia of the Empire's finance, and it will prove quite invaluable as a guide to a subject which we are all concerned to understand, but which has hitherto been more or less a sealed book.

THE BOYS' BRIGADE.

The excellent house and grounds at Koshiba, belonging to Mr. J. Walter, generously placed at the disposal of the Company, was the site of the First Annual Camp of the 1st Yokohama Company of the Boys' Brigade, from Friday, the 4th, to Monday the 7th, inst., inclusive. The members attending Camp paraded at 7 a.m. on Friday morning outside the Public Hall, with their koris, and by 7.30 the Advance Party was on its way to Koshiba with cook, kits and commissariat. The main body journeyed down in the afternoon by yacht. On arrival at Camp, the squads being told off to their several quarters, the bugle sounded for tea. The weather was unfavourable for a march before turning-in for the night and in consequence the usual "first night" excitement, together with determined onslaughts by mosquitos, resulted in somewhat broken sleep and before reveillesounded at 5.30 a.m., signs were evident that the Camp was awake. Camp Inspection at 6 o'clock was followed at 6.15 by the bugle sounding the "Fall In" for bathing parade. After biscuits were distributed the Company was marched off to the sea, where much fun was occasioned with a polo ball. When half a dozen boys are each keen on getting hold of the ball at the same time, ducking is inevitable.

After meals, members who were not on fatigue duty were free to amuse themselves as they pleased till the bugle sounded. The many delightfully pretty walks around the neighbourhood were taken advantage of and the grounds surrounding the house resounded with the joyous laughter of the Company at play.

On Saturday evening after tea was over an excellent Camp Concert was held, the programme being arranged by an enthusiastic private who was loyally supported by his comrades. A good deal of latent talent was discovered. "Lights Out" being sounded at 9.15, the Camp soon settled down into a profound sleep which was not disturbed till the authoritative notes of the Camp Bugler at 5.30 the next morning summoned the tired limbs to be unlocked.

Sunday broke with a threatening red sky but it was not till after our pre-breakfast swim that the rain fell. A severe storm accompanied by loud peals of thunder and drenching rain enveloped some half-dozen of the members who had ventured out after breakfast for a stroll with one of the officers. Fortunately the rain did not last long, the afternoon being delightfully fine. At 5 o'clock a Parade Service was held on the lawn, after which tea was served. Before retiring for the night, the Company marched to Kanazawa, returning to their supper of cocoa and biscuits with keen and appreciative appetites.

Monday was a perfect day. After breakfast kits were packed and forwarded to Yokohama, after which the Company paraded for an Excursion which had been arranged. Rations were distributed and carried in haversacks and partaken of in a sheltered glade some miles from the Camp. On arriving back about 4 in the afternoon a second swim was enjoyed and photographs taken. After tea we heard from the Bay the whistle of the steam launch which had arrived to take us back. The "Fall In" sounding, the Company lined up and marched down to the shore for embarkation. Yokohama was reached in good time and the members duly dismissed to their respective homes.

The 1st Annual Camp was voted by all who were present as a great success and tanned faces were sufficient indication of the open-air life which was enjoyed. The health of the Camp was excellent, no sick cases being reported, and the discipline fully up to standard.

DEATH OF MR. GODDARD.

We announce with deep regret the death of Mr. William Goddard, whose untimely removal will be mourned by a large circle of friends. Mr. Goddard, elder son of the late Mr. John Goddard, was born in Hirst in Sussex, England, thirty years ago and after being educated in Australia (at Sydney) came to Japan in 1889. He at once joined the firm of Messrs. Siber, Wolff & Co. and his connexion with them lasted till his death, which was due to kidney and heart complications.

The deceased gentleman was an enthusiastic sportsman. He was a member of the Committee of the Yokohama Amateur Rowing Club; he was an efficient football player; he had acted as linesman; he had stroked interport crews with lasting credit to himself. One of the prettiest sights at a Y.A.R.C. regatta was to see "Bill" Goddard get his crew moving on the gun. And all round he was a fine, gentle-souled man, whose many friends have been deeply shocked by his loss.

It seems that Mr. Goddard did not feel well on Thursday morning and therefore decided to stay at home. He was seen by Dr. Reidhaard but nothing serious had then developed. Later in the day, in the evening, he called for tea, which was given to him and when his brothers came home he was inanimate, death having probably taken place about 6 o'clock. Mr. Goddard's mother and sisters, who were at Zushi, have come to Yokohama, the community of which will extend to them its most respectful sympathy.

The funeral will take place from the house at 4 and from Christ Church about 4.15 p.m. to-day.

On Saturday afternoon the remains of Mr. W. Goddard were consigned to the grave in the presence of a very large number of mourners including most of the leading members of the Yokohama community. The coffin was taken at 4 p.m. from the residence, No. 38 Bluff, to Christ Church where a service was performed by Rev. W. P. G. Field in which the choir took part. The pall-bearers were the two brothers of the deceased gentleman Messrs. Henry & Herbert Goddard, Mr. J. Fardel, brother-in-law, and Mr. James Walter of the firm of Messrs. Siber, Wolff & Co., with the late Mr. Goddard had been long connected. Among the large company were representatives of the Clubs of which the deceased was a member the Yokohama Amateur Rowing Club and Yokohama Cricket and Athletic Club—the of which were half-masted. It may be added the Committee of the former Club postponed a polo match arranged for Friday evening of Mr. Goddard was to have been umpire.

Among the many beautiful tokens of sympathy and sorrow that were sent was a wreath from V. A. R. C., and we learn that the Comm will meet to-night (Monday) and formally register their sense of the loss they have sustained their sympathy with the relatives.

YACHTING.

The wind for the early part of the afternoon on Saturday was light and very variable, so luck in picking up a fluke, and judgment making the most of each shift of wind, largely. Later on a good sailing breeze on from the S. W., lasting for the rest of the afternoon.

The Cruising Class started at 1.45 to race unfinished on the 29th July. Wanderer, an absentee, as she is undergoing repairs to rudder. Kathleen was the first to cross the but was passed by the other three on the Harbour Entrance, where they hauled the wind with Surprise, Asagao and Nina. Surprise to windward, Nina to leeward, last named drew out in the lead, and rounded Lightship some distance ahead of Asagao, prise about the same distance behind the l and Kathleen bringing up the tail of the pr sion. Surprise held on to the starboard longer than the others before going about, a sudden backing of the wind gave her a by vantage, as Nina, going about for sur Honmoku, could only just point up a re tack for the position of Surprise. The pr had by this time rounded the Lightship, and some time it was curious to see how the pr boats were heading, no two of them seemed able to point up in the same direction; at time there was nearly three points difference between Mary and Maid Marion, both on the tack. Eventually the wind came up from S and improved to nearly a fresh breeze, for Mary, and Asagao at a big advantage in respective classes. These two rounded the marks first, and were never headed. Mary 23m. 10s. ahead of Maid Marion at the l hama buoy and the latter in turn got round quarters of a minute ahead of Kingfisher. latter was put out of the race by the break her gaff soon after. Starting at 2.15 p.m., the 21 Raters c waste so much time as the bigger boats light and baffling winds before the S.W. came up. It was a fairly level start, rounded the Tachibana mark first, closely ed by Aimce, with Edna and Winsome c Edna was carried past the buoy and t tack to make it. With the exception o they all stood in on port tack towards the water. Edna kept on starboard tack until sh very nearly weather the Lightship. W Aimce and Pete were all together at the ship. Pete then stood out and the other inshore towards Mandarin Bluff. A shift c was to the disadvantage of Pete, and the Boat was rounded by Aimee, Winsome, Edna, Pete and Sunbeam in the order named, with Chacho, Lily and Yugao some distance behind. Running back to the Quarantine ship under spinnakers the order was unchanged, but Aimee showed her speed off the wind by increasing her lead to the Harbour Entrance.

CRICKET.

Notwithstanding the beautiful weather, players were late in reaching the Y. C. & A. C. ground on Saturday, and it was nearly three o'clock ere enough men were present to make up a couple of teams: even then the assistance of ground-boys had to be freely drawn upon. The teams were captained by Mr. C. M. Duff and Mr. W. D. S. Edwards respectively, and though Duff won the toss he sent the other side in. By four o'clock they were all dismissed for 79, Foster (13), W. D. S. Edwards (20), R. G. Bell (not out 18) and L. H. Hudson (13) reaching double figures and the rest making 14 between them. Brady took 5 wickets at a cost of 33 runs, and Dr. Emerson captured the other 4 for 49. As a mark of respect for the late Mr. W. Goddard the game was suspended at 4 o'clock for half an hour, while the Club flag was flown at half-mast.

Resuming play, the Duff team's chances of winning seemed at first roseate, though they had only seven men to bat. But luck was against them and the match finished with the score at 17—a close thing. Scores:

The local foreign banks having decided to celebrate St. Lubbock's Day—a rather unusual occurrence of late years in Yokohama—enough were able to get away from office on Monday noon to make up seven aside teams for a cricket match. Dr. Emerson and Mr. E. W. Maitland captained the respective teams and the net going in first made 117 by five o'clock. The hour left to play Maitland's team managed to compile 101 before being dismissed. Scores:—

THE VERNACULAR PRESS OF SOUTH CHINA.

(FROM THE CANTON CORRESPONDENT OF THE "NORTH CHINA DAILY NEWS.")

Max O'Rell, in his bantering manner, used to say that readers were furiously eager to seize the morning and evening papers, but always flung them aside after a rapid glance over their contents with the sarcastic remark, "nothing in them again." Another Frenchman, more illustrious still, said "four hostile newspapers were more to be feared than a thousand bayonets." He affirmed in his day: "We fight for ideas and newspapers are our fortresses." On the other hand, a still more renowned German exclaimed: "We really gain nothing from such interests as occupy the newspapers." Amidst such conflicting judgments as to the value of the Press, we are thrown back on our own personal knowledge, and must decide for ourselves on such data as have come under our own observation. The native Press of China, at least of the South of China, has grown up within the last twenty years. We remember when editors were harassed and their offices confiscated, if they published anything less harmless, and more interesting than the Peking Gazette. It may be confessed that the Hongkong native press, whose roots struck deep in the island, but whose branches spread out over the Kwantung province, had much to do with the present vigour of the native newspapers here. When complaints were made to the Hongkong officials by the Canton mandarins, that government matters, hitherto so sacred, were handled with a rough irreverence, they got little comfort and less assistance. Freedom of the Press was the rule in the colonies of Great Britain; Hongkong was a colony, therefore the editors could not be coerced. The consequence was that the mandarins, seeing that they were helpless, submitted to the inevitable. After a time, when nothing serious happened, either to their revenues or to their harems, and those days they did not seriously care for very much beyond these two absorbing interests, they ceased to be so obviously anxious, and so a native Press developed not only in Hongkong but in the city of Canton, which today is no small industry, and no unimportant factor in the life of the great city. The native Press attempts to reach the ideal of what a newspaper should be, which is, we take it, to collect and then distribute reliable and valuable information which its readers value; and further to guide and foster public opinion, even though it may not always be able de novo to create it. A glance at a characteristic Chinese newspaper will show that this object is not forgotten by the native editor, and that sometimes he comes very near to realising it. A striking example of the influence exercised by the native Press is furnished in the present ferment over the boycott of American manufactures. The Canton Press has entered into the fray in a spirit of genuine enthusiasm, and has done much to foment the agitation. We are not now careful to pronounce an opinion on the wisdom of the Anti-American-Commodity League; still less are we inclined to forecast the fruits of the agitation. What is abundantly evident is that the native Press has from the first proved itself eager to foment the movement, and encourage the leaders. The decisions arrived at by the Committees at Tientsin, and Shanghai, and Amoy, and Singapore, have been published, commented on, and belauded here. The apparent unwillingness of the merchants at Wuchow to join hands with their fellow-countrymen, was discussed with such scorn that they were wishful to reconsider their position. Moreover, not only do the residents of the great cities enjoy the privilege of knowing what is transpiring in the other great cities of China, but inland towns and country villages now command the same advantages. The Canton papers are carried throughout the towns of this province, under the direction of a well-ordered news agency, by means of the steam-launches which ply the waterways of the south, so that everywhere it is easy to insure an approximate punctuality without much difficulty. Probably never before in the history of the world has it been found that a powerful Press has come into existence, commanding a large number of readers, and considerable facilities for a punctual distribution, within so brief a space of time. The history of the genesis and development of the vernacular Press in Germany, France, and England in the 17th Century will offer no parallel, for obvious reasons. One characteristic of the native Press cannot escape notice. The editors lash out on the corrupt government, and at particular officials, in a way that excites astonishment. The bitterness of the attack on Yuan Shih-kai, during the past fortnight, because he has ventured to lift a warning voice against the bitterness of the agitation of the boycott, has recently come under my notice. The Daily News of England does not search the dictionary to discover euphemistic diction whereby to describe the actions of Mr. Balfour, but its language is that of a guarded diplomacy, compared with what Chinese editors use when they denounce what they regard as unpatriotic. That such violent language is always effective we doubt. In fact doses of abuse are like doses of poison. It is true that much poison may be absorbed into the system with impunity, if the empiricist begins with little, he gradually increases the dose. So may a body of men absorb a considerable amount of abuse with indifference, after they have become accustomed to it. One of the greatest gains to China, which the vernacular Press has placed within her grasp, is a general knowledge of the history of the times. By this she has learnt what has already humbled her pride. She assimilates ideas by which she may correct her faults. She will be put into possession of ideals by which she may make good her limitations. The recent agitation over the torture of prisoners in order to extract evidence, would have been impossible without the native Press. The Canton Times published four leaders on the subject which were eagerly read all over the South of China. But perhaps the greatest gain of all will be the gradual birth of a new solidarity. Hitherto, not only is it true that "East is East and West is West," it has been equally true to the Chinese that "North is North and South is South." Language of contemptuous scorn is often used by either to describe the other. This animosity will die. A new consolidated China will rise which is an essential characteristic of a self-dependent and self-respecting nation, and to this result the native Press will have contributed much.

During April, May and June, the income of the post, telegraph and telephone offices throughout the Empire was yen 8,434,568.92. The income of the corresponding period last year was yen 6,818,005.26.

THE LAW COURT.

CRUEL TREATMENT.

Yang, the wife of Pao Kee-yang, a Chinese merchant residing at Yamate-dori, Kobe, recently brought a claim against her husband in the Kobe District Court for twenty thousand yen. According to the plaintiff's petition, her husband brought two concubines from Canton, and since then has used her cruelly, so that she could not live any longer with him. As however she could not obtain a divorce in accordance with Chinese customs, she wishes to live in a separate house, for which purpose she asks for the necessary allowance.

TWO TOKYO JOURNALS PUNISHED.

In the Tokyo District Court, the Miyako and Chuo were punished on Aug. 8th with a fine of yen 20 each. The charge was that both papers had published, without permission of the military and naval authorities, reports with regard to the movements of the armies in Saghalien and news as to the captured ships.

SHIPPING CASE.

On Aug. 7th, in the Kobe District Court, an interlocutory judgment was delivered in a case brought by Mr. Makino, owner of the steamer Ryoyo Maru, against the owner of the French steamer Breis Isel claiming yen 140,000. The Court cancelled the seizure of the French ship.

It may be remembered that the Breis Isel collided with the Ryoyo Maru in July in Moji Strait with the result that the latter sank. The owner of the Japanese vessel lodged a claim and seized the Breis Isel. The captain of the French vessel, however, contended that he had no direct responsibility for the claim of the plaintiff and asked the Court to release the steamer.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

A case of cholera was reported in Moji on Aug. 3rd.

A dead Russian was washed ashore on Aug. 5th off Kutushima, near Maidauru.

Prince and Princess Arisugawa arrived on Aug. 9th at Penang on their way home from Europe.

Two Russian prisoners at Nagoya were removed on Aug. 7th to the District Court on a charge of fraud.

A Seoul telegram says that seventeen Italian bluejackets arrived there on Aug. 7th. They are assigned to guard the Italian legation.

On Aug. 4th an explosion occurred in the cartridge factory of the Tokyo arsenal, with the result that two workmen were killed and three slightly injured.

A Shanghai telegram to the Kokumin says that the death of Mr. Chun Fai-Ting, Manager of the China Merchants Steam Navigation Co., was announced on Aug. 6.

K. Ashita, an accountant of the Shimonoseki Police Office, was arrested on Aug. 4th on a charge of having embezzled about one thousand yen belonging to the station.

Miss Mary Margaret Watson, daughter of Mr. E. B. Watson, whom many in Yokohama still remember, was married to Mr. W. G. Campbell at Beckenhams, Kent, on June 27.

Dr. Onaka, Director of the Sanitary Bureau, has been appointed to a similar post in the Saghalien Government in addition to his present duty. He left Tokyo on Aug. 6th.

On the evening of Aug. 3rd, the Russian prisoners in Kokura attacked their guards. One of the gendarmes was injured. The guards fired four shots and two of the prisoners sustained injuries.

We have received a copy of the half-yearly report of the Sumitomo Bank, as to which perhaps it will be sufficient to say that while on Dec. 31, 1895 its deposits stood at yen 882,791, its loans at yen 2,142,063, and its reserves at zero, on June 30, 1905 its deposits amounted to yen 26,454,495, its loans to yen 21,691,816 and its reserves to yen 2,500,000.

It was reported on Aug. 5th by the Japanese Consul in Lyons that business in raw silk is dead, and that prices remain steady. He believes that during the hot season, there will no active transactive.

Notification No. 440 of the Department of Communications announces the re-lighting of Fukuse Beacon. Fukuse Beacon lies southward of Hirato-shima, province of Hizen, Nagasaki Prefecture.

On the evening of Aug. 8th, a passenger train and a freight train collided at Tennoji station, Osaka. The locomotives of both trains and two passenger carriages were damaged and sixteen persons were injured.

Mr. Uchida, Japanese Consul-General in New York, wired on August 2nd to the Foreign Office that business in raw silk was small. Prices had advanced, making the quotation for Japanese silature No. 1, $4.10 to $4.20.

According to the Official Gazette, Mr. Doke, Councillor of the Bureau of Legislation, and Mr. K. Matsui, Councillor of the Foreign Office, have been appointed Councillors of the Supreme Prize Court, in addition to their present duties.

The death was announced on Aug. 9th of Viscount M. Oseki. The funeral will take place on Aug. 12th, the cortege leaving his residence, Komagome, Tokyo at 7 a.m. The late peer was ex-feudal lord of Kuroha, Shimotsuke province.

Two carriages on the Tokyo-Yokohama Electric Tramway collided at 2.30 p.m. on Aug. 4th at Haneda. The conductors and many passengers in both carriages were more or less injured. The accident arose through the negligence of the conductors.

On the evening of Aug. 8th, a girl (7) was run over by a car on the Yokohama Electric Railway at Onoye-cho, Sanchome, Yokohama, while trying to cross the line. She sustained severe injuries to her feet. The conductor of the car was removed to the Isezaki-cho police office.

The construction of the Band Stand in Hibiya Park, Tokyo, having been completed, the opening ceremonies took place at 5 p.m. on August 2nd. Mr. K. Nagai, a well-known musician, who has been trained in France, conducted the band of the Toyama Military College during the afternoon.

A dreadful crime is reported from the district of Toyotama, near Tokyo. The wife of H. Shimoda, a farmer, residing at Yodohashi-machi, was arrested on Aug. 5th on a charge of having killed forty infants, during a period of years. It appears that she adopted for a consideration, illegitimate children, which she at once proceeded to starve to death. She was removed on Aug. 6th to the Tokyo District Court. The same day, three men and ten women residing in the same district were arrested on a charge of having assisted the woman.

Mr. Y. Matsuoka, acting Japanese Consul in Shanghai, wired to the Foreign Office on Aug. 5th that Japanese cotton yarn was very quiet and showed a further dull tendency. Small demands for Indian cotton yarn came from the district of Suchong. There were no orders from North China for either Japanese or Indian yarn was 66,000 bales; that of Japanese was not ascertained. During the week ended Aug. 5th, 1,351 bales of Japanese yarn were imported and 1,453 bales exported. Cotton was quiet with slight fall in prices.

Captain Mirtl, Commander of the Austro-Hungarian man-of-war Kaiserin Elisabeth, has invited Austro-Hungarian residents to tiffin on the 18th inst. on board the ship to celebrate the 75th birthday of H. I. Majesty the Emperor of the Dual Empire. In the evening, as also on the preceding evening, the ship will be illuminated, and on the 18th inst., at 10 a.m. Mass will be read on board the ship. His Excellency M. d'Ambro, the staff of the Austro-Hungarian Legation and Consulate, and some high Japanese military and civil officials will be present on the occasion.

Five elephants created an extraordinary scene at the goods station of Batignolles the other day. They were being kept at the depot while quarters were being got ready for them, but managed to break loose from their stables. At this time of year the station dispatches enormous consignments of fruit, which the elephants scenting, once began to devour. Cherries, peaches, apricots, and strawberries disappeared by the handful at a prodigious rate. Some porters sought to stop the dessert, but the elephants, using their trunks like cudgels, simply flogged them away and went on eating until they were literally gorged with fruit. Then they went back to the stables of their own accord.

Steamers under construction at the Mitsui Shipbuilding Yard are as follows:—

	Tons.
Iki Maru	1,500	Sanyo Railway Co.
Tsushima Maru	1,500	"
Tsushima Maru	1,250	Osaka Shosen Kaisha
Tetsurei Maru	2,100	"
Toshin Maru	1,200	"
Bosan Maru	1,200	"

The construction of these ships will be complete this year. Beside, the shipbuilding yard received further instructions for the following steamers:—

	Tons.
Steamer, not yet named...	7,463
"	1,530
"	13,000	Toyo Kisen Kaisha
"	13,090	"

The terrible havoc caused in the Russian fleet by Japanese torpedoes, and the progress made in submarines, has raised among naval architects the problem of how to afford some protective armour. In one or two ships built in France the armoured bridge has been placed vertically downward to the bottom of the ship. Two German engineers, however, seizing upon the fact that submarine explosions decrease enormously in effect as the distance from the hull increases, have calculated that an armour plate two-thirds of an inch would resist a charge of 112 lb. of fulmi-cotton at a distance of 4 ft. 10 in. To secure this, they propose ships with a hull, with 24 in. of space between each, capable of being used as store compartments. The innermost wall of the three casings would be of steel plates 1 3/4 in. thick at the sides, and 1 1/4 in. thick at the bottom. The estimated increase in weight of the ship is from 550 to 700 tons.

AMERICAN TOPICS.

In the first six months of the current year 12 were filed with the building department of the city of New York plans for 6,378 projected buildings valued at $113,096,000, as compared with 4,094 buildings in the corresponding period of last year, valued at $63,611,868. So the value is concerned, the amount of construction work in the city of New York this year surpasses all previous high records.

The following table relating to July is suggestive:—

City.	Max. Tem.	Deaths.	Prostr.
New York	95	75	15
Philadelphia	95.8	10	4
Chicago	—	9	4
Baltimore	92.2	4	5
Washington	92	1	1
Boston	94	1	2
Pittsburg	87	8	—

An insurance table prepared by Walter Mann for the Chicago Record-Herald shows more than half the insurance of the country taken out in companies having their headquarters in New York City. Tables of bank clearings the last week in June gave the figure for New York City $1,407,148,113; for the rest of the country $1,407,148,113.

$901,818,102. A glance any day at the transactions in stocks and bonds, which cover every variety of industry, proves that Wall street is chief dealer for the United States.

An increase of postage on second-class mail matter may be urged at the coming session of Congress as a means of wiping out the deficit in the U.S. postal service. Representative Overstreet of Indiana, chairman of the House Committee on Postoffice and Post Roads, is strongly in favour of this plan. Overstreet when last in Washington was in consultation with Postmaster-General Cortelyou and his assistants. Mr. Cortelyou places high value on Mr. Overstreet's suggestions, and his advice was sought as to various administrative policies.

The Director of Forestry for the province of Ontario hopes to live long enough to see it derive a revenue from its vast forest reserves of fully $30,000,000 annually. The estimates assume that 40,000,000 acres of timber land may be utilized which would yield an average of 75 cents per acre. The crown forests of Prussia yield $1.45 per acre under an expensive system of management, and those of Saxony $4.50 per acre, and he sees no reason why Canadian skill and industry should not accomplish as much for Ontario.

Judge William J. Calhoun of Chicago has been appointed by President Roosevelt to be a Special Commissioner to Venezuela. The following announcement is made:—"The President has appointed W. J. Calhoun of Chicago special Commissioner to Venezuela. The President has been familiar with Mr. Calhoun's service on the report on Cuba, which he made for President McKinley's private information, and has also known of his work as Interstate Commerce Commissioner. He also has been designated as Special Commissioner to examine fully into the situation in Venezuela and report to the President exactly what the differences are between Venezuela and the United States, and also as to what has been arranged for other powers which in any way conflicts with the interests of the United States. He is also to examine into the complaint made by American citizens as to conduct of Venezuela and report to the President exactly as to what the equities are in these cases."

The Society for Improving the Condition of the Poor in New York has been impelled, it appears, by lack of patronage at the public baths, to institute a campaign of education in the hope of inducing the great congested throngs, minus cleanliness facilities to take advantage of the generous provisions offered gratis by city and private philanthropy. A handsome illustrated almanac has just been issued and is being distributed in the saloons and in the small shops of the vicinity showing the attractive interior of the new Milbank Memorial Bath. The free outside baths in Manhattan, it is stated, now have accommodations for twenty thousand a day. The difficulty, it is claimed by those who have had broad experience in public bath administration, lies in the fact that the bath privileges are provided free of charge. The ignorant poor have only contempt for what is offered them free of charge, and an important principle in scientific charity is involved in the pauperizing plan of providing even so essential a thing as opportunity for cleanliness, free of cost.—Boston Transcript.

Regarding the accounts in the daily press of the recent fast train runs between New York and Chicago, The American Machinist makes the following comment: "We note that one daily paper has a prominent heading which reads, 'Faster Than the Wind,' and it emphasizes the fact that one of these trains travelled over the surface of the earth faster than the wind which was accompanying a certain storm, so that the train outran the wind. It seems curious that any one should attach importance to a circumstance such as this. By reference to a weather report, one can readily perceive, if he does not otherwise become aware of the fact, that the saying 'the speed of the wind' means nothing; that the wind may blow at any rate of speed, varying from one mile an hour to about a hundred per hour, and that, therefore, the fact that a train runs faster than the wind is wonderful or not, depending altogether upon how fast the wind is moving. A very slow train often runs faster than the wind." The writer might have added that the wind blows in different directions in different parts of a storm, so that a train, in passing through one, travels part of the way with the wind and part of the way against it.

The University of Chicago shows the smallest gain of students' attendance in the year just closed of any in the history of the college, with the exception of two years ago, when the registration sheets showed only thirteen names more than those of the preceding year. The figures given out on July 10th indicate a total registration of 4,598 for the year ended July 1st, a gain of only eighteen over last year. These figures include summer quarter students, consisting largely of women, yet in spite of this 190 more men than women have been in attendance at the Midway school for the last twelve months. The total registration for thirteen years of the institution's history is about 36,000 of which only 8½ per cent. have stayed to graduate. The faculty now numbers 504, which gives one instructor for every nine students. Members of governing bodies of the university explain that the sudden drop in the percentage of increase in attendance is due to the natural reaction that almost always follows an abnormal increase such as came in 1903-04 and to the cry of tainted money.

Streams of immigrants continue to pour into New York through Ellis Island, breaking all previous records. More than 72,000 immigrants landed at Ellis Island since June 1, and the official estimates up to the end of the month is 84,085, as against 51,731 in June of last year, an even larger proportionate increase than in May, 1904. The high water mark in immigration is usually reached in May. The census office approximates the total immigration for this fiscal year at 1,061,659, which indicates a record-breaker, the high water mark being 857,046 for the year ending June 30, 1903. For the fiscal year of 1904 the figures were 812,870. There has been little change in the general character of the immigrants in the fiscal year about to close. Lithuanians and Bohemians have been rushing here, mainly to work in the coal mines; Poles and Russians come and scatter throughout the country, many settling in sweatshops; Italians crowd in to do manual labour. Swedes and Greeks find their way to the northwest. There are fewer Germans than of former years, and Ireland seems to have been pretty thoroughly drained. More than 900 of the would-be immigrants have been rejected so far this month, 460 last month.

Willet M. Hays, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, has been placed in charge of the Bureau of Statistics of the department, with instructions to make a thorough investigation of the conditions therein that permitted the cotton-report scandal. Professor Hays is one of the foremost scientific agriculturists of the United States. The investigations and attainments of Professor Hays in plant breeding have benefited agriculturists all over the Union, and he stands with two or three men at the head of that branch in the United States. The attention of scientists throughout the world has been attracted to Professor Hays' experiments at St. Anthony Park station, Minnesota, where he originated and introduced two special varieties of wheat. Hundreds of thousands of acres in Minnesota are planted with the new varieties, and one of the latter shows an average yield of 18 per cent. above the variety displaced. Professor Hays' statistical methods of recording facts connected with the breeding of plants and animals are now generally used throughout this country and in foreign lands.

Mr. Samuel Spencer, president of the Southern Railway Company, in an address delivered before the Southern Hardware Jobbers at Hot Springs, Va., on June 9, used these figures, showing the growth of the south. Speaking of railways in the south, he pointed out that the mileage in 1895 was 21,000; their mileage in 1905 is (approximately) 31,000; the number of locomotives in 1895 was 3,200; the number of locomotives in 1905 is (approximately) 5,000; the number of freight cars in 1895 was 96,000; the number of freight cars in 1905 is (approximately) 190,000. The further statement was made by Mr. Spencer that this expansion, great as it has been, was still comparatively in its infancy, for all were looking after new fields for development, which meant greater wealth and influence for the south in all lines. Apropos of this the Chattanooga Trader says: "There are vast deposits of minerals in many portions of the south that are as yet untouched, there are thousands of acres of virgin forests awaiting railroads to get their products into markets, with farming lands that will accommodate millions of settlers, all awaiting railroad development, and the growing tendency that has been apparent among certain classes of politicians to make attacks on railroads as their chief stock in trade should not find encouragement in any quarter in the south."

That an alliance between the United States, Great Britain and Japan is not unlikely to be developed in the near future is the opinion expressed by the Washington Post. The Post refers to this as "a great and exciting issue," and says: "In its self-evident greatness it will, if or when it comes, dwarf all other questions of foreign or domestic policy. In its capacity to produce excitement it will have no equal. If any suggestion as to national policy could be depended upon to excite, to startle, not to say shock, the people of this country, it would be the proposition, seriously pressed, of such a departure from the counsels of Washington as that. To the contention that our unfortunate, our deplorable departure from traditions and precedents in acquiring sovereignty over the Philippine islands and their 8,000,000 of people necessitates this departure, as one false step calls for another, the people may not have a satisfactory answer, for they see that in the event of war with Japan our retention of the Philippines would be extremely difficult, if not quite impossible. But no argument would reconcile this nation to any foreign alliance. The people, not only the 'plain people,' but the other kinds, with few exceptions, would make any administration or party extremely uncomfortable if it should attempt to consummate such an international compact. Still we think the issue is coming—is well on its way, and will arrive before many months shall have passed."

"The Lewis and Clark Exposition at Portland Ore., calls especial attention to the magnificent empire which the United States has on the border of the Pacific. California, Oregon and Washington, the states fronting on the great western ocean, have an area of 324,000 square miles (as great as that of the thirteen states which founded the United States government), and had a population of 2,417,000 in 1900, which has probably grown to 3,000,000 by 1905," says Leslie's Weekly. "And this is much less than half of the entire region west of the Rocky mountain divide, which is classed as the Pacific slope. The United States is the world's only white power of any consequence which fronts on the Pacific, for England's few hundred miles of contact with it in British Columbia do not count, compared with our 3,000 miles from the Mexican line to Washington's northerly boundary and along the Alaskan coast. In the great activities of the big western ocean, which will one day immensely exceed those of the Atlantic in 1905, and which will be greatly increased when the Panama canal opens, the United States will be the chief gainer. The 800,000,000 of Asiatics, half of the population of the entire world at this moment, will, when they wake up after the Russian-Japanese war, contribute to the world's commerce in a degree undreamed of now. The day when the Pacific shall be transformed into an American lake will come, even earlier than Seward's prophetic vision grasped."

Carlisle D. Graham of Niagara Falls, and William J. Glover Jr. of Baltimore, successfully swam the lower rapids of the Niagara from the American side of the whirl-pool to Lewiston on July 17th. The distance of four miles was covered in twenty-six minutes by Glover. The start was made at 4.02 p.m. from Flatrock which is on the American side. The swimmers did not venture in the upper rapids where Captain Webb lost his life. Both men wore life belts and inflated rubber rings around their necks. From the starting Glover took the lead. He entered the rapids a minute ahead of Graham. Until the Devil's Hole was reached the swift current and roaring rapids had the swimmers in their grasp. At that point a swirling eddy caught Glover and he was down nearly two minutes. His lifebelt saved him. Graham by this time had gained on Glover and when the two men reached the end of the rapids just above the suspension bridge at Lewiston there was but a little distance between them. Swimming in the swift, smooth current was hard for Graham, but evidently easy for Glover. At 4.28 o'clock Glover was pulled up on the dock at Lewiston. He was dressed, and about fifteen minutes later telling his story. Graham was taken to a hotel in a wagon and did not leave his bed until late in the afternoon. Neither of the men was injured. Graham had swum the lower rapids twice before. He is about 55 years of age, while Glover is 35 years old.

The inevitable has happened, says the Pittsburg Gazette. Annually for the past dozen or more years California becomes eruptive at some point on the map of the United States, and treats her sister states to an exhibition of all-round, up-in-the-air, blown-in-the-glass advertising that is simply the most insistent and artistic that ever happened. The season of annual gathering of various kinds always finds California on the spot. This time it is the Christian Endeavour Convention at Baltimore. Los Angeles wants the next international meet of this big body of young religionists, and sets about obtaining it in California's characteristic way. If Hackensack, N. J., or Saginaw, Mich., wanted that convention, the representatives of those towns would modestly declare that they possessed a few inducements for the delegates to camp with them. Not so with California. She is telling the people down in Baltimore this week so loud that the bronze figure on the dome of the Capitol at Washington can hear every word of it, that she has the only climate, the only fruit farms, the only wheat fields, the only pretty girls and the only ocean on the top of this whirling ball. And the beauty of all this is that California believes every word of it. Long habit of repeating this story has not only become fixed but has influenced the mental faculties until people out there lay off work for long stretches at a time to invent new virtues to ascribe to their State. From the time you strike the Rocky Mountains until you slide into the dust beds of the Mariposa valley the train conductors and the porters sing one song. It is the same song that California is singing over in Baltimore this week. These are not comments of derision. They are meant to point a moral and adorn a tale. If you want a thing, go after it. If you are not imbued with state pride, watch California. You will be instructed how to make a bluff in more different kinds of a way than you ever imagined existed.

A writer in the London Daily Mail in the issue of June 16, writes an interesting article entitled "The Tragedy of the English Watch Trade." In this article it is said that American watchmakers began such a campaign in dumping their product in England that the total extinction of the watch-making industry in that country is threatened. The Mail explains:—The American combine of watchmakers can fix practically what price it likes in its own country, for it is protected against foreign competition there by an elaborate series of customs duties ranging from 35 to 65 per cent. In England there is no import duty. The American makers have adopted a plan of systematically dumping a percentage of their stock on the English market at a price about two-thirds what they ask in America. Thus the works of a watch sold in America for 15s. 5d. are sold here at 10s. The makers reckon to sell 25 per cent. of their output at the reduced prices in our markets. This means that for every four sets of works of that kind sold by them they receive 56s. 6d., while the English maker who wishes to compete must sell the whole at 10s. each, or 40s. for the four. This systematic dumping is so simple and so safe that its final outcome must seem to the men who devised it a matter of mathematical certainty. When they have succeeded in stamping out the English trade—if they do succeed—they can run prices up again as they will, and can make us pay for our present cheapness. From the American makers' point of view there is only one drawback in this arrangement. Their watches are being sold at so low a price here that it pays buyers to secure stocks of them, send them back to America, and resell to the trade there at less prices than the regular American rates. This can be done safely if the stocks are to be had, for the English price is so much less as to ensure a satisfactory margin of profit on the transaction. Of course, being American made, the goods would pay no duty when carried back there."

LITERARY GOSSIP.

Once again the sales of "Printers' Pie" have been so excellent, that another sum of £1,000 has been raised for the Printers' Pension, Almshouse, and Orphan Asylum Corporation. We are now bidden to expect "Printers' Pie" as an annual feast. It will be welcome.

Mr. T. Fisher Unwin is including in his Colonial Library a volume entitled "The Upton Letters." The initials "T. B." which the author has adopted are said to veil the identity of a very well-known school-master. The letters purport to have been written by a master at a public school in England to a friend at Madeira, and returned after the latter's death. Their value lies in the way they tell the story of the life and activities of a great school, the relations between pupils and masters, the heartburning between rivals, and the thousand and one topics that spring from study and the tutorial life. Inevitably there is criticism, and it is this perhaps, that will suggest to the shrewd reader that the author adopted this appetising form of correspondence as the best vehicle for working off his views.

On the subject of what girls read, a High School mistress has given the Literary World the results of a vote taken among the four top forms of a typical girls' public school. She thinks that the following are the chief interests that girls look for in the books they read:—(1) Tears; a girl has this advantage over her brother—she lacks interest in gore; (2) adventure; (3) school or college interest; (4) lovemaking of a very unromantic kind, but with a weepiness somewhere. She can put up with humour, but she rather distrusts wit. Though the library has been flooded with American books she prefers the home production; probably the unfamiliar setting is the drawback. This lady adds that "all girls," even very dull ones, like Shakespeare, and most read him for pleasure, "apart from the plays read in school." But "hardly any school-girl can be got to like Keats," and, further, "none read poetry of their own accord." This does not seem to agree with the statement about the liking for Shakespeare; but perhaps the writer agrees with Mr. Bernard Shaw, and does not count Shakespeare among the poets. At any rate, there is no doubt that the taste for poetry among the rising generation is very little developed. Our girls care for poetry now no more than their brothers at school and college. Perhaps they are too busy with hockey and cricket.

Mr. Heinemann is about to publish a new novel, entitled "The Fool Errant," by Mr. Maurice Hewlett. The action of the story passes in Italy at the beginning of the 18th century.

Mr. Unwin will shortly publish a volume containing a translation by Dr. E. J. Dillon of the Book of Job, according to the original text, as restored by Professor Bickell, of Vienna. The rediscovery by Professor Bickell of the laws of Hebrew metre and of the text of the old Greek version has rendered plain many points hitherto obscure, and has shown that many unintelligible passages are later interpolations into the primitive text.

I am told (writes the London correspondent of the Birmingham Post) that arrangements have been completed for the printing, for very private circulation only, of the journal which Queen Alexandra kept during her recent somewhat prolonged Mediterranean cruise. The greater interest attaches to this because Her Majesty's journal will be supplemented, it is understood, by additions from the King, Princess Victoria, Princess Charles of Denmark, and other prominent personages who either participated or were met in the course of the journey. Only a limited number of copies will be printed, and these purely for purposes of presentation to the intimates of the Family.

Mommsen, after Rancke perhaps the greatest of modern German historians, left behind him, on his death, a superb library, which has just found a permanent resting-place as eminently worthy as that bequeathed by the late Lord Acton, which in its new home at Cambridge, will benefit students for all time to come. Mommsen's library was purchased by a lady who, however, stipulates that her identity shall not be revealed. But she has handed the library as a free gift to Bonn University. Without this philanthropic lady's interposition, the great library must have been dispersed in the auction rooms.

Henceforward even the commemoration table cannot be accepted as conclusive evidence of the fact which it records. The discovery has just been made that there are two houses in Paris marked with tablets relating that "in this house Moliere was born." Still worse, they introduce confusion as to the date of that event, one of them stating it to have taken place in 1620 and the other in 1622. One of these houses is in the Rue du Post Neuf, and the other at a corner of the Rue St. Honore and Sauval. Moliere seems to have had uncommon ill-luck with his dates. It is not long since two houses in the Rue Richelieu claimed to have been that in which he died, and the dispute was only settled after difficult negotiation. There is a dramatic nemesis about the idea of the Father of French comedy himself becoming a comedy of errors.

Mrs. Meynell, who presided over the Women Writers' dinner at the Criterion Restaurant recently, struck exactly the right note in the speech she made from the chair, says the Daily Chronicle. She spoke to Mrs. Fawcett, to Miss Helen Mathers, to Mrs. Thackeray Ritchie, Mrs. Craigie, Miss Netta Syrett, Miss Violet Hunt, and nearly 300 other literary workers in this nervous, vital, twentieth century—and she spoke of the elder sisters who wrote in the dainty, placid eighteenth century. Her allusions to Fanny Burney, Mrs. Inchbald, Lady Mary Wortley Montague, and many another who "would have come to this dinner as to a frolic," were pointed, humorous, and touched with that literary sense which is peculiarly her own; and the distinction she made between the vivacity of the eighteenth century woman and the vitality of her twentieth century descendant set everyone thinking when she concluded. Other speakers were Mrs. Archibald Little, who managed to be interesting about China; and Mrs. Tynan Hinkson, who assured everybody that the adaptability of women was proved by their readiness in altering their face to conform to any type, whether that of the Rossetti woman of yesterday or of the athletic girl of to-day. And besides the official speeches there was a pleasant general conversation between which sent a warble along the seven tables that never became a buzz for lack of manly tones to deepen it. Perhaps, it is this characteristic that emphasises the sex of the Women Writers' dinner more than anything else about it.

A new Balzac story is told by the Gazette. The novelist, it appears, flattered himself upon his skill in reading character, from handwriting, and the story is of a test applied to his skill. A lady brought him an extract from the exercise book of a 12-year-old schoolboy, and asked for an opinion as to the youngster's character and prospects. Balzac inquired whether the child was her own. Answered in the negative, he examined the exercise carefully and delivered his judgment. "Madame," he said, "this child is thick-headed and frivolous. He will never come to any good. If he were my child, I would take him from school and put him to the plough." And then it had to be broken gently to the graphologist that the exercise on which he had pronounced so severely was one of his own which had been discovered hidden away between the leaves of an old lesson-book.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"YOKOHAMA YARNS."

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I was on the point of writing a few words upon the above subject when your correspondent's letter signed "1866" appeared in to-day's issue, which leaves me little more to say, except that I am sure every rightly thinking person will fully concur in the sentiments therein expressed, as well as in your review of the book.

Although I cannot claim to have known the foreign communities of Yokohama and Kobe as long as your correspondent, I have been here long enough to detect many of their follies and weaknesses, and have even made written comments thereon (for private circulation only); but I can safely say that such cases as have been presented to the public in Yokohama Yarns do not fairly represent any section of those communities, but have been evolved from the writer's grossly distorted imagination. To take isolated and, happily, infrequent cases of tragedy and crime, and present them to the public as typical, is a dirty and discreditable piece of work, and as wholly inexcusable and unjustifiable as is the adoption of thinly disguised well-known names in which to clothe the characters depicted.

Evidently the author, of whichever sex, and whoever he, or she, may be, has taken for model the writer of the China Coast Tales; but lurid though some of these are, they bear from first to last, evidences of a degree of powerful descriptive talent to which the writer of Yokohama Yarns can never hope to attain, judging from the specimens offered us in the First Series, which, it is devoutly to be hoped, will also be the Last.

THE BATTLE OF THE JAPAN SEA.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—As you have concerned yourself so much as to whether the original despatch of the Daily Telegraph relating to the naval battle of the Japan Sea was genuine and as you have expressed such an amount of interest in the possible danger I may incur in representing the Tokyo correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, I think you will be pleased to learn that I have absolutely satisfied myself that the original despatch on which you comment was written by one of the many eye-witnesses of the engagement.

Yours truly,
Yokohama, 4th August, 1905. R. MASUJIMA.

(It will be observed that "our correspondent with the Japanese Fleet" how now become "one of the many eye-witnesses of the battle." The perplexity increases. If the Daily Telegraph really had a "correspondent with the Fleet," why not say so at once? Why all this beating about the bush? And whence did "many eye-witnesses" observe the battle?—ED. J. M.)

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION
ARMY WORK.

Early in the spring the Association was commissioned by the authorities to open work at Liaoyang and Port Arthur. However, the time necessary to find and put suitable men on the field and the greater difficulty experienced in the securing of suitable buildings caused some delay. The work at both points is at present well under way, having been properly manned and, by kindness of the authorities, suitably housed.

LIAOYANG.—The Association in Liaoyang was opened early in June. The first Association representatives to visit this point were Messrs. J. E. Ochiai and R. S. Miller, who spent a few days here early in November 1904, at which time they presented the plan of work to the authorities. The next visit was by Mr. Kawasumi on the occasion of his three tours following the battles of Liaoyang and Mukden. Other representatives visited Liaoyang from time to time with the result that the authorities have since the beginning of this present year, eagerly awaited the expected opening of an Association.

The officials in charge have granted most generous aid. A well-located building was set apart by them for the Association and thoroughly repaired, including papering of the walls. They provided also full outfit of necessary furniture, as well as articles for the private use of the secretaries. The building assigned is under the shadow of the great pagoda. 400 soldiers and officers crowded the building on the opening night. The Hon. S. Ebara was present, making the opening address. Secretary Otsuka is in charge of Liaoyang, having associated with him at present Messrs. Masutomi and Miyake. Mr. Miyake plays the Satsuma Biwa, the violin, mandolin and guitar, all of which instruments furnish a part of his outfit. He is able thus to add much to the attractiveness of the rooms. Rev. Hori of Maebashi is attached to Liaoyang for three months as travelling secretary, he having permission to make tours in every direction from Liaoyang as a centre. He will visit hospitals and outlying points where troops are stationed, giving a series of addresses, conducting meetings and administering comforts.

PORT ARTHUR.—At Port Arthur the authorities have given the Association the use of the Greek Church building in the old city. The injuries resulting from shot and shell have been fully repaired, the authorities providing the materials and the Association the labour. Among the labourers employed were carpenters, painters, glaziers and tinners. The church is well located and adapted to the use of the Association. The authorities have at their own suggestion kindly provided the Association with an ample supply of furniture, including rattan chairs, settees, couches and a piano. The work at Port Arthur is both for soldiers and sailors and is open to men of all branches of the service found in Port Arthur.

NEWCHATUNG.—The following extract from a letter, written by one of the secretaries at Newchatung, is significant as showing the increasing interest at that point. "The chief men in command seem almost to be vying with one another in showing us friendliness. Col.—is having the great dirty ceiling of the building papered at a cost of nearly yen 100; Major K. is having a well dug right beside our building, which is to be partly for our use; Major H. has been to see us and sends to borrow books. I travel to the camp daily with Col.—(he is now commandant) going out on his launch at 8 a.m., and have many a pleasant chat with him. The friendliness of the chiefs seems to react right through all the ranks. The men are increasingly respectful and there is rarely any rudeness or roughness in the rooms. As to the constant members of the Bible class, I can fairly see them growing in grace and knowledge. One has been baptized and another has asked for baptism. I am in the hospital twice a week and have great freedom. The Sunday afternoon meetings in the rooms have been simply a joy. The hot weather affects the men, many of them falling asleep in the building over the papers and books. Fujii holds evening meetings out of doors for music, fencing and his talks to the men."

EIRYO.—Upon earnest solicitation of the authorities, the Association has opened work at the important centre of Eiryo, 120 miles north of Hoojo. Secretaries Hirayama and Kawakami, formerly attached to Hoojo, proceeded in the middle of June with supplies for that point. The authorities kindly provided them three great Chinese carts with mules and drivers for their eight days' journey overland. Eiryo being far more destitute of any comforts and conveniences than any other point occupied by the Association, the work will be proportionately deeply appreciated by the soldiers. There being no suitable building at this point, the secretaries have taken an Association tent in which the work is conducted. The following from one of Secretary Hirayama's interesting letters will give a vivid idea of the conditions: "It was not until several days after our tent was ready for use that we got some wood for fuel, and not until after a week that we got hold of charcoal from a village ten miles away. In the midst of these difficulties we have persevered and conquered. But it took us nearly two weeks to finish all needful preparations for the opening of our tent. The tent has been opened since June 25th and the visitors average 300 daily. On fair Sundays they go up to the 500 or 600 mark. The features of our work are nearly similar to those of other points. There is a table for reading, five daily newspapers, a table for reading magazines and for looking at picture books, another for games and music-box, another for letter-writing, with all writing materials supplied, and another for tea-drinking. All tables are provided with simple but suitable benches. Clippers and razors are constantly needed from morning to even at one corner of the tent. We just started a bathing accommodation free to all soldiers, which is very much appreciated by them. We hold a preaching service on every Sunday afternoon, which is well attended and listened to by 50, 100; two song-services weekly, a general practical talk weekly, a social tea with games weekly, and special meetings occasionally. I think that you can easily see how busily two of us are engaged here, yes, busily but happy at work. Here are some expressions of appreciation of our work uttered by the soldiers not directly to the secretaries, but overheard by them: "How I feel refreshed in here!" "This is a good place to spend the whole holiday. Let us bring lunch with us when we come next time." "I never saw anything like this. A wonderful enterprise! I will write home about this." "I have not seen such kind deeds."

SPECIAL TOURS.—The tours of the Hon. S. Ebara and K. Yamamoto, Esq., and Bishop M. C. Harris and Rev. Kihara, were carried out as planned, these gentlemen meeting with heartiest welcome everywhere. Mr. Kihara comes as a well-known and representative statesman, and his deep interest in the soldiers, his hearty wholesome addresses of advice and encouragement were received with gratitude. At four different points he and Mr. Yamamoto addressed five public meetings, besides gatherings of officers. At these five meetings there was a total attendance of over 2,000 men. Bishop Harris coming as a representative of the Association and being welcomed also as a guest of the Emperor, was received with deep respect. His addresses were listened to at times with applause and at times with tears. Bishop Harris' addresses on the providence of God in this present war and on Japan's great opportunity and responsibility, brought to officers and men not only great inspiration, but sobering thoughts in regard to their duties for the future. His embodiment and expression of the spirit of Christianity brought many among both officers and men to him to personally confess their deep interest in the gospel he represented. Both Bishop Harris and Mr. Ebara were granted interviews with the generals in charge at the various points and were accorded a hearty reception by Field Marshal Oyama. The visits of such men as these and of Dr. De Forest, earlier, have been described by many men as oases in their lives.

ADMINISTRATION.—After ten months of unbroken service in Manchuria, Mr. Hibbard returned to Japan the first of July and will for the present be associated with Secretary Yamamoto in administration at the Tokyo headquarters. The Rev. J. G. Dunlop is continuing his valuable services with the Association in the camp at Newchatung. Secretary Otsuka, in charge at Liaoyang, has also been appointed Field Secretary, representing the Army Committee in supervision of the entire work in Manchuria. Mr. Gleason has been associated with him in general administration and has proceeded with his family to Yingkow to remain so long as conditions at the front may demand.

LAUNCH OF THE "KATORI."

Prince and Princess Arisugawa of Japan, with the members of their suite, and Captain Ernest Troubridge, R.N., specially attached, left York House, St. James's Palace, on Monday, July 3rd, for Barrow-in-Furness, where the Princess was to launch the new Japanese battleship Katori from the yard of Messrs. Vickers, Sons, and Maxim. Their Imperial Highnesses travelled from St. Pancras by a special train which left at 11 50 A.M. Colonel T. E. Vickers, C.B., met the Royal party on the platform and accompanied them on the special corridor train, which throughout made good time. Some 170 guests, at the invitation of the firm, journeyed down, including nearly all the leading representatives of the Japanese colony in London. The Prince and Princess, with their suite, stayed the night at Furness Abbey, in the hotel that adjoins the picturesque ruins and grounds of Furness Abbey. Most of the other Japanese present were accommodated at Grange-over-Sands, whilst others of the party passed the night either at Ulverston or Lakeside on Lake Windermere.

A special train, whose locomotive was decked with British and Japanese flags, brought the Prince and Princess and their suite from Furness Abbey to Barrow on the morning of July 4th. Barrow itself was making general holiday, and the whole populace was either out in the streets, which were gay with bunting, or were assembled in the yard of the Naval Construction Works. The day was perfect, a bright, hot sun from a clear blue sky being tempered by a pleasant breeze. Whatever weather the Katori may subsequently encounter in her career, the day of her launch was favoured with ideal British summer conditions. At the entrance to the works the Imperial party was met by the Mayor and Corporation of Barrow, who presented a suitable address, to which the Prince made a brief reply. The directors of Messrs. Vickers, Sons, and Maxim were then presented to them, before Prince and Princess Arisugawa proceeded to the launching platform through the narrow pathway that was left through the thousands in the yard. A hearty reception was accorded them all along to the launching stage. On their arrival, the Imperial Japanese flag—the golden Kiku on a white ground with a red border—took the place of the Japanese naval flag that had previously been flying on the flagstaff at the right of the platform. The cameras were busy, a bugler calling the throng on the launching platform to attention. The photograph produced turned out to be excellent, the conditions for such work being favourable. Labour for the day was suspended in the yard, and the men, except those engaged in the actual work necessitated by the launch, swelled the crowds within the gates, whilst many thousand others watched the proceedings from Walney Island. On the platform into which the huge ram of the Katori projected, the Prince and Princess were supported by a large and distinguished company, which included Princess Ichijo and daughter, Viscount Hayashi, M. S. Akizuki (Japanese Minister at Stockholm), the suite of their Imperial Highnesses, Capt. E. C. Troubridge, C.M.G., Capt. M. Kaburaki, (Naval Attaché), Col. Utsonomiya (Military Attaché), Col. Inagaki (Military Attaché), Count Matsudaira, Mrs. C. Koike, Consul-General and Mrs. Arakawa, Mr. G. Ukita, Mr. M. Kameyama, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Vickers, Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Vickers, Capt. M. Tanaka, I.J.N., Capt. M. Asaka, I.J.N., Count Hirokawa, Count Yanagisawa, Prof. M. Ogawa, Prof. J. Takakusu, Prof. T. Tomeyeda, Mr. James McKechnie (Vickers), and many others.

The launch was timed for 11.20, when the tide was highest, and shortly before the men were busy clearing away the last of the supports, until the huge vessel was borne in the upright position only by the launching cradle that extended from the bows, for a third perhaps of her length. The ways were all clear at the exact moment, and it was only a few seconds after 11.20 that Princess Arisugawa pressed the lever that released the huge ship. A second's pause and the Katori started down the ways, and in 30 seconds her bow took the final dip as the vessel left the last of her land support and was entirely waterborne. Cables stretched on either side gradually brought the vessel up from their weight and drag. As the great ship began to move the Princess had released the traditional bottle of champagne, which was swathed in the Japanese colours. A mechanical contrivance also opened the balloon that was suspended over the bows when about a third of the distance of the ways had been traversed. From it some 80 doves were released, as well as the Japanese traditional gold and silver paper. It is needless to remark that cheers were loudly given, intermingled with shouts of "Banzai," directly the vessel started on her course. When in the water the Katori was taken in tow by the tugs, and towed past the launching slip where a fine view was obtained of her grand proportions. She was taken round to the basin where the further stages of her construction, armament, and equipment, phases that will occupy another twelve months, will be taken in hand.

Luncheon was served to a company of some 300 guests shortly after in a marquee arrangement in the moulding room, the red and white national colours of Japan being used for interior decorations. Col. T. E. Vickers, C.B., chairman of the company, who presided, gave the toasts of "the King," "the Emperor of Japan," and "the Health of Prince and Princess Arisugawa," asking the Princess at the same time to accept a souvenir of the occasion, which took the form of a diamond pendant. The Prince, in his reply, said:—

"On behalf of Princess Arisugawa and myself I thank you most sincerely for the cordial welcome extended to us and for the assistance given her in successfully performing this important ceremony of launching the Katori. To the Princess it is a source of greatest pleasure and the highest honour that she has thus been able to contribute her services in the way of augmenting the Imperial Navy of Japan. Looking at these extensive and well planned construction works, I cannot help admiring the very cradle of the powerful battleship Mikasa, of which the Japanese navy is most proud, and on the top of whose main-mast the flag of Admiral Togo now flies. Framed with the iron from the soil of our allied nation, the Katori, another offspring of the same cradle, cannot but prove to be an invaluable addition to the navy of my country. The Katori will not, of course, be available in the present deplorable war, but when the peace is restored and when she floats in the Eastern waters under the flag of the Rising Sun, I am sure she will be one of the most efficient guarantees in maintaining the peace of the Far East by upholding the national dignity of Japan. I again thank you, ladies and gentlemen, for your cordial reception.

After luncheon the Prince and Princess were shown over the works by the chairman, Colonel Vickers. The special train left the docks at 2.55, and the portion which carried the Prince was detached at Swindon, proceeding direct to Doncaster, where the Prince and Princess stayed with Mr. Douglas Vickers, and privately went over the River Don Works of Vickers, at Sheffield, on the morning of 5th inst. Mr. Komuro, the London representative of the great Mitsui firm, who are Vickers' agents in Japan, accompanied by Mrs. Komuro, also visited Doncaster as Mr. Vickers' guests. The rest of the company, including the Japanese Minister, returned to St. Pancras in the special.

Two things may, perhaps, be recalled on the occasion of the launch. One is the pleasant weather conditions on this occasion as contrasted with the circumstances when the Mikasa was launched from the same slip some five years ago. Then it blew and rained hard, and a position on the launching platform was by no means the pleasant opportunity that was provided on the 4th. Another fact is the great weight of the hull when launched. Vessels for the Japanese Navy have made more than one record that way. The Shikishima from the Thames Ironworks was a record weight of near 7,000 tons, but into the Katori no less than 9,170 tons had been worked before launching, and with the necessary gear to be moved the total was no less than 9,400 tons, which is the heaviest yet done from any yard.

The Katori, like, what is practically her sister ship, the Kashima, also under construction in this country, takes her name from a district on the east of Tokyo. At either place there are Shinto shrines of some celebrity.

Before leaving the works the guests were presented with a souvenir consisting of an ash-tray with a representation of the Katori. On the back was an inscription recording the circumstances of the launch.

The length between perpendiculars is 420 ft., and over all 455 ft. 9 in.; the breadth is 78 ft., and the depth to upper deck 44 ft. The draught in normal fighting condition will be 27 ft., when the displacement will be 15,950 tons, which is a little less than the Kashima. She is designed for a speed of 18½ knots, and will be provided with two sets of four-cylinder triple-expansion engines, balanced on the Yarrow-Schlick-Tweedy system, and each having one high pressure cylinder of 35½ in. diameter, one intermediate of 56 in., and two low pressure of 63 in. The boilers, generating steam at 230 lb. to the square inch, will be of the latest Niclausse water-tube type, and will be 20 in number, arranged in three separate stokeholds. The coal capacity is 2,100 tons, and is stored without using the wings, which really form a portion of the double bottom, so that the difficulty experienced in working the closely-packed fuel in these narrow places is obviated. Another important departure in the bunkering arrangements is that the bulk of the coal can be drawn upon from the three stokeholds without opening any of the doors in the watertight bulkheads.

Commenting upon the Katori, Engineering says: A signal honour has been paid by the Emperor of Japan to the warship-building industry of this country, by arranging that their Imperial Highnesses Prince and Princess Arisugawa should launch the latest battleship for the Japanese Navy from the works of Messrs. Vickers, Sons and Maxim, Limited, on Tuesday of next week—an honour which is not undeserved in view of the service rendered to that Navy by the many British-built warships which, in the moment of Japanese peril, achieved such a pronounced victory under Admiral Togo's command. The appropriateness of the compliment in the Vickers Works is further indicated by the fact that it was at these works that Togo's battleship, the Mikasa, was built. In the details there has been utilised to some extent the experience gained in the various actions against the Russian fleet off Port Arthur; but the vessels were probably too far advanced to enable the main element of design to be arranged according to the dictates of modern strategy, as elucidated by recent fleet actions. As to gun-fire which is the most important element in a ship of the line—the Katori will mount pairs of 12-in. guns in barbettes at the forward and aft end of the upper deck. These are of the Vickers' type, weighing 57 tons, and they will deliver their 850-lb. projectiles with a velocity and energy which will enable them at six miles' range to perforate armour 9 in. in thickness, and at four miles' range to defeat modern armour about 13 in. in thickness. There are four 10-in. guns, mounted singly in barbettes at each corner of the main citadel. The Vickers guns of this type fire a 500-lb. shot with an energy sufficient to perforate a six miles' range armour 6½ in. thick, and at four miles' range 9 in. thick. In addition, the Katori mounts twelve 6-in. guns within a concentrated casemate amidships; each gun, however, is entirely separated by armour screens. This completes the main armament of the Katori. One round from these twenty main guns represents a collective energy of nearly 375,000 foot-tons. As the 12-in. guns may fire two projectiles per minute, the 10-in. guns three rounds, and each 6-in. gun ten rounds, the total weight of shot which may be discharged in a minute is 24,800 lb., representing a collective energy of approximately 1,400,000 foot-tons. All four 12-in. guns may be trained on the broadside. The two 10-in. guns and six 6-in. guns are similarly utilisable on the broadside, so that one minute's possible broadside fire is 15,800 lb., with a collective energy of over 900,000 foot-tons. As two 12-in. guns, two 10-in. guns, and two 6-in. guns may be fired ahead, the vessel may maintain a very hot pursuit, discharging per minute four projectiles of 840 lb., six of 500 lb., and twenty of 100 lb. For the repelling of torpedo attack there are mounted, in protected positions in various parts of the ship, twelve 12½-pounder, three 3 pounder, and six Maxim guns. Finally, the Katori has five submerged tubes for the firing of 18-in. torpedoes. The third element in design has reference to the speed, and in this case the specified rate is 18½ knots; but as the Mikasa very considerably exceeded her designed rate, it would not be surprising if in this case also 19 knots is realised. The total coal capacity is 2,100 tons, which will give the ship a high radius of action.

DEATH OF ADMIRAL YEH.

Shanghai papers report the death on the 29th ult. of Admiral Yeh Chu-kuei, Commander-in-Chief of the Kuangtung, Nanyang, and Peiyang squadrons. He died, after a few days' illness, at Kiangnan Arsenal. In an account of his career, the Asiatic Daily News says that at thirteen years of age Yeh Chu-kuei entered on his cadetship at the Foochow Naval School, under Mr. James Carroll, of Greenwich, and for five years he studied the rudiments of gunnery, naval armaments, and the general construction of men-of-war. During this time he learned much, and with the prospect of a bright career he was transferred to the training ship Kienmen, then in charge of Captain, now Admiral Sir Richard Tracey, R.N. When twenty-one years of age the future Admiral was sent to England to join the British Navy, and he was ordered to the Channel Squadron, which was under the command of Sir Michael Seymour. Four years were spent in the British Navy, years full of arduous work, and the Sub-Lieutenant Yeh, as he then was, resigned and returned to his native country, where he was once given the command of the Mosquito gunboat Chenpei, built at the Elswick Works. He was quickly posted to the third-class cruiser Chungyuan, of the Peiyang Squadron, as Captain, and in next step was to take over the command of the second-class cruiser Chingyuen, which took part in the naval battle of the Yalu, 17th September, 1894, in the China-Japan war. In this campaign the Chingyuen was most conspicuous in the fighting off Weihaiwei. On the 8th of February 1895, before dawn, the Chinese made a successful torpedo attack on the Japanese fleet on the eastern forts opening fire one of the shells struck the Chingyuen, killing and wounding forty men. On the 9th the Japanese sank another combined attack by land and sea, the Chingyuen having steamed out to shell the forts. Captain Naruta of the Japanese Navy succeeded in hitting her near the water-line with two shells and the Chingyuen immediately sank. Captain Yeh and some of his officers and men were rescued and brought to light again. At the conclusion of the China-Japanese War Yeh Chu-kuei returned to his native city (Foochow) and took a rest for about a year. At the end of this time the Viceroy of Chihli appointed him Rear-Admiral of the new Peiyang fleet of eight vessels, and during the Boxer troubles his flag-ship was the Haiyung, a 2nd-class cruiser. In the fight at Taku the Haiyung was captured at the Bar, and Admiral Yeh and his officers were carried off prisoners to Wei-hai-wei by the British fleet. After the trouble was over, Admiral Yeh came down to Kiangyin and resumed command of the Peiyang Squadron. About four years ago Viceroy Yuan Shih-kai appointed the deceased a visier on Military and Naval Affairs at Tientsin, position he occupied for three years before he was promoted Admiral of Kuangtung Province. After few months Admiral Yeh came to Shanghai with intention of reorganising the Nanyang Squadron receiving his instructions from Peking. In 1901 he took supreme command of the Kuangtung, Nanyang and Peiyang Squadrons, and made his quarters at the Kiangnan Arsenal, as he was to reorganise the dock there on a commercial basis. His work of bringing the Chinese fleet up to date then commenced, but he was hampered by lack of funds and support from the Central Government. It was felt by the officers in the Chinese Navy that if that branch of the service was to become effective one in the future, Admiral Yeh was the man who could make it so. The late Admiral devoted his whole time and energy to a study of the problem, but as stated he had little support from those who should have given every encouragement, and now he is dead China begins to realise his valuable man he was.

Admiral Yeh Chu Chu-kuei received the Max military decoration of "Baturu," a distinction so thing like the French Légion d'Honneur, and Empress Dowager presented him with specimen er calligraphy in the shape of two scrolls, bearing the character "Fu" (Prosperity), and the other "Shou" (Longevity).

The cause of the death of Admiral Yeh is unknown at present. About a week ago he was taken ill, and an American-educated Chinese doctor attended him. He had pains in the stomach and violent vomiting. A Chinese doctor was also called in later in the week, and Dr. Falun was telephoned for, but as yet, and the Admiral became unconscious at 11 p.m. and died shortly before noon. It was not thought that the Admiral was seriously ill, and his Chinese medical advisers said he would recover in about three weeks.

On the Emperor's birthday he hoped to entertain his guests to dinner, and the Doctor gave his permission, but he became too ill to do so. Deceased was 54 (Chinese) years of age, and he leaves six sons and five daughters. His eldest son is an ex-captain of the Civil Mandarin at Peking, and his second son is studying at the Peking University. In honour of the late Admiral, the flags at the Custom House, and on the men-of-war in harbour, and the P. & O. S. S. Coromandel, and other vessels, are half-masted.

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SPECIAL SERVICE.)

WHAT ST. PETERSBURG THINKS.

London, August 4.

The conviction is growing in St. Petersburg that peace cannot be concluded by the present Russian Government because the Tsar does not feel sufficiently supported by the nation to agree to the cession of territory for the payment of an indemnity; while it is realized that Japan cannot terminate the struggle without one or the other or both. It is further recognized that Saghalien has been lost for ever, thus placing the whole of the Amur under Japanese influence. But the present Russian Government refuses to admit the logic of events.

DINNER TO BARON KOMURA.

The New York Nippon Club has given a dinner in honour of the Japanese peace plenipotentiaries. Baron Komura, speaking on the occasion, said for a still better understanding between Japan and America and toasted the health of the Mikado and President Roosevelt.

WITTE ON THE SITUATION.

Later.

Mr. Maartens has read to the newspaper writers a statement from M. Witte in which he says that he hopes the acquaintance of two chivalrous foes begun on the field will ripen into lasting friendship, and Russia must adjudge the terms offered as admissible before proceeding to formal negotiations. The Tsar's acceptance of President Roosevelt's invitation, involving the final course of the appointment of a plenipotentiary before the enemy's terms were evened, was an eloquent token of the friendly feeling entertained by Russia towards the United States. It was with the hope of strengthening that friendship that the Russian Government accepted the invitation. Even if the Mission were otherwise barren this remains a memorable event for Russia and the United States.

M. Witte, being interviewed on the voyage, minimized the importance of Russia's position. He said that the Japanese had not acquired such supremacy as to make them regard them as really redoubtable enemies. They would have to advance their claims as far before they would be in a position to impose terms. The internal situation of Russia in no wise affected the question of peace. The bulk of the Russian Government regarded the war as simply a distant and unaffairing the security of the country. He himself strongly favoured peace, but the Japanese must be convinced that peace is in no wise indispensable to Russia, who would never accept conditions even apparently affecting her amour propre.

THE FRENCH PROGRAMME IN MOROCCO.

London, August 4.

The French Note giving the details of the French programme regarding the Morocco Conference has been handed to the German Ambassador at Paris.

BRITISH LIBERALS AND THE ALLIANCE.

In the discussion on the Foreign Office estimates in the House of Commons, the Opposition speakers unanimously favoured the renewal of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance.

FRANCE AND GREAT BRITAIN.

London, August 5.

During the debate in the House of Commons on the Foreign Office estimates, Earl Percy, Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, said the British Government were fully alive to the importance of co-operating with France in the promotion of common interests.

GREAT BRITAIN AND CHINA.

Earl Percy also said that the negotiations with China were approaching a conclusion for the joint construction of the Railway along the Yangtze valley to the sandstone basin of Szechuan, on a basis of equality of opportunity and treatment. The Mackay treaty had not been infringed except with regard to the mining regulations. The currency question and other points mentioned in the Shanghai memorial were not infractions of the Treaty. There was besides no evidence that Germany was violating the principle of the "open-door" in Shantung.

THE PEACE NEGOTIATIONS.

London, August 5.

M. Witte and Baron Rosen visited President Roosevelt at Oyster Bay in the same manner that Baron Komura had visited him. Mr. Takahira's visit last week had for its object the paying of his respects informally prior to the formal reception that took place to-day.

The question of precedence as between the envoys was to-day decided in favour of Japan.

The Washington Post says that China has notified the State Department that she is sending His Excellency Wu Ting-fang to negotiate a new exclusion treaty.

THE PEACE PLENIPOTENTIARIES.

London, July 6.

The peace plenipotentiaries of Japan and Russia have arrived at Oyster Bay. The Japanese and Russian envoys were received by President Roosevelt on the Government yacht Mayflower, the Japanese preceding the Russians.

THE "EMPRESS"-"HUANG-TAI" COLLISION.

The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, sitting in London, has affirmed the judgment of the Shanghai Supreme Court, which found the Empress of India (Capt. Marshall) solely to blame for the collision near Breaker Point, Hongkong, which sunk the Chinese cruiser Huang-tai in 1903.

[NOTE.—This collision occurred about 15 miles north of Breaker Point on August 19th, 1903. The Huang-tai was a vessel of 2,110 tons, carrying 37-in Krupp and 7 40-pdrs., with two torpedo tubes. She had a speed of 15 knots. Her commander went down with her, but of her crew of 97 men, all but 13 were saved. Sir Hiram Wilkinson's judgment in this case, delivered on Dec. 29th, 1903, ran to many columns of print in the North China Daily News.—Ed. J. M.]

THE FRENCH FLEET.

London, August 7.

The French fleet sailed from Cherbourg last evening for Cowes, where their Majesties arrived in the Royal yacht on Saturday.

THE PEACE CONFERENCE.

President Roosevelt presented the envoys to each other yesterday. A luncheon followed at which the President proposed a toast to the welfare and prosperity of the two great nations whose representatives were present. He said it was his earnest prayer in the interest of all mankind that a just and lasting peace should be speedily concluded. The Envoys afterwards proceeded to Portsmouth.

RUSSIAN DOMESTIC AFFAIRS.

Later.

Reuter's correspondent at St. Petersburg telegraphs that a general discussion with regard to the electoral system in connection with the proposed national assembly has been conducted at the Petershof Palace and has resulted in the further discomfiture of the reactionaries, the Tsar showing complete accord with the liberal tendencies of the majority. The zemstvos will publish a scheme on Aug. 12th.

SALVATIONIST CAMPAIGN IN JAPAN.

General Booth proposes to make a Salvationist campaign in Japan in the late autumn. He says he means to Christianize Japan, which will then disseminate Christianity throughout Asia.

THE ANGLO-FRENCH ENTENTE.

London, August 8.

All the newspapers enthusiastically welcome the French Fleet, which arrived at Portsmouth yesterday, and congratulate King Edward on the establishment of the entente.

GERMANY AND THE MOROCCO CONFERENCE.

Germany has instructed Count Tattenbach not to propose, not to discuss and not to accept any concessions pending the conference, and has notified France accordingly.

BRITISH HONOURS FOR FRENCH OFFICERS.

Four French Admirals and thirteen other French naval officers have been decorated with different grades of the Order of St. Michael and St. George.

THE RECEPTION OF THE FRENCH FLEET.

London, August 9.

Flotillas of excursion steamers, packed with people, gave the French Fleet a popular and unofficial welcome which was more significant than the official welcome. The whole scene was one of unsurpassable animation, beauty and impressiveness. The waters were crowded at Cowes. The regatta included the Kaiser's yacht with the Ambassador and the naval attaché on board. All these ships, as well as the towns of Cowes and Portsmouth, vied with the fleet at night-fall in a magnificent illumination and fire-works. There was a dinner on board the Royal yacht. The King in toasting President Loubet trusted that the visit would link the friendship between France and England still closer. He was convinced that its principal advantage would be to maintain peace. He hoped that the good relations between the two nations would be further strengthened.

Later.

The scene of brilliancy continued at Cowes yesterday. The most cordial hospitalities were exchanged. Lunch was given to the French officers on board the Royal yacht. The British Squadron dined them at night and afterwards there was a ball. (Here the affair was of great importance and as there was fear of its leading to unfortunate results, a protest should be presented and a great demonstration should be organized in a few days.

THE PEACE CONFERENCE.

The ships carrying the Plenipotentiaries of the two countries entered Newport on the evening of the 6th on account of a fog and remained there until the following morning at 7.30 a.m. M. Witte who is well known to dislike travelling by sea, had already left Boston with one Secretary overland for Portsmouth. Baron Rosen and his party continued the journey with us. Shortly after we reached Portsmouth, which was at 10 a.m. on the 8th, M. Witte embarked on the Mayflower and thereafter the Port Admiral came to visit the Plenipotentiaries. At 11 a.m. the Plenipotentiaries left their ships amid the sounds of saluting, and, proceeding to the Port Admiralty, had a stand-up luncheon in company with many ladies and gentlemen. Thereafter the Plenipotentiaries went by carriage to call on the Governor of New Hampshire at his office, and were welcomed by him. A conference chamber for the meeting of the Plenipotentiaries with offices attached has been prepared by the Government within the Admiralty buildings, and all necessary arrangements have been made. So long as the Plenipotentiaries remain here the Vice-Secretary of State will stay at Portsmouth to see that all facilities are provided. The Plenipotentiaries have taken up their quarters at the Wentworth Hotel.

(Received at the Foreign Office from the Japanese Consul at Newchwang; 3rd instant.)

A WARNING FROM NEWCHWANG.

On the 1st instant 175 Japanese subjects arrived by the steamer Maya Maru, including 92 women. These people have come here ignorant of existing conditions. There are already many Japanese here and there is no room for others. They had to be sent back at once. Above all, young women come and being unable to find a livelihood, fall into evil ways. For the sake of these people themselves and also on account of the general morality of the place, it would be desirable to exercise some supervision before allowing departures from Japan.

M. WITTE IN AMERICA.

M. Witte has addressed a manifesto to the American newspapers for the information of the people of the United States. The gist is as follows:—"In response to the praiseworthy effort made by America to establish peace and friendship between the belligerent countries, my Sovereign has instructed me to come to America and has entrusted me with power to ascertain the terms which our opponent considers cardinal as a basis for discussing peace. It is not necessary for me to state here the view I myself firmly and earnestly hold; namely, that as the two belligerents, by confronting each other in the field, have now for the first time learned to appreciate and respect each other, and have come to know each other's strength, the day has arrived when the representatives of both should confer with a view to re-establishing friendly relations. But Russia must clearly know the terms proposed and must consider whether they are admissible or not before she opens a formal conference. It is customary in international affairs that before the plenipotentiaries of the two countries meet they should have a preliminary knowledge of the terms, after which the real conference commences. But the fact is that my Sovereign has on this occasion agreed not to observe that custom and has entrusted me with plenipotentiary power, directing me to ascertain the terms of our worthy opponent."

M. Witte supplements the above by descending eloquently on the desirability of establishing friendship between the two countries and on America's efforts which can not be too much praised.

[RECEIVED BY THE "KOKUMIN SHIMBUN" ON THE 6TH.]

THE PEACE NEGOTIATIONS.

New York, Aug. 5.

This is the day when the Japanese and Russian Plenipotentiaries are to have their first official meeting by introduction of the President. At 9 a.m. the Japanese Plenipotentiaries, Baron Komura and Mr. Takahira left New York for Oyster Bay in the Tacoma and at 2.30 a.m. M. Witte and Baron Rosen left by the Chattanooga. The weather was beautiful. Immediately on the embarkation of the Plenipotentiaries a salute of 19 guns was fired for each party. In all respects their treatment was most cordial. Immediately before setting out, Mr. Pierce, representing the United States, who was charged with the duty of looking after the distinguished visitors, informed them that as the Japanese Plenipotentiaries had arrived in America in advance of the Russian the former would be given precedence of the latter. The Plenipotentiaries wore on this day ordinary dress, not official costume.

There will certainly be no armistice pending the negotiations. M. Witte has stated that Russia will not ask for an armistice, and that Mr. Takahira must be well aware of this. He has also stated that the recent meeting between the Tsar and the Kaiser was by desire of the Tsar and that the Kaiser during the meeting earnestly urged the Tsar to make peace.

M. Witte will proceed to the place of conference by railway. Baron Rosen and the staff will travel thither in the Mayflower. The Japanese Plenipotentiaries and their staff will go by the Dolphin. All preparations for their reception have been made at Portsmouth. The Governor of New Hampshire will entertain them at breakfast and luncheon on the 7th. Thereafter the Plenipotentiaries will proceed to the Conference Hall escorted by guards of honour as national guests.

New York, Later.

The meeting between the President and the Russian Plenipotentiaries on the 4th instant at Oyster Bay has given rise to a belief in American official circles that peace will probably be concluded. During the meeting the President is said to have remarked to the Russian Plenipotentiaries that Russia should not forget that she is the beaten side and that her measures should be governed by that conviction.

(Of course President Roosevelt never said anything of the kind.—Ed. J.M.)

(RECEIVED BY THE "HOCHI SHIMBUN.")

RUSSIA AND AN INDEMNITY.

The Russian Plenipotentiaries have received instructions not to agree under any circumstances to the payment of an indemnity.

Skin-Tortured Babies AND TIRED MOTHERS Find Comfort in Cuticura

INSTANT RELIEF and refreshing sleep for Skin-tortured Babies and rest for Tired Mothers in warm baths with CUTICURA SOAP, and gentle anointings with CUTICURA OINTMENT, the great skin cure and purest of emollients, to be followed in severe cases by mild doses of CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS, to cool and cleanse the blood. This is the purest, sweetest, most speedy, permanent, and economical treatment for torturing, disfiguring, itching, burning, bleeding, scaly, crusted, and pimply humours, eczemas, rashes, irritations, and itchings, with loss of hair, of infants and children, yet compounded.

MILLIONS USE CUTICURA SOAP

Assisted by CUTICURA OINTMENT, for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and soothing red, rough, and sore hands, for baby rashes, itchings, and chafings, in the form of baths for annoying irritations and inflammations, or too free or offensive perspiration, in the form of washes for ulcerative weaknesses, and for many sanative, antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves to women, especially mothers, and for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. No other medicated soap ever compounded is to be compared with it for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, scalp, hair, and hands. No other foreign or domestic toilet soap, however expensive, is to be compared with it for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. Thus it combines in ONE SOAP at ONE PRICE, the BEST skin and complexion soap, and the BEST toilet and best baby soap in the world.

CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS

(Chocolate Coated) are a new, tasteless, odourless, economical substitute for the celebrated liquid CUTICURA RESOLVENT, as well as for all other blood purifiers and humour cures. Put up in screw-cap pocket vials, containing 60 doses.

CUTICURA RESOLVENTS are sold throughout the world. Australian Depot: R. Towns & Co., Sydney. British Depot: 27-B, Chancery Lane, London. French Depot: 8 Rue de la Paix, Paris. Forras Durez Are Cases, Sole Agents, Boston, U. S. A.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

MAJOR-GENERAL USAKAWA left Fusan on Aug. 15th for Japan.

MR. H. NAGATAKI has been appointed Consul-General in Shanghai.

On August 15th, Baron Sone, Minister for Finance, returned from Katase.

Two sons of Prince Kuni arrived on Aug. 15th at Kamakura from Suma, near Kobe.

A SUSPECTED case of plague is reported in Honjo, Tokyo. The patient is a young woman.

THREE Russians escaped from Hamadera, near Osaka, on Aug. 8th. They are still at large.

On the morning of Aug. 10, a post-box in Suyeyoshi-cho, Yokohama, was found broken and its contents stolen.

FIVE high Chinese officials were arrested on Aug. 4th by the Japanese in Kaiyuan and were subsequently removed to Tielien. They are reported to have supplied Japanese military secrets to the Russians.

A CASE of cholera appeared on Aug. 10th in Shiba, Tokyo, and the patient (a woman) died the same night.

On the morning of Aug. 11th, fire broke out in the Yokosuka Naval Station, destroying a shed and other small buildings.

H. MAKI, who was involved in the Bougouin affair was deprived on Aug. 15th of his medal for service in the Japan-China war.

OWING to a storm, the steamer Jinsen Maru has sustained damage to her rudder. She was brought on Aug. 11th to Moji for repairs.

MARQUIS YAMAGATA, Chief of the Staff Office, had audience of the Emperor on August 11th day. It is reported that he is ailing.

A DEAD rat infected with plague was found on Aug. 12th in a warehouse in Fukagawa, Tokyo, belonging to the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha.

THREE hundred policemen left Tokyo on Aug. 13th for Formosa. A similar number will be sent at the end of September to the island.

Two of the Russian prisoners in Tsu, Ise province, escaped but were arrested on the morning of August 14th at Uyeno, Iga province.

A LARGE amount of money has been sent by the Russian Government to the French Legation in Tokyo to be distributed among the prisoners.

On Aug. 14th, sixteen severe shocks of earthquake were felt in Macao, and there were slight shocks in Hongkong. Panic prevails at Macao.

EIGHTEEN Russian prisoners in Kotura were sentenced on Aug. 13th to thirty days' imprisonment on a charge of having attacked their guards.

I. WATANABE (32) an employee of the Shinagawa railway station, was arrested on August 14th on a charge of having stolen sugar, salt and other merchandise.

THE net income of the Hokkaido Colonial Bank for the first half year was yen 103,581.18. The interim dividend was yen 2 per share of the face-value of yen 50.

THE Otorijinja, a well-known Shinto temple in the district of Senboku near, Osaka, was destroyed on the morning of Aug. 15th by fire. The cause is not yet known.

COLONEL Y. TAKENAKA was promoted Major-General on Aug. 11th. On the same day, he died of an illness from which he had been suffering for some weeks past.

THE Kokumin has a telegram from Shanghai that fear is entertained in Soochow as to an anti-foreign movement. The Chinese boycott is becoming a political question.

MAJOR-GENERAL NOMA left Tokyo on August 15th by the 6 p.m. train for the west. Major-General Matsumoto has been appointed superintendent of the Artillery Training Office.

A TELEGRAM has been received in Nagasaki to the effect that the Osaka Shosen Kaisha's steamer Hijikawa Maru has gone ashore off Ulsan on her way from Wonsan, Korea, to Japan. She is in great danger.

A 10-MILE swimming match promoted by the Osaka Mainichi will take place on Sunday, Aug. 20th, the course being between Osaka and the neighbourhood of Mikage. There are 95 entries, including Mr. James, of Messrs. William Kerr & Co., and Mr. Moller, of Messrs. Delacamp & Co., both of Kobe, and a Japanese resident of Yokohama.

ACCORDING to the crew of the steamer Kosai Maru, which arrived on Aug. 11th at Moji, five floating mines were observed at 9 a.m. on the previous day, about two nautical miles southeast of the Kosaki Lighthouse, Tsushima.

Six horses captured at the front were brought on Aug. 13th to Ujina and on the following day, they were sent by train to Tokyo. The horses are said by Tokyo papers to be presents from Marquis Oyama and Baron Kodama to the Emperor.

At the request of Admiral Nebogatoff, the abbot of the Myoho-in, Kyoto, performed funeral rites on August 15th for the Russians who were killed in the battle of the Japan Sea. It may be added that the Russian Admiral is detained in this temple.

PRINCE and Princess Arisugawa arrived at Hongkong on Aug. 16th. They were warmly welcomed by the citizens. Their Highnesses were entertained in the official residence of the Governor. At 6 p.m. on the same day, they left for Shanghai.

THE sailing vessel Ota Maru (107 tons) which had been reported missing, arrived on Aug. 12th at Sapporo, Hokkaido. According to the crew, they were attacked on July 1st by Russians off Kamchatka, and five of the crew—12 in all at that time—were killed.

THE Hochi says that the Government intends to raise the 6th domestic loan, the amount probably being a hundred million yen. For this purpose, the authorities will hold negotiations about the beginning of September with leading bankers in Tokyo and Osaka.

It is reported from Wonsan, Korea, that Sudzki Keikichi, a Japanese, has been arrested there on suspicion of having furnished Japanese military secrets to the Russians. He will be brought to Nagasaki for examination in the Nagasaki District Court.

THE Governor of Awomori reports that owing to heavy rains on August 13th, inundations occurred in the district of Sannohe. A building collapsed with the result that one person was killed and five were severely injured. A large extent of cultivated land sustained damage.

CHING (28), a Chinese merchant, residing in the compound of No. 136, Yokohama, who attempted on Aug. 7th to smuggle two cans of opium from a British steamer, was sentenced on Aug. 10th in the Yokohama District Court to two months' imprisonment with hard labour.

THE marriage of Mr. T. Date, fourth son of Count Date, and Miss Kei Matsuura, sixth daughter of Count Matsuura, took place on Aug. 11th in Tokyo. On the same day, Mr. G. Ono, an official of the Saghalien Administrative office, was married in Tokyo to Miss Ozaki, second daughter of Baron Ozaki.

THE Captain, nine Germans, and eleven Chinamen, forming the crew of the captured German steamer Lydia, were released on Aug. 14th at Nagasaki. The Nichi Nichi adds that this ship left Hamburg on April 8th for Nicolaievsk with salt, oil, iron, acetic acid, etc. Owing to a storm, she was found drifting in the neighbourhood of Okinawa prefecture, and was captured. She had two sets of shipping documents.

NOTES ON THE PEACE CONFERENCE.

Friday, August 11.

There are various telegrams about the conference. It appears that the Plenipotentiaries met on the 9th instant, but it was an informal meeting held at the request of M. Witte. The first formal meeting was to be on the 10th when credentials would be duly examined. A statement is made, however, that there has already been a private inspection of credentials. The Kokumin's telegrams say that arrangements have been made for the meetings to be daily from 9 to 12 and from 3 to 5.20 or 6 p.m. Mr. O'Laughlin alleges that the exchange of credentials took place on the 9th, but later news does not bear this out. M. Witte is represented as saying that his commission was written by the Tsar's own hand and that it confers full powers. As might have been expected there has been a discussion as to the language of the conference, M. Witte being for French and Baron Komura for English. It is not clear what decision has been adopted, but both languages appear to have been used at the informal meeting on the 9th.

A telegram to the Kokumin from San Francisco says that in military circles in St. Petersburg the conference is expected to be a failure. The Hochi Shimbun also has a confirmatory telegram from New York which alleges that the war party have impressed upon the Tsar the importance of Linevitch's despatch declaring victory to be assured, and have so influenced His Majesty that the power of the peace party is temporarily broken. On the other hand the special correspondent of The Times wires to that journal that the chief obstacle to the progress of the conference at present is the question of language and that according to general appearances there is good prospect of a happy outcome. The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Echo de Paris telegraphs to his journal that Russia is making preparations to borrow 200 millions of roubles in case the conference should fail.

The railway problem continues to be much talked of. According to present appearances an arrangement is contemplated between Russia and France, by which the former would sell the line to the latter, France putting up the money at once, and thereafter France would sell the line to China, the payment to be made by installments spread over 25 years, during which interval the railway itself would be hypothecated to France. Chinese high officials are said to be strongly in favour of this arrangement but they can scarcely overlook the fact that the railway is actually in Japanese possession and that Japan regards it and doubtless intends to treat it as a prize of war. If it is to come into Chinese possession, the transaction must be one of direct sale between Japan and China. French intervention would be not only superfluous but also mischievous. It would be very pleasant for Russia, no doubt, that having built the line, and used it for the purposes of her campaign against Japan and lost it in war, she should now be compensated for it just as though it still remained in her effective possession, but that device will scarcely work. The ultimate decision rests with Japan.

Everything tends to show that the indemnity will be the grand climacteric of the peace negotiations. The Fiji Shimpō's special correspondent telegraphing from Newcastle on the 8th describes an interview he had on the preceding evening with the correspondents of a leading English paper and of Le Matin. These two gentlemen are intimate with M. Witte and accompanied him in the steamer from Europe—so we read the telegram. The English correspondent said that in influential circles in Tokyo the payment of an indemnity to cover Japan's expenses up to 1500 million yen and the cession of Saghalien were regarded as the essential minima, whereupon the correspondent of the Matin, observed that if such were the case the conference would be broken off at once for M. Witte had been instructed to pay no indemnity nor cede any territory. Under the name of sustenance-money on account of the prisoners Russia might agree to pay something, but she would not consent to an indemnity. Personally M. Witte favoured the idea of an indemnity but as Russia's envoy he could not consent. France had signified her willingness to lend 500 millions towards an indemnity and was most anxious to see peace concluded. It was her intention, after the war, to become a party to the Anglo-Japanese alliance within certain limits.

In addition to the above we have the Hochi Shimbun's explicit telegram that M. Witte has been definitely instructed not to consent to any indemnity. On the other hand one is disposed to ask what Russia can have meant by appointing a plenipotentiary and sending him all the way to America if she had no intention of either ceding territory or paying an indemnity. Does she seriously imagine that peace may be concluded without making either or both of these concessions? It is hard to believe anything of the kind in spite of the very strong evidence adduced, especially the evidence of the Tsar's own declarations.

Saturday, August 12.

To-day the telegrams as to the prospects of the Conference are decidedly pessimistic. The Hochi Shimbun's news is the most gloomy. It represents all the newspaper correspondents as agreeing that the Conference will prove a failure and that the Russian envoys do not at all recognise their country as defeated. This is confirmed by the Asahi's intelligence which describes Russia as prepared to make only concessions which are almost laughable. She ventures to impose limitations upon the exercise of Japan's influence in Korea, a matter with which she has no manner of concern except as prospective aggressor; she proposes to cede to the Japanese various parts of Manchuria over which she has no manner of right and from which she has been forcibly driven, and she demands the restoration of Saghalien on condition that she grants to Japanese fishermen certain privileges which she might revoke at any moment. Terms of that kind would be farcical and since Russia does not intend to treat the Conference as a farce, it will be safe to turn a deaf ear not only to these rumours but also to Berlin's scarcely less extravagant optimism. What may be counted certain is that the course of the Conference will be very rugged. Whatever Russia gives she will give with extreme reluctance. We ourselves look forward to one particularly sombre moment when the negotiations will be actually broken off, and it will depend upon President Roosevelt to set them going again.

Sunday, August 13.

The progress of the Conference is minutely telegraphed to Tokyo. The Fiji Shimpō's correspondent wires that at the meeting on the 10th instant Messrs. Sato, Ochiai and Adachi were present, in addition to Baron Komura and Mr. Takahira. On the Russian side there were Mr. Witte and Baron Rosen, and Messrs. Plaucon (?), Kostavets (?) and Nebogatoff. Baron Komura spoke in English which was translated into French by Mr. Adachi, and Mr. Witte spoke in French which was translated into English by Nebogatoff. It is stated that the Japanese Plenipotentiaries showed a strong disposition to avoid all useless formalities and that the progress of business is correspondingly rapid. This telegram says that judging from the demeanour of M. Kostavets, who reports the above facts to the newspapers, the Russian envoys did not consider Japan's terms excessive. The Japanese Plenipotentiaries retired soon from the conference chamber but the Russian Plenipotentiaries remained some time in session.

On the evening of the 12th the Asahi published an extra containing a despatch the contents of which are duplicated by the correspondents of other journals in the issues of the 13th instant. This despatch said that a written statement of Japanese demands had been handed in on the 10th instant and that the Russian Plenipotentiaries were expected to make some reply on Monday, the 14th, pending which reply the conference was adjourned. The despatch goes on to give an alleged version of the demands:—

1. Reimbursement of the cost of the War, the amounts to be subsequently fixed.

In preferring this demand the word "indemnity" (shōkin) was carefully avoided, "re-imbursement" (tempo) being substituted.

2. Cession of Saghalien.

3. Transfer of the lease of Port Arthur and Taicang.

4. Evacuation of Manchuria.

5. Recognition of Japan's protectorate over Korea.

6. Handing over of the railway as far as Harbin.

7. Transfer of the interned war-ships.

8. Limitation of Russia's naval forces in the Far East.

9. Granting of fishing privileges along the coast of Primorsk.

The despatch says that these terms have all been published in St. Petersburg; that the Russian Government is determined not to grant the first two, and that the terms are considered dishonourable to Russia.

A later telegram adds that the Japanese plenipotentiaries did not fix any limit of time for a reply but that they asked for the exercise of all possible expedition, and that a reply is expected on the 14th instant. This telegram says that the peace prospects are good but that the discussion is likely to be lengthy. Rumour alleges that the amount of reimbursement asked for by Japan is 1,000 million yen, or 1,200 millions, but that this point is uncertain.

The latest telegram received up to this moment of writing (8 a.m. 13th instant) is to the Fiji Shimpō and is dated the 11th at Newcastle. Its contents are that Count Lamsdorff has wired to M. Witte acknowledging the receipt of the latter's telegram (presumably setting forth Japanese terms) and instructing the Plenipotentiaries to return an answer on the 12th. It was therefore expected that the Conference would assemble on the 12th (Saturday). The morning of the 12th, at Portsmouth, would correspond to the evening of that day at Tokyo. We shall always be a day late in the receipt of news.

Of course, this celerity on the part of Russia, if the telegram may be trusted, augurs emphatic rejection rather than consent. There appears to be an idea, however, that St. Petersburg may have counter-terms to submit.

Mr. Carl O'Laughlin wires that M. Witte informed him that no occasion exists to communicate the terms to the Tsar, inasmuch as the latter has granted complete plenipotentiary authority without any reservations. It was only necessary to inform Count Lamsdorff of the terms. Mr. Olaughlin further reports that according to what he has learned from a secretary of the Russian Mission, the Russian Plenipotentiaries regard the questions of reimbursement, of Saghalien and of Liaotung as the cardinal points of Japan's demands, and do not consider that anything else is specially important.

The Fiji Shimpō has Newcastle telegrams relating to the opinions expressed in different quarters. We read that in French circles the rejection of the terms is expected. In German circles, on the contrary, the view is that the terms being unexpectedly moderate, there is a good chance of a settlement. Remarkable quiet prevailed, however, but whether this was to be regarded as the calm that precedes the storm or as an evidence of confidence, it was impossible to divine.

A London telegram to the Fiji says that Japan continues persistently to object to publicity. And well she may. If the whole world is to be admitted to the conference chamber in Portsmouth the chances of a successful issue will be incalculably reduced.

Monday, August 14.

A telegram to the Fiji Shimpō says that the Plenipotentiaries met on the morning of the 12th but does not undertake to describe what passed. It adds, however, that Russia's declarations of determination not to cede any territory or pay any money are believed in well informed circles to be merely prompted by purposes of bargaining and that there is ample margin for the Plenipotentiaries to come to an agreement.

Mr. Carl Olaughlin wires that the Russians' counter proposals are, first, that they agree at once to the retrocession of Liaotung, the evacuation of Manchuria and the recognition of Japan's protectorate over Korea; secondly, that they will ultimately consent to surrender the East-China Railway; thirdly, that they will not consent to cede Saghalien, to reimburse Japan's outlays, to grant fishing rights, to hand over the interned ships or to acknowledge any limits of Russia's naval forces in the Far-East. Mr. Olaughlin adds, however, that the reply is couched in most conciliatory terms, and that M. Witte declares Russia's willingness to cede everything which does not touch her honour.

It is stated (Kokumin's telegrams) that whereas the American journals originally adopted a pessimistic tone in speaking of the negotiations, they showed some optimism in their writings of the 12th instant. Berlin continues very hopeful, but the messages are somewhat obscure. One of them runs thus:—"The Government (German) is in constant receipt of optimistic news, but the resolute attitude of Japan causes some sensation (Kando). The adverb but in this message renders its meaning somewhat cryptic. We observe, however, that in the Kokumin's version of the telegram the but is omitted and the telegram is treated as conveying two independent announcements. Thus:—"The German Government is in constant receipt of optimistic news. Japan's resolute attitude causes some sensation."

In an earlier telegram than the one quoted above Mr. Olaughlin informs the Kokumin that the Russian Plenipotentiaries expect apart to agree to their amendments and that the conference will proceed.

The Fiji Shimpō has a telegram from New York saying that the American press approves Japan's demands and regards them as only as reasonable but even as inevitable.

Tuesday, August 15.

The morning of the 15th did not bring any intelligence later than that published by the Asahi Shimbun on the night of the 14th. A message reached the Fiji, however, in the sense that the Russian Plenipotentiaries had refused the demands for re-imbursement of war expenses and cession of Saghalien, and that their refusal was of such a nature as to indicate that unless Japan modified her terms the conference must fail. As to the terms, the opinion of England, America and Germany, as expressed by the newspapers, is entirely favourable to Japan. Her demands are considered just and reasonable. We judge that the nine conditions telegraphed some days ago were accurate. It is rumoured (Fiji's correspondence) that in addition to rejecting the demands for re-imbursement of expenses and cession of Saghalien the Russians decline to hand over the interned ships or to submit to any limitations of their naval power in the Far East. The attitude of the Japanese Plenipotentiaries is described as resolute and calm.

The Fiji Shimpō's telegrams embody the same information as those of the Asahi, namely, that the Russian categorical reply was handed to the Japanese in French and English on the morning of the 12th—not the 13th as has been erroneously stated. It was then expected that Baron Komura would not make any rejoinder before the following day (13th), but he announced his readiness to do so at 3 o'clock on the afternoon of the 12th, whereupon the Plenipotentiaries re-assembled and remained in session until 7 p.m. They were to meet again on the morning of the 13th. This takes us a step farther than the Asahi's intelligence, which left the Plenipotentiaries still in session at 4.30 p.m. on the 12th.

It would appear from this continuance of their meetings that the Plenipotentiaries are endeavouring to find some via media. Had the Russian refusal been conclusive and had Japan peremptorily declined to re-consider the matter, there must have been a rupture then and there. A telegram to the Asahi says that, according to statements made in some quarters, Russia's refusal is not absolute. She would not be unwilling to make a payment if the thing could be effected so as to save her face, and she would not be unwilling to grant to the Japanese all concessions likely to be of profit in Saghalien provided that the sovereignty of the island remained as it was before. This account is not incredible, but it may be a mere conjecture on the part of the reporters. The Hochi Shimbun's information suggests a very different impression. It is most pessimistic, going so far as to state that the Russian Plenipotentiaries declared their resolve not to cede even one inch of territory or pay even a yen of indemnity.

A telegram to the Hochi Shimbun confirms Reuter's intelligence as to the attitude of the British press, but describes it in stronger terms. The newspapers, according to this message, pronounce Japan's terms to be if anything too moderate and counsel her not to recede a step. Russia's refusal to cede territory or pay an indemnity might have been foreseen but it should not deter Japan from standing firm by her minimum. They further say that the British nation must assist its ally in pressing these legitimate and reasonable demands. The Kokumin also has a telegram exactly confirmatory of Reuter.

The Niroku Shimpō has a New York cablegram which it represents as having reached "a certain official." According to this account New York thinks that the crisis is past and that the conference will find a peaceful exit. Russia will pay money under some other name, and the cession of Karafuto will not appear in the agreement, but there will be a private understanding that after peace is established the Tsar will "restore" the island to Japan. We have no idea whether this is an independent item of intelligence or whether it is a mere rechauffé.

Wednesday, August 16.

It is evident from the latest intelligence that no rupture of the peace conference is likely to take place, for the present at all events. And it is also evident that the refusal of M. Witte to entertain any proposals pointing to re-imbursement of Japan's expenses or cession of territory can not have been of the peremptory nature alleged by rumour. No one can venture to predict, indeed, what the fate of these particular demands will be, but had they been rejected finally and emphatically there can be no doubt that the conference must have come to an end then and there. It has not come to an end however. What has been done is to defer the territorial and re-imbursement clauses for future consideration, and in the meanwhile to debate the other clauses one by one. A reasonable inference is that the Plenipotentiaries do not abandon all hope of elaborating some arrangement with regard to these crucial conditions when they come up in due turn. Had hope been thus abandoned the seriatim discussion of the other conditions would be an obvious work of supererogation and as such would not be entered upon. On the whole, therefore, the pessimistic views recently prevalent evidently require modification.

Another fact made clear is that the published version of Japan's demands is incomplete. For only 9 clauses are shown whereas M. Witte says there are twelve. It may be therefore that even the nine quoted are not without error.

It is curious to recall the fact that Russia, with Yong Ampho so fresh in her memory, should now be stipulating against the construction of any fortresses by the Japanese on Korea's frontiers. The stipulation is also very suggestive. For if Russian ambition did not still point Korea-ward, why should she object to the frontiers being placed in a state of defence? Perhaps she is thinking mainly of the southern coast of the peninsula. With fortified naval bases at Masampo, Tsushima and on the opposite shore of Japan, the southern avenue to the Japan Sea would be difficult to negotiate. So would the northern if Japan were seated in Saghalien as well as in Yezo. In fact, the Sea of Japan would then be virtually a Japanese lake.

The telegrams now arriving indicate the justice of the suspicion that M. Witte is disclosing the progress of the negotiations to the press in order to purchase the latter's support. There is even a suggestion that, while himself taking the newspapers into his confidence, he is endeavouring to lay the responsibility on Japan's obstructive shoulders. Apparently these tactics are meeting with some success, for there are many journals in America which attach much more importance to personal courtesies offered to their representatives than to the dictates of justice or loyalty. It may be recalled in this context that M. Witte granted an interview to an American newspaper correspondent before he left Europe and that at the head of the report of the interview appeared these words:—

St. Petersburg, July 17.

M. de Witte, the senior Russian peace plenipotentiary, received a correspondent at his villa on Velagin island to-day. In according the interview he said he expressly desired it stated that he had declined all previous requests of journalists for interviews and would decline all future requests of the character. He authorized the statement that he made an exception in this case of the representative of the press of the United States as he was about to become the temporary guest of the United States and as a mark of sympathy he felt toward that great country. M. de Witte spoke in French. After greetings, the conversation gravitated quickly to the high mission with which the Russian statesman is charged and the disposition of the foreign press to interpret his appointment as an indication that Russia had decided to make peace at any price.

A clear note of policy is here sounded and it is in unison with the course now attributed to the Russian Plenipotentiaries. It appears that at the first meeting of the conference a distinct agreement was arrived at that the proceedings should be kept secret, and if that compact has been thus deliberately violated by the Russians, they will be the losers in the long run.

Another manoeuvre attributed to the Russians is that they themselves suggested the continuance of the conferences on Sundays as well as on week-days, but when M. Witte was questioned on this matter by a reporter, he significantly said "I am a Christian," thus seeking to fix on the Japanese the reproach of belonging to an alien creed. Had the truth been told the public would have known that the Sunday proposal fell through at once and that it emanated originally from the Russian side. Of course the conference did not sit on Sunday, and the answer of the Japanese to this manoeuvre of the other party was that Mr. Takahira and Mr. Takeshita attended afternoon service in the Church. But what a miserable prostitution of Christianity to diplomatic ends this Russian trick represents! We can not but repeat what we have more than once remarked that Russia's attitude throughout this war stamps her as the worst enemy Christianity ever had. Her bigotted prejudices have disgraced the creed; her appeals to religious fanaticism have rendered it almost contemptible, and her conduct on sea and on shore has been a parody of the great principle of charity. As to the Sunday-conference question at Portsmouth, does it not assume an almost ludicrous aspect when we think it out quietly? Do Christians believe that their Deity would be offended because half a dozen diplomats and their staffs stopped away from church in order to hasten the cessation of a terrible war? Imagine that eminently practical religionist, the Nazarene, invited to answer this question, and conceive how he would have torn the sophistry to shreds.

The Jiji's information is that the Russian Plenipotentiaries have not accepted the whole of Japan's proposals as a basis of discussion but have merely agreed to examine and discuss them one by one, and to postpone for final conference the two questions of re-imbursement and territorial cession. The first point discussed was that relating to Korea, and, according to the Jiji's telegrams, an agreement was arrived at, in the sense that Russia recognises Japan "preponderant influence" (yuyetsu-ken) in the Peninsula but stipulates that she herself (Russia) shall not be placed in a worse position than other Powers.

Another and a later telegram to the same journal says that although the views of the Plenipotentiaries differ widely, their tendency is to come together, and on the whole, the prospects are good.

A cablegram to the Kokumin alleges that the pessimistic view originally taken by the American newspapers was due mainly to their ignorance of the procedure adopted. In connexion with this Mr. O'Laughlin telegraphs that though both sides show an equally resolute divergence of views with regard to Saghalien and the re-imbursement question, an impression begins to prevail that they will ultimately come together.

The same authority emphatically denies the rumour that President Roosevelt has urged upon the Japanese Plenipotentiaries the advisability of reducing their terms, or, at any rate, making them as small as possible. President Roosevelt is not in the least degree likely to exercise such interference.

Mr. O'Laughlin further telegraphs that three New York financiers have come to Portsmouth and are conferring with M. Witte, and a similar item of news reaches the Hochi Shimbun, with a rider that the transaction relates to finding funds for the re-imbursement. We opine that these are the idlest of rumours. It would be strange diplomacy on the part of the crafty Russian statesman to be on the one hand declaring his resolve not to agree to any monetary payment and, on the other, seeking funds to make such a payment.

The Hochi Shimbun and the Nichi Nichi Shimbun both publish telegrams in the sense that the proposal to hold in abeyance the questions of re-imbursement and Saghalien came from Baron Komura, and that the rupture of the conference was thus averted. If that be so, an obvious interpretation suggests itself.

The latest telegram published on the morning of the 16th by the Hochi is from New York. It says that although it had been hoped that the meeting on the 14th instant would proceed calmly in view of the great storm having blown over, the discussion, on the contrary, waxed very warm.

London telegraphs that a Council of State has been held in the Palace at St. Petersburg and that it was determined to continue the war rather than to cede any territory or pay any indemnity.

German newspapers are reported to have pronounced favourably on Japan's terms and to be of the opinion that the indemnity question will present less difficulty than the question of Saghalien. This news comes from a German source and a previous telegram had independently conveyed the same news. It has to be observed, however, that the only German journal thus far specifically quoted, namely, the Tageblatt, pronounces Japan's terms excessive, and that the Hamburger Nachrichten, on the eve of the conference, proposed that Europe warn Japan against preferring extreme demands.

It appears that Russian newspapers are opposed to Japan's terms. The Bourse Gazette is quoted by a London telegram as declaring that the question of peace must be decided not in the conference chamber at Portsmouth but on the battle-field. If that appreciation of the attitude of the Russian press be correct, it would follow that the Russian nation, in so far as it is represented by its newspapers, does not want peace unless it is in a position to dictate its own terms. That would be a most important factor in the situation, as suggesting that anything like severe conditions might unite the Russian nation for an effort stronger than any yet made by it. But fuller information is needed.

The French journal Le Temps considers (Jiji Shimpō's London service) that Japan's proposals constitute a possible basis of negotiation. From the same source we learn that London takes a pessimistic view of the outcome of the negotiations, but Paris is sanguine. All the London journals approve Japan's desire to keep the proceedings of the conference secret, and The Times writes a very strong article on the subject.

It has been stated in foreign telegrams received in Japan that the peace conference was about to be broken up when the Japanese plenipotentiaries prevented the rupture of negotiations by postponing the discussion of two articles relating to the cession of territory and the reimbursement of expenses. But enquiries made at the Foreign Office show that such is not the case. The Plenipotentiaries have not yet met more than three or four times and the conference therefore has not reached a point warranting any surmise concerning a rupture. Therefore there is no truth in the allegation that the Japanese plenipotentiaries prevented the danger of a rupture by postponing the discussion of the above terms.

Thursday, August 17.

All the leading Japanese journals confirm the news that the first three clauses of Japan's conditions have been discussed and decided by the Peace Conference. The first clause relates to Korea: Russia has agreed to recognise Japan's preponderating power there. We judge that "preponderating power" is the term used by the Plenipotentiaries, but it is difficult to be quite certain for some telegraphists translate the original by soshuken, which involves an idea of suzerainty, and others use yuyetsu-ken, which signifies simply preponderating power. At all events it may be taken for granted that Russia has agreed to definitely recognise Korea as wholly within Japan's sphere of influence. There do not appear to be any reservations. It was alleged at first that M. Witte insisted on a condition in the sense that no forts should be constructed on Korea's frontiers, but if he entertained any such purpose he evidently abandoned it in the conference chamber. This is a very signal concession, for in 1903 Russia's warring contention was that an extensive neutral zone must be created along the Yalu and the Tumen, a zone cutting deeply into Korea. In fact her last position was that it must be a zone wholly within Korea. Her leading journals also wrote that it would be quite intolerable to see Japan installed in a peninsula which, alike by sea and by land, constitutes a partition between the sections of Russia's near-Eastern dominions. The loss of the Liaotung district deprives this last objective of any force, and makes the concession easier for Russia, but these considerations do not diminish the importance of the arrangement from a Japanese point of view.

The second clause settled is the evacuation of Manchuria. Reuter telegraphs on the bare fact, but Tokyo journals add the interesting details that both Powers mutually agree to withdraw, and pledge themselves to maintain the integrity of the Chinese empire the open door also being proclaimed throughout the Three Provinces. If these details be correct, and there is no reason to question them, their importance can scarcely be over-rated. In the first place China is reassured; she need no longer trouble herself about her own prospects in Manchuria. In the second, those that sought to discredit Japan by accusing her of selfish ambitious designs on the neighbouring continent are completely answered. In the third place, a new evidence is afforded Japan's desire to treat her enemy with courtesy and to refrain from demanding savouring of humiliation. Russia, it is true, has to evacuate Manchuria, but that "face" of which she is so blindly precious is saved by Japan's simultaneous engagement evacuate it also. In the fourth place—and this is not the least striking feature—certain publicists' persistent efforts to create suspicions of Japan's integrity by charging her with the design of monopolizing the trade of the Chinese continent, to the exclusion especially of German interests, are effectually defeated. And in the fifth place Japan shows herself perfectly loyal to the policy which forms the basis of her alliance with England: the policy of preserving China's integrity and the open door.

There is one point which presents some perplexity in connexion with this clause. Reuter says that the abandonment of Russia's rights—presumably he refers to special privileges—in Manchuria has been agreed to, but the Tokyo telegrams say that neither Power is to have any special privileges in Manchuria. The latter version is a little difficult to credit, for it would be only fair that Japan should enjoy the reversion of any privileges enjoyed by Russia in the Three Provinces so long as China's sovereignty was not impaired. Among such privileges is the lease of the Yentai and Fushun coal mines, a matter of great importance to the owner of the East China Railway.

The third point settled is that Russia has agreed to hand over to Japan the railway south of Harbin. That also is highly significant as a guarantee of future peace. Without this railway Russia can not harbour any new designs against Manchuria. In fact she is thrust back to the position she occupied before the leasing of Port Arthur, and is once more deprived of her much coveted exit upon ice-free seas. No fair-minded person can deny that she has a right to struggle against such a limited destiny, and no student of her history can suppose that she will sit down tamely under this great set-back.

The above three conditions were discussed and agreed to at the Conference on the 14th. Still later news says that on the 15th the fourth clause was discussed and agreed to without difficulty. This is alleged to be the clause providing for the transfer of Russia's Jaoutung lease to Japan.

The fifth clause was then taken. This—according to the Hochi which has a special correspondent at Portsmouth—was the much talked-of condition that Russia should agree to a limitation of her naval forces in the Far East. This led to a vehement discussion and as no agreement could be come to, it was decided to postpone the question. Accordingly, the sixth clause was taken, namely, that relating to fishing privileges along the coasts of Primorsk and Kamchatka. The Russian Plenipotentiaries are reported to have agreed without difficulty, though we must assume that some reservations were demanded and conceded. In point of fact the main part of the fishing in these northern seas is already carried on by Japanese subjects.

The seventh condition related to the transfer of Russian war-ships now interned in neutral ports. This also led to discussion which had not been terminated when the conference rose on the 15th instant.

The Kokumin Shimbun's correspondent says that pessimistic views as to the outcome of the conference are in the ascendant, and that there is no tangible reason for either pessimism or optimism. All that can truly be said is that things are uncertain. As the conference, it is proceeding satisfactorily. The Iji Shimpō's correspondent expresses the same view. He says that at present the chances are equal.

A curious statement is telegraphed to the Gyo Shimpō from New York, namely, that M. Martens is no longer allowed to take part in the conference, and that he will not again attend its sittings until the issue is known. One is disposed to infer that he has been showing too much obstructiveness, but the story may be quite baseless.

From the same source we are informed that the armistice question was not brought up because Japan conveyed to M. Witte through President Roosevelt her determination not to accede to an armistice until a peace convention had been actually concluded.

A telegram to the Asahi Shimbun from London alleges that a newspaper correspondent intimate with M. Witte quotes him as saying that although the conference may seem to be progressing favourably it is not really approaching a satisfactory settlement, since Russia can not possibly agree to either the cession of Saghalien or the payment of money under any name whatever. Unless the Tokyo Government withdraws these terms the continuance of the war is inevitable. From the tone of this statement the correspondent said to be intimate with M. Witte is evidently a partizan of the latter, and we judge him to be the correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, for the Iji Shimpō's London correspondent quotes the Daily Telegraph's man as speaking in almost the same strain. The Kokumin Shimbun, in discussing the state of affairs, alludes to the fact that Russia is utilizing not only her own press but also several of the newspapers of foreign countries. One noted London journal represented by a distinguished correspondent publishes messages couched in such a strain that if they be not directly influenced by Russia, they are certainly inspired by unconscious or conscious partizanship of her cause.

As a representative of the most intelligent opinion in France, the utterances of Le Temps have aroused much interest in Japan. Le Temps divides Japan's demands into three classes: first, demands easy to concede; secondly, demands comparatively hard to accept, to which category belong the payment of an indemnity and the cession of Saghalien; and thirdly, demands which humiliate a great European Power, namely, the limiting of Russia's naval forces in the Far East and the transfer of the interned war-ships. The Asahi comments upon this classification. It notes that the Temps was prominent among the journals which advocated peace immediately after the battle of Liaoyang. Certainly it is hard to be asked to pay indemnities, but as the renowned economist Paul Leroy Beaulieu remarks, indemnities, though open to some objections, belong to the same class as the costs by the losing party in a law-suit. The principle of justice demand such payments. As to the assertion that Russia would be humiliated by agreeing to hand over her interned ships and to set limits to her naval expansion in the Far East, the Asahi reminds its Paris contemporary that Vladivostok remains in Russia's hands and may be made the base of a new big naval programme. What security is there that France herself will not lend Russia money to build up a fresh naval menace to the peace of the East? The interned ships, too, were driven to their present sanctuaries by Japanese menaces. Had they remained at sea they must have been sunk or captured. They may be said to belong already, in part at any rate, to Japan. Such is the gist of the Asahi's arguments and it does not at all endorse the suggestion of Le Temps that these demands may be cominated by a money payment.

We may mention in this context that the Nichi Nichi also writes strongly in favour of making no concession whatever in the matter of the re-imbursement and the Saghalien questions. It refers to the Journal which, although a leading newspaper of France, Russia's ally, recognises that the latter's administration of Saghalien does not warrant her claim of ownership, and it refers also to the Russ, Count Lamsdorff's organ, which admits that there is room to discuss the re-imbursement demand. These utterances are significant. Further, the Nichi Nichi expresses its valuable opinion that much importance attaches to the continuance of the conference in the face of M. Witte's declarations about the re-imbursement and Saghalien. If the Russian Plenipotentiaries foresaw early that these demands must involve an ultimate rupture, of what use would it be to enter into the detailed discussion now in progress. If the Japanese Plenipotentiaries foresaw that there was no prospect of agreement as to these crucial points, why should they continue the Conference? The Nichi Nichi is decidedly optimistic, as is also the Kokumin.

It is now stated that there was no special arrangement about postponing the conditions relating to re-imbursement and the cession of Saghalien. These points stood last on the list of Japan's demands and so their discussion comes last in the natural order of things. This explanation is given by the Asahi Shimbun. It is supplemented by the Nichi Nichi. The latter says that the Russian Plenipotentiaries asked to see the whole of Japan's terms. They were shown the list, whereupon M. Witte declared that Russia could not agree to reimburse Japan's outlays or to cede Saghalien. His objection did not extend, however, to any demand for the immediate discussion of these points or for making the fate of the conference immediately dependent on them. He merely recorded his protest, and the conference then proceeded to examine the terms item by item.

NEW SONGS.

Messrs. Chappell & Co., Ltd., the well-known music publishers of 50, New Bond-st., London, sent us out four new songs, all of which we can heartily recommend to local amateurs. Indeed, in nearly each case, they reach a higher standard than usual. The first, called "Four Jolly Sailors," is a song arranged from the quartette out of "A Princess of Kensington," the words being by Capt. Basil Hood and the music from the clever pen of Mr. Edward German. Needless to say with such a title, the song is of a rollicking nature, and as the compass is not high it would admirably suit the bass singer who fills no unimportant part in local programmes. "Thou little tender flower," words and music by Teresa del Riego, is an excellent number, and quite up to the high level attained by this gifted writer. Two love songs come next under notice. The first is called "For lack and love of you," and the second entitled "World that once was a garden," the words being by Richard Le Gallienne, the music by Hermann Löhr. These are two well-written trifles and the contrast between the first and second being well marked they can be sung in succession with great advantage. The last song in the bundle, "Life's Garden," words by Harold Simpson, music by Ellen Cowdell, is a little disappointing, the music in our opinion not being in exact sympathy with the words.

Prince and Princess Arisugawa are expected to arrive at Kobe on Aug. 23rd.

THE JAPANESE PRESS ON THE CONFERENCE

Friday, August 11.

The Nichi Nichi Shinbun observes that there have been many preliminary rumours about this conference, but they seem to have had little foundation, and it is hard to believe that such an affair will end in failure. M. Witte will do everything in his power to render it a success. As for the allegation that the Tsar has instructed M. Witte to refuse the payment of an indemnity under all circumstances, our contemporary questions whether any such statement has been made by the Plenipotentiaries themselves, and is at any rate disposed to regard it in the light of bluff. Even supposing that the Tsar gave such instructions, there is no conclusive reason why he should not modify them. The sentiment of the Japanese nation and the determination of the Japanese Government are not to be shaken. There is not on this side any desire to humiliate Russia, but there is a firm resolve to claim what is rightful and to fight on until Russia concedes it.

Sunday, August 13.

Three newspapers write editorially on the subject of the Conference this morning (13th). The Hochi echoes what the Fiji has already said, namely, that the chances of peace seem small. Berlin alone takes an optimistic view. All other authorities are pessimistic. Japan must therefore turn her eyes from the conference chamber to the field. The Fiji thinks that Russia has never acknowledged to herself her defeat and that her despatch of a plenipotentiary was due to her unsettled internal conditions; these have changed, however, since M. Witte set out. The war party has recovered its influence, and now it is not improbable that in order to clear his own skirts the Russian Plenipotentiary may break off the negotiations and seek to lay the blame upon the severity of Japan's terms. But the world will not err. Public opinion will inevitably fix the responsibility upon Russia. The Nippon, however, thinks that Russia is only bargaining. Her declarations as to not ceding any territory or paying any money must be taken cum grano. They merely indicate that she wants to get the amounts reduced. But if she persists in refusing to yield, she must be made to yield: that is all.

Monday, August 14.

It is obvious that whatever knowledge the public have of Japan's terms must have been obtained from the Russian side. We know how thoroughly the Japanese can maintain secrecy when they desire to do so, and in this case they not only desire but also have the very strongest reasons for reticence. The question then arises, why have M. Witte and his party been so communicative? A diplomatist, speaking through the columns of the Fiji Shimpō, opines that such openness must be attributed to one of two causes: either the plenipotentiaries see no chance of coming to an agreement with Japan and have consequently published the terms in order to clear their own skirts; or, by making known Japan's demands, they hope to alienate from her the sympathy of the nations. But inasmuch as all sound diplomacy refrains from babbling, it is hard to see how the Russian Plenipotentiaries can hope to save their own credit by perpetrating a diplomatic faux-pas; and inasmuch as the terms are thoroughly moderate, which fact must be patent to M. Witte, their announcement will win sympathy for Japan rather than provoke antipathy. We are inclined to think, for our own part, that whatever is known of the terms is due to a different reason, namely, M. Witte's desire to conciliate the American press. He commenced his campaign by an appeal to journalism, and he is well aware that the side which takes the reporter into its confidence is much more likely to earn his goodwill than the side which keeps him at arm's length. But though the Japanese have been silent they have also, we may assume, been perfectly courteous, and the issues at stake are too grave to permit manoeuvres of this kind. At all events what is certain is that at the present moment of writing (Monday morning) a tone of hopefulness is manifest in all quarters. The Hochi says plainly that Russia's protests are directed solely to modification of Japan's terms and that the two sides may be confidently expected to come together. Our contemporary predicts a settlement before the end of this month. The Shogyo Shimpō takes much the same view, its idea being that Russia's announcement of objections, the prominence recently given to the views of the war party and the despatches of Linevitch are all inspired by the hope of reducing Japan's terms. Different news may come before we go to press.

A diplomatist, quoted by the Fiji Shimpō, thinks that in view of Russia's internal conditions and in view of the moderation of Japan's demands, a settlement will be reached. But there will be many "incidents" en route, and probably the negotiations will at one time reach within a hair's breadth of rupture. That is what we (Japan Mail) have often ventured to predict.

The Fiji Shimpō writes editorially in very strong terms about the disclosure of the peace terms, an act which it unhesitatingly ascribes to the Russian plenipotentiaries. It is not quite plain, however, what inference our contemporary draws, for while declaring, on the one hand, that this want of due reticence betrays a conviction of the hopelessness of the conference, on the other it attributes the act to a groping for public sympathy such as shall induce Japan to be more moderate. The Fiji thinks, however, that nothing could exceed Japan's moderation as displayed by these terms. They may not be perfectly accurate, but that they are approximately correct cannot be doubted, and their publication by the Russians is an inexcusable breach of diplomatic good faith. At all events in the face of demands so moderate no hesitation should be allowed: a limit of time should be set for Russia's reply.

The Nichi Nichi thinks that nothing could exceed the moderation of the terms. They do not display any evidence of triumphant victory or the smallest wish to humiliate Russia. Even M. Witte himself, in his heart of hearts, must recognise that Japan has put the utmost restraint upon herself. It was already no small concession on the part of Japan, the victor, to enter the negotiation hall on equal terms with Russia, the vanquished. Altogether Russia's conduct has resembled what might have been expected from China. Her one thought has been to save her face. All her devices have been addressed to that end. Yet as a reasoning Power she must know well that, having been beaten in war on land and on sea, she can not possibly hope to make terms of peace such as shall cost her nothing in the matter of reputation. Of what use is it for M. Witte to declare in one breath that he will spare no effort to conclude peace, and in the next to say that he will accept no terms hurtful to Russia's honour? It is too late for talk of that kind. Russia must pay something for peace if she wants it. What Japan asks her to pay is the very smallest price; it is a price remarkable for moderation and conciliatory spirit.

The Nippon affirms that from Japan's point of view the terms are too small, whatever they may seem to Russia. They embody several already accomplished facts: the loss of Liaotung is already an accomplished fact; the loss of two-thirds of the East China Railway is already an accomplished fact; the beating of Linevitch and the capture of Vladivostok are questions not of ability but of time. Nothing remains then but the reimbursement of Japan's expenses and Russia is asked to reimburse them by way of immunity from further losses. Unless she consents, it is as sure as anything human can be certain that she will lose some of her continental dominions. And these facts being quite patent to the people, it is their indignation the St. Petersburg Government has to fear if it refuses to agree to a timely settlement.

The Asahi writes in very strong terms. It seems to think that Japan has been too moderate. She has asked for less than the world would have endorsed her in demanding. She has even endeavoured to find terms which shall make things easy for her enemy. If Russia does not accept these proposals she will feel the consequences. The Japanese spoke well who recently wrote that it would be incomparably preferable to fight on and even lose his life rather than to have to look forward to fighting ten years hence when he will have a wife and children. Russia can not reconcile herself to surrendering Saghalien, let her be discontented. Let her from her whole of the Maritime Province teach her resignation and to enable her to form a juster estimate of her situation.

The Chuo Shinbun is scarcely less severe in its tone. The gist of its writing is that Russia does not like these terms; the best plan is to formulate new ones a year hence. In another twelve-month Vladivostok, the Maritime Province and Kamchatka will stand in the same category with Saghalien. Should Russia shrink from the inevitable now, she is quite welcome to postpone operation for another year.

Tuesday, August 15.

The Fiji Shimpō writes editorially in strong terms. It is astonished at the moderation of Japan's conditions and it advises Russia should be required merely to answer yes or no. Had Saghalien been merely a part of Russia's dominions there might have been some sympathy with her reluctance to give it up, but it belonged to Japan thirty years ago, and it is moreover now in Japanese armed possession. Russia can not recede. Her refusal to cede it is at once reasonable and unpractical. She decided also to pay an indemnity, through the universally recognised penalty of de-eliminate the indemnity and the cession of Saghalien and what remains of Japan's demands? The fisheries on the Primorsk are already carried on by her subjects, and the other conditions are in effect already accomplished. As for the value of Saghalien, it is virtually nothing—certainly not in the hands of Russia, who has never developed it nor sought to make more of it a convict station. The Fiji's conclusion is that Japan must not abate one jot of her demands, and the Fiji is usually one of the most moderate of Japanese journals.

Other newspapers write in a similar strain. The Yomiuri even hopes that the conference will fail. It considers that nothing short of the reduction of Vladivostok and the occupation of the Maritime Province will peace. The condition that would be created were Japan's terms conceded would be comparable to manufacturing a puppet and forgetting to put in the spirit—scotching the snake, in fact. Underlying this utterance of the Yominri there is an evident disposition to blame the Government for not asking enough—the first voice of party politics that has thus far been sounded. The Nippon also criticises the terms, assuming them to be what rumour represents them. It notes that there is not a word about the disarming of Vladivostok, which had been generally regarded as essential to the preservation of peace. The Japanese nation will not regret the rupture of the conference if success is so intangible. But as for Russia who, having suffered the disgrace of open defeat on sea and on shore, now clamours about saving her face in the conference chamber, her conduct is as short-sighted as it is inconsequential. The Shogyo Shimpo (organ of business circles) observes that Russia is not asked to give up anything except Saghalien, which she may be said to have acquired by a trick, and Liaotung, which was wrested from Japan by intimidation. Happily the Japanese Plenipotentiaries are resolute. They will not yield a jot of the irreducible minimum now proposed, and as for the Japanese nation it is fully prepared for either eventuality, peace or the continuance of the war. But the Shogyo Shimpo is not pessimistic. It believes that Russia is only talking, and it can not believe that she would have entered the conference at all had her resolve been such as M. Witte now represents it to be.

Wednesday, August 16.

It appears to be the general opinion of the Japanese press that the negotiations are not by any means hopeless. Naturally a great deal of importance is attached to the fact that the discussion of the two most difficult problems has been deferred to a later date. Plainly the inference suggested is that some prospect of dealing successfully with those problems when they come up again in due turn, is seen by the Plenipotentiaries. The Nichi Nichi, writing on this phase of the matter, observes that although the proposal for holding these two problems in abeyance seems to have come from Baron Komura and may perhaps be attributed chiefly to a desire on Japan's side to show the utmost possible patience and the most conciliatory spirit, still it is inconceivable that the Plenipotentiaries of this country, who have all the details before them, would have suggested a course which they knew must end in failure. On the other hand, that the Russian Plenipotentiaries fell in with this suggestion is equally significant, though it may be interpreted in one of two ways. It may mean, and does probably mean, that M. Witte detects an avenue of exit from the dilemma; or it may mean that he is merely manoeuvring to throw upon Japan the whole responsibility of the conference's ultimate failure. The Nichi Nichi's article has a caption which implies uncertainty as to the final outcome, but the tone of the writing is distinctly hopeful.

The Kokumin Shimbu is even more emphatically sanguine. Under the heading of Tokyo-dayori—our contemporary's customary caption when conveying its views on various topics—the Kokumin plainly expresses the opinion that the conference is proceeding satisfactorily and that a general rupture need not be apprehended. Time will be required for completing the necessarily slow procedure of examining and discussing each condition separately; but, on the other hand, each process of discussion and each condition disposed of is a distinct step towards the grand finale. Already the Russian Plenipotentiaries have made a concession in accepting the Japanese scheme of procedure, and already they are reported to have agreed to this country's Korean programme. Compliance in the latter respect is very significant, and may be taken to mean that the Saghalien question is not so crucial as rumour implies. The German view that Russia will find the indemnity condition easier to concede than the surrender of Saghalien seems to the Kokumin very short-sighted, and as for Russia's own protests that she is prepared to continue the war, our contemporary regards them as so much bluff. The Japanese nation need not, in the Kokumin's opinion, feel any uneasiness. In another article our contemporary says that the nation is watching events calmly, being quite reconciled to the idea of continuing the war unless an honorable peace can be procured.

The Fuji Shimpo, however, maintains its stalwart tone. It distinctly disapproves of postponing the discussion of the Saghalien and the re-imbursement questions. Remove these, and what remains to be discussed? As a whole Japan's terms are even less than she had a right to expect. Why then put aside their very back-bone as though it were a secondary consideration? Would it not be more straightforward and more statesmanlike to place these crucial problems in the forefront of the discussion and to make the final fate of the conference depend on them? Should the present attempt to restore peace fail because of Russia's inability to recognise or to acknowledge that she is beaten, Japan is perfectly ready to continue the war, but she is not ready to abate anything of her just demands, and that fact can not be made too plain by her Plenipotentiaries.

Thursday, August 17.

The Kokumin adheres to its views that Russia's outward attitude does not indicate her real mind. She must have peace. It is not those that talk loudest whose resolution is firmest. Consider the fact that she has agreed to the third of Japan's demands, namely, the total withdrawal from Manchuria. Our contemporary does not elaborate this point so strongly as we have done above, but it observes with justice that even a fraction of such complacency if exercised by Russia in 1903 would have averted war altogether. Baron Rosen, sitting in the conference chamber and recalling the course of the ante-bellum negotiations, must have experienced a curious sentiment when he signified his acquiescence in Russia's complete effacement in Manchuria.

A telegram from London to the Nichi Nichi Shimbu says that St. Petersburg maintains its high tone, loudly proclaiming that unless Japan abandons her demand for an indemnity and for the cession of Saghalien, the conference will be broken off during the current week, and all the Russian forces will be mobilized. London adds to this the word "bluff" (kyokatsui).

Berlin, on the contrary, alleges that the Russian newspapers have changed their note and are now all advocating peace. Berlin has been optimistic throughout and the Germans are generally right. We trust there may be no break in their record this time.

Dr. Morrison telegraphs that the proposal to keep the proceedings secret came in the first place from M. Witte and was agreed to formally by Baron Komura.

THE KAMCHATKA AND OKHOTSK EXPEDITIONS.

Admiral Kataoka naturally does not disclose the exact names of the places whither naval squadrons have been sent. He speaks merely of Kamchatka and the Sea of Okhotsk. But it may fairly be assumed that Petropavlosk is the objective point in the case of Kamchatka. Petropavlosk has a name in history. It is a superb harbour so far as safety and accommodation are concerned, but it labours under the great disadvantage of being ice-bound during 7 months out of 12. Here in August 1854 took place the disastrous Anglo-French attempt to reduce what was then the principal Russian naval station in the Far East. The British commander, Admiral Bruce, shot himself on the eve of the attack, and thenceforward misfortune dogged the doings of the allies. The story has often been told and need not be repeated here, especially as we speak from mere conjecture as to the destination of the Japanese Squadron. Neither do we know what fortifications, if any, exist at Petropavlosk. In 1854 it had received the imprimatur of Muravieff as Russia's chief naval port, but it was ousted subsequently from its pride of place by Nikolaiefsk and the latter in turn yielded the par to Vladivostok. It may be that Petropavlosk is now ill-defended. Possibly Okhotsk itself is the objective of the second squadron. Some days are expected to elapse before definite news is reached, but we ourselves doubt whether there will be any such delay. If the authorities had foreseen an interval they would not have published the original news. These attacks upon the Russian coasts can not fail to strengthen the hands of the Japanese Plenipotentiaries.

PRECEDENCE AT THE IMPERIAL COURT.

Some of our readers may be interested to read that the order of precedence in the Imperial Japanese Court is as follows:

- Prince Fushimi (General).
- " Arisugawa (Admiral).
- " Kan'in (Lieut.-General).
- " Higashi Fushimi (Captain of Navy).
- " Fushimi, the Younger, (Lieut.-Commander).
- " Koyo.
- " Kuni (Major).
- " Nashimoto (Major).
- " Kita Shirakawa (Captain of Cavalry).
- Marquis Ito, President of the Privy Council.
- Prince M. Kujo.
- Marquis Yamagata, Chief of the Staff.
- " Oyama, Supreme Commander of the Manchurian Armies.
- Count Katsura, Premier, and temporary Minister for Foreign Affairs.
- " Matsukata.
- " Inouye.
- Marquis Tokudaiji, Grand Chamberlain.
- Viscount Tanaka, Minister for the Imperial Household.
- Baron Yamamoto, Minister for the Navy.
- Viscount Yoshikawa, Minister for Home Affairs.
- Baron Kiyoura, Minister for Agricultural and Commercial Affairs.
- " Sone, Minister for Finance.
- " Komura, ex-Minister for Foreign Affairs and now Peace Plenipotentiary.
- General Terauchi, Minister for the Army.
- Mr. K. Hatano, Minister for Justice.
- Mr. K. Oura, Minister for Communications.
- Mr. Y. Kubota, Minister for Education.
- Count Okuma.
- Marquis Saionji.
- Count Hijikata.
- Viscount Enomoto.
- Count Itagaki.
- " Nodzu (General).
- " Kabayama (Admiral).
- Viscount Sakuma (General).
- " Ito (Admiral), Chief of the Naval Staff Office.
- Baron R. Inouye (Vice-Admiral).
- " Kuroki (General).
- " Oku (General).

MANCHURIA.

Friday, August 11.

The Foreign Office publishes another of the cryptic reports for which General Linevitch is becoming famous. We do not imagine that the General himself telegraphs these incomprehensible and inconsequential stories to his Government. The probability is that the despatches pass under a process of obscurity at the hands of official editors. One of the latest telegrams speaks of a Russian force advancing in the Hailungching district towards Manchengchientsz, which is 5 versts north of Nanshangingsz. There on the highlands they found a Japanese outpost which, at 1 p.m., retired without fighting. The Russian force then drove the Japanese from their first line and compelled them to fall back on their fortified position. Next day (3rd instant) this force resumed the offensive, and its artillery defeated an attempt of the Japanese army to envelop the Russian left.

Thus far the story is quite intelligible. But now follows the perplexing sequel:—"When our force had completed its object without loss and began to retire the enemy advanced, but our vehement fire of guns and rifles compelled him at once to retreat." Has anything occurred in the whole course of this war to justify the hypothesis that a Russian force could drive the Japanese from their advanced lines and compel them to fall back on their fortified positions without the assailants suffering any loss? Evidently what happened was that the Japanese tried to draw the Russians on, but the latter at the critical moment made their habitual discovery that their object was accomplished and that the time for retreating had come.

The report proceeds thus:—"On the 1st of August our Cossacks placed men in ambush at several places on the south of the Japanese position and exchanged rifle-fire with their infantry. On the 2nd at dawn our force advanced to Langanchingsz (18 versts south of Taolu) and drove back the enemy." Whatever this "driving back" may have amounted to, it is evident that the opponents are within easy striking distance of each other in northern Manchuria. But so they were for a long time on the Shaho. Still there is every reason for Linevitch to make a supreme effort now if ever.

Linevitch says that on the 5th instant the Japanese having destroyed the buildings at De Castries Bay, withdrew to their ships.

Saturday, August 12.

In the Jiji Shimbu there is a telegram saying that a force of the enemy made an essay on the east of Yingepien-mun on the 3rd instant, but were repulsed. On the following day they appeared on the west, where a night attack was directed against them and they were driven back, leaving a Staff Lieut-Colonel among the dead on the field.

Tuesday, August 15.

The Asahi Shimbu writes that Linevitch having received intelligence which suggests that two powerful Japanese armies are moving against his left, has transferred his headquarters from Kunchuling to Kirin. The impression produced by the various rumours as to the dispositions of Linevitch is that he is perplexed to know whence the bolt will fall. A short time ago he was concentrating his strength to avert a flanking essay on the part of Nogi's army on the Japanese extreme left. Next we heard of him collecting his forces opposite Kuroki, namely on the right of the original Japanese Manchurian armies. And now he is preparing to meet an advance from the upper waters of the Yalu and the Tumen. Where in all this can one detect any evidence of the offensive operations which he proclaimed his intention of commencing last month? Was that a mere piece of bluff? Kuropatkin at least did what he said he was going to do, but Linevitch talks and does nothing. Another account depicts him employing 15,000 Chinese on defensive works along the Itungchou-Kunchuling lines. That would be a natural precaution if he anticipated the necessity of drafting forces from his right to strengthen his left, but it does not in any way suggest assuming the offensive. Meanwhile the rainy season has ended and in another week the roads will be passable.

Mr. Hiraoka Kotaro, a well-known member of the Progressists and of the House of Representatives, makes some interesting remarks in the columns of the Hochi Shimbu about Manchuria. Assuming that Russia's concessions in Manchuria are transferred to Japan, the latter will have a heavy responsibility and will require considerable capital to develop the resources of the locality. The first question is that of the railway. Unless this can be made profitable it will only be an additional burden, and to make it profitable means that trade will have to be diverted from Yingkow to Tairen (Talien). The former labours under the great disadvantage of being frozen up during nearly four months every year, whereas the latter is always open. But, on the other hand, Yingkow enjoys the marked advantage of being situated at the mouth of the Liao, the great water-way of Manchuria. The junk traffic on the Liao is immense and immemorial, and many shrewd Japanese have thought that Yingkow, as the sea-port of this water-way, defies competition. The same—we may remark en passant—used to be said of the Peiho and the railway from Tientsin to Peking, but the railway won the day. Mr. Hiraoka's researches show that the cost of water-carriage by the Liao far exceeds the cost of carriage by the railway, and if that comparison be correct the question is settled, for against the vastly superior celerity of the railway, water carriage usually has the counter-balancing merit of reduced cost. Mr. Hiraoka therefore predicts that the railway will ultimately get 500,000 tons of goods now carried by junks and from that source will obtain a gross income of 3¼ million yen, which must be supplemented by 1 million on account of passenger traffic. Four and three-quarter millions is still a poor figure, however, for a line of 300 miles. But here, comes in the Fushun coal mine. It is put down in Mr. Hiraoka's estimate as easily capable of sending one million tons of mineral along the line annually, which would give an additional income of 3 million yen, the grand total thus becoming 7¼ millions. As to the Fushun mine, Mr. Hiraoka repeats and confirms the optimistic views hitherto expressed. The mine, he says, has veins 50 feet thick and a length of 37 miles (the width is not mentioned) so that 1,200 million tons of coal are in sight. Calculating on a basis of only half that quantity, and supposing that the annual output is equal to that of the Milke mine, namely, 1 million tons, it appears that Fushun has a life of 600 years, and the total value of the mineral should be from 1,200 to 2,000 million yen. Its quality is at least as good as that of the Chikuzen or Buzen coal, and experience shows that fully 80 per cent. is lump coal. Even with the present primitive appliances it can be delivered at the railway for 2 yen a ton, and if it cost 3 yen to transport to Tairen, its total cost at the latter place will be 5 yen. With improved appliances, however, a yen per ton could be saved and thus the mineral could be delivered at Tairen for 4 yen per ton, which is only 50 sen dearer than Moji coal. These are Mr. Hiraoka's calculations, and he further thinks that the market could easily absorb all the output of the Fushun mine in addition to what it takes at present. He makes a very rosy showing.

Wednesday, August 16.

An officer who is said to have just returned from the front is quoted as saying that on the 5th instant there was a collision of outposts in the neighbourhood of Taolu and that a Japanese non-commissioned officer was missing in the subsequent roll-call. He further states that there was vehement cannonading all day throughout the 9th in the Kaiyuan direction, and he adds that the rainy season having ended the prospect of a general engagement is imminent. This last forecast is not borne out by the Kokumin's information, however. That journal says that everything is absolutely quiet and that there are no signs of large activity. The health of the Japanese troops is excellent. Not more than 2 or 3 per cent. are on the sick list, and their maladies are chiefly light cases of kakke not requiring removal from the field hospitals.

The 30th of July was the anniversary of the day when General Nogi's army finally invested Port Arthur, after having already suffered heavy losses. It was determined to celebrate the event, but as the 30th was wet, the celebration was postponed until the 2nd of August. On that day Nogi's officers, to the number of 450, came together from 21 quarters. The General made a speech. He said that this was a day not to be forgotten by the army. It pained him to think how few of those that had gone out from Japan on the great enterprise of reducing Port Arthur were present at this celebration. Already having suffered heavily at Nanshan, they had moved against Port Arthur where a still greater number of their brave comrades had fallen, and from thence they had advanced to the battle-field of Mukden where happily they had been able to render some small service. Since they had received reinforcements which not only made up their losses but even increased their strength, and if they met the enemy again he was confident that they would double the service they had done on that day. Nothing gave him greater satisfaction than to know that in spite of the evil climate the troops were enjoying good health and he conjured them to spare no care so that they might be fully competent to serve their country. The speech, very greatly moved the audience. Subsequently there were sports of various kinds, among them being a dance by men dressed partly in British uniforms and partly in Japanese.

Thursday, August 17.

General Linevitch, according to a Reuter telegram received at the Foreign Office, reports some skirmishes on the 11th and 12th which ended in the Japanese being driven back. On the 11th the scene was in the neighbourhood of the Yangjiling pass. The Russian General simply says that the Japanese in that vicinity assumed the offensive and were driven back. On the 12th he advanced on the west of the Mandarin road and on the west of the railway and reached Yangjiling at 11 a.m., but were thereafter repulsed, and being pursued by the Cossack retired to their advanced position.

It is scarcely necessary to point out that all these petty skirmishes reported on both sides are in the nature of reconnaissances, the natural result of which is a retreat on the part of the troops sent out on the work. They have no special significance, and very often when Linevitch reports that his men, having achieved their purpose, retired, his language is not really as strange as it sounds in lay ears.

KOREA.

Friday, August 11.

Masampo seems to have suffered severely from the storm of rain in the closing days of July. During 3 consecutive days commencing with the 26th deluges fell such as are said to have been without precedent in recent years. The settlement being surrounded by hills, became a reservoir for the swollen waters pouring down the gullies. An official account says that 2 bridges were swept away and that drains and stone fences suffered considerably. The newly constructed military railway had its baptism of flood. Throughout a length of some ten miles its central section was submerged in waters forming a big lake, and it is expected that some days must elapse before traffic is resumed. Fortunately the rain was not accompanied by wind. No casualties to man or beast are reported. Some shortage of the bean crop in districts adjacent to the river is anticipated, but except in places torn up by floods or buried under debris the rice will not, it is expected, be found to have suffered.

Saturday, August 12.

The news from Seoul indicates something like a crisis. In spite of Mr. Megata's remonstrances the Imperial Household has so far recognised the justice of the merchants' plaint as to grant them accommodation in the amount of 300,000 yen—one sum of 100,000 and one of 200,000. But when the merchants proceeded to cash the cheques at the First Bank and at the offices of the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha—presumably in the latter case the Household intended to pay out of the proceeds of the ginseng farm—they found that Mr. Megata had been ahead of them, and had asked to have payment suspended. This was a very strong measure on the part of Mr. Megata, but as his agreement distinctly provides that no financial step shall be taken without consulting him, and as in this case he has not been consulted, nay has even been defied, he must not shrink from an effective protest. Only a few months have elapsed since Mr. Megata went to Korea, and already the Koreans are evincing a determination to convert him into a cypher; reduce him to the position of an adviser whose advice is not sought and is ignored when given. The Government of Japan, recognising that the commerce of Korea can never be substantially developed unless sweeping financial reforms are effected so that the country shall have a sound currency, has not only lent to Korea a competent financial expert, but has also lent to her a large sum of money. She appears to have forgotten these things and to be determined to cling to her own old rusty grooves. What is to be done with such a country? How is the fiction of her independence to be preserved without sacrificing her prosperity and her well-being?

Sunday, August 13.

The troubles in Seoul have not by any means been settled. There is still a sharp conflict between the merchants who are seeking extraordinary accommodation and the Japanese who decline to be a party to any such transaction. Mr. Pak Che-sun, to whom the duty of organizing a new cabinet was entrusted, shrinks from setting about the task, and all the Ministers of the Crown are said to be endeavouring to shirk their duties as much as possible. A violent demonstration against the Home Office had to be quelled by the Japanese gendarmes with drawn swords. There has not been any injury to Japanese enterprises or any rudeness towards foreigners, but the situation is said to be decidedly disquieting, and one of its worst features is that the officials appear to have lost or abandoned all control.

Tuesday, August 15.

Mr. Li Yong-ik alone retains his seat among the Korean Ministers. His alleged reason for not joining them in sending in his resignation is that it is the duty of a Minister to stick to his post and not only administer affairs but also carry out reforms. Meanwhile the Emperor has ordered the other Ministers to withdraw their resignations.

Meanwhile the financial question remains unsettled. The merchants can not profit by the reckless benevolence of the Imperial Household owing to Mr. Megata's opposition.

On the 13th instant the agreement relating to the opening of the Korean coast-wise trade to Japanese subjects was at length signed. Already the actual work was in Japanese hands.

Thursday, August 17.

Li Yong-ik has been removed from the centre of Korean political depression. He has been sent as overseer to a distant provincial district, and calm has been restored in Seoul.

THE RAISED SHIPS.

In the Yorozu it is stated that the Varyag when she came to the surface had a list to port, but that this will be corrected when four 6-inch guns, two torpedo-tubes and a quantity of coal have been removed. She will then be on an even keel. Several days will be required to effect temporary repairs, and these will be done at Wolmi Island (Chemulpo). The work of raising her seems to have been very arduous and correspondingly costly. The Emperor has thought the occasion worthy of a congratulatory message to Rear-Admiral Arai who had charge of the operations. Chief among the difficulties to be overcome were the swift current prevailing at the place; the heavy rise and fall of tide (30 feet); and the fact that the vessel was lying on her side with only a small portion of her hull showing at low water. The plans for dealing with her were prepared by Rear-Admiral Arai, Captain Ota, Chief-Engineer Shibaoka and Dock-Engineer Hirose. The operations during 1904 did not accomplish more than righting the vessel through an angle of 25° and then winter set in. It was confidently predicted that the attempt must ultimately prove a failure, and indeed there were many occasions when this prediction seemed likely to be realized. But Admiral Arai and his coöperators stuck resolutely to their work.

As to the Bayan the Hochi Shinbun reports that her fires have been already lit and that she is now undergoing trials.

On the other hand it has been decided that the torpedo-depot ship Amur, which lies at the entrance of the Port Arthur dock, can not be raised. Consequently the important parts will be removed and the hull broken up.

The pumping out of the cruiser Pallada

(6,731 tons) commenced on the 11th inst., and at 6.25 a.m. on the 12th she emerged. Admiral Togo's report, dated the 18th of December 1904, described the Pallada as lying on the bottom with a list of some 5°, her head pointing S. W. ¼ S. At low water her stern deck was above water, and, speaking generally, her condition was the same as that of the Feresviet. But latest reports represented the Pallada as the most seriously injured of all the Russian vessels, and it was not expected that she would be floated so soon.

Thus far the Russian ships of war raised or captured are as follow:—

	tons.
Peresviet (battle-ship).....	12,674
Poltava (battle-ship).....	10,960
Bayan (cruiser).....	7,726
Varyag (cruiser).....	6,500
Pallada (cruiser).....	6,731
Orel (battle-ship).....	13,516
Nicolai (battle-ship).....	9,700
Seniavine	4,126
Apraksin	4,126
	76,099

There remain the Retvisan (battle-ship) of 12,902 tons and the Pobieda (battle-ship) 12,674 tons. If these two be successfully raised the total added to the Japanese navy will be 6 battle-ships and 5 cruisers aggregating 101,635 tons.

In the Hochi Shinbun we find a very interesting statement with reference to the ships sunk in Port Arthur. Our contemporary says that, in spite of the Russian declarations, these ships were not blown up or sunk by gun-fire. They were sent to the bottom by opening the Kingston valves, and before immersing them the Russians took the precaution of greasing all their machinery or coating it with cement to prevent corrosion. What evidently happened was that after the capture of 203-metre hill the Russians found their ships exposed to a cannonade which must ultimately render them quite unserviceable. They therefore decided to protect the vessels by laying them on the bottom, with all due precautions for their preservation against the effects of sea-water. Doubtless their conviction was that Port Arthur could hold out until the arrival of the Baltic Fleet, or that, even if the fortress fell before that event, a victory by Rojestvensky and the recovery of the command of the sea would compel Japan's withdrawal from Manchuria, which would of course result in Russia's re-instatement at Port Arthur. Then the ships could be comfortably raised from their resting place and the Double-headed Eagle would float over them once more. It is all exceedingly convenient for the Japanese. As the Hochi puts it, four battle-ships, an armoured cruiser and a protected cruiser have been presented to her just as rolls of crepe are presented with the proverbial noshi attached.

DEATH OF MR. C. L. DUBOIS.

We regret to record the death of Mr. C. L. Dubois (of Messrs. C. and J. Favre-Brandt & Co.) brother of Mr. J. Dubois of the Hotel Geneve, which took place about 5 o'clock on Thursday morning at his residence No. 53 Bluff. Mr. Dubois had been ailing for about a month and was attended by Dr. Reidhaar. Latterly complications developed and the immediate cause of his demise is given as inflammation of the bowels.

The deceased gentleman, who was a native of Switzerland, came to this country about 25 years ago, being then about 20 years of age. He was quiet and reserved in disposition, but none who came in contact with him could fail to appreciate his sterling qualities and his removal will be sincerely mourned.

SAGHALIEN.

Monday, August 14.

It appears that on the occasion of the combined expedition of the army and navy, the intention was to send torpedo-boats as well as steam pinnaces into the inlet, but the depth of water at the entrance proving insufficient, the torpedo-craft had to be given up. On the 9th the pinnaces entered and on the morning of the 10th they bombarded the enemy's position from the front while the military attacked from the flank. After two hours' fire the Russians ran up the white flag. Their casualties had been 16 killed (including the captain in command) and 8 wounded. This Tonnaicha inlet measures 16 miles by 7 and has a depth of 6 fathoms.

It is stated that a small force, of Russians still hold out at Mauka and that altogether there are some 300 to be accounted for. Doubtless they are ignorant that the main body have surrendered.

Tuesday, August 15.

Particulars are now published of the surrender of Liapnoff and his remaining troops. It appears that they were invited to lay down their arms. Their retreat southwards from Rykoff towards Patience Bay indicated a hope of finding some means of escape over-sea to the Maritime Province. No such means were available, inasmuch as the Japanese navy had complete command of the coasts of the island. But Liapnoff might have fruitlessly protracted the war, and General Haraguchi therefore desired to convey to him some clear explanation of the situation. On the 28th of July the Japanese General invited the chief administrative official of the Timovsky division to visit him. He laid before this official the hopelessness of continued resistance on the part of Liapnoff and pointed out that even if the Russian General reached the shore of Patience Bay, he could not get away over-sea unless he had wings. General Haraguchi did not invite M. Sergisogiff (that appears to be the name) to urge surrender: he merely said that if the Russian official considered it advisable in the cause of humanity to convey the facts together with a promise of kindly treatment to the Governor-General, safe conduct should be secured for the messenger carrying the despatch. M. Sergisogiff at once assented. He wrote a despatch which was sent off next day, and in the early morning of the 30th envoys arrived from General Liapnoff conveying the letter whose gist has already been published. General Haraguchi's terms are also known. Other details relate merely to procedure, with one exception, namely, that General Liapnoff declared his inability to hand over the documents relating to the defences of the island as they had already been burned. It appears that General Liapnoff's first letter of agreement was conveyed by a lieutenant who, not being clothed with plenipotentiary powers, had to be sent back re infecta. A few hours later a Lieut. Colonel with two other officers arrived, duly qualified to arrange particulars. The correspondents (Asahi and Nippon) whom we are quoting, say that the number of the surrendering force was 60 officers and 4,319 ranks and file. The original official report said 70 officers and 3,200 rank and file. Probably the more recent account is the more trustworthy. General Liapnoff is described as a man of about 70, white-bearded and white-headed. He and his staff of 5 officers arrived in carriages on the afternoon of the 1st August at 7 o'clock, escorted by a considerable force of Japanese cavalry with drawn swords. The General proceeded in the first place to his allotted quarters and having removed the traces of the campaign, came to greet his compatriots who were assembled outside. Close by a body of Japanese troops were drawn up singing a war-song. General Liapnoff is said to have been completely overcome by emotion.

Awomori telegraphs that on the morning of the 14th, General Liapnoff with 12 officers and 1000 rank and file reached that place.

Thursday, August 17.

Major-General Naito is to be commander-in-chief of the Saghalien garrison, which means, of course, that the number of Japanese troops now there will be largely reduced. On the 7th there was a celebration to signalize the occupation of the island. The church as Rykoff was the scene. Lieut. General Haraguchi made a short speech congratulating the troops on their conduct and their successes. The entertainment seems to have been of a somewhat meagre nature. Everyone had to bring his own cup and chopsticks.

ELECTRIC RAILWAYS IN TOKYO.

Mr. Amenomiya is the victim of a great deal of hostile criticism in Tokyo newspapers. Two years ago he made himself very conspicuous by bitterly opposing the project of amalgamating the Street Railway Company, of which he was then President, and the Tramcar Company. It was a fight which attracted wide-spread attention and Mr. Amenomiya won the day by posing as champion of the uniform 3-sen fare, nominally in the interests of the general public. A few days ago, however, when delegates from the three companies waited on the Home Minister to explain their views with regard to the assignment of proposed extensions and connexions, Mr. Amenomiya astounded the audience by calmly proclaiming himself an advocate of amalgamation, and laying upon the shoulders of the other two companies the blame of division. Mr. Amenomiya is not troubled by puddle morality. His is the broad-lake style which reflects all the changes of its firmament. He is what the Japanese call a futsugo no otoko.

This incident is contemporaneous with a revival of the old dispute about uniform fares. Nearly all the directors of the Street Railway Company have apparently come to realize how extremely irrational the sansen kinisui system is—a system which ignores the first principle of fairness since it charges all alike for greatly differing degrees of service rendered, and makes one section of the citizens pay a high fare in order that another section may ride cheap. The directors have not indeed fully realized this. Thus far their range of vision appears to be limited to the fact that a uniform charge of 3 sen is too small and that it should be raised to 5 sen. But if they adopted the 5 sen rate as a maximum they would soon be induced to establish a sliding scale of charges. The fact is, however, that they all, including Mr. Amenomiya, came to favour a change to 5-sen, but they were prevented from carrying it into operation in the face of public opposition. Thereupon Mr. Amenomiya again displayed his fine indifference to consistency by abandoning his fellow-directors and becoming spokesman of the 3-sen multitude. In this context the newspapers call him a hibin no otoko, or "sharp fellow," which epithet he certainly merits.

Not the least remarkable point about him is that the shareholders keep him where he is.

We described in a recent issue how Mr. Amenomiya, the most prominent among the directors of the Tokyo Street Electric Railway Company, after resolutely opposing the amalgamation of that company with the Electric Tram Company when amalgamation was feasible, has now made a volte-face and represented himself as an advocate of amalgamation. Tokyo journals publish the text of a letter just addressed by him to the Minister of Home Affairs, in which he openly throws upon the shoulders of the two other companies the responsibility of preventing combination, and urges that in view of the pliant attitude of his own company the Minister should extend special treatment to it. Tactics so transparently insincere are not likely to succeed, we should think, but the public will at least recognise Mr. Amenomiya's capacity for creating dissensions and storms.

The Minister of Home Affairs has issued an instruction to the electric railway companies in the capital warning them that they will no longer be allowed to carry on their works of construction in the leisurely manner hitherto practised. They will henceforth be required to fix the date of commencing work and the date of concluding it, and only once will prolongation of period be allowed. We are not at all surprised at the issue of this injunction. Some of the companies behave—one at any rate does—as if the convenience of public traffic were wholly a matter of indifference. We should be afraid to say how long the roads in the vicinity of Tora-no-mon have been in a torn-up condition. The usual daily spectacle is a dozen workmen pottering along with a task which might easily be finished in ten days with a little resolution imparted to the work.

THE RICE CROP.

Although the return of wet and chilly weather causes some uneasiness, apprehensions for the rice crop seem to be largely allayed. The centre of depression recorded a few days ago in the China Sea, approached Japan on the 16th instant and invaded Kyushu, whence it seems to be travelling north. But it is not a deep depression, and though heavy rain will be recorded, there does not appear to be any accompaniment of really violent wind. At all events a typhoon at this season is almost a normal event. As for the rice, its growth had not been bad at any time, but want of genial sunshine was supposed to have weakened the roots. Recent bright days have, however, largely dispelled that fear, and a crop or least up to the average is anticipated.

On this text the Jiji Shimpō writes in a very strong strain. It insists that from every point of view Japan can afford to continue the war without apprehension. Her harvest prospects are good; her trade and industries are flourishing; her stock market is firm; her finances are in good order; her people are only too ready to subscribe to her war loans; she has a million of men under arms and her organization provides for an addition of 300,000 annually; the capture of Vladivostok and Harbin is only a question of time. It would be incomparably better to fight on now than to patch up a peace which would not be lasting. To sheathe the sword when its work is only half done and when to draw it again is a more than probable contingency, is not the way of wisdom or of the bushi.

THE ANGLO-JAPANESE ALLIANCE.

We explained in recent issues that several second-rate journals had been speaking of the extended alliance as an accomplished fact. The Asahi now denies that such is the case. Negotiations are still in progress. A question has arisen as to the advisability of secrecy or of publication, and there are also points which demand military investigation. Therefore it is premature to speak as some newspapers have spoken. The conferring of high English Orders, on Count Katsura and Baron Komura can not have been connected with the alliance or Viscount Hayashi also would have been decorated. Altogether the Asahi's writing goes to show that while negotiations for a renewal and extension of the alliance are progressing, the end is not yet in sight.

The Nippon discusses the suggestion that France, after the restoration of peace, may possibly join the Anglo-Japanese alliance within certain limits. Our contemporary does not endorse any such forecast. It would necessitate either the admission of Russia also to the alliance, which is at present unthinkable, or a break between France and Russia, which is equally unlikely. France has showed very clearly throughout this war how strongly her sympathies are with Russia. One need only mention the treatment extended to Rojstvensky and his Fleet. Japan does not remember these things bitterly since that Fleet has disappeared off the face of the seas, but had the battle of Tsushima ended differently, Japanese feeling towards France would now be very bitter. There is at the base of the Anglo-Japanese agreement a distinct community of interests: both are concerned to prevent Russian aggression in the Far East. And at the base of the Anglo-French entente there is a community of interests in Africa. But there is no such community of interests between Japan and France in the East. An alliance might secure the French colonial possessions but what would it effect for Japan? Nothing apparent. The Japanese would of course be glad to walk hand in hand with the French, but such associations must have a solid foundation of some kind. Thus the Nippon.

The Hochi Shimbum alleges that the publication of the new Anglo-Japanese alliance has been postponed. Our contemporary adheres to the statement that the alliance has been actually completed, but says that diplomatic considerations dictate some postponement of its announcement.

DEATH OF BARON SANNOIYA.

We profoundly regret to state that Baron Sannomiya expired on Monday evening at 15 minutes past 7 o'clock.

The Emperor raised him to the Second Grade of the Second Rank, and messengers were sent on Monday by the Empress and the Prince Imperial to inquire into the distinguished patient's condition.

The death of Baron Sannomiya is a terrible shock to those who saw him little more than a year ago in apparently robust health. It is known, however, that he had suffered for some time from a sore on his tongue which suggested malignant trouble and would doubtless have much sooner disabled a man of less fortitude in the presence of physical pain. To the last moment, the baron remained apparently unconcerned, and on the very day before entering hospital to undergo a most serious operation he entertained a large number of friends at luncheon. No one could then have suspected for a moment that he was on the eve of such a crisis in his life. The operation was seemingly successful, though it involved much suffering, and when the Baron emerged from hospital, he soon recovered strength sufficient to be able to resume his duties at the Imperial Court. But the cancerous growth had not been fully removed. It spread to the throat, and compelled the sufferer's return to Tokyo on the 6th instant from Nikko, whither he had gone to spend the summer. Thenceforth the disease did its work with terrible rapidity. The hopelessness of the case was soon appreciated, but a fatal termination was not anticipated before the end of the month. It would seem, however, that the intense pain caused by such a disease produced other complications, and on the 12th instant the patient fell into a semi-comatose condition. Thenceforth it was only a question of hours. Though the most skilled surgeons were in attendance and though he was well and tenderly nursed by Baroness Sannomiya and his sister-in-law Miss Hayes, he sank rapidly and expired at 7.15 on the evening of the 14th.

A great deal will be written about Baron Sannomiya's brilliant official career, but it is not so much for the sake of his public successes that his memory will be cherished as for the sake of his noble character. He was a truly representative type of the Japanese gentleman; magnanimous, benevolent, genial, incapable of a mean or mercenary act, and possessing a full measure of that perfect courtesy which shows itself in instinctive respect for the feelings of others. His life was a constant round of duty, his recreation to perform some act of kindness or charity, and not the least of the benefits he conferred on his generation was the high example he set.

DREDGING TOKYO BAY.

So long as our acquaintance with Tokyo has endured, just so long can we remember that the citizens have talked of supplying themselves with an accessible port. Many schemes have been elaborated, but none was put into practical operation, and the only serious step taken was a dredging operation which began in 1887 and continued in a fitful fashion until 1895. The result was that vessels of 300 tons could enter. But since that time no steps have been taken to preserve the avenue, and it has gradually silted up, so that now, according to the Fiji Shimpo, the biggest vessel which can enter does not exceed 100 tons, and whereas goods could formerly be transported by water from Yokohama to Tokyo in 6 hours, the voyage now occupies 11; in addition to which the channel is so narrow that it is often necessary to choose between running aground and colliding. Yet the matter deserves attention, for the goods carried over-sea yearly to the mouth of the Sumida aggregate 2,700,000 tons and no less than 76,000 craft of sorts are engaged in the work—steamers, sailing vessels, junks and lighters. If matters are left unattended the river's mouth must silt up altogether in the course of years, for the past decade has shallowed the water by at least 6 inches. The Tokyo Chamber of Commerce has now taken up the subject. At an extraordinary general meeting on the 10th instant the members unanimously adopted a representation to be submitted to the Governor of the city and the Mayor. This document urges that the space from the mouths of the Sumida as far as the Fourth Fort—a length of 9,000 yards and a width of 80 yards—should be dredged to a depth of 12 feet at low water. Further that the riverine approaches to Kyo-bashi, Nihon-bashi, Honjo and Fukagawa should be dredged to a depth of 11 feet at low water. And, finally, that the work should be completed within 3 years. The cost is estimated at from 2 to 3 million yen, a small sum indeed when the results of the enterprise are considered.

THE OLD DAYS.

A very ancient reminiscence of Yokohama is contained in the following, which appeared in The Times of July 8th:—

In The Times of September 6, 1904, General Sir Owen Tudor Burne called attention to the relationship between the Japanese army and the Lancashire Fusiliers, and allusion was recently made by several of the senior officers at the regimental dinner. The 2nd battalion of the regiment, then known as the XX Regiment, was sent to Japan from India in 1864, in consequence of an attack on the British Legation at Jeddo; and, on October 20 of that year, a review was held of the troops, British and Indian, forming the Yokohama garrison, under General (then Colonel) Brown, C.B., who commanded the regiment. Some of the Japanese troops took part in the parade; but, as they were clad in chain armour, and as their weapons were swords and bows and arrows, they performed their exercises separately. After this review the Japanese were instructed in drill—Colonels Glenarross and De la Perre Robinson being the officers mainly responsible for their instruction—and they formed rapidly two properly organized well-drilled battalions, with colours, regimental staff, &c. This was the beginning of the Japanese army of to-day; for, before the 2nd battalion left Yokohama in 1866, the two Japanese battalions took part in another review, which was commanded by Colonel Browne. The parade ground of the XX Regiment may thus, with justice, be said to have been the birth-place of the Japanese army. Sir Lees Knowles, M.P., brought this fact to the notice of Viscount Hayashi, the Japanese Minister, forwarding him a copy of the "Lancashire Fusiliers' Annual," 1904, edited by Major E. Smyth, in which appears an article upon the subject; and, in acknowledgment, he received the following letter, dated June 23:—

"I am much obliged to you for a copy of the 'Lancashire Fusiliers' Annual' 1904. The article about the Japanese army in the book is very interesting. The reading of the passage about the Japanese officers receiving instruction from the English officers reminds me of some of my old friends who used to go to be instructed in drill. I also well remember witnessing the review of the Japanese battalions commanded by Colonel Browne, as mentioned in the article. I again thank you for your kindly sending me such an interesting book."

It is an interesting fact that Senior Sergeant-Major Arthur Rule, of the King's Body Guard of the Yeomen of the Guard, who was presented to Prince Arisugawa after the recent inspection, served in the Lancashire Fusiliers, and was sergeant-major of the regiment in Japan in 1864.

The Japanese battalions mentioned here did not long continue to appear on the parade-ground in Yokohama. They were Tokugawa samurai, and when troubles overtook the Shogunate in 1866 they had duty that called them elsewhere. The IXth Regiment succeeded the XXth, but the former, if we remember rightly, did not inherit this particular mantle of its predecessor. Japanese samurai, however, long continued to visit the camp singly or in small parties to watch the drilling of the troops and pick up any scraps of military knowledge that came within their reach. Kagoshima and Shimonoseki had taught them how much there was to learn. There are foreigners now in Yokohama who remember well that early quest for information, but there is not one that ever suspected how far it would lead the questers.

A four hours' speed trial by the American squadron in the Gulf of Pechili on the 30th ult. was won by the U.S.S. Raleigh at 30 1/2 knots.

In Memoriam.

BARON SANNOMIYA, DIED AUGUST 14TH, 1905.

He's passed away : prolonged lamentation
Uprises now in sombre woe.
Weep for him who's gone; mourn mighty nation,
For one more faithful friend laid low.
Mourn for the man, beloved,—enduring,— kind;
Of gentle, noble influence;
Of loyalty and singleness of mind,
Yet truly rich in golden sense.
Exempt was he from envy's cank'ring crime;
And surely great,—without pretence.
Fighting with courage,—noble and sublime,
The cruel ills that bore him hence.
Well loved was he, by Emp'r and by State.
Aye! many are the hearts that mourn.
Grieving we ask why Fate—relentless Fate,
Has summoned him across the bourn?
We weep for him : shrouded that kindly face,
Silent the voice we've loved for years.
But in our hearts, green mem'ry guards a place,
And on our cheeks are undried tears.
We mourn the courtier calm,—gentle yet firm :
The art to act,—yet not offend.
The thoughtful courtesy,—the tactful term;
But most of all—we mourn—a Friend!

A GERMAN CRITIC.

A candid German, described as a long-time resident of Great Britain, has communicated to the Contemporary an essay which tears Englishmen to pieces. It is a very clever essay. One can almost see the man reflected in his writings and one is forced to admit that what he says embodies much truth. An excellent and most wholesome thing is it that we should all be taught to see ourselves as others see us, and bitter as is the taste this essay must leave in every Englishman's mouth, it should do a great deal of good. Still the case against the Briton would have seemed much stronger had not Germany herself been perpetually held up as a paragon. The essayist may have a keen faculty of observation and great analytical ability, but he has also a badly swelled head, which is a deformity rather prevalent among his countrymen at present. From the "salt-of-the-earth" harangue to the humble pages of a magazine the same monotone of self-complacency is loudly audible. Nothing appears to shock this German critic so much as England's abhorrence for the system of conscription. He takes it as a conclusive proof of her people's lack of patriotism. But he forgets altogether that one of the signal blessings conferred on England by her geographical position is ability to dispense with a colossal standing army. She does not need conscription and therefore sheeschews it. If Germany were equally fortunate can there be a moment's doubt that Germany too would dispense with conscription and would rejoice fervently to be free of it? It is not England's army that should be pointed to as a typical outcome of her voluntary system. It is her navy. She experiences no lack of sailors; she maintains incomparably the largest fleet in the world, and no one can pretend to think that the personnel of her ships is inferior to the best any nation can show. Neither can any one doubt that were she situated as Germany and other States of continental Europe are situated, she would remain a twelvemonth without conscription. This critic, in the context of conscription, has much to say about the Boer War. He can not sneer sufficiently at everything connected with that sad page of history. Well we were humiliated ourselves, but when we see Germany's abortive efforts to cope with an incomparably pettier trouble in West Africa, we can not admit that the superiority is so markedly on the side of the German army of conscripts. There is a great deal more to be said about conscription than this critic says. There is, above all, the fact that it imbues a people with a spirit of militarism most unsightly to all lovers of personal liberty. The military man is everywhere in evidence and everything must bow to him. Even the law courts forget to administer justice where the soldier is in question. At this very moment an example has been furnished which is remarkably in point. We quote it from the pages of The Times :—

An unpleasant sensation has been caused in Germany by an action tried at Halle on Monday in which Herr Kunert, a Reichstag Deputy, was charged with libelling the officers and soldiers who served with the German East Asiatic force in one of his election addresses. The words complained of were :—"Our soldiers devastated the land and plundered and ravished women." Counsel for the defence requested the permission of the Court to call General von Lessel, who was in command of the brigade, Herr von Brandt, a former German Minister to China, and General von Gossler, ex-Minister of War, to give evidence in support of Herr Kunert's statements, and he also asked that the evidence should be taken on affidavit of Sir Robert Hart and a number of English and other war correspondents. The applications were refused, and the Court proceeded to the hearing of the witnesses present.

A number of former members of the East Asiatic Brigade testified to pillage, the desecration of graves and temples, and the outraging of women by German soldiers, and mention was made of a case in which a man kicked a wounded Chinaman in the face until his spur broke off his boot. Evidence was also given of looting by officers, one witness declaring that a certain company bore the name of "the treasure hunters" on account of their "prowess" in this direction.

Here Kunert was finally sentenced to three months' imprisonment on the ground that the statements complained of were a reflection on the whole German army, while outrages such as had been mentioned in the evidence were bound to occur in warfare.

Only in a country where militarism is rampant can such things happen. They certainly could not happen in England. Is Germany then so perfect that she can afford to cite herself as the paragon of the world, the ultima Thule of excellence? We do not pretend that much may not be learned from her, but as to the effects of her military system upon national morality there is more to be said than the critic in the Contemporary Review seems to imagine.

AN APPEAL.

The Rev. Walter Weston writes as follows to The Times :—

SIR,—Will you kindly allow me to endorse, with all possible earnestness, the appeals that have been made through your columns and those of the National Review on behalf of the suffering families of so many of the Japanese soldiers now at the seat of war or in hospital?

I have only recently returned from Japan after three years of the closest intercourse with the people, chiefly of the middle and "lower" classes, and since the outbreak of the war have been intimately acquainted with the conditions prevailing among those most seriously affected by it, as a member of the International Committee of the Foreign Residents (of Yokohama) Relief Fund on behalf of the sailors and soldiers' families suffering at this time.

The courage and efficiency of these sailors and soldiers of Japan have justly won the admiration of the world; but a spectacle no less remarkable—to those privileged to witness it—has been the brain-patience and more than willing readiness on the part of their families in bearing without a murmur the privations that have fallen to the lot of so many.

Very little is done in the way of advertising the trouble and need; for they all feel it a privilege to suffer, in their own way, for the country which they love with a devotion and a loyalty so deep and so passionate.

The subjoined letter I received only last night from a friend in Japan, who is engaged in relief work of private nature in a district far remote from the centres of foreign trade and seldom visited by foreign merchants or travellers. It has suffered almost more than any other province, for one engagement alone its division was stated to have lost, in killed and wounded, no less than nearly 7,000 out of the 8,000 men engaged.

At the present moment we in England are delighted to honour those Imperial representatives of the grateful sentiments of our gallant allies towards the friendly and admiring nation. I feel, however, that we could offer them no more convincing proof of our admiration and respect for the Emperor and the people of Japan than by letting their visit be made by a special effort on our part to alleviate some of the distress felt, especially in the poorer and more remote country districts of the "Land of the Rising Sun."

My correspondent writes as follows, under date May 11 :—

"The war continues to overshadow every other interest here. It is to be the headquarters of another army division, the—th. The city presents the appearance of a large camp, with men drilling in the main streets and all houses filled with soldiers. Twenty thousand men are called out from this section for the new division, and, as they are older men than those called before, almost all of them have families dependent upon them for support, which means destitution and suffering among the women and children. Old men and women who have not worked for years are now working in the fields to support grandchildren whose fathers are at the front. Every means possible is being utilized to provide work for those who are able to work, but there are many aged people and young children who cannot work and must receive assistance. The office is doing what it can to relieve the distress; there are so many families that only a pittance can be given to each, about two yen (4s.) a month for a family of six or eight people. Yesterday we visited one home where there was a wife with five children, the youngest ten days old. The father went to the war last October and the family received two yen. We had given the eldest boy a new kimono, so that he might go to school, and when we went yesterday we found the mother had had to pawn it for 50 sen (1s.) to get necessary articles for the new baby. This is one of many but cases we met with in our relief work. Letters received by us from men at the front express the deepest gratitude for the help given to their families—e.g., from a wounded man in the hospital at Mukden and from elsewhere. It is in the homes in Japan is feeling the strain of this cruel war."

I need hardly add that I would gladly forward help intended for the above object, though I have wish to divert contributions from the funds for appeals have been already made.

Should the peace conference end in failure, this distress of which Mr. Weston speaks will be accentuated, and it will become a question whether a fresh subscription should not be started for the relief of sufferers.

CHINA.

It is now stated that the much-talked-of arrangement with regard to extending the powers of Viceroy Yuan has been effected. His administrative sphere has been widened so as to include not merely the metropolitan province of Chihli, but also the home provinces of Shantung, Shansi and Honan and the Three Eastern Provinces, namely, Manchuria (Fengtien, Kirin and Hailu-ching). Readers may be perplexed to understand how this extended authority of Yuan Shih-kai does not clash with the authority of other Viceroys. The explanation is that the provinces of Shansi, Shantung and Honan have never belonged to a viceroyalty: they have had governors only. Now for the first time they are placed under Viceregal administration. The government of Chang Tseng-yang, Yang Shih-hsiang and Chen Kuei-lung, will not be over well pleased with the new arrangement, and probably it will not please Germany either.

The principal Chinese officials who are connected with Shantung by office or by birth are reported to have held a meeting and decided that, following the examples set in Kiangsi and Chekiang, the railways in Shantung should be built with Chinese capital and owned by Chinese capitalists. They talk of at once taking in hand the Tsinan-Tiehchow line for which the Germans are seeking to obtain a charter, and they talk also of getting the German charter for the Tsin-Chin line revoked.

The man who was discovered in the Palace in Peking carrying a dagger is found to be a lunatic.

Rumour represents the people of Shantung as growing greatly exasperated at Germany's monopolization of railway and mining enterprises in the province. Steps are being taken to organise a large company which will obtain capital by a reduction of taxes and educational expenses—this part of the despatch is obscure—and will compete for railway and mining concessions. Viceroy Yuan is said to favour the scheme.

Sixty-eight publicists of Chihli are said to have set out for Japan with the object of investigating this country's system of local government.

H. E. Tuan Fang, Governor of Hunan, and one of the four High Commissioners ordered by Imperial edict to go abroad to study foreign governments and political conditions, has recommended to the Central Government the following foreign educated officials to accompany the mission abroad, namely, Taotai Chung Wen-yao, lately Chinese Consul-General at Manila (now in Canton on short leave of absence); Wan Ping-chung, Special Attaché to the Viceroy of the Liangkiang provinces; Wu Kuang-chien, a former Director of the Nanyang College; and Li Wei-kô, an expectant First-class Secretary of one of the Peking Boards. The first two officials are returned American students. Captain Ching, Commanding the Peiyang cruiser Haiyung, has also been selected to go as naval attaché.

Commenting on the Anti-American agitation in China, the North-China Daily News says:—

Anyone who has observed the progress of the present anti-American agitation cannot fail to be impressed with one thing—the characteristically American manner in which the whole movement is being conducted. Public meetings are being held, speeches made, literature distributed, and delegates elected to attend larger conventions. Young men who have received their training in American missionary schools have taken an important part in the public discussion, and a recent report from Hangechow states that a native evangelist was an influential speaker at a meeting held in that city.

In all this method the influence of American missionaries is distinctly traceable. Trained in their homeland to self-rule and to the direction of public sentiment through organised bodies, these men have perpetuated their institutions on Chinese soil. Their conferences, assemblies, and educational associations, which are so important a part of their church policy, are a constant object lesson in democratic government to Chinese in all parts of the Empire. In their schools the missionaries have instituted debating societies, they have encouraged among their students discussion of public questions, and in this way have unconsciously inspired them with the methods of enlightened government.

Americans cannot, therefore, but feel gratified with the aptitude manifested by their pupils, even though they are perhaps among the first victims of the weapons they have placed in their hands. Few of us approve of the humiliating restrictions to which Chinese who wish to travel in the United States are now subjected. They were never intended by those who negotiated the Exclusion Treaty of 1894, and it is to be hoped that the present agitation may result in their removal. But this is, after all, a minor matter. Far more important is the fact that the objects of this Empire are being taught how they may make themselves felt in their own destiny. A public opinion is being developed and practice is being gained in the methods of organising and directing it. If then, after the present questions are settled, the Chinese will employ this new-found agency in overcoming a few of the crying abuses in their own political system, American missionaries will not have laboured here in vain.

The report of the Hongkong, Canton, and Macao Steamboat Co., Ltd., for the first half of 1905 shows a divisible balance of $88,064. It is proposed to pay a dividend of $1 per share or 6 2/3 per cent., and carry forward the balance, $8,064.

The report of the Astor House Hotel Co., Ltd., Shanghai, for the year ending the 30th of June last shows a divisible balance of $87,344. The directors propose to pay a dividend of 10 per cent., put $14,516 to reserve, and carry forward the balance, $9,828.

Sandow, the strong man, is visiting Shanghai with a troop of acrobats and athletes. The other night some international wrestling was organized by him and in the result India, represented by a man named Harichand, beat Japan, whose representative was named Ito Nishiki. A contemporary says that when the men took the ring it was seen that the Japanese was the taller, heavier, and apparently much more powerfully built, but he was handicapped by a lot of superfluous flesh. Sandow's representative's back and arms particularly, were covered with well-developed muscle. Commander Wilkin, of H.M.S. Clio, was Umpire. Continuing, the report runs:—

The men faced each other and the Japanese tried to lift his opponent but the Indian went to his knees and could not be moved for a second, but when he did he had the Japanese pinned: Time 5 secs.

The second bout opened by the Indian again going to his knees but the Japanese forced him half over and he got up. The men played about a good deal and then the Indian went to his knees again and got fixed. The Japanese waited for some seconds but then tried to alter his position, but the moment his muscles were relaxed the Japanese found himself lifted off his feet beautifully and banged down, and the Indian was on him immediately, pinning down his shoulders ere he could turn over: Time 2m. 50 secs.

The Indian thus won and came in for tremendous applause. It was a pure case of science beating weight.

The following night matters did not turn out so happily, the Japanese wrestler creating some disturbance. Sandow is not coming to Japan.

The North-China Daily News prints the following:—

PROCLAMATION.

Ch'iao, wearing the brevet second grade red button, an expectant Taotai of Anhui province, and Chief Commissioner of the Wuhu Bureau of Commerce, issues the following proclamation for the information of all concerned:—

On the 13th of July I received a dispatch from His Excellency the Governor, stating that the Waiwupu having received telegrams from Chinese merchants of various ports stating that they had inaugurated a boycott on American goods as a means of protesting against the unjust clauses of the New Exclusion Treaty, and requesting the Waiwupu not to sign the new Treaty as it stood, the said Waiwupu had replied that the draft of the new Treaty had been drawn up by Minister Liang Ching in Washington, who sent the draft to the American Foreign Office, but that it had not yet been settled upon. Furthermore, the U. S. Minister Rockhill, who had arrived in Peking, had in a conference with the Waiwupu regarding the new Treaty spoken in a friendly and affable manner, nor was there any indication of coercing our Government to sign the draft of the new Treaty as it stood. Moreover the said U. S. Minister had also signified his willingness to telegraph to his Government to change for the better any of the objectionable clauses in the proposed new Treaty. It is, however, feared that the Chinese merchants in question may have acted in a moment of impulse, although it is recognised that the step they have taken in unanimously proposing the boycotting of American goods and manufactures either through the columns of the Press, or by Expresses, was inspired by just anger at the treatment of their fellow-countrymen entering the United States. There is cause for apprehension, however, that evil characters may take the opportunity to create disturbances and influence the ignorant masses to break the peace. In view of this, therefore, the Waiwupu states that it is most important that steps be taken to exhort everyone to be patient and quietly await the result of the said Board's deliberations on the subject. His Excellency the Governor, having sent a reply by telegram to the Waiwupu, now instructs the Bureau of Commerce to issue this proclamation to inform all concerned that as the new treaty is still being deliberated upon by the Waiwupu, and that nothing definite has as yet been decided, all gentry, merchants and literati are exhorted to wait patiently for the instructions of the Waiwupu and cast away all doubts and suspicions, and they are also further asked to exhort the labouring classes and common people amongst them to await the result of the deliberations of the Waiwupu in the same manner, and refrain from listening to the evil influences of the rowdy element, and thereby avoid creating disturbances which will only end to their own detriment. Let all respectfully obey. An important proclamation.

31st year of Kuang Hsi, 28th day of the 6th moon (30th July, 1905).

Mr. Lyell, who accompanied the members of the Mission sent by the Viceroy of Nanking to study the methods of tea cultivation and manufacture in Ceylon and India, in the course of an interview in Colombo, said he was astonished at the enormous quantity of tea grown in Ceylon. China could not possibly compete with this enormous output. In regard to manufacture, Mr. Lyell was impressed with the economy of the rolling machinery as compared with hand labour in China, but thought machine firing raised the leaf to too high a temperature and so affected the delicacy of flavour. He thought the Chinese methods superior as far as results were concerned, but very much more expensive. Machinery had the advantage of uniformity, hand-made tea varying considerably. China could never hope to compete with Ceylon or Indian low priced teas, but the Chinese could compete successfully in high class tea and with proper direction could recover some of the ground lost in Europe. The tea soils in China were much superior to those in Ceylon. The Mission was satisfied with the results of the visit, but had not yet decided whether they will make any recommendations for the introduction of Ceylon methods.

It is stated in mandarin circles that after the resignation of Lu Ch'uan-lin, her Majesty will issue a Rescript commanding that from henceforth no one beyond the age of sixty can be eligible for the post of a Grand Councillor, as the average metropolitan official who gets beyond the sixties is usually so frail and full of bodily infirmities, due perhaps to youthful follies or a strenuous life in the lower grades of officialdom, that they are generally unable to bear long the fatigue and hardship of rising in the small hours of the morning and going through the incessant kneeling and rising, and kneeling again whenever addressed by, or addressing, their Majesties in the Council Room, where members have to be in attendance many hours a day from year's end to year's end.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

It is stated that among 13 Russian prisoners recently sent to Japan by the Yalu Army, having been captured on the 25th, there was one man 56 years of age and a lad of 19. From these facts an inference may be drawn as to the nature of the reliefs that are reaching Linévitch.

Surgeon Major Iwasaki Shujiro had been attached to the Naval Hospital at Sasebo for some months before orders were recently given for his transfer elsewhere. During his time at the Hospital he attended Admiral Rojestvensky and the other Russian officers wounded in the Battle of the Sea of Japan. Apparently he won their friendship and gratitude, for they addressed to him the following letter at the time of his transfer:— "Dear Doctor—We who are at this place can not too strongly express our gratitude and appreciation of the kindness and skill you have shown in our treatment. With sorrow we learned that you have been transferred elsewhere and that you are about to leave us. That is a source of profound regret to us. On the occasion of your departure we beg to wish you good health, to pray for your prosperity and to sincerely hope that a future of wide development lies before the professional ability you have so conspicuously displayed hitherto." This letter was signed by Admiral Rojestvensky and a number of Russian officers.

The Paris correspondent of Commercial Intelligence writes as follows under date of July 2nd:—

The little band of free-traders in the Chamber of Deputies is making a gallant fight against the proposal to raise the duty on imported pure silks of European origin and on pongees from Japan. Five times has the matter been already debated, and five times has it been adjourned. The contest has settled down to a fight between Paris and Lyons. The protectionists declare that the increased duty on pure silks is indispensable to protect the industry of Lyons against Swiss and Italian competition, and the increase in the duty on pongees to meet Japanese competition in the home market. Some most interesting facts have been revealed during these debates. The advocates of increased protection declare that the silk industry of Lyons is being killed by foreign competition. Their opponents pooh-pooh any such idea, and declare that it is only one branch of the Lyons industry which is suffering—in fact, that certain of the manufactures of Lyons are the victims of fashion. Lighter stuffs, muslins, and tulle have taken the place of heavier silks, and although these latter are dull, France exported last year silk goods valued at 300 million francs. One of the arguments brought forward in favour of increased protection is certainly worth recording. M. Augagneur raised a very old ghost intended to show how the British industry was killed.

The Deputy of Lyons declared that when the silk manufacturers of Great Britain were protected by a duty of 15 per cent, no less than three million kilograms of silk were consumed annually in the country. Forty years after the duty had been abolished, the consumption fell to one sixth of that amount. The silk industry of England was dead. "I can therefore affirm," exclaimed M. Augagneur, "that the British silk manufacture has been killed by French manufacture, because the British manufacturer was not protected against his French competitor." The debate is to be resumed next Wednesday. How it will terminate is very uncertain, but I may mention that the Minister of Commerce and Industry, anxious, no doubt, to avoid the reprisals threatened by Switzerland, has suggested that the matter should receive further consideration, and the decision be postponed until the beginning of next year. Should this proposal be accepted, British crapes, tulle, and muslins will have another respite.

Russian staff officers are said by Japanese newspapers—we do not know on what authority—to have formed the following estimate of the Japanese forces in the field:—

Kuroki's Army	115,000 to 120,000
Oku's Army	110,000 to 115,000
Nogi's Army	85,000 to 90,000
Nogi's Army	45,000 to 50,000
Kawamura's Army	73,000 to 74,000
Hasegawa's Army	?

Altogether they estimate about 600,000 combatants.

We read in the Hochi and the Nichi Nichi that the workmen at the Hashi-jima mine behaved with considerable truculence on the occasion of the recent tempest. Their houses were partially destroyed, and being cut off from communication with the main-land they suffered from want of water. As usual they were most considerately treated by their employers, the Mitsu Bishi, but about 100 of them are said to have burned their clothes in order to have a claim for new suits.

The Catholic Herald's Rome correspondent states that the fourth centenary of the death of Christopher Columbus will be commemorated on May 20, 1906, by the erection of a magnificent monument to him in the Vatican.

Cardinal Richelmy, Archbishop of Turin, has accepted the presidency of an international committee which is being formed in connexion with the anniversary. At the same time steps are being taken to revive the movement for the canonization of Columbus, in favour of which a large number of Archbishops and Bishops present at the Vatican Council 36 years ago signed a petition to the late Pope Pius IX.

There has been another slaughter of Japanese fishermen. Five men were the victims. They belonged to a party of 7 who had landed from the schooner Ota Maru (114 tons) near Ozeronai in the Petropaulovsk region, to procure water. On their way back with filled casks a party of Russian soldiers opened fire on them and killed 5 of their number. Two escaped by swimming. The Russians then opened on the schooner which had to cut her cable. This is another Russian victory—the slaughter of unarmed fishermen whose worst offence is poaching.

In the Chuo Shinbun we read that this company has abandoned its costly operations of prospecting for oil in Hokkaido, and that it will henceforth confine its attention to Echigo, where comparatively prolific wells have been found. There will presently be some interest for this enterprising company in Saghalien.

THE CHARGES AGAINST MR. L. E. DAVIS.

The public hearing of the criminal proceedings against Mr. L. E. Davis on charges of embezzling monies belonging to the local branch of the firm of Messrs. Arthur and Bond, of which he acted as Manager, commenced in the Kobe Chihō Saiban-sho on Monday. Public Prosecutor Teruaki conducted the prosecution, and Mr. Matsumoto acted as interpreter. The accused was at once examined by the Court, and this proceeding occupied the whole of the sitting. He admitted that he had made use of money received by the firm without obtaining Mr. Abraham's permission, but contended that he was wholly justified in so doing, as his position in the business was that of a partner. The Court thereupon asked if he spent the money on his own pleasures and in buying furniture for his house, and not in the interests of the company. Mr. Davis said in reply that he expended some of the money in buying furniture and in purchasing articles to be sent to his family at home. He denied spending the money for purposes of pleasure as suggested. He added that he considered that the fourth share in the profits to which he was entitled would fully amount to the yen 2,000 of the company's money which he had made use of.

He said that he gave hard work for the business which was regarded as taking the place of capital. The arrangement was that he should receive a salary as manager and a quarter of the profits. He denied that he made no reference in the books to the yen 2,000 which he had collected. He considered himself now entitled to about yen 3,500 as his share in the profits and to his July salary of yen 200. He had asked Mr. Abraham to settle the matter out of Court but the latter declined. He had all through admitted spending the money, but without evil intent. If he had wished to act wrongfully he might have absconded last August when he was in a position to draw much money from the bank. Last September he asked Mr. Abraham to give him some money out of the profits, but he said that he was unable to do so. Accused consequently took some of the money himself, and he alleged that Mr. Abraham was aware that he did so. After a consultation, the Court decided to adjourn until the 16th, when Mr. Abraham will be examined. At the conclusion of the proceedings, Mr. Davis applied to be released on bail. The application, according to the Kobe Herald, is being considered.

YACHTING.

The yachting on Saturday afternoon was very enjoyable, the sun being by no means strong and a fine light-moderate breeze from about south-east prevailing.

Three 39-raters started—Mary, Maid Marian and the new Kingfisher. The two first-named passed out of the harbour entrance together, Kingfisher close up, but by the time the Lightship was reached Mary had drawn out a considerable lead and she was never really in danger of being headed, though Kingfisher was only 6 minutes behind in passing the Honmoku Buoy. Thence to the Nagalama Buoy Mary increased her advantage, rounding that mark at 3.19.00; Maid Marian having overhauled Kingfisher, passed at 3.33.30 Kingfisher at 3.35.00. They maintained the order all the way home, Mary finishing about 11 minutes ahead of the Maid. The latter, however, on allowance of 30 minutes wins first prize, the Wanderer Cup, second prize going to Kingfisher on a 30 minutes allowance.

Three cruisers raced to the Honmoku Buoy and back, Wanderer leading all the way round, but Surprise overhauled her towards the close and crossed the line only about a minute later. The first prize goes to Wanderer.

The 21-raters also had a race. Three boats started—Edna, Aimee and Maria Johanna—the event resolved itself largely into a luffing match between Edna and Aimee. These two went over the line together, Maria Johanna some minutes later. On the way out to the Water Light a luffing spell ended in Edna getting into the harbour first. Luffing continued on the way to the Mandarin Buoy mark, which they rounded close together. They maintained their relative positions to the Quarantine Ship, but half past the Tachibana mark Aimee got away and rounded first. On the beat back to the Mandarin Buoy mark Edna lost ground and Aimee got round a second time considerably in the lead. She increased her advantage on the way to the Water Light entrance which she passed through 30 seconds ahead of Edna which, however, gained 10 seconds on the beat up the harbour and was 20 seconds ahead of Edna on the way to the Water Light. Maria Johanna was not well sailed and was early out of the race.

Six Larks started to race around the Mandarin Buoy Quarantine ship. No. 5 won, with No. 3 close up.

The Mosquito Club had a race around the Honmoku Buoy for the Yugoo Cup.

Six boats started in this race and Pele led the way, winning easily from Windsor, the second boat.

YOKOHAMA HARBOUR.

On Friday, the members of the Yokohama City Assembly, the Kanagawa Prefectural Assembly, the Japanese Chamber of Commerce and the Kowa-kwai held a meeting in the assembly hall of the prefectural assembly, in connexion with the improvement of Yokohama harbour. Mr. Ono, President of the Chamber of Commerce, the outset of the conference, explained the necessity for the construction of further harbour facilities. Mr. M. Asada presided at the meeting, the motion of Mr. Kuruu. Mayor Ichikawa delivered a report concerning the investigations made by the city officials into the harbour question. At the conclusion of his speech he proposed organization of the Kowan Kairo Kisei Kaisha which society aims to bring about an improvement in Yokohama harbour. The motion was unanimously carried, after which a committee consisting of thirty-seven was elected. The committee was authorized (1) to discuss questions with regard to the object in view and to sit at decisions regarding the problem; (2) to point a special standing committee consisting of twelve; and (3) a special committee was authorized to employ civil engineers to devise harbour schemes, draw up a draft of expenditures, etc.

Fire broke on the night of Aug. 9th in the district of Kami-Niikawa, Toyama prefecture, destroying forty-one buildings. Incendiarism was the cause.

FRANCE AND ENGLAND.

It is not to be credited that all the demonstrations now taking place in England will lead to nothing more than an intangible entente between Great Britain and France. The two Powers have drawn so close together that their union is very likely to take some substantial form. Several Japanese publicists have long predicted this and would doubtless rejoice to see it. For a moment during the months of April and May last there existed in Japan a strong sense of resentment on account of the facilities accorded to Russian ships in French territorial waters. The best international jurists have recorded their opinion that although the French regulations offer a latitude of interpretation not consistent with the most advanced theory of neutral obligations, the action of the French authorities in Indo-China can not be said to have been compatible with either the spirit or the letter of those regulations. But that the Government in Paris sanctioned or understood the licence practised by the local officials in Indo-China, few publicists seem now to believe. It is an open secret that when the French Ambassador in St. Petersburg complained of the lengthy stay of the Russian ships at Madagascar, Count LAMSDORFF assured him that ROJESTVENSKY had been explicitly forbidden to repeat his equivocal action in waters adjacent to the seat of war. The Tsar himself is said to have repeated these assurances to M. BOMPARD, and when the Japanese Minister protested to M. ROUVIER against ROJESTVENSKY's doings in Indo-Chinese seas, the French statesman telegraphed to Saigon instructions which entirely satisfied Mr. MORONO. But whether the French Colonial Authorities observed these instructions in a really practical manner is more than doubtful. At any rate the fons et origo mali seems to have been ROJESTVENSKY himself. He is believed to have acted throughout under secret orders from the Grand Duke ALEXANDER, without the knowledge of either the Tsar or Count LAMSDORFF. The Grand Duke's object was plain enough. This had not been his first demonstration of it. He deliberately sought to create complications which would involve other Powers in the struggle and thus avert from Russia the humiliation of defeat at the hands of a nation for which she had always expressed supreme contempt. Happily Japan appreciated this. Her just indignation yielded to the perception that if she took reprisals or called upon England to interfere, she would have been playing Russia's game, or rather the game of the war party in Russia. A crisis which threatened to be very serious was thus tided over, and although the masses of the Japanese people did not perhaps fully appreciate this aspect of the situation at the time, they have since come to see with the eyes of their statesmen, and it may be safely asserted that the soreness created by the Indo-China incident has been almost completely healed. Japan knows also, knows full well, that England stood by her loyalty in this matter. England had a delicate part to act. She had to be true to her ally in the East and she had to avoid unduly offending her friend in the West. Therefore she never spoke openly of the remonstrances she addressed to Paris at the time, but the Japanese Government is aware what form these remonstrances took and was, we believe, altogether satisfied with them. This, indeed, is only an infinitesimally small fraction of the practical goodwill that Great Britain has uniformly shown towards Japan throughout the present war. In such matters England never advertizes herself and it is not permissible for us to be precise. But we may say with full confidence that, in our belief, Japan would rejoice to see France and England join hands in the manner suggested by the demonstrations now taking place at Portsmouth, although she clearly comprehends that both nations are at one in not desiring to see Russia crushed or even permanently weakened as a factor in the European situation. In a certain sense Japan herself has largely aided to bring England and France together, for their entente is dictated not more by natural inclination than by a sense of the necessity of restoring the political equilibrium in Europe which this Empire's victories over Russia have disturbed.

THE BOOKSHELF.

Chinese Art, by S. W. BUSHELL, C.M.G., B.Sc., M.D. Art Handbook of the Victoria and Albert Museum. Vol. I.

This volume was compiled in obedience to a request which, says the author, "I had the honour of receiving from the Board of Education to write a handbook on the art and industries of China." Dr. Bushell resided in Peking for 30 years, as physician to the British Legation in that city. From the earliest days of his residence he seems to have devoted much time to the study of the country's art, and the English-speaking public are greatly indebted to the Board of Education at whose instance this book was written, for Dr. Bushell, like a great many really earnest scholars, seems to have allowed a sense of insufficient research to deter him from authorship, and even in the preface of his present work he is careful to "disclaim any pretension to authority on the subject, and to state his position to be merely that of an inquirer." It may nevertheless be predicted that the book he has given us will long remain a classic. This is only the first volume. It consists of seven chapters, the themes of which are (1) Historical Introduction; (2) Sculpture; (3) Architecture; (4) Bronze; (5) Carving in Wood, Ivory, Horn, &c.; (6) Lacquer; and (7) Carving in Jade and other Hard Stones. There are 104 illustrations and as the volume—without the index—contains only 151 pages, the profuseness of its illustrations will be apparent. They are not coloured illustrations. It would be too much to expect anything of that kind in a book which costs only one shilling and six-pence. Dr. Bushell has amassed a vast quantity of information which he compresses into the smallest possible compass. By this economy of space he sacrifices something of the attractiveness his work would otherwise possess, but for the purposes of the genuine student his volume has the highest value. The earliest attested monuments of Chinese art are stone drums of the Chou dynasty (B.C. 1122—255). These are reproduced by Dr. Bushell with full descriptions, and they form the foundation of an interesting series of specimens extending to the marble sculptures at Pai Ta Ssu in Peking, and thus covering a period of about thirty centuries. The Chinese can not be said to have attained high rank as sculptors in stone. They resemble the Japanese in that respect. Neither nation at any period of its history seems to have conceived the idea of taking stone or marble as a medium for art expression, as the Greeks did. The fact is sufficiently remarkable but it has never been explained, and Dr. Bushell makes no attempt to explain it. The Chinese, however, practised the sculpture of base reliefs in stone with much greater assiduity than the Japanese did. As for the stone drums mentioned above, they are chiefly notable on account of the testimony they bear to the advanced condition of the Chinese ideograph at a period so remote as the twelfth century before Christ, but relics as old as the 1st century B.C. and the 1st century A.D. show that stone was employed for purposes of historical delineation and also for decorative uses; though in both cases the artistic quality must be described as crude. The mediæval work of the Chinese decorative sculptor in marble stands in a comparatively high category, but is still much below the standard reached by this remarkable nation in other directions. Passing to architecture, Dr. Bushell notes how inevitably every type of building suggested to China by other countries lost in her hands its alien character and received the cachet of her own style—a style with little of either the majestic or the graceful to recommend it. Certain isolated objects, as the pagoda and the pavilion, can justly claim the titles of beauty and elegance, but neither the temples nor the palaces of the Middle Kingdom can be classed with those of India, still less with those of Greece or Rome. Even the Japanese, trammelled as they were by seismic restraints, managed in their wooden buildings to elaborate an architecture much superior to that of the Chinese. It is to be regretted, we think, that Dr. Bushell did not supplement his architectural chapter by one on Chinese gardens. That is a subject that remains to be treated, for the landscape gardens of the Chinese belong to them almost as fully as do their porcelains and their bronzes. The chapter on these last is short but full of information, and its illustrations introduce the reader to some of the exquisite shapes which alone would bear full testimony to the artistic genius of the Chinese even though they had achieved nothing else. As in the case of stone sculptures, so in that of bronzes, the earliest surviving examples do not take us farther back than the Chou dynasty, that is to say, some thirty centuries, a sufficiently respectable age nevertheless. Already in that era shapes of considerable beauty had begun to suggest themselves to the Chinese caster, who, as far back as the records go, was acquainted with the cire perdue process, a fact which has been often denied by ill-informed students. We may note that Dr. Bushell does not apparently make any reference to the wonderful patina generally ascribed to the Shunpich (Japanese Senoboku) artists.

Indeed the whole subject of patina, so important in connexion with bronzes, is somewhat cursorily treated by him, though perhaps his limits of space prevented fuller reference. After bronze the next subject is "carving in wood, ivory, etc.," an art which never in Chinese hands rose far above the mechanical or decorative plane, and which consequently does not occupy many pages in Dr. Bushell's work. Something similar may be said of Chinese lacquer. Just as the glyptic achievements of the Japanese in wood and ivory completely overshadow those of the Chinese, so by the side of the splendid lacquers of the former the corresponding productions of the latter lose interest and even value. Yet in one branch of lacquer the Chinese excelled the Japanese, namely in carved red lacquer, the ni-hung of one country, the tsuishu of the other. We have never learned or conceived any satisfactory reason for the inferiority of the Japanese craftsman in this branch, but the probable explanation is that carved lacquer never appealed to him. It owes indeed any charm it possesses rather to evidences of infinite painstaking than to any artistic feature. The last and not the least interesting chapter in the book is devoted to carving in jade, crystal, nephrite, etc. Dr. Bushell gives many particulars on this subject. He follows the mineral from its original home on the mountain or in the river-bed to its emergence from the carver's hands, but we do not suppose that any appreciation can ever render jade a really popular object among foreign collectors, for beautiful as is the texture and delightfully pure, soft and restful the sheen of this mineral, or at any rate of its choice varieties, it does not admit of really artistic decoration. We have never yet seen an example that suggested truly finished work, and certainly the remark applies to most of the pieces illustrated in Dr. Bushell's work.

We look forward with great interest to Dr. Bushell's next volume, which is to treat of (1) Pottery and Porcelain; (2) Glass; (3) Enamels, etc.; (4) Textile Fabrics and Embroidery; and (5) Pictorial Art. The only criticism we venture to offer is that a fuller index should be compiled. A four-page index is not nearly sufficient for a work abounding in technical and historical details and covering such a wide field, and we have assured ourselves by several references that the index of this first volume is defective.

The "Kokka."

The second number of the English-written Kokka has just been issued. There is no descent from the high standard attained in the first number. The letter-press consists of two valuable and interesting essays; one on the "Sculpture of the Tempyo Era," by Mr. Kosaku Hamada; the other (Part II) on "Characteristics of Japanese Painting" by Mr. Seichi Taki. The latter is followed by a short paper (anonymous) on Nomura Ninsei, and the volume concludes with a thesis on "Ancient Chinese Bronzes." All these are illustrated with beautiful and faithful pictures, the titles of the illustrations being:—"Puppies with Convolvulus" (by Okyo); "Grouped Figures in the Pagoda of Horyu-ji"; "Bronze statue of Yakushi in the Kondo of the Yakushi-ji"; "Selections from the Famous Pictorial Scrolls by the Priest Toba"; "A painting by Motonobu Kano"; "A Shrine, by Kiten Miyamoto"; "Flower Painting by Korin Ogata"; "Selections from Chinzan's miniatures"; "Porcelain Kugikakushi by Ninsei Nomura"; and "Ancient Chinese Bronzes." We judge from the contents of this number that it is the intention of the publishers to give a continuous series of essays forming a critical history of Far-Eastern sculpture and painting, with occasional papers on special subjects, all finely illustrated in colour and sepia. If that be the programme and if it be adhered to, the Kokka will ultimately be one of the most valuable books of its kind hitherto compiled. Japanese art can not be really understood unless we hear what the Japanese themselves have to say about it.

The Sunset Magazine.

The June and July numbers of Sunset, the monthly magazine of the Southern Pacific Railway Passenger Department, come together. They are both interesting, having many fine illustrations and well-written articles. The July number, however, will be read with more attention than the other as it contains special papers with reference to the Great Northwest Centennial (the Lewis and Clark Exposition at Portland). The frontispiece depicts the opening ceremony on June 1st and the first article is by Dr. Reuben Gold Thwaites (editor of "The Original Journals of the Lewis and Clark Expedition"). It is entitled "Overland A Century Ago," is illustrated from photographs and original documents in possession of the American Philosophical Society at Philadelphia, and describes, of course, the expedition led by those two explorers in 1804 across the American continent to the Pacific coast and back. Among the contents is a poem by Joaquin Miller—"The Oregon Sierra."

The Christian Movement in its Relation to the New Life in Japan.

Third annual issue, published for the Standing Committee of Co-operating Christian Missions, Tokyo. The Standing Committee of Co-operating Christian Missions have issued their third annual volume—"The Christian Movement in its relation to the New Life in Japan." The work in all respects reflects the greatest credit upon the Editor, Dr. D. C. Greene, and his collaborators. The General Survey which begins the book is a moderate and impartial review of the present situation. In the course of his remarks the Editor (who we presume is the writer) says:—

At first sight it seems a strange commentary upon our much boasted Western civilization that it was only when Japan showed her prowess and strength upon the field of battle that she was able to win adequate recognition of her progress. There is no need, however, to compose jeremiads over the hollowness of our professed altruism. Every healthy mind is impressed by an exhibition of power. It may or may not rejoice in the occasion which gives rise to it, or in the purpose which it executes, but power is in itself impressive and always will be, and there is no reason why we should be ashamed to acknowledge it.

However, in this particular case, it is not simply, nor chiefly, the military strength displayed which has awakened the admiration of the world. No mere power of numbers or of brute force in any form could have called forth the kind of applause which Japan has deservedly won. It is rather the high intellectual and moral qualities that have marked the course of both army and navy which have most deeply moved men's souls. The leaders, availing themselves of the resources of advanced science, have evinced a power of co-ordination, and a patience of detail seldom seen before.

Steadiness of purpose, subordination of all lesser aims to one great object, humanity to friend and foe,—these have characterized the conduct of the war at every stage. An English gentleman in an eulogium upon General Nogi mentioned first of all the delicate sense of honour which led him to postpone his entry into Port Arthur until General Stoessel had sailed away, lest he should add an unnecessary pang to the distress his defeat had brought him. It was not until such qualities of mind and heart compelled attention that the world became profoundly stirred in sympathy with Japan.

The chapter on Domestic Politics consists chiefly of what appears to be a carefully prepared analysis of the Budget which appeared in our columns in December last. That on The Business World is a comprehensive tabulation of figures interspersed with notes. In an article on The Resources of Japan the writer sees no reason to doubt whether Japan can maintain the rate of progress indicated during the past few years or to suppose for a moment that she has reached the limit of her industrial and commercial expansion. He says:—

Naturally the large number of men called out for military service has, theoretically at least, diminished the productive power of the nation. Assuming that the work of supplying the Army and Navy represents a percentage of the population about equal to the army on the peace footing, including the partial service of the reserves, the additional tax upon the labour of the country due to the war might be roughly estimated at two and a half per cent, that is to say, one in forty of the total population. This is certainly a heavy tax, but it is not nearly so heavy as that which the Northern States sustained during the Civil War in America, and there are certain special reasons why Japan should bear this tax more easily than most Western lands.

In the first place it should be noted that the labour market in Japan has been so far over-stocked that there has been for many years a considerable emigration to Korea, Hawaii, the United States, British Columbia, and elsewhere. These emigrants have been for the most part able-bodied and in proportion of women has been small.

Again, there is in Japan opportunity for largely increasing the efficiency of labor which does not exist in the same degree in Western lands. The Japanese are certainly an industrious people, but their physical powers are often used most wastefully. There is hardly a department of industry in which the number of employes might not be greatly reduced, provided the labor of those who remain could be used with greater economy. Such economy is being gradually secured by the introduction of improved appliances, especially tools and the lighter forms of machinery, like sewing machines, lathes, etc.

Other considerations, such as improved roads and extended railways, the establishment everywhere of agricultural, technical and commercial schools, etc. are also mentioned. There is a thoughtful paper on "The New Life in Japan," deal with which we have not space. We have also to content ourselves with mere mention of the sections devoted to Social Work, Unemployment, National Work, and the very complex department in which Churches and Missions are dealing with. The Missionary Directory is, so far as we can perceive, very full and accurate, as indeed is all the information embodied in this excellent work of only 170 pages.

BASEBALL.

The breeze which prevailed during the whole of Saturday tended to make conditions much more pleasant for baseball players in Yokohama than the reading of the thermometer would lead one to imagine. But even at that the heat was depressing and affected most of the men before the game was finished. It was the third in the series of official games and several changes had been made in the line-up, promising some interesting play. But, as a glance at the score will show, the good-plays came by fits and starts, and a rattled field in the second innings enabled McChesney to make 11 runs in a lurch, while Merriman knotted 6 runs in the second and 5 in the ninth. With the return of cooler weather we shall see better form than this we hope. Let us up!—

Owing to the recent storm, many buildings of the Hashima coal mine, near Nagasaki, belonging to the Mitsui Bishi Co., have collapsed. The damage is estimated at a hundred thousand yen.

THE CHINESE BOYCOTT IN YOKOHAMA.

At 2 p.m. on Aug. 17th, leading Chinese traders of Yokohama held a meeting in their Chamber of Commerce in connexion with the boycott against American products.

Mr. Shun Lung presided and at the outset made a lengthy speech in which he said that a letter from their countrymen in Shanghai had been received. The message informed them that the Chinese traders had decided not to purchase American products and to put the decision in force on July 18th. This was a natural result of the American attitude against Chinamen. The Shanghai note, of course, should be endorsed by the traders in Yokohama.

Mr. Ming, having referred to the principles of humanity, said that the American Government decided without any special reason to exclude Chinese subjects from their country. In consequence the Shanghai merchants decided to boycott Americans merchants and circulated copies of their decision in all parts of the world where Chinese reside. The speaker concluded by saying that in Yokohama the decision should be endorsed.

Discussion followed as to how the boycott could be enforced, after which Mr. Shun Lung proposed that in Yokohama no formal steps with regard to the boycott should be taken; every one being left to his own moral sense not to purchase or to use American goods, and thus to form a strong and united movement. Chinese merchants, however, are not prohibited from selling Chinese products to Americans. This proposal was unanimously adopted.

The meeting then dispersed.

The local Chinese, says the N.-C. Daily News, are carrying on a vigorous campaign against the smoking of American brands of cigarettes. Posters are surreptitiously put up all over the Settlements warning Chinese against them and portraying grotesque representations of men with dog's heads, etc., the result of persisting in using them. The police are doing their best to stop this practice, but it is obvious that it is very easy for an enthusiast to put up placards when no police are in the vicinity.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Seventy-eight sergeants were promoted ensign on Aug. 13th.

Mr. Uchida, Japanese Minister in Peking, left on Aug. 16th for South China.

The Sasebo City Assembly has decided to establish water-works at a cost of yen 19,200.

Another effort was to be made to refloat the Sully on the 15th August. The Hongkong-built pontoon is reported in good order.

On Aug. 16th the Emperor presented three thousand yen and the Empress a thousand yen to the family of the late Baron Sannomiya.

Leading tea traders of Yokohama will hold a meeting on Aug. 21st to discuss a proposal to welcome Mr. Taft and party on their way home from Manila.

The steamers Mazagon and Gyanlee recently purchased by the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, have been renamed Sagami Maru and Takeshima Maru respectively.

Mr. Koidzumi, an official of the Yokohama Customs, will shortly leave for Korea. He is reported to have been employed by the Korean Financial Department.

On Aug. 17th, seven officers and a thousand men captured in Central Saghalien were brought to Awamori. On the 18th and 19th, 1,320 and 1,025 prisoners respectively will arrive at the same city from the island.

In connexion with the fire on board the Dutch steamer Perlak at Shanghai the Kokumin has a further report that the ship only arrived there on the day of the accident from Sumatra with benzine, and that the hull was severely damaged as well as the cargo. An engineer and three firemen were injured, and two or three Chinamen of the crew were killed. The bow of the ship is under water.

The Governor of Chiba prefecture reports that forty-one out of ninety-eight houses in the village of Uraga, Unakami, where some cases of plague appeared in July were recently burned and the roofs of forty-six others were also burned.

Mr. Sawada, secretary of the Tokyo-fu, on Aug. 10th, summoned twelve leading curio dealers and manufacturers in Tokyo, and spoke to them of the prospects of business in Manchuria. These businessmen will meet again after a week's interval.

K. Nakanishi (29), a mute, who has been confined in the Negishi Jail, escaped on the evening of Aug. 12th. He was arrested on the same night in Tsurumi where his parents—wealthy farmers—are living. On the following day, he was brought to Yokohama. It may be remembered, that he murdered a woman on Feb. 27th in Tsurumi by stabbing her with a sword, for which crime he was sentenced in the Local Court to five years' confinement in the penitentiary.

S. Kakisaki (22), a mason, on the night of Aug. 13th set fire to a restaurant in the village of Nasuno, Tochigi prefecture. While the occupants were panic-stricken with the fire, he murdered Naka Fujikura (23) a female servant, with a sword, and also killed the proprietor of the tea-house and another man who was present. The murderer committed suicide on the following morning by throwing himself before a train on the railway near the village of Kano. The cause is reported to be jealousy.

It appears that Captain W. B. Barker, U.S. Army Quartermaster at Nagasaki, whose death in a railway accident we reported the other day, was on his way to Unzen. Everything possible was done for him at the Takeo Hospital, whither he was taken, and where he died. At the time of his death Captain Barker was the youngest officer of the American army that had fought in the Civil War; he enlisted in the Confederate Army at the age of 16. He was an exceedingly popular man and much sympathy is publicly expressed for his sisters, who live in Mississippi.

On the evening of Aug. 10th Constable R. Nakamura was attacked by a crowd in Nogemachi, Yokohama, when attempting to take a sergeant to Tobe police. It is reported by the Tobe police that the constable ordered the non-commissioned officer to walk on the left side of the street as the latter was proceeding down the centre. The sergeant, however, did not comply with the order and the bystanders asked the policeman not to take the man to the office; but he refused and the trouble arose. The constable sustained a severe injury to his head from a stone thrown from the crowd.

On the morning of Aug. 16th, the dead body of a man, about 25 years old, was found in the compound of the Shinto temple Sanwo, in the village of Mutsu-ura, near Kanazawa, Kanagawa prefecture. He had been strangled with a hempen cord and his breast was severely injured. He seems to have been murdered elsewhere and removed thither. On Thursday morning, a preliminary examination judge and a public procurator of the Yokohama District Court proceeded to the place, together with Mr. Kato, Superintendent of the Kotobuki-cho Police Office. There is as yet no definite report about the crime.

According to official investigations on Aug. 14th, says the Nahi Nichi, Japanese prisoners in Russia are:—Army:—14 officers, 32 non-commissioned officers, 447 men, 4 employees of the medical corps, and one other; Navy:—2 officers, 73 non-commissioned officers, 13 men, 1 paymaster, 1 clerk, and 2 assistant civil engineers. Civilians:—259 merchant sailors, 13 employees of the railway, 2 photographers, 10 passengers, and six others. The foregoing makes a total of 820. Besides, there are some two hundred whose names were communicated by the Russian Prisoners

Intelligence Bureau, but in consequence of imperfect transmission, they have not been identified. Further, over 180 are in Russia whose names are not yet given by the Russian Government, but it is known by their private letters that they are detained as prisoners. The total number of Japanese in Russia is estimated at about twelve hundred.

DETAILED REGULATIONS FOR THE ENFORCEMENT OF THE MINING LAW.

(TRANSLATED BY J. E. DE BECKER.)

ORDER NO. 17, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND COMMERCE.

Detailed regulations for the enforcement of the Mining Law are determined and notified as follows. 15th June, 1905.

(BARON) KIOURA KEIGO,
Minister of Agriculture and Commerce.

DETAILED REGULATIONS FOR THE ENFORCEMENT OF THE MINING LAW.

Art. 1.—Petitions (願書), applications (申請書), reports (報告) and maps (圖面) must be drawn up separately for each case, and those for which forms (様式) are prescribed must be prepared in accordance with such forms.

Art. 2.—Papers, maps or samples which have been submitted either to the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce or the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office will not be returned if deemed necessary.

Art. 3.—In the case of an order or notice being given in regard to mining, should the domicile of the recipient be unknown, the gist of such order or notice shall be affixed in the notice-board of the Mine Inspection Office for a period of ten (10) days. In this case such order or notice shall be regarded as having been received on the day on which such period has expired.

Art. 4.—All acts of procedure and other acts which have been performed in accordance with these regulations are also binding upon the successors of persons intending to petition for mining, mining petitioners, persons entitled to mining rights, land-owners, or of any persons concerned.

Art. 5.—The provisions of these regulations concerning petitions for mining are applicable mutatis mutandis to the correction, increase or decrease, and revision of land in respect to which petition for mining has been made, or of a mining area.

Art. 6.—Should any document or map be found imperfect, the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office may either order it to be corrected or supplemented within a suitable period of time fixed by him.

Art. 7.—Where a document or a map has been forwarded through the post, such shall be regarded as sent in on the date and at the time shown on the cancelling stamp of the post office.

Should it be proved by a receipt for postal matter that the documents were posted on a day and at a time other than marked on the cancelling stamp of the post office, such shall be regarded as sent in on such day and at such time. The same rule applies when, in the case of the absence or undecipherability of the cancellation stamp, the day and time on and at which the documents have been forwarded have been proved by means of a receipt for postal matter.

Art. 8.—Papers or maps which should be sent in to the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce must be forwarded through the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office. In this case the day and time on and at which the documents have been handed in to the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office are regarded as the day and time on and at which the same have been duly lodged.

Art. 9.—Persons intending to carry on mining business in respect to two or more kinds of minerals within one and the same area of land must lodge a separate petition for each kind of mineral. Provided, however, that this rule does not apply when the minerals exist within one and the same mineral bed.

Art. 10.—When it is desired to correct the name of the mineral relative to which permission for mining has been granted, a petition must be filed together with a statement of the reasons.

Art. 11.—Persons jointly petitioning for mining must send in together with the petition a jointly signed notice (or report) of the appointing of their representative. Persons jointly petitioning for mining may designate their representative in the petition instead of handing in the notice mentioned in the preceding paragraph.

The provisions of the two preceding paragraphs are applicable mutatis mutandis to cases where two or more persons are to become petitioners for mining or persons entitled to mining rights owing to the change of petitioners or the creation or transfer of the mining rights.

Art. 12.—When persons jointly petitioning for mining or persons jointly entitled to mining rights have changed their representative, the fact must be promptly reported under their joint signatures.

Art. 13.—When the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office has appointed a representative in accordance with the provisions of Paragraph 1 of Article 7 of the Mining Law, the fact must be notified to the persons jointly petitioning for mining or persons jointly entitled to mining rights.

Art. 14.—In the case of persons petitioning for mining withdrawing their petitions, petitioning for the increase or decrease of areas, or filing a notice of change of petitioners through their representative, a written resolution in respect thereto, or an equivalent document, must be attached to the petition or notice.

The provisions of the preceding paragraph are applicable mutatis mutandis to cases where the increase or decrease, amalgamation or partition of mining areas are petitioned for through a representative.

Art. 15.—In the case of a petition concerning mining in respect to land (relative to which the petition is made) and a mining area the superficial area of which exceeds a million (1,000,000) tsubo for the protection of mining interests or for the convenience of the division of mining areas, a statement of reasons must be attached to the petition.

Art. 16.—Should the land relating to which petition for mining is made be a place mentioned in Paragraph 2 of Article 10 of the Mining Law, a written permission from the competent authorities, or a document showing the fact that such permission has been obtained, or a document proving the fact that application has been lodged for such permission, must be handed in within thirty days from the date of filing the petition.

Art. 17.—When the shape of the land relative to which petition has been made is deemed unsuitable for carrying on mining business, the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office may, upon obtaining the sanction of the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, order an increase or decrease of the land (relative to which petition has been made) to be made within a suitable period of time fixed by him.

Art. 18.—When a petitioner for mining desires to fix his mining area adjacent to a mining area belonging to another person, a distance of over 10 ken (60 feet) must be kept between the mining areas, but this rule does not apply when the consent of the neighbouring concessionaire has been obtained, or when petition for mining is made within the limit of a prospecting area.

Should it be considered necessary to extend or reduce the distance mentioned in the preceding paragraph for the control of the mining business, or for the protection of mining interests, the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office may, upon obtaining the sanction of the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, order the increase or decrease of the land (relative to which petition has been made) to be made within a suitable period of time fixed by him.

Art. 19.—Maps to be attached to petitions for mining must be prepared in accordance with form No. 14, and the following particulars must be clearly stated therein:—

- (1) Name and classification of the land relative to which petition is made;
- (2) Area of the land relative to which petition is made;
- (3) Meridian line (南北線);
- (4) Scale;
- (5) More than two immovable basic points, and their names and special marks;
- (6) Point of survey forming each corner of the land relative to which petition is made, and its serial number;
- (7) Boundary line and the direction and distance (calculated in ken)* between the points of survey connected with the basic points;
- (8) Relations with other concessions situated within 50 ken (300 feet) of the land relative to which petition is made;
- (9) Outcrop (apex) of the mineral formation within the land relative to which petition is made or in its neighbourhood, and its direction and incline;
- (10) Shape of the land relative to which petition is made, or of its neighbouring land, and other particulars mentioned in Articles 10 or 11 of the Mining Law.

Maps mentioned in the preceding Paragraph must be signed and sealed by the surveyor who has actually surveyed the land relative to which petition is made; but this does not apply where the maps correspond to those actually surveyed by the Mine Inspection Office.

Art. 20.—Petitioners for mining (採掘) must attach to their petitions a written explanation concerning the mineral formations of the ores which they intend to mine.

Art. 21.—Petitions for the increase or decrease of a mining area, or land relative to which petition for mining is made, must be forwarded through registered post.

In the case of the preceding paragraph, a receipt containing the date and time of its acceptance, must be demanded and obtained from the Post Office at which same has been posted.

Art. 22.—The Chief of the Mine Inspection Office may order the petitioner to produce a written specification relative to the preparations for mining works within a suitable period of time to be specified by him.

Art. 23.—When it is deemed necessary for the recognition of the facts concerning the actual survey of the land relative to which petition is made, the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office may order the petitioner to produce, within a suitable period of time to be fixed by him (the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office), the original map, field-book (野帳), or a copy thereof signed and sealed by the surveyor, and other documents proving the fact of the survey.

Art. 24.—When an actual inspection is deemed to be necessary relative to a petition concerning mining or to mining areas, the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office may designate and appoint the matters relative to which inspection is to be made, and the time of the inspection, and order the petitioner or concessionaire to be present. Should it not be feasible to appoint a time for inspection, the probable time shall be approximately determined by him, and as to the finally appointed time, it shall be directed that the official despatched shall designate the same.

When the official despatched designates the fixed time, a notice thereof shall be given at least three (3) days previously; but this does not apply when the applicant, or the person entitled to a mining right, entertains no objections.

Art. 25.—Notice of the alteration of the petitioner for mining must be jointly signed both by the former and new petitioners.

Art. 26.—Persons who have become petitioners for mining on account of succession, or petitioners for mining who have changed their surnames personal names or appellation (氏名, 名稱), or their domiciles, must report the fact to the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office within 14 days from the day on which notice has been given to the Census Registrar, or from the date of registration. Papers proving the fact must be attached to the notice.

Art. 27.—When any one of the joint petitioners for mining has retired from his position, the representative must report the fact to the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office within ten (10) days from the date of such retirement. The report must be accompanied by a paper proving the cause of retirement.

Art. 28.—Application for correction of the land relative to which petition for mining (採掘) has been made must be accompanied by a document giving reasons for such correction.

Art. 29.—In a map which is to be attached to an application for the correction of land relative to which petition for mining (採掘) is made or for the increase or decrease of land relative to which petition for mining business (鑛業) is made, must be clearly shown the relation of the former and new land under petition.

Art. 30.—The drawing of lots to be made according to the provisions of Paragraph 2 of Article 33 of the Mining Law shall be carried on by the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office in the presence of the petitioners for mining concerned.

The Chief of the Mine Inspection Office shall fix a time for drawing lots, and notice thereof shall be given to the petitioners for mining concerned at least fourteen (14) days previously.

Should the petitioners for mining who have received the notice mentioned in the preceding paragraph not be present at the time of drawing lots, the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office shall carry it on in the presence of two or more officials of the said Office.

Art. 31.—Petitions for the amalgamation or partition of a mining area shall be accompanied by a written statement of reasons; and in a map to be attached thereto must be clearly shown the relations of the areas to be amalgamated or partitioned. Provided that maps to be attached to a petition for partition must be prepared separately for each area.

The written consent of the mortgagee and a written arrangement concerning the order of the right of mortgage, both of which are to be made according to Paragraph 2 of Article 35 of the Mining Law, must be attached to petitions for amalgamation or partition.

Art. 32.—Petitions for the correction of a mining area to be made according to the provisions of Article 35 of the Mining Law shall be accompanied by a map of the mineral bed, a written explanation thereof, a written consent of the neighbouring persons entitled to mining rights, or a paper which can be substituted for the same.

Art. 33.—With regard to petitions for the correction of a mining area, the provisions of Article 28 shall be applied mutatis mutandis thereto.

Art. 34.—With regard to petitions for the correction, increase or decrease, or revision of a mining area, the provisions of Article 29 are applicable thereto mutatis mutandis.

Art. 35.—Petitions for the reduction or increase and decrease of mining areas to be made according to the provisions of Paragraph 3 of Article 37 of the Mining Law must be handed in accompanied by the written consent of the mortgagee.

Art. 36.—When it is decided that an application for mining be granted, the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office shall notify the petitioner.

The petitioner must apply for registration (登録) within 30 days from the day on which he has received the notice mentioned in the preceding paragraph.

The provisions of the preceding two paragraphs are applicable mutatis mutandis to applications mentioned in Article 10.

Art. 37.—Should it have been found that the boundaries or extent of a mining area differ from the map of the mining area, the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office may order the designation of the mining right (鑛業權ノ表示) to be changed within a suitable time fixed by him. In this case the order shall be accompanied by a map which is prepared after actual inspection (調査圖).

Art. 38.—In any of the following cases the chief of the Mine Inspection Office shall accept neither petitions (願書, 申請書) nor notices:—

- (1) When the whole of the land relative to which petition for prospecting (試掘) or mining (採掘) has been made is not situated within the district governed by the Mine Inspection Office having jurisdiction;
- (2) When the mineral ores relative to which petition has been made do not come under the provisions contemplated in Article 2 of the Mining Law;
- (3) When no maps have been attached to a petition for mining;
- (4) When fees are not duly paid;
- (5) When, contrary to the provisions of Articles 10, 15, 28, 31 or 33, no statement of reasons has been attached;
- (6) When, contrary to the provisions of Article 14, neither written resolutions nor papers corresponding thereto have been attached;
- (7) When contrary to the provisions of Article 21, documents have not been forwarded under registered cover;
- (8) When, contrary to the provisions of Article 25, the documents have not been jointly signed both by the former and new petitioners;
- (9) When, contrary to the provisions of paragraph 2 of Article 31, no written consent and arrangement have been attached;
- (10) When, contrary to the provisions of Articles 32 or 35, neither written consent nor papers which can be substituted for the same have been attached.

Art. 39.—In any of the following cases petitions (願書) or reports (報告) shall be rejected:—

- (1) When, in the case of actual inspection (實地調査), the petitioner is unable to clearly show the district relative to which petition has been made, or when he is unable to give explanations of the matters designated to be examined (指定シタル調査事項) in accordance with the provisions of Paragraph 1 of Article 24;
- (2) When the district pointed out by the petitioner differs substantially from the map attached to the petition;
- (3) When neither correction nor supplement has been made within the time of the order issued in accordance with the provisions of Article 6;
- (3) When neither permission nor certificate has been submitted within the term specified in Article 16;
- (5) When no application for the increase or decrease of the area has been lodged within the term specified in the order issued in accordance with the provisions of Article 17 or paragraph 2 of Article 18;
- (6) When no specification has been submitted within the term specified in the order issued in accordance with the provisions of Article 22;
- (7) When neither original map, field-book (野帳) nor a copy thereof, nor documents proving the fact of the survey, have been sent within the term specified in the order issued in accordance with the provisions of Article 23;
- (8) When the applicant has failed to appear the time appointed in accordance with the provisions of Article 24;
- (9) When application for registration (登録申請書) has been neither lodged nor posted within the term specified in Article 36;
- (10) When no written arrangement has been lodged within the term specified in the order issued in accordance with the provisions of Article 79.

Art. 40.—Persons who have become entitled to mining rights on account of succession, or persons entitled to mining rights who have changed their surnames, personal names, or appellations, (氏名・名稱) or their domiciles must apply for the registration (登録) thereof within fourteen (14) days from the day on which the fact has been reported to the Mining Registrar, or from the date of the registration (記).

Art. 41.—When a person entitled to a mining right commences the mining business, his mining office shall be promptly established at the seat of the mining area or in its neighbourhood, and a report thereof shall be given to the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office.

Art. 42.—Persons entitled to a right of prospecting shall keep at their mining offices a map of the prospecting area and a statement of the progress of the prospecting works (試掘工程表); and a person entitled to a right of mining (掘權者) shall keep a map of the mining area (掘權區圖) and the programme of the scheme of the mining operations (礦業施業案) in addition to a map of the actual survey of the shafts (坑內實圖) and books relating to the mining business.

Art. 43.—When a person entitled to a mining right does not commence his business within six (6) months from the day on which the creation or transfer of the mining right has been registered, or when he desires to suspend his business for upwards of six (6) months, notice thereof shall be given to the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office stating the reasons in detail.

When business has been commenced within the term of suspension, the fact must be promptly reported to the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office.

Art. 44.—The programme of the mining scheme must contain the following matters, and must be filed within 30 days from the day on which the mining business has been commenced, accompanied by a map for the purpose of elucidating same.

(1) Matters relating to Mineral beds.

Position, width (or thickness) direction and inclination of the principal mineral beds, the position of the principal "faults" and their influence upon the mineral beds; The class and quality of the principal mineral ore and subsidiary (allied) mineral ores; the class and nature of the "mother-rock" (mother lode?) and especially its influence upon the excavation, support, and other works.

(2) Matters relating to exploring for minerals and opening shafts.

The location of the subjective mineral bed and the order and method of mining the ores;

The position, direction, size, length, time of completion, manner and object of excavation of new perpendicular, slanting, or horizontal shafts, and new structures at the mouths of the said shafts;

Manner of ventilation, drainage, and transportation;

Number of persons employed and the motive-power;

Presence or absence of danger in the workings from water, gas, rock, etc., and precautionary measures in respect thereto.

(3) Matters relating to mining.

Location and name of the subjective mineral bed, order and method of working, amount of mineral ore, and the minimum and average quality;

Amounts of water (in the shafts) and stones run away, their quality and (the manner of their) disposal;

Manner of ventilation, drainage and transportation;

Number of persons employed and the motive-power;

Presence or absence of danger from water, gas, rock, etc., and precautionary measures in respect thereto.

(4) Matters relating to cobbing.

Order and method of cobbing;

Class, amount, and fineness of the refined ore and the amount of rough ore;

Amount, nature and disposal of tail water and slags;

Number of persons employed and the motive-power.

(5) Matters relating to refining.

Order and method of refining;

Amount of refined ore and the class and amount of the products;

Volume and nature of smoke, tail waters and sand disposal thereof;

Number of persons employed and the motive-power.

Should any of the provisions of the preceding paragraph be inapplicable according to the classification or state of the mining operations, the matters to be described in accordance with the said paragraph may be either increased or decreased, clearly stating the reason for such variation.

Art. 45.—The Chief of the Mine Inspection Office shall specify a period of at least upwards of 30 days when he orders a programme of a mining scheme to be changed in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 1 of Article 45 of the Mining Law.

Art. 46.—To the petition for alteration to be made according to the provisions of paragraph 1 of Article 45 of the Mining Law, must be attached a fresh programme of the mining scheme and a document giving full particulars of the reasons for such alteration.

Art. 47.—Maps of actual survey of the interior of shafts must be two—videlicet, a plane and sectional map. The state of the progress of the workings must be surveyed at least once at the end of each and every month and the maps must be prepared during the following month.

Duplicate maps of the actual survey of the interior of shafts must be handed in at the end of August for those up to the end of June of each year, and at the end of February for those up to the end of December of each year. Provided that should it be deemed necessary according to the state of the mine, the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office may, upon obtaining the sanction of the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, change the time or number of times at which the maps are to be handed in.

The duplicate maps of the actual survey of the interior of a shaft which were handed in on the preceding occasion will be returned upon demand.

Art. 48.—In the mining book must be entered the amount of the mining products, the quantity sold, and the price thereof, the number of working days, and the number of labourers.

Duplicate copies of the mining book must be handed in at the end of July for those up to the end of June of each year and at the end of January for those up to the end of December.

Art. 49.—In the case of the extinction or transfer of a right of mining, the documents or maps which are to be either prepared or handed in according to the provisions of the preceding two articles must be prepared and handed in within 30 days from the day on which recording thereof has been effected by the persons who were entitled to the right of mining.

Art. 50.—With regard to the statement of particulars of mining, it shall be handed in before the end of January of every year, making entries of the quantity of the mining products during the previous year, quantity sold, the selling price thereof, the number of working days, and the number of labourers.

Art. 51.—In the case of either extinction or transfer of a mining right, the documents which are to be filed according to the provisions of the preceding Article shall be sent in within 30 days from the date of recording in respect thereto by the persons who were entitled to the mining right.

Art. 52.—In the case of a map of the actual survey of the interior of a shaft, duplicate copy of a mining book, or statement of particulars of mining operations to be filed according to the provisions of the preceding five articles, should there be no matters to be stated, the fact shall be reported to the proper authorities.

Art. 53.—In the case of carrying on a joint working in respect to two or upwards of two mining areas, the documents or maps mentioned in Article 44 and Articles 46 to 51 may be jointly prepared.

Art. 54.—When a person who is entitled to a mining right does not manage the mining operations in person, a mining representative must be appointed, and the appointment notified to the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office.

The representative mentioned in the preceding paragraph shall be deemed to be authorized to perform all procedure and other acts in respect to the management of mining operations which are to be performed by the person who is entitled to the mining right according to the provisions of the Mining Law, and of orders concerning the operation of the Mining Law. Provided that if the person who is entitled to the mining right, has restricted such powers this must be promptly notified.

Art. 55.—Persons who are entitled to the right of prospecting must prepare a statement of the progress of prospecting operations, making monthly entries therein of the state relating to the opening of shafts, quantity of the mining products, the number of working days, and the number of labourers employed.

Art. 56.—When it is desired to dispose of the mining products turned out in the course of prospecting operations, application must be made to the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office stating the manner in which the products are to be disposed of and the quantity.

Art. 57.—To the application for actual inspection to be made according to the provisions of Article 49 of the Mining Law must be attached documents giving full particulars of the district to be inspected and the reasons thereof.

Should the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office consider it necessary to make an inspection, he shall prepare an estimate in writing of the number of days, and labourers and things required for such inspection and deliver the same to the petitioner.

The petitioner must make preparations of labourers and things and attend to witness the proceedings at the actual scene of the inspection.

Art. 58.—Persons desirous of making either a survey or inspection by entering upon land belonging to another party in accordance with the provisions of Article 52 of the Mining Law must file a petition stating the name and class of the land and the object thereof.

Art. 59.—Persons desirous to remove any object forming an obstacle in accordance with the provisions of Article 53 of the Mining Law must file a petition stating the class, name, place of existence, the name of the owner and possessor and the estimated value of the object forming such obstacle.

Art. 60.—Persons intending to enter upon or use land belonging to other parties in accordance with the provisions of Article 54 of the Mining Law, shall lodge a petition stating the name of the land, the name of the possessor, and the object thereof.

The application mentioned in the preceding paragraph may be made by telegraph.

Persons who are desirous to obtain an official order (指令) by telegraph in respect to the petition specified in this Article must pay in advance telegraph charges for putting down the name of the land, name of the possessor, and the object of either entering upon or using the land.

Art. 61.—Persons intending to enter upon or use land belonging to another person, or to remove an object forming an obstacle, in accordance with the provisions of Articles 52 to 54 of the Mining Law shall carry with them a certificate of permission from the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office.

Art. 62.—Persons desirous to use land belonging to another person in accordance with the provisions of Article 56 of the Mining Law must file a petition specifying the name and class of the land, name and domicile of the owner and the object, time and term of use, together with a copy of the land registration, map of the actual survey of the land in question and a written specification of the work.

Art. 63.—When a right concerning land belonging to another person has been acquired in accordance with the provisions of the Mining Law, when the use has commenced, when the use has finished, or when the land has ceased to be used, the person entitled to the mining right must immediately send in a report to the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office.

In the report concerning the acquisition of a right mentioned in the preceding paragraph, the name and class of the land, the name and domicile of the owner, and the object, time and term of the use must be stated.

Art. 64.—The regulations concerning the employment of mine labourers and labour, which are to be determined in accordance with the provisions of Article 75 of the Mining Law, must specify the following matter or matters corresponding thereto, and shall be produced for official approval 30 days previous to the commencement of the mining operations. The same applies when any alteration has been made:—

- (1) Class and grade of work;
- (2) Hire and discharge;
- (3) Wages for each class and grade;
- (4) Time of payment of wages;
- (5) Working hours of each class and the system of shifts;
- (6) Holidays and other matters relating to resting from work;
- (7) Restrictions concerning age and female and child labour;
- (8) When there are any provisions re rewards and punishments, such matters.

Art. 65.—A Mine-Labourers Register (礦夫名簿) shall be prepared within 30 days from the day on which the mining operations have been commenced, and entries shall be made therein of the name, date of birth, registered place (住所),* gist of previous record, class and grade of work, dates of hire and discharge, and the term of employment of each mine-labourer.

When changes have occurred in matters specified in the preceding paragraph, entries thereof shall be made forthwith.

Art. 66.—With regard to relief to be granted according to the provisions of Article 80 of the Mining Law, regulations relating to relief shall be determined upon the following basis, and produced 30 days prior to the date of the commencement of the mining operations for the approval of the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office:—

- (1) With regard to doctors' fees and other medical expenses, the actual cost;
- (2) During rest from work while receiving

* Permanent registry.

medical treatment, one-third or upwards of the amount of wages proportioned to the number of the days;

(3) With regard to funeral expenses to ven (or upwards);

(4) With regard to relief to be granted to surviving relatives, such sum of money as corresponds to 100 days' wages (or upwards) usually received by the deceased;

(5) With regard to relief to be granted to maimed and crippled persons, such sum of money as corresponds to 100 days' wages.

In the case of wages being fixed according to the amount of work, the wages mentioned in Nos. 2, 4 and 5 of the preceding paragraph shall be determined according to the average work done during the preceding 30 days.

Art. 67.—Persons entitled to a mining right must by convenient means inform their mine labourers of the provisions of the Mining Law relative to mine labourers, of the Regulations relating to the employment and work of mine labourers and Regulations relating to Relief.

Art. 68.—The applications to be made in accordance with the provisions of Paragraph 1 of Article 90 or Paragraph 1 of Article 92 of the Mining Law shall specify the following matters, and maps showing the relation of the work or mineral bed (as the case may be) at the land relative to which the request is made, and a statement of the particulars of the negotiations with the owner or persons concerned, or with neighbouring concessionaires, shall be attached thereto:—

- (1) Name and domicile of the applicant;
- (2) Names and domiciles of the owner and persons concerned, or of neighbouring concessionaires;
- (3) Serial number of the recording of the mining right;
- (4) Object and reasons of the application.

When the Chief of the Mine Inspection Office has accepted the application mentioned in the preceding paragraph, the same shall be delivered to the owner and persons concerned or to the neighbouring concessionaires.

The owner and persons concerned, or the neighbouring concessionaires, shall file a reply (rejoinder) thereto within 14 days from the day on which the delivery of the application has been received.

METHODS OF THE RUSSIAN BUREAUCRACY.

The following document has been sent us:—

The world is kept well-informed concerning the methods employed in Russia by those who disapprove of the existing form of government. The Russian Bureaucracy is at pains to advertise the information such as dare oppose its despotic will. What is understood outside Russia is the desperate length to which the Bureaucracy is now prepared to go in its bitter struggle against all the principles of political freedom. The following document tells its own tale. In its original form it is a broadside of the kind known in Russia as "Proclamations." Any persons or even suspected of distributing "proclamations" advocating the aims of any of the "opposing" parties of Russia, are summarily dealt with: authorities, imprisoned, exiled, and otherwise maltreated as "malcontents." The distribution of this document is left untouched by the censorship of the bureaucracy. No newspapers dare print in Russia any proclamation emanating from these parties, but the following document, raised "loyal," has been printed with impunity by a Moscow evening paper, which throws a shadow upon the hopes of the party therein named in the absence of the punishment, by administrative process without any form of law, which speedily follows upon the publication of anything exposed to the authorities it must be taken that this extraordinary document has the tacit approval of the Bureaucracy, in whose interests it appeals to the lowest ranks of the population of Russia. The following is a faithful translation of the original "Proclamation."
